The neglect of an attorney regularly retained to prepare and serve an answer in the case before the time for answering expires, when occasioned by intense absorption of mind in the conduct of a murder case involving a charge of first-degree murder, is excusable within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6884, authorizing the district court in its discretion, upon just terms, within one year after notice thereof, to relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his "excusable neglect." Citizens' Nat. Bank of Sisseton, S. D., v. Branden, 126 N. W. 102, 104, 19 N. D. 489, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858.

EXECUTE

See Provisionally Executed; Re-execute.

In the provision of the mulct tax statute (Acts 25th Gen. Assem. p. 63, c. 62) requiring the county attorney to see that the provisions of the act are enforced, "to 'enforce' is to 'execute with vigor,' to put in force, compel obedience to, cause to be executed or performed. It has the same meaning in this respect as 'execute.'" Tennant v. Kuhlemeier, 120 N. W. 689, 693, 142 Iowa, 241, 19 Ann. Cas. 1026.

The phrase "to 'execute the laws,'" used in a constitutional provision respecting the functions of the governor, contemplates the enforcement of a judicial process; that is, the enforcement of a right or remedy provided by the law and judicially determined and ordered to be enforced, and not an arbitrary enforcement by the executive of what he may consider the law to be. The provisions of Const. art. 5, and Rev. Code 1892, § 2156, that the Governor is the chief executive, that he may call out the militia to execute the laws, and that he shall see that the laws are faithfully executed, do not confer on him the right to sue in the name of the state. Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 864, 87 Miss. 1.

The word "executed," in the statute providing that no appeal is effectual unless an undertaking for costs is "executed" by appellant, means executed and served. Beddow v. Flage, 126 N. W. 97, 98, 20 N. D. 66.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 441, which provides that an appeal must be taken by serving a written notice on the adverse party, and that the appeal shall be deemed taken by the service of a notice of appeal and perfected on service of the undertaking for costs, and section 445, which provides that to render an appeal effectual for any purpose an undertaking for costs must be executed by the appellant, the appellant, in order to "execute" an undertaking, must do all those things which are necessary to render such undertaking binding as between the parties; to give respondent his statutory time within which to accept his sureties, the undertaking must be executed at the time of notice of appeal; and generally there is no appellate jurisdiction where there has not been a full compliance with the requirements of the statute. Aldrich v. Public Opinion Pub. Co., 132 N. W. 278, 282, 27 S. D. 589 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2558).

The word "execution," ordinarily used with reference to a deed, legally means not only the signing of the instrument but also includes its delivery, which completes the execution and gives validity to the deed. Tucker v. Helgren, 113 N. W. 912, 102 Minn. 382 (citing State v. Young, 23 Minn. 551; Schwab v. Rigby, 38 N. W. 101, 38 Minn. 395; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2558).

Though a contract is signed by a party, it is not "executed" until delivered. American Copying Co. v. Muleski, 122 S. W. 384, 385, 138 Mo. App. 419.

The "execution" of a deed includes its delivery, which is necessary to divest the grantor of title. Schaffner v. Voss, 93 N. E. 235, 237, 46 Ind. App. 551; Bowers v. Cottrell, 96 Pac. 936, 939, 15 Idaho, 221.

The word "execution," when applied to the execution of an instrument, includes a delivery of the instrument, and an averment in a pleading that a note was executed necessarily includes an averment that it was delivered. Embree v. Emmerson, 74 N. E. 44, 46, 37 Ind. App. 16.

Under the statute, requiring chattel mortgages to be filed within 10 days after execution, filing a mortgage within 10 days of its delivery, though more than 10 days from its date, was sufficient; the term "execution" including delivery and acceptance. Fenby v. Hunt, 101 Pac. 492, 494, 53 Wash. 127.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1933, defining the execution of an instrument, the term "execution," as applied to a mortgage, includes delivery. Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 Pac. 42, 45, 12 Cal. App. 572.

The complaint, in an action on an assignment of the interest of a beneficiary under a testamentary trust, alleged that on a certain day the beneficiary, his wife and children, "executed and delivered" to plaintiff's assignor an assignment in writing, and the answer admitted that on or about the date specified "the instrument therein referred to was delivered to the plaintiff," and defendants' counsel admitted during the trial "the making of a similar instrument" to that alleged to have been executed. Held, that there was no issue as to the due execution of the assignment; the answer having admitted its execution by admitting its delivery, and the "execution" of a document meaning ordinarily completing it in accordance with the various formalities required by law, including its delivery. Lessler v. De Loynes, 135 N. Y. Supp. 948, 950, 150 App. Div. 868.

A resolution by corporate directors authorizing the president and secretary to execute and deliver bonds to be issued authorizes the sale of such bonds; the word "sell" being included by implication in the words "execute and deliver," as the word "execute" frequently includes "delivery," and the word "delivery" frequently means the change of title as well as the change of possession of property. McCormick v. Unity Co., 87 N. E. 924, 927, 239 Ill. 806.

The word "execute," as used in reference to a conveyance or other document, may mean as in popular speech, to sign, or to sign and deliver, but in strict legal understanding, when said of a deed or bond, it always means to sign, seal, and deliver. The mere fact that the date written in a deed to the purchaser at a judicial sale was prior to the expiration of the time for redemption is not in itself conclusive proof that it was prematurely executed and does not necessarily make the deed void upon its face, as the date is no part of the substance of the deed and not necessary to be inserted; the real date being the time of its delivery. David v. Whitehead, 79 Pac. 19, 20, 13 Wyo. 189.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 441, which provides that an appeal must be taken by serving a written notice on the adverse party, and that the appeal shall be deemed taken by the service of a notice of appeal and perfected on service of the undertaking for costs, and section 445, which provides that to render an appeal effectual for any purpose an undertaking for costs must be executed by appellant, the execution of the undertaking includes its delivery, or service, which under the statute is the substitute for delivery, as the term "execute" ordinarily includes delivery, and the words "execute" and "execution" in their proper sense convey the meaning of carrying out some act to its completion, and, to give appellate jurisdiction, it must be served with the notice of appeal. Aldrich v. Public Opinion Pub. Co., 132 N. W. 278, 282, 27 S. D. 589.

An averment that he "executed" the note would include the act of signing and delivering. A petition in an action on a note sufficiently avers its execution by alleging that defendants by their note agreed and promised to pay plaintiffs. Scott v. Bales (Ky.) 96 S. W. 528.

If a certificate of acknowledgment is simply that a grantor "executed" a deed, it seems that would imply that he "signed, sealed, and delivered" it. Elmslie v. Thurman, 40 South. 67, 68, 87 Miss. 537 (citing Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48, 56).

Sealed

If a certificate of acknowledgment is simply that a grantor "executed" a deed, it seems that would imply that he signed, sealed, and delivered it. Elmslie v. Thurman, 40 South. 67, 68, 87 Miss. 537 (citing Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48, 56).

Sign synonymous

"Execution" of an instrument implies signing thereof. Tucker v. Helgren, 113 N. W. 912, 102 Minn. 382; David v. Whitehead, 79 Pac. 19, 20, 13 Wyo. 189; Scott v. Bales (Ky.) 96 S. W. 528.

"Execution" and "signing" are not synonymous terms. Execution implies complete execution—signing, sealing, and delivery—whereas signing implies only one of the steps towards execution. Hayes v. Ammon, 85 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608, 90 App. Div. 604.

If a certificate of acknowledgment is simply that a grantor "executed" a deed, it seems that it would imply that he signed, sealed, and delivered it. Elmslie v. Thurman, 40 South. 67, 68, 87 Miss. 537 (citing Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48, 56).

The word "signed" is not synonymous with the word "executed," although the word "executed," in a pleading which expressly avers that the instrument was not delivered, may be synonymous with the word "signed." In an action on a note, an answer admitting that defendant "signed" the note sued on, but averring that thereafter, without his knowledge or consent, the note was materially altered, is insufficient as a statement of a defense, as the averment of the signature is not equivalent to an allegation of execution, which includes delivery, and, for anything in the answer to the contrary, defendant may have consented to the alteration after signature, but before delivery. Bowen v. Woodfield, 72 N. E. 162, 163, 33 Ind. App. 687.

While, in strict legal understanding, the verb "to execute" as applied to notes, deeds, or written contracts, includes both signing and delivery, in popular speech it is often limited to the mere act of signing the instrument, and it was in this sense that it was used in an admission by defendant that the notes in question had been executed by the parties they purported to be executed by, both parties having subsequently treated the question of delivery as a controverted issue. Morris v. Butler, 122 S. W. 877, 878, 138 Mo. App. 378 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2558).

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7550, which provides that, on an appeal from a decision of the counsel of a first-class city upon objections to an assessment, "the appellant shall execute and file a sufficient bond," the only interest of the city in the bond is that it shall be saved harmless, and the word "execute" will not be held to necessarily mean "sign," so that an appeal bond, signed by one of several objectors in such a proceeding with a sufficient surety, was sufficient to satisfy the requirement. Gerlach v. City of Spokane, 124 Pac. 121, 122, 68 Wash. 589.

"To 'execute' an instrument includes signing it; but the admission by a party whose name is appended to an instrument that he executed it is as binding upon the party as if the person to whom the admission is made had seen him affix his name thereto. Such admission becomes legal evidence of the fact. We therefore conclude that the notary's certificate that the party whose name is affixed acknowledged the execution of the instrument is as good a witness to the signature by mark as if he had written his name at the foot of the document, 'as a witness to her signature by mark.'" First Nat. Bank of Hailey v. Glenn, 77 Pac. 623, 626, 10 Idaho, 224, 109 Am. St. Rep. 204.

A certificate of acknowledgment to a petition for a local option election, stating that the signers "executed the above instrument and severally acknowledged the execution of the same," sufficiently shows that the petition was "signed and acknowledged" as required by Liquor Tax Law, § 18; the word "executed" contemplating the completion of the instrument, so that the attestation amounted to an acknowledgment that the petition was "signed." In re Livingston, 115 N. Y. Supp. 269, 270, 62 Misc. Rep. 334 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 554).

"Execute" is synonymous with "subscribe." To "subscribe" means to write one's name beneath or at the end of an instrument, and hence Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 60, c. 112) § 17, subd. 6, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 220, c. 312, providing that the consent of property owners on an application for a liquor tax certificate shall be in writing "executed" and acknowledged as deeds entitled to be recorded, was not complied with where the names attached to a consent preceded the consenting clause. In re Griffin, 106 N. Y. Supp. 24, 26, 56 Misc. Rep. 21 (citing Cheney v. Cook, 7 Wis. 413, 423; James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 12, 55 Am. Dec. 376; Commonwealth v. Barhight, 9 Gray [75 Mass.] 113, 114; Stone v. Marvel, 45 N. H. 481; Davis v. Shields [N. Y.] 26 Wend. 346; McGivern v. Fleming [N. Y.] 12 Daly, 289, 290; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6729).

Will—As carry into effect

A wife bequeathed and devised all her property to her four children; the will providing that in case any of the four children should die, leaving no descendants, before the "execution of this, my last will and testament, I direct that my property of every description be divided among my then surviving children." In the same paragraph of the will, speaking of the subject of her gift, testator used the words "at the time of my death." Held, that under the circumstances the word "execution" would be construed to refer to the time when the provisions of the will were actually carried into effect and the estate distributed. In re Kear, 117 N. Y. Supp. 667, 668, 133 App. Div. 265.

EXECUTE (In Criminal Law)

See Publicly Executed.

EXECUTED CONTRACT

The term "executed contract" means something which has been, but is no longer, a contract. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 55.

"An 'executed contract' is defined as one in which the object of the contract is performed." Bastin Tel. Co. v. Richmond Tel. Co., 77 S. W. 702, 703, 117 Ky. 122.

A contract is "executed" when all is done that its terms require to be performed, but until full performance the contract is "executory." Leadbetter v. Hawley, 117 Pac. 289, 290, 59 Or. 422.

Where parties agree on the terms of a sale of personalty, and annex no conditions to the contract, the contract becomes an "executed" one, and title to the property passes without any formal delivery or payment of money; but when it is contemplated that something be done to complete the sale, such as weighing, selecting, delivering, or some other act, the contract is "executory," and title does not pass until the specific goods are ascertained and appropriated in the mode agreed on. Hardwick v. American Can Co., 88 S. W. 797, 802, 113 Tenn. 657.

If an illegal contract is executory, money paid thereunder may be recovered. The term "executed contract" means the performance of the contract, and not its mere execution. Hence money paid on a contract to sell a lot and building and stock of drugs, with an agreement that the amount paid should be retained by the seller if the remainder was not paid, may be recovered by the purchaser; no deeds to the property having been executed. McCall v. Whaley, 115 S. W. 658, 660, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 646.

Under Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a written contract may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and section 1661, declaring that an executed agreement is one the object of which is fully performed, an oral agreement altering a written contract is not enforceable, unless its terms have been fully performed by both parties. Pearsall v. Henry, 95 Pac. 154, 157, 153 Cal. 314.

An oral agreement between the buyer and seller to extend the time of acceptance of an option to purchase to a certain date, made when the option was given, was not an executed contract within Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a written contract may only be altered by a contract in writing or an executed oral agreement, where the written option was not accepted within a reasonable time, and the seller at the time of the acceptance refused to recognize the existence of the option. Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 103 Pac. 938, 941, 10 Cal. App. 748.

Where an oral modification of a written contract provided that defendant was to receive $21,000 on the sale of land, and plaintiff all that could be procured above that amount, and plaintiff attempted to sell the land in accordance with the agreement, but failed to get an offer as large as $21,000, so that the deal was declared off, the contract was executed under Civ. Code, § 1661, providing that an executed contract is one the object of which has been fully performed, so as to be taken out of the statute of frauds. Simmons v. Sweeney, 109 Pac. 265, 269, 13 Cal. App. 283.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1661, 1698, defining an "executed contract" as one the object of which is performed, and providing that a contract in writing may be altered only by a contract in writing, or by an oral executed agreement, an oral extension of the payment of a note, made after maturity, but not supported by any consideration, is void, notwithstanding the forbearance to sue during the extension, since the oral extension is not an executed contract, and a guarantor of the payment of the note is not discharged from liability in the absence of estoppel; an "executed contract" being one in which both parties have fully performed the terms of the contract. Dean v. Sedan Milling Co., 124 P. 736, 739, 19 Cal. App. 28.

EXECUTED DEED

An "executed" deed is a deed signed, sealed if necessary, acknowledged if necessary, and delivered. Creamer v. Bivert, 113 S. W. 1118, 1122, 214 Mo. 473.

EXECUTED TRUST

A voluntary executed trust which is a trust completely created is irrevocable. Watson v. Payne, 128 S. W. 238, 240, 143 Mo. App. 721.

Where land was conveyed to a trustee to pay rents, etc., to the beneficiary for life, and to convey to her appointee by will, or, in default of appointment, the land to go to her heirs, the trust was an "executed trust" in the sense that term is used, the trust being completely limited and defined by the instrument creating it, and the rules of property apply, so that the beneficiary could convey her equitable estate and exclude the heirs. McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N. E. 139, 146, 236 Ill. 281.

The distinction between a "trust executed" and "executory" is this: A trust executed is where the party is given complete directions for settling his estate, with perfect limitations; an executory trust is where the directions are incomplete, and are rather minutes or instructions for the settlement. Morris v. Linton, 104 N. W. 927, 929, 74 Neb. 411 (citing Neves v. Scott, 9 How. 211, 13 L. Ed. 102; McCartney v. Ridgway, 43 N. E. 826, 160 Ill. 129, 32 L. R. A. 555).

EXECUTION

See Due Execution; In Execution; Tax Execution.

Contempt of court is a specific criminal offense, and a fine imposed is a judgment in a criminal case. The adjudication is a conviction, and the commitment in consequence thereof is "execution." Ex parte Shull, 121 S. W. 10, 11, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496 (citing Church, Hab. Corp. [2d Ed.] § 308; In re Kearney, 7 Wheat. [20 U. S.] 38, 5 L. Ed. 391).

A statute requiring the court upon a plea or verdict of guilty to render judgment and assess punishment or penalty, as required by law, is simply declaratory of the common law, and where judgment and sentence are imposed for a certain term, and from any cause the time elapses without the imprisonment being endured, it would still be a valid, subsisting, unexecuted judgment. The judgment is the penalty of the law as declared by the court, while the direction, with respect to the time of carrying it into effect, is in the nature of an award of execution. Where the penalty is imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or some legal authority, the expiration of time without imprisonment is in no sense an "execution of the sentence." Ex parte Eldridge (Okla.) 106 Pac. 980, 981, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625 (quoting and adopting definition in Ex parte Collins, 97 Pac. 188, 8 Cal. App. 367).

Voluntary payment of, see Voluntary Payment.

"Execution of the judgment" we have always understood to be the final step in a suit at law. Dobbins v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Ill. 553, 566.

An "execution" is the end of the law. It gives the successful party the fruits of his judgment. McKinster v. Sager, 72 N. E. 854, 860, 163 Ind. 871, 68 L. R. A. 273, 106 Am. St. Rep. 268 (quoting and adopting from United States v. Nourse, 9 Pet. 8, 27 [34 U. S.] 9 L. Ed. 31).

"A writ of 'execution' is the process by which a court carries out its judgment. * * * Execution is used to mean a process for the enforcement of the payment of a judgment for money recovered in a civil action out of the property of the judgment debtor." Smith ex rel. McElhany v. Rogers, 90 S. W. 1150, 1152, 191 Mo. 334 (quoting and adopting definition in 8 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 311).

The word "execution," as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 891, providing that all laws in reference to a period of limitation as to ordinary "executions" are made applicable to tax à. fas., is to be interpreted in the sense of judgment. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 53 S. E. 251, 263, 124 Ga. 596.

An "execution" is a judicial writ and can be amended by the court, where the rights of third parties have not intervened. Hamant v. Creamer, 63 Atl. 736, 739, 101 Me. 222, 8 Ann. Cas. 165.

"An 'execution' is not a cause of action. It pertains to the enforcement of the lien of a judgment." Under a statute providing that a judgment may be enforced by execution at any time within 10 years after its entry, a judgment cannot be properly enforced by execution issued after said time, although the judgment debtor has been continually absent from the state during said time, and the judgment remains in force for that reason. Weisbecker v. Cahn, 104 N. W. 513, 514, 14 N. D. 390.

Attachment distinguished

"Attachments" may be a species of executions; but "executions" is a broader term, and the less does not include the greater. J. M. McGuire & Co. v. Barnhill, 115 S. W. 1144, 1145, 89 Ark. 209.

An attachment has but few of the attributes of an execution; an "execution" "being the judicial process for obtaining the debt or damages recovered by judgment, and final in its character, while the attachment is but meane process, liable at any time to be dissolved, and the judgment upon which may or may not affect the property seized." Seamen's wages are protected from seizure after judgment by attachment or proceedings in aid of execution by the provisions of Rev. St. U. S. § 4536 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3082), that no wages due or accruing to any seaman shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and declaring that payment of wages to seamen shall be valid, notwithstanding, any previous sale or assignment or any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment, and that no assignment or sale of wages, made prior to the accruing thereof, shall be binding, except certain authorized advance securities, when construed in the light of other provisions of the same title, enacted to secure to the seamen his remedy in admiralty for the recovery of his wages by condemnation of the ship. Neither the words "attachment" nor "arrestment," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 4536 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, 3082), providing that no wages due or accruing to a seaman shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and declaring that payment of wages to seamen shall be valid notwithstanding any previous sale, or assignment, or any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment, etc., when considered literally, has reference to execution or proceedings in aid of execution to subject property to the payment of judgment, but refers to process of holding property to abide the judgment, but, when liberally construed in the light of other provisions of the statute to effect the protection intended to be secured to seamen, will include proceedings in aid of execution. Wilder v. Inter-Island Steam Nav. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 58, 61, 211 U. S. 239, 53 L. Ed. 164, 15 Ann. Cas. 127 (citing Thomson v. Baltimore & S. Steam Co., 33 Md. 318).

Fee bill distinguished

The process to enforce collection of a referee's fees is not an "execution" but a fee bill. Manewal v. Proctor, 87 S. W. 30, 82, 112 Mo. App. 315.

Final judgment necessary

The term "execution," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3172, providing that every lease on lands for an unexpired term of three years or more shall be subject to execution and sale as real property, is not limited to a writ issued out of a court to enforce what is generally understood to be a final judgment, nor is the term as used in the statute to be restricted to process to collect the amount due on a judgment by levy and sale, but embraces all appropriate means for the execution of judgments and decrees, including a probate order for the sale of a leasehold belonging to a decedent's estate, necessary to pay debts by an administrator. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 493, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Tax warrant

Though a tax warrant is in the nature of an execution, it is not an "execution," within the law authorizing capital stock of corporations to be taken and sold on execution. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hinkley, 122 N. W. 482, 483, 23 S. D. 509, 21 Ann. Cas. 743.

EXECUTION DEBTOR

The real owner of property procured the holder of the nominal title to convey to a trustee, there being no consideration for the transfer. Subsequently a prior mortgage was foreclosed, and the property sold and possession taken by the purchaser. Held, that the real owner of the land was an "execution debtor" within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1906, § 295, subd. 3, and that those claiming under the deed of trust claimed under such owner and not under the trustee, he being a mere volunteer; and hence that a right of action by them to recover possession on the ground of defects in the foreclosure was barred in 10 years, under the provision of that subdivision that actions for the recovery of real property, sold on execution, brought by the execution debtor or any one claiming under him, is barred in 10 years. Sinclair v. Gunzenhauser (Ind.) 98 N. E. 37, 54.

EXECUTION OF A POWER

A donee of a power to dispose of personality by will disposed of specified property, consisting of real estate and of specific tangible property, and then gave the rest, residue, and remainder of her estate of which she might die seised, or to which she might be entitled, to persons named. Held, that the donee exercised the power, within Gen. Laws 1896, c. 203, § 9, providing that a devise of real estate and a bequest of personal estate shall operate as an "execution of a power" unless a contrary intent appears. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Dunnell, 83 Atl. 858, 863, 34 R. I. 394.

EXECUTION SALE

Three things are necessary to consummate an "execution sale." There must be a bidder, the property must be struck off or knocked down, and the bidder must complete his purchase by complying with the terms of the sale. A sheriff must sell for cash. Where the person to whom the property is struck off at execution sale does not at the time pay the amount of his bid, but merely offers to do so, and is told by the sheriff to let it go till the next day, there is no completed sale, so as to entitle him to the property on making tender the next day; the sheriff being authorized to sell only for cash. Rowe v. Granger, 103 N. Y. Supp. 439, 440, 118 App. Div. 459.

EXECUTIVE

The executive is the power which enforces the laws. In re Appointment of Revisor of Statutes, 124 N. W. 670, 671, 141 Wis. 592, 18 Ann. Cas. 1176.

The president of the board of trustees of a city of the sixth class is the "executive" of the city, within St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, § 2, providing that resolutions of necessity for public improvements involving the creation of municipal indebtedness, and the ordinance calling a special election to obtain the consent of voters, should be approved by the "executive" of the municipality. City of Redondo Beach v. Barkley, 90 Pac. 452, 454, 151 Cal. 176.

EXECUTIVE DUTIES

An executive duty appertains to the execution of laws as they exist. Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 55 South. 460, 461, 61 Fla. 1.

Laws 1907, p. 79, c. 79, § 2, authorizing and directing the Governor to contract for the transportation of public officers, imposes on the Governor a duty pertaining exclusively to the fiscal administration of the affairs of the government, and is an executive duty within Const. art. 40, styling the Governor the "Supreme Executive Magistrate." In re Opinion of Justices, 68 Atl. 873, 874, 74 N. H. 603.

Executive and administrative duties are such as concern the execution of existing laws. Brazell v. Zeigler, 110 Pac. 1052, 1055, 26 Okl. 826.

EXECUTIVE FUNCTION

The appointment of a special judge to preside over a special or regular court is not essentially and intrinsically an executive function within the classification of legislative, executive, and judicial powers under Const. art. 1, § 14, but may be regulated by statute. State v. Davis, 70 S. E. 417, 419, 88 S. C. 204.

The function exercised by voters or a representative body, upon whose approval the inception of a franchise grant by the Legislature is made conditional, is not the exercise of an "executive function." It is the exercise of the function of "referendum." Duffield v. Ashurst, 100 Pac. 820, 825, 12 Ariz. 360.

EXECUTIVE OFFICERAttorney at law

Webster, in defining the word "executive," says: "In government 'executive' is distinguished from legislative and judicial; legislative being applied to the organ or organs of government which makes the law, judicial to that which interprets and applies the laws, and 'executive' to that which carries them into effect." An "executive officer" is one in whom resides the power to execute the law. The term "executive officer" is a comprehensive one not limited to the officer in whom the Constitution vested the executive power, but includes the executive department. Judicial power is the power to construe and interpret the Constitution and the laws, and make decrees determining controversies, and is vested in the courts. The executive power is the power to execute the laws, and is vested in the Governor of the state, the administrative officers of the state, counties, townships, towns, and cities. When it becomes necessary to determine a question of fact or law, the act is judicial. When applied to officers the term "judicial" is not used in the sense of ascertaining the truth or administration of justice, but as indicating the exercise of discretion or judgment, as distinguished from what is purely ministerial. A city attorney is an executive or judicial officer, within Comp. Laws § 11312, punishing the receiving of bribes by such officers. People v. Salisbury (Mich.) 96 N. W. 938, 939, 940, 941.

Police officer

Revised Greater New York charter, as amended, creates the office of police commissioner and authorizes him to appoint three deputies, the first or chief deputy to have charge, in the absence or disability of the commissioner, of the police, and perform all duties of the commissioner, except making appointments and transfers. Section 271 (Laws 1901, p. 116, c. 466) declares that the commissioner shall have control and administration of the police department and force. Section 292 (page 124) declares that he shall be the chief "executive officer" of the police force, and section 306 (page 131) provides that no person in the police force shall be permitted to "join or be or become" a member of any political club or association. Held, that a deputy police commissioner was an "executive officer" of the force, subject to the same disabilities as the commissioner, and hence was legally disqualified to hold the office where, at the time and after his appointment, he was a member of the Tammany Hall general committee, and a district leader thereof. McAvoy v. Press Pub. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 1041, 1044, 114 App. Div. 540.

Under Code 1904, p. 1018, cl. 1, § 1017a, providing that officers and privates in the police force of cities and towns of the commonwealth shall possess such power and authority as now belongs to the office of constable at common law in enforcing the criminal laws of the commonwealth, and the ordinances of the city or town for which they are appointed or elected, and it shall be the duty of policemen to prevent the commission within the city or town of offenses against the laws of the commonwealth and against the ordinances of the city or town, to observe and enforce all such laws and ordinances, to detect and arrest offenders against the same, to preserve the good order of the city or town, and to secure the inhabitants thereof from violence and the property therein from injury, a policeman is not a purely ministerial officer, since a number of the powers enumerated in the statute are of an executive character, and therefore a person bribing a policeman is subject to punishment, under Code § 3744, providing that, if any person give or offer any gift or gratuity to any "executive officer" with intent to influence his act, decision, or judgment on any matter or question which is or may be then pending, or may be brought before him in his official capacity, he shall be punished, etc. Haynes v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 358, 359, 104 Va. 854.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The power to regulate rates delegated by the Legislature to some board is known as "executive power," and is administrative in its character rather than legislative. State ex rel. Taylor v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 92 Pac. 606, 609, 76 Kan. 467.

The "executive power" includes the power of removal of executive officers. State ex rel. Davern v. Rose, 122 N. W. 751, 754, 140 Wis. 360, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194.

Theoretically the "legislative power" is the authority to make, order, and repeal, the "executive power," to administer and enforce, and the "judicial power," to interpret and apply, the laws. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 668, 122 Tenn. 471.

The executive power, within Const. art. 3, dividing the powers of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, is the power which compels obedience to the laws and executes them, and the instrumentalities employed for that purpose are officers elected or appointed, charged with the enforcement of the laws. Witter v. Cook County Com'rs, 100 N. E. 148, 149, 256 Ill. 616.

EXECUTOR

See Independent Executor.

Misconduct of executor, see Misconduct. My executor, see MY.

An "executor" is a person appointed to carry the will into effect after the testator's death, and to dispose of his estate according to its tenor. Shufeldt v. Hughes, 104 Pac. 253, 256, 55 Wash. 246.

An "executor" is a trustee required to account for funds coming to his hands. In re Folwell's Estate, 62 Atl. 414, 415, 68 N. J. Eq. 723, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193.

An "executor" is appointed by the testator and derives his authority to act from the will. The granting of letters testamentary by the register of wills is a pro forma act to give effect to the will of testator. The testator's appointment gives the executor a right to administer, of which only his own renunciation or refusal to appear when cited to prove the will and take out letters can deprive him. A decree admitting a will to probate and ordering it to be recorded was conclusive as to the executor's appointment, and the register of wills had no authority to grant letters of administration with the will annexed without citing the executor to either accept or refuse letters testamentary. In re Miller's Estate, 65 Atl. 681, 684, 216 Pa. 247.

Administrator

"While the words 'executor' and 'administrator' are used somewhat interchangeably, yet the custom in appointing the persons named in a written will to take charge of an estate, or designating such persons as 'executors,' is so nearly uniform, and so generally known, that the use of the designation of the persons as administrators who were appointed in this case is at least some indication of the intention of the probate court to name them as caretakers only of the personal estate." Osborne v. Atkinson, 94 Pac. 796, 797, 77 Kan. 435.

Under Code, § 48, par. 21, "the term 'executor' includes administrator, * * * where the subject-matter justifies such use." Ellyson v. Lord, 99 N. W. 582, 585, 124 Iowa, 125.

The duties of an executor or administrator are apparently the same. An "executor" is named by the deceased to administer an estate, while an "administrator" is the person provided by the state to act in the event of the deceased not making any nomination, so that the difference between an executor and an administrator is largely one in name only. Where a testator devised real estate only, leaving personal property undisposed of, an administrator should not be appointed to administer the personal estate on the theory that there were no duties for the executor to perform, and that his appointment was therefore a nullity, but the executor so appointed should administer such personal estate. In re Maccaffil, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 1117, 57 Misc. Rep. 264.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1895, authorizing a testamentary "executor" to apply for probate of a will, one mentioned in a will as "administrator" for certain purposes connected with the estate was a proper applicant. Lindemann v. Dobossy (Tex.) 107 S. W. 111, 112.

As officer of court or law

"Administrators" and "executors" are officers of the court appointed to settle decedent's estates. Davless County Bank & Trust Co. v. Wright, 110 S. W. 361, 364, 129 Ky. 21, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1122.

"Administrators pendente lite" may always be appointed when the appointment of an "executor" or a general administrator is delayed for any reason, or the validity of a will is contested. They are officers of the court, called into being to aid the court, in fact, to take the place of the court, to conserve the estate in independent and disinterested hands pending litigation. Any party in interest may apply for their appointment, or the court may appoint on its own motion. Davenport v. Davenport, 60 Atl. 379, 68 N. J. Eq. 611, 6 Ann. Cas. 261.

EXECUTOR DE SON TORT

An executor in his own wrong is one who wrongfully intermeddles with the goods of the deceased, or does any other act characteristic of the office. Allen v. Hurst, 48 S. E. 341, 342, 120 Ga. 763 (citing 1 Wms. Ex'rs, p. 298).

An "executor de son tort" is one who intermeddles with the estate of a decedent after his death, and does wrongfully such acts as a rightful executor might do. Here there was no wrongful interference by the defendant with the estate of his brother after his death. All the estate which he had, or which came into his hands, came to him rightfully, and he simply became a debtor bound to account. He can no more be treated as an executor de son tort than any person who in the lifetime of a decedent has become his debtor for money had and received to and for his use. The plaintiff cannot hold him as an executor de son tort because he assumed to make a settlement with the only child of his brother, and at the same time repudiate that settlement as wholly unauthorized. Mills v. Mills, 21 N. E. 714, 716, 115 N. Y. 80 (citing Williams, Ex'ra, 248).

An "executor de son tort" is any person who, without authority, intermeddles with the estate of a decedent by doing such acts as properly belong to the office of an executor or administrator. He can be sued by the legal representative of the decedent, by a creditor of the estate, by a legatee, and, if all the debts are paid, by a distributee, and is liable to the extent of the assets which he has received. "Our statute has abolished the common-law rule which made one, who officiously interfered with the property of a deceased person, an executor de son tort by depriving creditors of the estate and others of the remedy which they anciently possessed of charging the intermeddler as an executor of his own wrong; but the latter is now made responsible only to the legal representative of the decedent for the value of all property taken or removed, and for all injury caused by his interference therewith." Slate v. Henkle, 78 Pac. 325, 326, 45 Or. 430.

An executor de son tort is a person who without any authority intermeddles with the estate of a decedent, and does such acts as properly belong to the office of an executor or administrator, thereby becoming a sort of quasi executor, though only for the purpose of being sued or made liable for the assets with which he has intermeddled. Grace v. Seibert, 85 N. E. 308, 309, 235 Ill. 190, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301.

EXECUTOR OF

An appeal against a person named, followed by the words "executor of" a deceased party to a suit to recover real estate, is not an appeal against the person named individually; the words "executor of" not being merely descriptive. Combs v. Combs, 138 S. W. 629, 630, 144 Ky. 389.

EXECUTORY

EXECUTORY CONTRACT

An executory contract is one where it is stipulated on a sufficient consideration that something is to be done or not to be done by one or both of the parties. Bergere v. Chaves, 93 Pac. 762, 764, 14 N. M. 352.

A contract is "executed" when all is done that its terms require to be performed, but until full performance the contract is "executory." Leadbetter v. Hawley, 117 Pac. 289, 290, 59 Or. 422.

An executory sale differs from an executed one in that the former passes no immediate title, even in the case of a distinct and specified chattel. Windmuller v. Fleming, 129 Ill. App. 476, 485.

The distinction between an actual sale and an executory agreement to sell personally is that in the former the subject of the contract becomes the property of the buyer the moment the contract is concluded, whether actually delivered, or remaining in the seller's possession, while in the latter it remains the property of the seller until the contract is executed. Idaho Implement Co. v. Lambach, 101 Pac. 951, 955, 16 Idaho, 497.

A contract for the sale of certain ricks of hay provided that the hay should be baled and weighed, by the vendor; that it should be "sound, sweet, and of good color," "clean, merchantable," "equal in all respects to the samples" upon which the purchase was made, and delivered on board cars at a specified station, payment to be made for each car when loaded. Held, that such provisions, if unqualified, bring the contract within the general rule that where anything remains to be done to ascertain and identify the subject of the sale, or that is necessary to put the property into suitable condition for acceptance by the purchaser, the transaction represents an "executory contract" only. Prowers v. Nowles, 94 Pac. 347, 349, 42 Colo. 442.

Under an executory contract for the sale of real estate, by which the purchaser agrees to pay certain purchase money and the vendor to make title when the purchase money is paid, the covenants are mutually dependent, and the agreement is an "executory contract," conferring upon the vendor a lien by contract or reservation, as distinguished from the technical vendor's lien, in which title is conveyed to the purchaser. Good v. Jarrard, 76 S. E. 698, 702, 93 S. C. 229, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383.

Plaintiff purchased a buggy and harness of defendant for the gross sum of $45. The buggy was identified, but defendant, not having the harness in stock, agreed to purchase the same for plaintiff, who testified that he did not want the buggy without the harness and would not have consented to buy the buggy alone. Plaintiff delivered his check to defendant for the purchase price, receiving a memorandum of the sale, but defendant later returned the check and repudiated the contract. Held that, prior to the designation of the harness, the contract was "executory," and that the title to the property had not passed. Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Kittrell (Tex.) 95 S. W. 703, 704.

Where defendants wrote that they had booked plaintiff's order for a car load of corn, the corn to be loaded and sent to destination as promptly as railroad facilities would permit, the contract was an "executory" one, and there was an implied warranty on defendants' part that the corn would be sound and merchantable on arrival at the place of delivery. Atkins Bros. Co. v. Landa, 95 S. W. 949, 950, 119 Mo. App. 119 (citing 2 Mechem, Sales, § 1340; Babcock v. Trice, 18 Ill. 420, 68 Am. Dec. 560; Howard v. Hoey [N. Y.] 23 Wend. 250, 35 Am. Dec. 572; Murchie v. Cornell, 29 N. E. 207, 155 Mass. 60, 14

L. R. A. 492, 31 Am. St. Rep. 526; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48, 78 Am. Dec. 290).

Where parties agree on the terms of a sale of personalty, and annex no conditions to the contract, the contract becomes an "executed" one, and title to the property passes without any formal delivery or payment of money; but when it is contemplated that something be done to complete the sale, such as weighing, selecting, delivering, or some other act, the contract is "executory," and title does not pass until the specific goods are ascertained and appropriated in the mode agreed on. Hardwick v. American Can Co., 88 S. W. 797, 802, 113 Tenn. 657.

EXECUTORY DEVISE

An executory devise is such a limitation of a future interest in lands or personal chattels as the law admits in the case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law. Stallcup v. Cronley's Trustee, 78 S. W. 441, 442, 117 Ky. 547.

An "executory devise" of lands is such a disposition of them by will that no estate vests at the death of the deviser, but only on the happening of a future contingency. Starr v. Minister & Trustees of Starr Methodist Protestant Church, 76 Atl. 595, 599, 112 Md. 171.

An "executory devise" is a devise over after a devise in fee simple, which was not allowable at common law. Brigham v. Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, 134 Fed. 513, 525, 67 C. C. A. 393 (citing 6 Greenl. Cruise, Real Prop. *366).

Testator gave his residuary estate to trustees to pay the income to his wife until a daughter attained 25 years, when a half should be paid to her, and provided that if the daughter should survive her mother, after attaining the age of 25, "the whole estate should vest in her," and should the wife survive the daughter dying without issue, a half of the estate should be divided equally between grandchildren at the death of the wife, but, should the daughter die leaving issue, the half of the estate should vest in such issue if the wife should be living; if not, the whole should pass to the issue. The daughter at testator's death had no issue. Held, that the gift to the issue was an "executory devise," and issues born after testator's death would take contingent remainders during the daughter's life; the daughter took a vested equitable remainder in fee, subject to be divested by her death before her mother, the quoted words being construed to mean vesting in possession; the gift to the grandchildren was an "executory devise" at the death of the testator, and continued so until the death of the daughter, and on her death, without issue during the life of the wife, the half of the estate vested in the grandchildren then living, subject to the equitable life interest of the wife. Storrs v. Burgess, 67 Atl. 781, 783, 29 R. I. 269.

As remainder

See Remainder.

EXECUTORY INSTRUMENT

Releases, being merely declarations or admissions in writing, are not executory instruments, within Code Civ. Proc. § 840, providing that a seal upon an executory instrument is only presumptive evidence of sufficient consideration, and hence the consideration for a release under seal cannot be disproved. Stiebel v. Grosberg, 95 N. E. 692, 693, 202 N. Y. 286, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1305.

EXECUTORY LIMITATION

At common law, "In order to constitute an 'executory limitation' there must be no preceding particular estate to give it effect as a remainder, for the rule admits of no exception, being indeed of the essence of the definition that no estate can be construed to be an executory limitation which is capable of taking effect as a remainder." Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4596, providing that an estate of freehold or of inheritance may be made to commence in future by deed, in like manner as by will, the husband may convey to his wife, through a third person, an estate commencing at his death, and to continue during her life, without creating any particular estate. O'Day v. Meadows, 92 S. W. 637, 646, 194 Mo. 588, 112 Am. St. Rep. 542 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Minor, Inst. p. 270).

EXECUTORY PROCESS

As suit, see Suit.

EXECUTORY TRUST

A voluntary executory trust which is a promise to create a trust is not enforceable. Watson v. Payne, 128 S. W. 238, 240, 143 Mo. App. 721.

The distinction between a "trust executed" and "executory" is this: A trust executed is where the party is given complete directions for settling his estate, with perfect limitations; an executory trust is where the directions are incomplete, and are rather minutes or instructions for the settlement. Morris v. Linton, 104 N. W. 927, 929, 74 Neb. 411 (citing Neves v. Scott, 9 How. 211, 13 L. Ed. 102; McCartney v. Ridgway, 43 N. E. 826, 160 Ill. 129, 32 L. R. A. 555).

A trust is not "executory" trust because by the terms of the instrument creating it the trustee is directed to do some act with the property. Miles v. Miles, 96 Pac. 481, 483, 78 Kan. 382.

The term "executory trust" is usually held to refer to the manner and perfection of creating the trust, rather than to the action of the trustee in administering it. A trust is said to be executed when all its terms and limitations are so clear and certain that the trustee has nothing to do but to carry out all the provisions of the instrument according to its letter. Where L, the owner of a survey, conveyed it to H., the owner of another survey, and H. executed an instrument by which he conveyed to L. one-third of the proceeds which might be received from the sales of any portion of said surveys, and bound his personal representatives to convey the land remaining unsold at his death to such persons as L. or his heirs might order, the trust created was merely an "executory trust," and not a completed declaration of an express executed trust, against which the statutes of limitations would not run until renunciation by the trustee. Laguerenne v. Farrar, 61 S. W. 953, 955, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 404.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES

See, also, Punitive Damages; Vindictive Damages.

"Exemplary damages" are only awarded in actions of tort against a telegraph company for failure to properly transmit a message, where the failure was the result of intention or gross negligence. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 219, 84 Okl. 468 (quoting Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Chamberlain, 46 Pac. 499, 4 Okl. 542).

Exemplary damages are such as are in excess of the actual loss, and are allowed where a tort is aggravated by evil, or where the defendant acted willfully or with such gross negligence as to indicate a wanton disregard of the rights of others. The law does not allow such damages for mere negligence, though gross, nor for mistakes that may affect the rights of others, unless some acts indicative of bad motives or intention to oppress or wrongfully harass another is manifest. Rugg v. Tolman, 117 Pac. 54, 57, 39 Utah, 295 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2577, 2578).

"Exemplary damages" is a sum of money awarded as punishment to defendant for his wanton disregard of the rights of plaintiff. Crawford v. Eldman, 129 Fed. 992, 995.

At common law what are called exemplary, punitive, or vindictive "damages," where the injury has been wanton, malicious, gross, or outrageous, may be awarded by the jury. Iaeger v. Metcalf, 94 Pac. 1094, 1095, 11 Ariz. 233.

Where personal injuries are inflicted willfully, maliciously, wantonly, or recklessly, the party inflicting the injuries is liable for "exemplary damages" to the party receiving them in the nature of a punishment for the willful and malicious acts, but no such damages are recovered in a statutory action for injuries resulting in death. Palmer v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co., 66 Atl. 1127, 1130, 218 Pa. 114.

An instruction, in an action for wrongful levy, that an imposition of damages by way of example or punishment, known as "punitive damages," was sometimes, though rarely, given in extreme cases, such as cases of malice or fraud, gross negligence, recklessness, wanton or malicious conduct, violence, malicious abuse of process, wanton malice, and insult or outrage to plaintiff's feelings, but that such cases were extreme and not ordinary cases, that it was not enough to show that the property of one person was levied on instead of the property of another, nor that more goods were levied on than was necessary, but that actual malice, ill will, or the disposition to abuse and injure were the elements which justified the award of punitive damages or damages by way of punishment, and that it should appear very clearly that a case called for such damages before they could be awarded, was not erroneous. Carey v. D. Wolff & Co., 63 Atl. 270, 271, 72 N. J. Law, 510.

In certain cases of tort the expense of litigation in excess of the amount of taxable costs may be awarded as damages in addition to the damages more strictly compensatory, and such damages, sometimes spoken of as "exemplary," cannot exceed the amount of expense in excess of the taxable costs. Shupack v. Gordon, 64 Atl. 740, 742, 79 Conn. 298.

A sum assessed by a jury additional to compensation for damages, by way of punishment for wrongdoing, is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. Farrow v. Hoffecker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 921, 7 Pennewill, 223.

"Exemplary damages" can never be recovered for anything short of gross negligence, and where the negligence of a motorman, resulting in a collision with plaintiff, was simply failure to use ordinary care, an instruction authorizing recovery of exemplary damages was erroneous. Henderson City R. Co. v. Lockett (Ky.) 98 S. W. 308, 304.

"Exemplary damages" are in no case a right of plaintiff, but are assessed at the discretion of the jury as a warning to other wrongdoers and for the purpose of punishment; and where a wrongdoer dies before an action is brought to trial, and the action survives against his personal representative, only compensatory damages are recoverable. Meighan v. Birmingham Terminal Co., 51 South. 775, 777, 165 Ala. 591 (citing 1 Sedg. Dam. § 360 et seq.).

Damages in excess of full compensation for actual injuries are variously termed "exemplary," punitive, or vindictive; it is also called smart money. In an action for a violent, unprovoked, and malicious assault, plaintiff is entitled to recover punitive damages. Hanna v. Sweeney, 62 Atl. 785, 78 Conn. 492, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

Compensatory damages distinguished

While the damages, to which a plaintiff may become entitled in an action of tort, to the amount of his expenses in litigation, in addition to his actual damages, are in fact and in effect "compensatory damages" and not punitive, they are in practice variously termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive," or "smart money," and in an action for personal injuries, in which plaintiff was entitled to recover such additional damages, it was not error to refer to them as "exemplary." Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266.

The term "exemplary damages," as used in Comp. Laws, § 5393, providing that one selling intoxicating liquor to a minor shall be liable for both actual and exemplary damages, does not mean "smart money," but means compensatory damages for wounded pride, mortification, injury to feelings, mental anxiety and the like. Hink v. Sherman, 129 N. W. 732, 733, 164 Mich. 352.

As damages

See Damage—Damages.

Persons liable

"Exemplary or punitive damages" are awarded, not by way of compensation to the sufferer, but by way of punishment of the offender, and as a warning to others, and can be awarded only against one who has participated in the offense. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cashman, 132 Fed. 805, 807, 65 C. C. A. 607.

In an action against railroad companies, an instruction that, if the acts of the company's agents were wanton or malicious, the jury would be justified in adding to the compensatory damages such an additional amount as would be a lesson to the defendants and prevent a repetition of such conduct or what the law calls "vindictive damages" or "smart money" was erroneous, since the defendants could not be charged with punitive damages for the illegal, wanton, or oppressive conduct of their servants, unless they participated in the wrongful act either expressly or impliedly by conduct authorizing or approving it either before or after it was committed. Shallcross v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 67 Atl. 931, 75 N. J. Law, 395.

Punitive or vindictive synonymous

"Punitive," "vindictive," and "exemplary" damages are all synonymous terms. Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266; Hanna v. Sweeney, 62 Atl. 785, 78 Conn. 492, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907; Farrow v. Hoffecker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 921, 7 Pennewill, 223.

The word "punitive," as used in the statute allowing a recovery of punitive damages for an assault and battery, means "exemplary." Punitive, vindictive, and exemplary damages are all synonymous terms. Doerhoefer v. Shewmaker, 97 S. W. 7, 10, 123 Ky. 646 (citing Chiles v. Drake, 2 Metc. [59 Ky.] 146, 74 Am. Dec. 406).

Smart money synonymous

"Exemplary," vindictive, or punitive damages are sometimes called "smart money." Farrow v. Hoffecker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 921, 7 Pennewill, 223; Hanna v. Sweeney, 62 Atl. 785, 78 Conn. 492, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907; Shallcross v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 67 Atl. 931, 75 N. J. Law, 395; Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 219, 34 Okl. 468.

In actions of tort, the jury, in addition to the sum awarded by way of compensation for the injury, may award "exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages," sometimes called "smart money." In an action against a master to recover for an illegal arrest caused by his servant, an instruction that the jury had the power, if it thought proper, in addition to compensatory damages, to award punitive damages, without further instructing them that defendant was not liable for such damages unless there was evidence that the acts of the servant were wanton or malicious, and that the master was implicated with the servant therein, or had authorized or ratified such acts, was erroneous. Craven v. Bloomingdale, 64 N. E. 169, 171, 171 N. Y. 439.

EXEMPLIFICATION

Webster defines "exemplification," when used in a legal sense, to mean: "A copy or transcript attested to be correct by the seal of an officer having custody of the original." An exemplification of a will, as contemplated by a statute declaring that the "exemplifications" of wills under the hand of the judge of probate shall be admissible in evidence, must necessarily mean a copy of the will accompanied by a certificate of the proceedings necessary to be taken in order to authorize the same to be entered of record. This is especially true as respects the order admitting the will to probate. A copy of a will unaccompanied by any of the means of identification to render it competent would not be admissible in a trial affecting the title to land. Pineland Club v. Robert, 171 Fed. 341, 344, 345, 96 C. C. A. 233.

EXEMPLIFIED COPY

"Exemplified copy," as used in the statute relating to records and judicial proceedings of other states, on proceedings to probate wills which have been admitted in another state, means a duplicate or transcript of the records or proceedings admitting such will to probate, duly authenticated under the seal of that court, and duly certified to by the custodian of such records and proceedings. In re Box's Will, 106 N. W. 1063, 1065, 127 Wis. 264.

A document attested by the clerk of a court with its seal and the certificate of its presiding judge, and called an "exemplified copy," which means a true copy, is competent evidence of the judgment described in it, under Act Cong. May 26, 1790 (1 Stat. 122), providing a mode by which the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings in each state shall be authenticated, so as to take effect in every other state, though it may not conform to the mode at common law or in the state where the judgment was rendered. Taylor v. Carpenter, 23 Fed. Cas. 744, 746, 2 Woodb. & M. 1, 10 Law Rep. 35.

EXEMPT—EXEMPTION

See Not Exempt; Privileges and Immunities.

See, also, Privilege.

"Exemption" is the personal privilege of the party exempted, with which no one else has any concern." The exemption of an elector from service upon a jury is not a disqualification, but a personal privilege which he may waive, and, if he does so, the parties have no ground of complaint. State v. Stunkle, 21 Pac. 875, 876, 41 Kan. 456.

A contract by a carrier, limiting its liability for property transported, violated Interstate Commerce Act, § 20, providing that no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt any common carrier from liability for loss, damage, or injury to property therein imposed; the words "exempt" and "limit" not having any distinction in meaning in this connection. To limit one's liability to an amount less than he would be liable for except for the contract of limitation is to exempt him from any liability in excess of the amount of the limitation. Greenwald v. Weir, 111 N. Y. Supp. 235, 238, 59 Misc. Rep. 431.

"Limit" and "exempt" are words of synonymous meaning. Code 1887, § 1296 (Va. Code 1904, § 1294c, subsec. 25), providing that no agreement by a carrier for "exemption" from liability for injury or loss occasioned by its own neglect shall be valid, prohibits not only contracts exempting the carrier from liability, but also from making contracts limiting liability. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Beasley, Couch & Co., 52 S. E. 566, 569, 104 Va. 788, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183.

Public Service Commissions Law, providing that no contract shall "exempt" any carrier from any liability for loss to freight from the time of its delivery for transportation until received at its destination and a reasonable time shall have elapsed after notice to the consignee of the arrival to permit the removal thereof, forming a part of article 2 of the act, relating to railroads, street railroads, and carriers, when considered in connection with section 25 of the article (page 903), providing that the provisions thereof shall apply to the transportation of passengers, freight, or property, and to any carrier performing such service, refers solely to carriage of freight, as distinguished from carriage by express, and a carrier by express may limit its liability to a specified sum, and does not apply to a contract limiting liability, since the word "exempt," which means to free, to clear, to be not liable, to be not subject to, to be released from liability, is not synonymous with the word "limit," which means that which circumscribes or confines, a restriction, to apply a limit to, or to set a limit for. Baum v. Long Island R. R., 108 N. Y. Supp. 1113, 1120, 58 Misc. Rep. 34.

The words "exempted from attachment by law," as used in Pub. St. 1882, c. 237, § 13, mean exempt by statute. In re Keach, 14 R. I. 571, 573.

Under Rev. Laws Mass. c. 118, § 73, providing that, if a policy of life insurance is effected in favor of a person other than the insured, the lawful beneficiary other than himself or his legal representatives shall be entitled to the proceeds against his creditors and representatives, and also that a policy "made payable to or for the benefit of a married woman * * * shall inure to her separate use and benefit and to that of her children," a policy payable to the insured at the end of 20 years if living, and in case of his prior death to his wife if living, otherwise to his legal representatives or assigns, is not "exempt" by the law of the state within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 6a, 30 Stat. 548, but on the bankruptcy of the insured passes to his trustee, under section 70a(5), as property which he could have transferred. In re Loveland, 192 Fed. 1005, 1006.

EXEMPTION (From Execution)

See Homestead Exemption; Imperfect Exemption; Personal Exemption.

The words "exempt from execution," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 18, exempting all moneys, benefits, privileges, etc., growing out of any life insurance, from execution, means exempt from any execution, and the exemption extends to the beneficiary and exempts insurance money received by a surviving wife from liability for her debts. Holmes v. Marshall, 79 Pac. 534, 535, 145 Cal. 777, 69 L. R. A. 67, 104 Am. St. Rep. 86, 2 Ann. Cas. 88.

A printing press and materials necessary for the exercise of the trade of a printer and editor are "exempt" from seizure, under Code Prac. art. 644, exempting the tools and instruments necessary for the exercise of the trade by which the debtor gains a living. Prather v. Bobo, 15 La. Ann. 524, 525.

Under the Constitution and statute giving an "exemption from sale," the rights under a sale are to be determined as of the date of the lien under which the sale is made, so far as the exemption of the property is concerned. If a lien is secured on property of a debtor prior to judgment or sale, all rights at the sale as to such property relate back to the creation of the lien, and, if the property was not exempt when the lien was acquired, no changes by sale thereafter can inure to the benefit of the debtor. Mahon v. Fansett, 115 N. W. 79, 81, 17 N. D. 104.

As contract

See Contract.

EXEMPTION (From Taxation)

A statute provides that, in assessing bank shares, the assessor shall allow all the deductions and "exemptions" granted by law from the value of other taxable property owned by individuals, etc. Held that, if the intent was to allow the valuation of the bank stock to be reduced by deducting from the assets of the bank such securities as were exempt from taxation, the word "exemptions" was inappropriate. Lippincott v. Lippincott, 66 Atl. 113, 114, 74 N. J. Law, 439.

As privilege

See Privilege.

EXEMPT FIREMAN

The character of "exempt fireman" established by section 14 of P. L. 1889, p. 19, as amended by P. L. 1890, p. 44 (2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 1513, § 198), has no other force or office than the fixing of the necessary qualifications for membership in associations formed under the act, and cannot of itself be relied upon, by a person having that character, to bring him within the protection of chapter 212 of Laws of 1911 (P. L. p. 444). Bowlby v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Morris County, 85 Atl. 229, 232, 83 N. J. Law, 346.

EXERCISE

See Authority Exercised under the United States; Improvidently Exercised; In the Exercise of Due Care.

EXERCISED THE RIGHT

The words "exercised the right," in Rev. Civ. Code, art. 1991, providing that creditors cannot call on a coheir of the debtor to collect, when the debtor has not exercised the right, are in the past tense, and do not mean that the most incomplete attempt at the exercise of the right is to be taken as the equivalent of the actual exercise expressed in the past tense, denoting something completely done and accomplished. Champagne v. Bloch Bros., 46 South. 207, 208, 121 La. 193.

EXERCISING ANY POWER

The phrase "exercise or attempt to exercise any power," within Code 1908, c. 32, § 136, relating to proceedings against corporations, delinquent as to license taxes, should be read as if it said "carry on the business" of the corporation, and "doing business," as found in such statutes, is construed as not extending to the mere act of suits in respect to contracts made or rights acquired while the corporation had power to do business. Comstock v. J. R. Dronay Lumber Co., 71 S. E. 255, 256, 69 W. Va. 100.

EXERCISING CORPORATE FRANCHISE

"Exercising corporate franchises" and "carrying on business" in a corporate or organized capacity mean the same thing, under Laws 1896, p. 859, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 297, c. 118, authorizing an annual state tax on life insurance companies for the privilege of exercising corporate franchises or for carrying on business in their corporate or organized capacity within the state. People ex rel. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Miller, 71 N. E. 930, 932, 179 N. Y. 227.

EXHAUSTED

See Debt Incurred after Appropriation Exhausted.

Specific insurance is to be deemed exhausted when all that can be collected has been collected for a loss arising from any of the risks so insured against. A fire insurance policy issued by the A. company provided that the insurance should not attach until all specific insurance was exhausted. Insured also had other insurance on the property destroyed, and other property under policies containing a coinsurance clause; some providing that the companies should not be liable for a greater proportion of the loss than the amount of the policy bore to 90 per cent. of the value of the property insured, and the proportion in the others being that which the amount of the policy bore to the whole value of the property insured. The value of the property insured exceeded the amount of the insurance, and only a portion of the losses sustained could be collected under them. The A. company contended that inasmuch as the policies still attached to other property, and the companies insuring them would be liable thereunder to the full amount insured for other losses that might occur, the insurance had not been exhausted. Held, that there being no agreement that the policy should not attach until the entire amount of the specific insurance had been required for the payment of losses, the other insurance was exhausted within the policy, and that the company was liable up to the amount insured by it for the balance of the loss. Cutting v. Atlas Mut. Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 174, 175, 199 Mass. 880.

An order for the sale of real estate belonging to the estate of a decedent to pay debts, ordered that the administrator should not sell certain lots until the balance of the estate "has been exhausted." Held that, the administrator having for some six months offered property other than the lots for sale, and not having been able to sell sufficient thereof to raise the sum required, and the statute requiring that any sale by the administrator must be made within six months from the date fixed by him when he will commence receiving bids, it was proper to sell the lots in question; the other property having been "exhausted," within the meaning of the order. In re Bryant's Estate, 80 Pac. 555, 556, 38 Wash. 337.

Where a mortgage on property including a debtor's homestead was held fraudulent as to other creditors as to the nonhomestead property and the mortgagee by reason of such holding obtained no benefit therefrom, his remedy against such property was "exhausted" within Code, § 2976, providing that, where a mortgage covers both homestead and nonhomestead property, the homestead can only be resorted to for the payment of a deficiency remaining after exhausting all other property covered, and hence the mortgagee was entitled to enforce his mortgage as to the homestead. Huttig Mfg. Co. v. Burhans, 127 N. W. 991, 992, 148 Iowa, 657.

EXHIBIT

Claims against decedent

"Present," as used in P. S. 2820, and "exhibit," as used in section 2824, as indicating how a creditor of the estate is to get his claim before the commissioners for allowance, are synonymous; the statute requiring no particular formalities to constitute a sufficient presentation. Batchelder v. White's Adm'r, 71 Atl. 1111, 1112, 82 Vt. 132.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1822, relating to an executor's rejection of claims "exhibited to him," and prescribing the limitation of action on such claim, requires that the claim exhibited must be in writing; and, where a claim in writing has been exhibited to the executor, the fact that no inventory has been filed by him and no notice to present claims published is no bar to the running of the statute. Dawbarn v. Fleischmann, 130 N. Y. Supp. 397, 401, 146 App. Div. 57.

Gaming device

Where one is charged with exhibiting for gaming purposes a gaming table, the character of the table that he exhibited is immaterial. One who exhibits a billiard table, and who takes the bets of the players throwing dice, without himself throwing dice, is guilty of "exhibiting a gaming table" within Pen.

Code 1911, art. 553, declaring that any game played for money on a billiard table other than a game of billiards licensed by law is punishable. Bird v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 738, 741.

EXHIBITION

See Public Exhibition.

Other exhibition, see Other.

EXHIBITS

"The office of an 'exhibit' should be limited to the aiding, by amplifying and making more definite and certain, the essential allegations of the complaint." McPherson v. Hattich, 85 Pac. 731, 733, 10 Ariz. 104.

An "exhibit" is no part of the petition, even though it is attached and the petition states it is made a part thereof. Robinson v. Levy, 117 S. W. 577, 581, 217 Mo. 498 (citing Vaughan v. Daniels, 11 S. W. 573, 98 Mo. 230; Moore v. Dixon, 50 Mo. 424; Poulson v. Collier, 18 Mo. App. 583).

An "exhibit" attached to a pleading is not a part thereof, and an answer, which merely alleges that a matter was attached to the petition as an exhibit, does not make the same a part of the answer. A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co., 122 S. W. 362, 365, 143 Mo. App. 42.

EXIGIBLE BY FORECLOSURE

The words "exigible by foreclosure" include an ordinary suit to foreclose the mortgage as well as executory process, and do not debar the plaintiff from recovering a judgment in personam against the mortgagor on her note due under the terms of the contract. Robson v. Beasley, 43 South. 391, 392, 118 La. 738.

EXILE

"Exile" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary as banishment, and "transportation" as a species of punishment consisting in removing the criminal from his own country to another (usually a penal colony), there to remain in "exile" for a prescribed period. United States v. Ju Toy, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 649, 198 U. S. 253, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

EXIST

The law "assumes the objectivity of external nature; and, for the purpose of judicial investigation, a thing perceived by the tribunal as existing does 'exist.'" Moorhead v. Arnold, 84 Pac. 742, 746, 73 Kan. 132 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Wigmore, Ev. p. 1345).

Under Sess. Laws 1908, p. 147, No. 82, providing that, where a corporation shall fail to appoint an agent on whom service of process may be had, any resident may maintain an action for a judicial dissolution, and, where a petition shows such a situation is existing, the court shall cite the corporation to appear, and, if on hearing it appears such condition "exists," the court shall dissolve the corporation, the word "exists" refers to the time of the hearing and not the time of the institution of the action. Flowing Wells Co. v. Culin, 95 Pac. 111, 112, 11 Ariz. 425.

A corporation, upon complying with the regulations of a statute as to the formation of a corporation, has the right to do business; in other words, the "right to be," to "exist." But this right to be or to exist is not an element of property that can be taxed. A corporation might exist for any number of years, but, if it never acquired any property or engaged in any business, its "right to be" would have no taxable value; it would have no cash value or no assessment value. A corporation so formed would likewise have a right to transact business, but, until it acquired property or actually transacted some business, it would have absolutely no value, and hence would not be a subject for taxation. Commonwealth v. Ledman, 106 S. W. 247, 251, 127 Ky. 608.

EXISTENCE

See Corporate Existence; During Existence; Merchandise Not in Existence; Potential Existence.

EXISTING

See Duly Organized and Existing.

EXISTING CREDITORS

The term "existing creditors," as used in a statute making certain transfers of property void as against "existing creditors," "has acquired, under our statutes, a definite and well-recognized meaning. It has been so construed as to exclude general pre-existing creditors who have not acquired a lien by attachment or execution levy before being affected with notice, either actual or constructive, of the execution of the mortgage, and to include subsequent creditors who have acquired such lien." Blackman v. Baxter, Reed & Co. (Iowa) 100 N. W. 78-80, 70 L. R. A. 250 (dissenting opinion of Judge McClain).

"Existing creditors" are, as those words imply, persons having subsisting obligations against the debtor at the time the fraudulent alienation was made or the secret trust created, although their claims may not have matured or been reduced to judgment until after such conveyance. A contingent liability is as fully protected against fraudulent and voluntary conveyances as a claim certain and absolute, and whoever has a claim or demand arising out of a pre-existing contract, although it may be contingent, is a creditor whose rights are affected by such conveyances, and can avoid them when the contingency happens upon which the claim depends." Carr v. Davis, 63 S. E. 326, 328, 64 W. Va. 522, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58, 16 Ann. Cas. 1031 (quoting and adopting definition in 20 Cyc. p. 421).

EXISTING DEBT

Code 1907, § 124, provides that, where a new county is formed, the inhabitants cut off from any county are liable for the pro rata amount of the "existing debt" of the counties from which they have been severed. Code 1896, § 1899, relating to the ascertainment and collection of such indebtedness, renders the new county liable therefor and subject to suit upon failure to comply with the section. Held, that the term "existing debts" means anything then owing by the old county, regardless of its assets or ability to pay, and, in the absence of a statutory provision permitting the new county to share in the old county's assets, the new county, while liable for its share of the old county's debt, cannot recover a share of the old county's general fund, in the absence of a showing that it, or a part thereof, had been specifically collected for the payment of the debt or had been applied to a sinking fund for that purpose. Houston County v. Henry County, 47 South. 710, 712, 157 Ala. 248.

EXISTING DEMAND

Where a vendor, who covenanted against incumbrances, took back a purchase money mortgage, and at the time there was an incumbrance on the premises, the purchaser, until he either paid it or was evicted, did not have an "existing demand" against the vendor on account of such incumbrance, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 502, subd. 1, providing that, in an action on a contract which has been assigned by the party, any demand existing against the assignor at the time of the assignment may be allowed as a counterclaim, and hence, where he did not pay the incumbrance until after the assignment, he had no right of set-off. D'Amelio v. Abraham, 105 N. Y. Supp. 1019, 1020, 54 Misc. Rep. 386.

EXISTING INDEBTEDNESS

Where a corporation contracted for the purchase at an agreed price of property to be thereafter delivered, the indebtedness therefor was incurred at the time of the contract, and became an existing indebtedness within the meaning of the statute, and the fact that the property was not delivered until after new directors had been elected did not render them personally liable therefor because of the failure of their predecessors to file the required report. The New York decisions in this respect are not to be followed. Risdon Iron & Locomotive Works v. Von Storch, 166 Fed. 936, 942.

The liability on contracts made by Greater New York for public improvements, pursuant to section 149 of its charter, under certification by the comptroller as to the fund applicable thereto, and chargeable to and payable from bonds issued for a term of years pursuant to authority given therefor prior to the execution of the contracts, and payable from future taxation, is an "existing indebtedness" of the city and must be included in determining the amount of its indebtedness within Const. art. 8, § 10. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 589, 573, 196 N. Y. 178.

"Payments falling due upon the rendition of services in the future, though fixed by the terms of an existing contract, do not constitute 'existing indebtedness' within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 3, which prohibits any municipal corporation from becoming indebted to an amount, 'including existing indebtedness,' exceeding 5 per centum of its taxable property." Town of Vaughn v. Montreal, 102 N. W. 561, 124 Wis. 802 (citing Stedman v. City of Berlin, 73 N. W. 57, 97 Wis. 505; Herman v. City of Oconto, 86 N. W. 681, 110 Wis. 680).

EXISTING INSURANCE

Where a carrier's marine policy did not cover any goods or merchandise on which there should be any existing insurance by or on account of the owners thereof, the term "existing insurance" included any other insurance during the continuance of the risk, which was valid and enforceable, and was not limited to insurance by the owner existing at the time the carrier's policy attached. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 167 Fed. 223, 225.

EXISTING LAW

The term "existing law," as used in General Corporation Law, as amended, providing that every corporation as such has power, though not specified in the law under which it is incorporated, to make by-laws, not inconsistent with any "existing law," for the management of its property, regulation of its affairs, etc., has reference, not only to statutes, but as well to decisions of the court as to what powers a corporation may or may not possess, where the subject is not covered by statutory enactment. Raub v. Gerken, 111 N. Y. Supp. 319, 321, 127 App. Div. 42.

EXISTING LIABILITY

The liability of a principal to indemnify a surety on a bond is an "existing liability at the time the bond is executed," within the rule that a conveyance with intent to defraud creditors is void as to existing obligations. Graeber v. Sides, 66 S. E. 600, 601, 151 N. C. 596.

EXISTING OBLIGATIONS

The liability of a principal to indemnify a surety on a bond is an existing liability at the time the bond is executed, within the rule that a conveyance with intent to defraud creditors is void as to existing obligations. Graeber v. Sides, 66 S. E. 600, 601, 151 N. C. 596.

EXISTING PERSON

A child, unborn at the time of its father's death but later born alive, is to be considered under the laws of this state as an existing person at the time of its father's death, and is therefore a beneficiary and entitled to participate in any damages recovered in an action brought under the statute for wrongfully causing the death of the father. Herndon v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Okla.) 128 Pac. 727, 730.

A child conceived, but not yet born, is to be deemed an "existing person," so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth. Where a child is unborn, and its existence is unknown to the defendant in an action by its mother to recover for the wrongful death of her husband, the father of the child, at the time the judgment is rendered in favor of the widow or other heirs, such judgment is a bar to a subsequent action by such unborn child to recover for its father's wrongful death, under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, authorizing such action to be brought either by the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 29, providing that an unborn child is deemed to be in existence, so far as necessary for its interests, in the event of its subsequent birth. Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 73 Pac. 244, 245, 139 Cal. 480, 96 Am. St. Rep. 154.

EXISTING RIGHT OF WAY

"Existing right of way," as used in St. 1892, c. 275, abolishing acquisition of a right of way across railroad tracks and excepting from its provisions "existing rights of way," meant rights of way which, at the time of the statute, had fully ripened into a right by prescription or otherwise and did not include rights, the adverse use of which had begun before passage of the statute, but which had not ripened into title at the time of such passage. Simpson v. Boston & M. R. R., 57 N. E. 674, 675, 176 Mass. 359.

EXISTING STREET RAILWAYS

The New Jersey traction companies act of March 14, 1893, authorizing companies incorporated thereunder to acquire and operate actually existing street railways, has reference to street railways actually existing and operated as such, and is not limited to those operated by legal authority. Jersey City v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., 67 Atl. 113, 114, 74 N. J. Law, 774.

EXISTING TENANCIES

The term "existing tenancies," subject to which a deed is taken, includes any tenancy, so as to prevent an action for breach of covenant of warranty, on the ground of its being an incumbrance, where the grantee had knowledge of it, and this was followed by an attornment and apportionment of the rent at the time of the transfer. Richardson v. Brower, 127 Pac. 1098, 1099, 71 Wash. 192.

EXISTING TERM OF OFFICE

Section 2 of the amendment to the Constitution, which is now designated as article 17, providing that the term of office of a probate judge shall be four years, is not retroactive. Terms of office existing at and before the adoption of the amendment are not restricted or abolished; but "existing terms of office" may be extended by the General Assembly, under authority of section 2 of the amendment, so as to effect the purpose of section 1 of the amendment. "Existing terms of office," as used in such amendment, means terms of office as defined by the Constitution and acts of the General Assembly as they existed at the time of the proposal of the amendment and of its adoption. The expression does not apply to such as might be elected in accordance with section 1 of the amendment, for as to such officers the provisions of such amendment are clearly intended to be self-executing. State ex rel. Pardee v. Pattison, 76 N. E. 946, 948, 73 Ohio St. 305.

EXPANDED METAL

"Expanded metal" may be generally described as metal openwork, held together by uncut portions of the metal, and constructed by making cuts or slashes in metal and then opening them so as to form a series of meshes or latticework. In its simplest form, sheet metal may be expanded by making a series of cuts or slits in the metal in such relation to each other as to break joints, so that the metal, when opened or stretched, will present an open mesh appearance. It may be likened to the familiar woven wire openwork construction, except that the metal is held together by uncut portions thereof, uniting the strands, and the whole forms a solid piece. Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 29 Sup. Ct. 652, 214 U. S. 366, 53 L. Ed. 1034.

EXPANSION TANK

An "expansion tank," in connection with a railway car-heating apparatus, "is a vessel to maintain a reserve supply of water in constant communication with both branches of the circulating system, and it should have a safety valve and means for filling the system with water." Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co. v. Consolidated Car Heating Co., 160 Fed. 476, 481.

EXPATRIATE

"Expatriation" included not simply the leaving of one's native country, but the becoming naturalized in the country adopted as a future residence." United States v.

Wong Kim Ark, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 481, 169 U. S. 649, 42 L. Ed. 890.

EXPECT

See Reasonably Expected.

"A statement made by one person to another that he 'expects' to do a certain act is a very different thing from making an absolute promise or guaranty that he will perform such act. To expect to do a thing simply means to look forward to doing it with the anticipation, or belief, of its accomplishment. The giving of information by a railroad company to a shipper as to what is the schedule of a particular train, with the statement that the company 'expects' to maintain such schedule, is not the making of any promise other than to perform the duty with respect to such schedule which the law already imposes." Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wells, 60 S. E. 170, 171, 130 Ga. 55.

Where plaintiff wrote defendant railroad that he had a claim against defendant's contractor, and that he would proceed to collect the same if defendant did not settle the account, the words "expects to settle all bills," in a letter from defendant that the railroad company "expects to settle all bills" of the contractor, did not necessarily mean payment. Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Shea, 91 N. E. 1081, 1083, 174 Ind. 303.

In a letter to the representative of a deceased creditor, a discharged bankrupt wrote: "I have paid quite a few of the old losses, expect to pay more, and the next one shall be to the family of my departed friend." And in another letter he held his promise to the creditor good, but did not know when he could do what he wanted to do. Held, that "expect to pay" was nothing more than a mere desire or intention to pay, and that the language was insufficient to revive the debt. Coe v. Rosene, 118 Pac. 881, 882, 66 Wash. 73, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 741.

EXPECTANCY

See Probable Expectancy.

See, also, Expectant Estate.

An "expectancy" is an inchoate gift. Searcy v. Kelly (Tex.) 98 S. W. 1080, 1085.

An expectancy or hope is defined as "a mere hope unfounded in any limitation, possession, trust, or legal act whatever, such as the hope which an heir apparent has of succeeding to the ancestor's estate. This is sometimes said to be a bare or mere possibility. It is a possibility, in the popular sense of the term. But it is less than a possibility in the specific sense of the term 'possibility'; for it is no right at all, in contemplation of law, even by possibility, because in the case of a mere expectancy nothing has been done to create an obligation in any event, and where there has been no obligation there can be no right, for right and obligation are correlative terms." McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 1026, 123 Iowa, 413 (quoting 2 Fearne, Remainders, p. 23); Elliott v. Leslie, 99 S. W. 619, 621, 124 Ky. 553, 124 Am. St. Rep. 418 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Fearne, Rem. 23).

The interest of a beneficiary in an insurance policy, reserving the right to change the beneficiary or assign the policy, has been defined as an "expectancy" or "an inchoate or unexecuted gift, revocable at any moment by the donor and remaining wholly within his control." McNeill v. Ohinn, 101 S. W. 465, 467, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 551 (citing Coleman v. Anderson, 86 S. W. 730, 98 Tex. 576).

As property

See Property.

EXPECTANCY OF LIFE

The term "expectancy of life" expresses accurately the time which a healthy person may live, as shown by the mortality tables. Belmer v. Boyne City Tanning Co., 125 N. W. 726, 729, 160 Mich. 669.

EXPECTANT ESTATE

Any interest in remainder, whether absolutely vested or vested subject to being divested or contingent, is an "expectancy." Anticipations not coupled with a legal interest are not deemed "expectant estates." Robinson v. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co., 133 N. Y. S. 257, 262, 75 Misc. Rep. 361.

Where the share of testatrix, in a portion of an estate, was being held by the executors by her permission, subject only to a burden imposed by her own act, in determining the validity of a gift of this fund the rule regarding the transfer of "expectancies" did not apply. Hobart's Adm'r v. Vall, 66 Atl. 820, 824, 80 Vt. 152.

The interest of a contingent remainder is not an "expectancy." McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 98 N. W. 1025, 1026, 123 Iowa, 413.

"Estates, as respects the time of their enjoyment, are divided into 'estates in possession' and 'estates in expectancy.' An estate which entitled the owner to immediate possession of the property is an 'estate in possession.' An estate in which the right of possession is postponed to a future time is an 'estate in expectancy.'" In re Perry, 96 N. Y. Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285 (quoting Real Property Law, § 25).

Under 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) p. 726, pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, § 40, providing that when, in consequence of the valid limitation of an expectant estate, there shall be a valid suspension of the power of alienation or of ownership, during the continuance of which the rents and profits shall be undisposed of, and no valid direction for their accumulation given, they shall belong to the persons presumptively entitled to the next eventual estate, page 773, § 2, making this rule applicable to future estates in personal property, and page 773, § 8, defining an "estate in expectancy" as where the right to the possession is postponed to a future period, where a testator provided for certain annual payments to his widow and niece, with remainder, on the widow's death, to certain charitable institutions, there was a valid limitation of an expectant estate and a suspension of the absolute ownership entitling the charitable institutions to any undisposed of income. Matter of Harteau, 110 N. Y. Supp. 59, 62, 125 App. Div. 710.

"At common law estates in real property, with respect to the time of their enjoyment, were either in 'possession' or 'expectancy.' The person who had the present enjoyment of that out of which the enjoyment arose had an estate in possession. The person whose enjoyment was postponed had an 'estate in expectancy,' which, however, was created at the same time as that upon which it was expectant. Expectant estates were either in remainder, limited to take effect and to be enjoyed after the particular estate, or in reversion; the residue of the estate left in the grantor or his heirs to commence in possession after the determination of the particular estate." State ex rel. Tozer v. Probate Court of Washington County, 113 N. W. 888, 898, 102 Minn. 268.

Personal Property Law, § 23, provides that, upon the written consent of all the persons beneficially interested in a trust in personal property, the creator of the trust may revoke it. Section 11 provides that the same rule which regulates future estates in land is applicable to future estates in personal property. Real Property Law, §§ 35, 36, provide that an estate in which the right of possession is postponed to a future time is an estate in expectancy, and that all expectant estates except such as are enumerated in this article are abolished, and expectant estates are divided into future estates and reversions. Section 59 provides that an expectant estate is descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession. A trust deed provided that the settlor should receive the income from the trust fund for life, and, if he left surviving a wife and children, the fund should be divided equally between them, but that, if the settlor died without wife or children or issue of children surviving, the income should be paid to the settlor's mother and brother during her life and upon her death the whole to the brother, or, if either the mother or brother died before the death of the settlor, the income should be paid to the survivor during life, and upon termination of the trust the trustee should pay over the principal fund to such persons as at said time might be the settlor's next of kin on his father's side. Held, that a brother and nephew of the settlor's deceased father did not, during the lifetime of the settlor, possess an estate in "expectancy" within the meaning of section 59, since it was uncertain that they were the persons who would ultimately take the estate, nor were they "beneficially interested" in the estate within the meaning of section 23, as their interest was not devisable, descendible, or alienable, and hence the settlor could revoke the trust without their consent. Robinson v. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co., 183 N. Y. Supp. 257, 261, 75 Misc. Rep. 361.

EXPECTANT HEIR

"In England, the words 'expectant heir' originally meant just what the expression naturally signifies, an heir expecting an inheritance through intestacy or devise. The doctrine of 'expectant heir' amounted to nothing more than this: That a person should not, at common law, sell that which did not belong to him, either in possession or by vested right, but which he hoped might be acquired either certainly or contingently in the future." McAdams v. Bailey, 82 N. E. 1057, 1062, 169 Ind. 518, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003, 124 Am. St. Rep. 240 (quoting from Whelen v. Phillips, 25 Atl. 44, 151 Pa. 312).

EXPECTATION

See Wish and Expectation.

The term "expectation," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 120, § 366, imposing a tax on the transfer of property by will, where one becomes beneficially entitled in possession or expectation to any property or income thereof, is used "not to denote an expectation of becoming vested both with the title and the possession where neither is now vested but to denote a condition where the title is vested and the possession is deferred. The term 'in expectation' is used in contradistinction to 'in possession.' Both contemplate a title vested and indefeasible; but in one instance the right of enjoyment is immediate 'in possession,' in the other it is postponed 'in expectation.' As used in this statute, these words last quoted refer to the future possession of an estate now vested, and which is subject to the immediate enjoyment of another." People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 353, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775.

EXPEDIENTE

"Expediente," in Mexican law, means all the papers or documents constituting a grant or title to land from government. Vanderlice v. Hanks, 3 Cal. 27, 38.

EXPEDITION

See Military Expedition.

EXPEDITIOUSLY

See Immediately and Expeditiously.

EXPEL

The word "expel" ordinarily means to drive or force out or reject. Aaron v. Ward, 121 N. Y. Supp. 673, 676, 136 App. Div. 818.

EXPENDITURE

See Extraordinary Expenditures.

EXPENDITURES ACTUALLY MADE

Under a contract stipulating that plaintiff guaranteed the amount of expenditures actually made by it on contracts assumed by defendant without deducting the moneys received on account of contracts designating a sum which defendant agreed to pay to plaintiff, the phrase the "amount of expenditures actually made" included not only the expenditures actually made by plaintiff in part performance of the contract but also those made by it in procuring them. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. American Bridge Co., 55 Atl. 573, 576, 76 Conn. 1.

Of administration

Where a stipulation provided that expenses of administration should be borne by the life tenant, it did not include costs of an accounting contested only by the remaindermen. In re Brower, 130 N. Y. Supp. 191, 193, 194, 71 Misc. Rep. 398.

A claim for legal services in the settlement of the estate of a decedent is a claim of the second class, within Mills' Ann. St. § 4780, dividing demands against decedents into four classes, and providing that expenses of administration shall be included in the second class, and the provision of the section requiring claims to be filed within the specified time applies only to the claims of the fourth class. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. People, 98 Pac. 828, 834, 44 Colo. 557.

For care of sick person

"Given its plainest and most obvious meaning, the phrase 'expenses for the care' of a sick person means only such expenses as pertain to attendance, nursing, board, and treatment, and not to the expense of erecting and furnishing a building in which such care is furnished." L. H. Kurtz Co. v. Polk County, 109 N. W. 612, 613, 136 Iowa, 419.

Caused by contempt

The term "expenses," as used in a statute providing that, if actual loss to a party in an action is caused by contempt, the court, in addition to fine or imprisonment, may order payment to the party aggrieved of a sum sufficient to indemnify him and to satisfy his "costs and expenses," is intended to include something more than the costs and disbursements allowed by statute to the prevailing party in ordinary civil actions, and may include such reasonable attorneys' fees as the relator may have paid or obligated himself to pay counsel in order to obtain the benefit of the order which the defendant has violated. Davidson v. Munsey, 80 Pac. 743, 745, 29 Utah, 181.

Of collection

The cost of suit is a part of the "expense of collection," within Laws 1899, p. 177, c. 109, providing that a decree rendered in a suit for the settlement of an indebtedness due from one county to another shall be enforced by an annual tax levy to pay the decree, interest, and expense of collection. State ex rel. Chicot County v. Desha County, 99 S. W. 1108, 1109, 82 Ark. 360.

Of completion of work

In a provision in a contract between a building contractor and a subcontractor that, in case the subcontractor should fail to carry on the work and the owner should be obliged to complete it, the expenses incurred by the owner, and to be deducted from the contract price, should be audited and certified by the architect, the "expenses" provided for included a commission allowed the contractor for his services in making the arrangements and supervising the carrying on of the work after default of the subcontractor. White v. Abbott, 74 N. E. 805, 806, 188 Mass. 99.

Of condemnation

The provisions of Laws 1905, p. 2027, c. 724, as supplemented by Laws 1905, p. 2051, c. 725, for allowance of expenses and disbursements, including witness and counsel fees, constitute "just compensation," so far as the landowner's necessary expenses are concerned; the term "expenses" covering any necessary expense, except those items otherwise provided for in the statute. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 642, 645, 62 Misc. Rep. 326.

Laws 1905, p. 2027, c. 724, as amended, being an act to provide for an additional supply of water for the city of New York, provides, by section 32 and section 13 as amended, that in proceedings by the city to procure land an allowance shall be made to parties of "expenses and disbursements, including reasonable compensation for witnesses," and for allowances for counsel fees not exceeding the limits prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 8253. Held, that the words "expenses and disbursements" provided for costs; and hence the general statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 8240) authorizing the court, in its discretion, to allow in a special proceeding the costs of an action, is not applicable, and the statutory costs cannot be allowed. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 640, 642, 62 Misc. Rep. 324.

The term "expenses of court" does not include the salaries of the judges of the superior courts. Clark v. Hammond, 68 S. E. 600, 603, 134 Ga. 792.

Any expense lawfully incurred is an expense of holding court. Expenses of a committee of citizens of a creditor appointed by a grand jury to inspect and examine the offices, papers, books, and records of county officers, and to make a full and complete report of the result of such investigation to the next succeeding grand jury, are expenses of the court, the grand jury being a component part of the court. Chatham County v. Gaudry, 47 S. E. 634, 635, 120 Ga. 121.

Const. art. 6, § 1, par. 1, provides that the judicial powers of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, superior courts, courts of ordinary, justices of the peace, commissioned notaries public, and such other courts as may be established by law. Paragraph 5, providing for writs of error, declares that they may be taken from the superior court and from the city courts of Atlanta and Savannah and such other city courts as may be established in other cities. Held, that the power to create local city courts is recognized, and city courts being in existence at the adoption of the Constitution, and salaries of the judges being paid by local taxation, the recognition of such courts embraces the recognition of the organization thereof and manner of payment of the judges' salaries, which are "expenses of court," within Const. art. 7, § 6, par. 2 (Civ. Code, § 5892), providing that the General Assembly shall not have power to delegate to any county the right to levy a tax except for expenses of court, etc., so that Acts 1905, p. 100, providing for levy of a county tax for payment of the salary of a city court judge, is not violative of article 7, § 6, par. 2. Clark v. Eve, 68 S. E. 598, 134 Ga. 788.

Of drainage proceedings

Fees for the services of attorneys and counsel to drainage commissioners in drafting necessary legal papers and counseling them of the manner of discharging their duties in constructing drains under the drainage law constituted "expenses," which the commissioners were entitled to include in an assessment on property benefited. In re Turrell, 117 N. Y. Supp. 764, 769, 63 Misc. Rep. 502.

Of health officer

The word "expenses," in the provision of the act of 1893 (section 2522 Gen. St. 1902) that the necessary expenses of the town health officer shall be paid by the town treasurer upon the approval of his bill by the county health officer, means something due the health officer. Keefe v. Town of Union, 56 Atl. 571, 574, 76 Conn. 180 (citing Heublein v. New Haven, 54 Atl. 298, 75 Conn. 545, 547).

Of legal proceeding

* An agreement between two parties to share in paying the "cost and expense" of a suit against one of the parties includes the costs taxed against such party as a part of the "expense" of the suit. Provident Chemical Works v. Hygienic Chemical Co., 170 Fed. 523, 525.

An indemnity insurance policy stipulating that insurer's liability for loss to insured is limited to $5,000, that insurer will pay the "expenses of litigation" in addition to such sum; that, if any suit is brought against insured, insurer will, at its own cost, defend the suit, unless it shall elect to pay insured the indemnity fixed, and that insured, when requested by insurer, shall aid in effecting settlements, but shall not voluntarily assume any liability or interfere in any negotiations for settlement or incur any expense except at his own cost without the consent of insurer previously given, binds insurer to pay $5,000 and, in addition thereto, the expense that insured has been put to by litigation required by insurer, including costs, damages, and interest on $5,000, though, as between insurer and insured, the liability does not attach until insured has suffered some loss; the phrase "expenses of litigation" not being confined to the payment of attorney's fees, obtaining witnesses' testimony, securing bonds, and other like expenses incident to such class of actions. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co., 150 S. W. 994, 995, 150 Ky. 782, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1128.

Of medical attendance

In a personal injury action, where plaintiff claimed damages for medical and nurse hire, a question to him as to what expenses he was put to by the injuries for medical attendance, medicines, etc., was not objectionable as requiring testimony of anything but actual expenditures, within the rule forbidding evidence of liability incurred, but not discharged, under an allegation of payment; "expense" meaning the laying out or expending of money or other resources. Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co., 104 Pac. 312, 313, 156 Cal. 273.

Where, in an action for injuries, plaintiff alleged that he had been put to great expense for medical attendance and nursing, and for the purchase of drugs and medicine, to the amount of $400, the words "put to expense" meant "had incurred or been compelled to incur expense," the word "expense" meaning not only the cost of contemplated services and materials, but also the charges for such as have been performed or furnished, whether paid or not, and hence plaintiff was not limited to recovering "expenses paid," but was entitled to recover for expenses incurred. Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 1018, 144 Mo. App. 273.

Of mortgage sale

Where a note was given in payment of land, conditioned to be paid if M.'s mortgage on the land was paid or caused to be paid by M., but if M. failed to do so, and T., the maker of the note, was put to expense to protect himself, such "expense" should be deducted from the notes, and M. had also executed a deed of trust on another tract as a protection against liability on the mortgage, any excess in value of the other tract above what T., who purchased at the trustee's sale, gave for it could not be considered to decrease the amount of his expense in protecting himself from the mortgage, which he paid. Heard v. Thrasher (Tex.) 71 S. W. 803, 811.

Of municipal treasury

Under Acts 1900, p. 153, c. 119, providing a scheme for working public roads, requiring all persons to work on the roads or pay a commutation tax and an ad valorem tax on property, that the commutation tax shall be turned over to the treasurer of the municipality, but that the ad valorem tax shall be treated as a general road fund for use anywhere in the county, except that taxes so collected on property within a municipality, the streets of which are worked at the expense of the municipal treasury, shall be divided between the county road fund and the municipal street fund, the streets of a municipality are worked "at the expense of the municipal treasury" only when they are so worked with money collected by taxation, and they are not worked at the expense of the municipal treasury when they are worked with funds made up of commutation taxes collected under an ordinance, fines imposed on street delinquents and for the obstruction of streets. McComb City v. Pike County, 88 South. 721, 86 Miss. 647.

Of prosecutions

Loc. Acts 1901, p. 671, No. 468, § 37, provides that all moneys paid to the justice of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, except jury, officer and witness fees, and fines and costs recovered for violation of laws, shall be for the use of the city, and shall be paid weekly to the city treasurer; also that expenses of prosecutions for violation of penal laws of the state shall be paid by the county. Held, that the justice was not entitled to retain the fees authorized by the general laws of the state to be collected in criminal cases by justices of the peace; they not being "costs," nor "expenses," within the statute, in view of section 38, providing that the justice shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 in full compensation for all services performed by him. Harrison v. Board of Sup'rs of Chipewa County, 114 N. W. 851, 852, 151 Mich. 91.

Of road or street

The word "expense," as used in Rev. St. c. 53, § 19, providing that a street railroad shall be constructed and maintained as the municipal officers may direct, and, when it shall be necessary to alter the grade of the road, the alteration shall be made at the "expense" of the corporation, will include the damages to landowners which, if paid by the town, are part of the expenses of the alteration and are recoverable by the town from the railroad corporation. Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 74 Atl. 734, 738, 105 Me. 301.

The terms "expense" and "whole expense," as used in statutes relieving towns under certain circumstances from the burden of building and keeping in suitable repair for travel all highways and bridges within its limits, mean the same. Town of Bridge-water v. Grafton County, 69 Atl. 941, 942, 74 N. H. 549.

Under a statute providing for the apportionment of the "expense of repairing highways" among towns greatly benefited by them, an apportionment may be made on account of future maintenance expenses. O'Neill v. Town of Walpole, 66 Atl. 119, 120, 74 N. H. 197.

Of sale of land

Defendant entered into a contract with plaintiffs' testator, whereby testator, for the consideration of $1, was to have a one-fourth interest in the net profits resulting from the sale of certain lands. There was no partnership relation between them. The sale of the lands required several years, and the defendant expended much labor in the sale of the lands and collection of the purchase price therefor, all of which must have been contemplated by the parties at the time of making the contract. The contract provided that defendant be allowed from the money received from the land expenses connected with the sale. Held, that the term "expenses" included all outlays by defendant both of money and labor, and that he was entitled to receive compensation for his services in selling the land. Rust v. Fitzhugh, 112 N. W. 508, 513, 132 Wis. 549.

On breach of contract

Rev. Codes, § 6054, making the detriment caused by breach of an agreement to convey an estate in realty the price paid, expenses properly incurred in examining title, etc., and allowing expenses incurred in preparing to enter upon the land in case of bad faith, applies to an agreement to convey an equitable estate as well as a legal estate, and hence would apply to a transfer of land certificates entitling the holder to patent state land. Ross v. Saylor, 104 Pac. 864, 868, 39 Mont. 559.

Where plaintiff, after exchanging land with defendant under an agreement to convey, made after defendant had conveyed his interest therein to another, expended a certain sum in removing his family upon it from another state, and other sums for counsel fees and costs in defending an action against him brought by defendant's prior grantee, such sums were "expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land" within Rev. Codes, § 6054, making such expenses part of the detriment caused by breach of an agreement to convey, made in bad faith. Id.

EXPENSE FUND

By general acceptance the expression "expense fund" means a fund set apart and dedicated to expense purposes. Wood & Duvall v. Iowa Building & Loan Ass'n, 102 N. W. 410, 412, 126 Iowa, 464.

EXPERIENCE

See Skillful and Experienced Men.

"Experience" is knowledge derived from proof furnished by one's own faculties instead of by reason. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Klinkrath, 81 N. E. 377, 378, 227 Ill. 439.

The term "experience," as ordinarily understood, means knowledge gained by observation or trial. Steinwender v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 271, 274, 141 App. Div. 432.

"The word 'experience' means to have practical acquaintance with, which is equivalent to knowledge, and the word 'capacity,' in the sense in which it was used (in an instruction requiring of a boy the exercise of care and prudence equal to his capacity, etc.), means capability or skill, as applied to the business in which he was engaged," and an instruction requiring a finding that plaintiff did not use such care and precaution as a person of his age and experience would have ordinarily used, under the circumstances, as a prerequisite to the finding of contributory negligence was proper, and not objectionable for failure to use the words "capacity," "age," "knowledge" and "experience." Stanley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 87 S. W. 112, 113, 112 Mo. App. 601.

A policy of credit insurance made the "experience" of the insured in dealing with its customers the basis of credit, and then provided that the highest previous indebtedness should be taken as an "experience" which would justify the indemnified in again extending credit to an old customer. Held, that the term "experience" meant a business transaction which was closed, since until the goods for which the credit was extended were paid for, and the transaction closed, the creditor would not be justified in extending further credit. Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Cannon & Byers Millinery Co., 118 S. W. 1004, 1006, 183 Ky. 745.

EXPERIMENT

Where the idea of a machine has been conceived, and the conception carried into effect, by the construction of the machine, which is used or is capable of being used for the purpose for which it was designed, it is no longer an "experiment," but an "invention," and the subsequent abandonment of the use of the machine does not render it an abandoned experiment, nor lessen its effect as an anticipation which will invalidate a subsequent patent to another for substantially the same machine. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., 151 Fed. 478, 492, 81 C. C. A. 16.

EXPERIMENTAL USE

The use of a machine while it was being perfected, in a room from which the public and all others not engaged in its operation were excluded, changes and improvements being made from time to time, although extending back to more than two years before application was made for a patent, was an experimental and not a public use, and did not invalidate the patent granted therefor, and it is immaterial that the product of such experimental use was sold. Penn Electrical & Mfg. Co. v. Conroy, 159 Fed. 943, 947, 87 C. C. A. 149.

EXPERT

An "expert" witness is a person who possesses peculiar skill and a knowledge upon the subject-matter on which he is called to testify. State v. Ruthledge, 79 Pac. 1123, 1124, 37 Wash. 523 (quoting and adopting definition in Underhill, Ev. § 185).

An "expert" is one qualified by study or experience, or both, to understand and explain the subject under consideration. Miera v. Territory, 81 Pac. 586, 588, 13 N. M. 192.

An "expert" is one possessing in regard to a particular subject or department of human activity, knowledge not acquired by ordinary persons. Ford v. Providence Coal Co., 99 S. W. 609, 611, 124 Ky. 517; Yates v. Garrett (Okl.) 92 Pac. 142, 143, 19 Okl. 449.

An "expert" is one having superior knowledge of a subject acquired by professional, scientific, or technical training or by practical experience, which gives him knowledge not had by persons generally so as to enable him to aid the court or jury in determining the matters under consideration. Ausmus v. People, 107 Pac. 204, 212, 47 Colo. 167.

An "expert" is one who is skilled in any particular art, trade, or profession, being possessed of peculiar knowledge concerning the same. A witness whose preliminary examination showed that he cultivated sugar beets in one year and observed their growth in another was competent to state when they should be thinned and how many tons could be raised per acre, since the extent of examination necessary to qualify him was within the discretion of the court. Farmers' & Traders' Nat. Bank v. Woodell, 61 Pac. 837, 840, 88 Or. 294 (quoting and adopting definition in Rogers, Exp. Test. [2d Ed.] § 1; and citing Pendleton v. Saunders, 24 Pac. 506, 19 Or. 9).

"Expert testimony" is the opinion of a witness possessing peculiar knowledge, wisdom, skill, or information regarding a subject-matter under consideration, acquired by study, investigation, observation, practice, or experience, and not likely to be possessed by the ordinary layman or an inexperienced person, who is incapable of understanding the subject without the aid of the opinion of some person who possesses such knowledge or experience; and a person who is competent to give expert testimony is denominated an "expert witness." McAnany v. Henric, 141 S. W. 633, 636, 238 Mo. 103.

"An 'expert' is one possessing, in regard to a particular subject or department of human activity, knowledge not acquired by ordinary persons." "This knowledge may be derived from experience, or from study and direct mental application." "Strictly speaking, an 'expert' in any science, art, or trade is one, who, by practice or observation, has become experienced therein." But generally nothing more is required to entitle one to give testimony as an expert than that he has been educated in the particular trade or profession. Knowledge gained by consistent and close study of medical works renders one competent to testify as an "expert" concerning the matters of which he has thus learned. Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Mason, 51 S. E. 569, 571, 123 Ga. 773 (quoting and adopting definition in Rogers, Expert Testimony [2d Ed.] § 2).

"An 'expert' is one possessing, in regard to a particular subject or department of human activity, knowledge not acquired by an ordinary person. This knowledge may be derived from experience or from study and direct mental application." Where witnesses, in an action to review a tax assessment on the easements held by a gas company in the streets of a city, had been students of taxation and tax laws for many years, had been called upon to value the easements of public service corporations in many cities, and knew the character and extent of the easements of the gas company, they were qualified as "experts" to give their opinions as to the correctness of the assessment in question. Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore City v. City of Baltimore, 65 Atl. 628, 632, 105 Md. 43, 121 Am. St. Rep. 553.

One who has taken a course of study as electrical engineer, and who was the chief engineer in the construction of a powder plant, and who thereafter for about eight years was in the practical charge of the electrical machinery of the plant, is qualified to give expert testimony relative to electrical switches and their installation in places where high explosives are kept, though he has worked in no other powder mill; an "expert" being one who is skilled in a particular act, trade, or profession, possessed of peculiar knowledge concerning the same. Jewell v. Excelsior Powder Mfg. Co., 149 S. W. 1045, 1048, 166 Mo. App. 555.

A carpenter of 30 years' standing, who had some experience in setting and repairing plate glass, is properly treated as "an expert" as to the cause of the break of a plate glass window. Drouin v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 825, 828, 80 Vt. 335, 13 Ann. Cas. 93.

Machinists of wide experience, who had examined a car and who understood the relations of its parts and the principles on which they worked, were competent to give "expert" evidence on the question of the proper method of fastening a door of the car. Zarnik v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 113 N. W. 752, 756, 133 Wis. 290.

An "expert" as to handwriting is defined to be "any person who has had such experience in the examination of handwriting as to enable him to note and distinguish the characteristics of handwriting." In re Burbank, 93 N. Y. Supp. 866, 870, 104 App. Div. 312 (quoting Greenl. Ev. § 577).

An "expert" on handwriting is a person accustomed to and skilled in the matter of genuine and spurious handwriting. Griffin v. Working Woman's Home Ass'n, 44 South. 605, 607, 151 Ala. 597.

EXPERT EVIDENCE OR TESTIMONY

"The scope of 'expert evidence' is not restricted to matters of science or skill, but to any subject in respect to which one may derive, by experience, special and peculiar knowledge." Zarnik v. C. Reiss Coal Co., 113 N. W. 752, 755, 133 Wis. 290.

"Expert evidence" is not confined to matters involving abstruse, scientific conditions. Any subject wherein a person may become specially learned is within the broad field of expert evidence. Schwantes v. State, 106 N. W. 237, 247, 127 Wis. 160 (citing Wharton's Law of Ev. [3d Ed.] § 444).

The scope of "expert evidence" is not restrained to matters in the field of science, art, or skill, technically speaking, but it extends to every subject in respect to which one may derive, by experience, special and peculiar knowledge. Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 106 N. W. 1081, 1086, 127 Wis. 550, 7 Ann. Cas. 458.

All matters of physical facts are not "opinion evidence," in the legal sense of that term. They are not theoretical, nor conclusions drawn by inference, but a statement of facts from personal observation, and hence also they are not "expert evidence." The exceptions to the rule that witnesses cannot give opinions is not confined to the evidence of experts testifying on subjects requiring special knowledge, skill, or learning, but it includes the evidence of common observers testifying the result of their observations made at the time in regard to common appearances, facts, and conditions which cannot be reproduced and made palpable to a jury. Britt v. Carolina Northern R. Co., 61 S. E. 601, 603, 148 N. C. 37.

"Expert testimony" is the evidence of persons who are skilled in some art, science, profession, or business, which skill or knowledge is not common to their fellow men, and which has come to such experts by reason of special study and experience in such art, science, profession, or business." State v. Collins (Del.) 62 Atl. 224, 227, 5 Pennewill, 263; Louft v. C. & J. Pyle Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 619, 622, 1 Boyce, 192.

"Expert testimony" is the opinion of a witness possessing peculiar knowledge, wisdom, skill, or information regarding a subject-matter under consideration acquired by study, investigation, observation, practice, or experience, and not likely to be possessed by the ordinary layman or an inexperienced person, who is incapable of understanding the subject without the aid of the opinion of some person who possesses such knowledge or experience; and a person who is competent to give expert testimony is denominated an "expert witness." McAnany v. Henricl, 141 S. W. 633, 636, 238 Mo. 103.

Where all the facts on which the opinions of a witness are based are within the knowledge of the witness, and such facts are given to the jury, the explanations are not properly "expert testimony." Green v. Kansas City S. R. Co., 125 S. W. 865, 870, 142 Mo. App. 67.

In an action for injuries to a railroad employé engaged in dumping ballast cars, he claimed that, in attempting to save himself from a fall caused by a jar of the train, he threw one foot back to the platform of the car behind, and that his foot went through a hole mashed through the planks and a part of the sill, down on the drawbar, and was injured. The defect in the platform was denied by defendant, and, in corroboration of plaintiff's testimony, he claimed that the injury showed it was caused by his foot being caught between two uneven surfaces, while defendant claimed that it was crushed between two even surfaces. Held, that evidence of physicians, who examined plaintiff immediately after the injury, that the foot must have been injured by coming in contact with two uneven surfaces was not "expert testimony," but was direct testimony as to how the injury occurred and what caused it, and was therefore inadmissible. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Smith, 70 N. E. 623, 630, 208 Ill. 608.

EXPIRE—EXPIRATION

See At the Expiration.

Ordinarily the phrase "expiration of term," in a lease, means end of the term by lapse of the time fixed in the lease for its duration, though it may mean the termination of the lease in any manner, at least in any manner provided for in the lease. Pringle v. Wilson, 104 Pac. 316, 318, 156 Cal. 313, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090.

Under a lease providing that, in case of breach of condition, the landlord may give a five days' notice of intention to determine the lease, and declaring the effect of the notice to be that the lease and the term and interest and all right and claim under the lease shall cease and end, the landlord is entitled, after such breach and notice, to maintain a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 2231, subd. 1, authorizing the dispossession of a tenant who holds over after the expiration of the term, for when the notice has been given, and the premises thereby curtailed, it has "expired," within the meaning of the statute. Martin v. Crossley, 91 N. Y. Supp. 712, 714, 46 Misc. Rep. 254.

A statute making a tenant liable for double rents when he willfully holds over "after the 'expiration' of the time" does not apply to a case where the lease was terminated, before the expiration of the time named, for breach of condition. Walther v. Anderson, 114 S. W. 414, 417, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 380 (citing Stuart v. Hamilton, 66 Ill. 255).

EXPLAIN

EXPLANATION

A statement made by prosecutrix, in a rape case, four months after the alleged assault, and not voluntarily, but in response to a demand for explanation of her condition, is not a complaint but a mere "explanation." State v. Bebb, 101 N. W. 189, 190, 125 Iowa, 494.

EXPLICIT NOTICE

Notice to the purchaser of a note may be of two kinds, "explicit notice" of the fraud or illegality, and "implicit" or "general notice." If the purchaser of notes at the time of buying them had notice or knowledge of some illegality or knowledge of some illegality or fraud which vitiated them, though he was not apprised of its nature, this would be such "general notice" as would affect his title. Mere negligence, however gross, not amounting to this willful and fraudulent blindness, will not of itself amount to notice; but the jury may and should consider the fact of such negligence, as it may tend to prove such "general notice." Mack v. Starr, 61 Atl. 472, 473, 78 Conn. 184.

EXPLOITATION

The word "exploitation," which is of somewhat recent importation into the English from the French, has a different meaning from the word "improvement." "Exploitation" [Cent. Dict.]: (1) The act or process of exploiting, making use of, or working up; utilization by the application of industry, argument, or other means of turning to account, as the exploitation of a mine or forest, of public opinion, etc. 'Joint-stock companies or associations of capital are now very advantageously employed for the exploitation of different branches of industry.' To exploit: (2) To make complete use of; work up; bring into play; utilize; cultivate." (Recent, from modern French "exploiter.") Morton Trust Co. v. American Salt Co., 149 Fed. 540, 542.

EXPLORATION

Development equivalent, see Development.

EXPLOSION

As fire, see Fire.

"The term 'explosion' has no fixed and definite meaning either in ordinary speech or in law. It may be described, in a general way, as sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report. It may and does vary in degrees of intensity and in the vehemence of the report, and it is not always due to the presence of fire. Indeed, it may result from decomposition or chemical action." Vorse v. Jersey Plate Glass Ins. Co., 93 N. W. 569, 570, 119 Iowa, 555, 60 L. R. A. 888, 97 Am. St. Rep. 380.

EXPLOSIVE

See Burglary with Explosives.

Other explosive, see Other.

Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 105, which in other sections regulates the storing of gunpowder and "explosives," excludes gunpowder from the list of explosives. Flynn v. Butler (Mass.) 75 N. E. 730, 731.

Where a large metal tube filled with various metals and materials of an explosive and dangerous nature was exposed to the heat of a furnace on plaintiff's premises and actually exploded and injured an employé, such tube and its contents constituted an "explosive," within a warranty in an employer's liability policy insuring plaintiff that no explosives should be used on the premises. B. Roth Tool Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 161 Fed. 709, 713, 88 C. C. A. 569.

EXPORT-EXPORTATION

"'Exportation' is defined to be the act of carrying or sending merchandise abroad." Thompson v. United States, 12 Sup. Ct. 290, 301, 142 U. S. 471, 85 L. Ed. 1084.

The terms "imports" and "exports" apply only to articles imported from foreign countries, or exported to them. Red O. Oil Mfg. Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 172 Fed. 695, 706 (citing Pittsburgh & S. Coal Co. v. State of Louisiana, 15 Sup. Ct. 459, 156 U. S. 590, 39 L. Ed. 544).

The action of the province of Quebec in imposing a license fee for cutting wood on public lands, which is reduced when the wood is manufactured into pulp in Canada, is in effect the imposition of an "export duty" on pulp wood exported to the United States, within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 393, 30 Stat. 187, providing a countervailing duty on wood pulp equal to the amount of export duty imposed on pulp wood by the country of exportation. Myers v. United States, 140 Fed. 648, 650, 655.

Joint Congressional Resolution No. 10, March 14, 1912 (37 Stat. 630), provides that, whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to "export," except under such limitations as shall be prescribed by the President, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country, until otherwise ordered by the President. Held, that the word "export" was limited to a transportation of arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to "such country"; and hence a charge that accused, with intent to export munitions of war from the city of El Paso to a place in Mexico, in violation of a proclamation by the President pursuant to such resolution, did make a shipment of cartridges, etc., by transporting them on his person from one point to another in the city of El Paso, did not charge a violation of the resolution. United States v. Chavez, 190 Fed. 518, 519 (citing 3 Words & Phrases, pp. 2600-2602).

EXPORTERS

The term "marketers" as used in an order for goods, reading: "If reasonable ship to-morrow Thursday four to six loads 'marketers,'" is to be construed as meaning cattle such as the person sending the order would want to sell to the retail trade. The term distinguishes the cattle for that trade from those which are to be exported. "Marketers" are supposed to weigh about 1,200 pounds, and "exporters" about 1,400 pounds. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. N. Lehman & Bro., 67 Atl. 241, 242, 106 Md. 313, 14 Ann. Cas. 736.

EXPOSE

Expose for sale

Under Rev. Laws, c. 65, § 13, as amended, making the exposing of goods for sale without a license an offense, the phrase "exposing for sale" is not synonymous with "exposing to view." The offense is committed by a peddler who has with him in his hand a suit case in which he says he has certain goods, which he specifies, and which he states he would like to show a person for the purpose of selling the goods to the person, even though the goods are concealed from view in the suit case. Commonwealth v. Hana, 81 N. E. 149, 150, 195 Mass. 262, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799, 122 Am. St. Rep. 251, 11 Ann. Cas. 514.

The act of defendant in placing immature veal in an ice box, to which they took prospective customers and exhibited the contents, inducing them to buy, constituted an "exposing for sale" of the veal, within the prohibition of Agricultural Law, § 70c, and acts amendatory thereto. People v. Dennis, 114 N. Y. Supp. 7, 9.

Under Cr. Code, 1902, § 501, forbidding sale or "exposing for sale" of goods on Sunday, the automatic vending of wares by a slot machine is forbidden, since the goods in these machines are "exposed to sale" as actually and effectually as if the owner or operator were present, showing the goods and delivering the same on receipt of price. Cain v. Daly, 55 S. E. 110, 112, 74 S. C. 480.

A merchant has offered or "exposed for sale" an adulterated or misbranded article of food, in violation of law, by having such article in stock for the purpose of sale, without actually making a sale. People v. Lewis, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1026, 138 App. Div. 673.

EXPOSING BUILDINGS

Where an application for insurance on a boat gave 500 feet as the distance from "exposing buildings," while laid up, and the policy stipulated that it was issued on the application, the term "exposing buildings" meant only such buildings as would tend to increase the risk, and might naturally be considered in fixing the rate. Macatawa Transp. Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 134 N. W. 193, 194, 168 Mich. 365, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 69.

EXPOSURE

See Dangerous Exposure; Indecent Exposure; Involuntary Exposure; Unnecessary Exposure to Danger; Voluntary Exposure.

Exposure of child

The word "expose," as used in the statute making it an offense for any parent, etc., to expose a child under six years of age, in a street, field, etc., with intent to abandon it, means to turn or cast out, to place or leave in a probably fatal position, to abandon, and, so construed, the offense can be committed in a street railway shelter or station, as well as in a street or field. State v. Eckhardt, 133 S. W. 321, 322, 232 Mo. 49.

Exposure of the person

"Indecency," within Pen. Code 1895, § 390, making it a misdemeanor for any person to practice open lewdness or any notorious act of public indecency tending to debauch the morals, has a somewhat narrower meaning than it has in ordinary popular speech, but is broader in meaning than the phrase "exposure of the person," and a public indecency may be committed without any improper exposure of the human body. Redd v. State, 67 S. E. 700, 7 Ga. App. 575.

Exposure to obvious danger

Stepping from a moving train irrespective of the speed at which it is moving is not as a matter of law an "exposure to obvious danger," within an accident policy relieving insurer from liability for death resulting from exposure to an obvious danger. Nat. Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Lokey, 52 South. 45, 47, 166 Ala. 174.

Exposure to unnecessary danger

Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, see Voluntary Exposure.

In construing a clause in an accident policy exempting the insurer from liability in a greater sum than $100 in case insured lost his life from unnecessary exposure to danger or to obvious risk of injury, the court said: "Apart from the adjudications on the question, I should be inclined to the opinion that, as a main purpose in taking a policy of accident insurance is to procure indemnity against the consequences of the insured party's carelessness and oversights, a stipulation against 'exposure to unnecessary danger or to obvious risk of injury' excludes from the force of the policy accidents occasioned by that positive sort of negligence which in personal injury litigation falls within the doctrine of assumed risk, and consists of knowledge of a danger, and willingness to encounter it, but does not exclude such as happen from the mere failure of the insured to shun a danger unknown to him, which might have been known by due care, or what is denominated 'contributory negligence.' This view would require, to bring into operation the minimum indemnity clause of the policy, volition on the part of the insured in needlessly exposing himself to danger as in cases where the word 'voluntary' is used. It seems to me the intention of the contract implies liability for an accident unless there was a voluntary assumption of unnecessary risk—an assumption of the risk, not, of course, in the expectation of being hurt, which would amount to self-inflicted injury, but in the expectation of encountering the danger and avoiding injury from it." It was held that such a limitation did not apply to a death from a casualty to which insured was exposed in the performance of his duties as a bridgeman. Jamison v. Continental Casualty Co., 78 S. W. 812, 814, 104 Mo. App. 306.

EXPOSITORY LEGISLATION

The definition of "free pass" in Acts 32d Gen. Assem. c. 112, § 1, prohibiting common carriers from giving free passes, and defining such to be any transportation for any other consideration than money at the rate open to all, is not ineffective as being mere "expository legislation," which has reference to those acts that purport to put a construction upon past enactments without making any amendments thereto. Schulz v. Parker (Iowa) 139 N. W. 173, 176.

EXPRESS

Baggage distinguished, see Baggage.

"Expressed" means stated or declared in direct terms. That which is made definitely known in direct terms and not left to implication. It is a rule that, when a matter or thing is expressed, it ceases to be implied by law. Bullard v. Smith, 72 Pac. 761, 767, 28 Mont. 387.

"Express" means "made known distinctly and explicitly, and not left to inference or implication; declared in terms; set forth in words; manifested by direct and appropriate language, as distinguished from that which is inferred from conduct. The word is usually contrasted with 'implied'" (citing Black, Law Dict.). "Express" means "stated or declared as opposed to 'implied'; that which is made known and not left to implication. It is a rule that when a matter or thing is expressed it ceases to be implied by law" (citing Bouv. Law Dict.). "'Express' is defined as directly stated; not implied or left to inference; distinctly and pointedly given; made unambiguous by special intention; clear; plain" (citing Am. & Eng. Enc. Law). "Express" means "directly stated, not implied or left to inference" (citing Webst. Dict.). "Express" means "given in direct terms; not implied; not dubious; clear; definite; explicit; plain; manifest" (citing Worcester Dict.). "Express" means "clearly made known; distinctly expressed or indicated; unambiguous; explicit; direct; plain. In law, commonly used in contradistinction to 'implied'" (citing Cent. Dict.). United States v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 151 Fed. 84, 92.

"Express" means to utter, to represent and make known, to declare, to cause to appear. "Publish" means to utter, to make known; and the word "express," as applied to a writing, is practically synonymous with the word "publish." So that an allegation in an accusation that accused "in writing did say and express" an alleged libel was a sufficient allegation of its publication. Graham v. State, 65 S. E. 167, 168, 6 Ga. App. 436.

City Charter of St. Louis, art. 3, § 28, provides that no special or general ordinance which is in conflict or inconsistent with general ordinances of prior date shall be valid or effectual until such prior ordinance, or the conflicting parts thereof, are repealed by "express terms." Held, that "express" was used as an antonym for "implied," and as meaning directly; distinctly; not left to inference; exact; precise; and hence did not limit the method of repeal to an express statement that the matter of the prior ordinance was repealed, so long as the provisions of the later ordinance in some manner by reference terminated the operation of the former ordinance. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 446, 235 Mo. 687.

Expressed in the title

The word "expressed," as used in the constitutional provision requiring the object of every act to be expressed in the title, is not synonymous with the word "embraced" as used therein, providing what shall be embraced in an act. Jersey City v. Speer, 72 Atl. 448, 78 N. J. Law, 34.

EXPRESS AGREEMENT

See On the Express Agreement.
See, also, Express Contract.

A provision in a lease that in case of fire the landlord would cause the damage to be repaired forthwith was an "express agreement" in writing, within Real Property Law, § 227, providing that if any leased building becomes untenanted or unfit for occupancy, without the fault or negligence of the tenant, "and no express agreement to the contrary has been made in writing," the tenant may surrender possession and thereby terminate his liability for rent. Brewster v. Silverstein, 133 N. Y. Supp. 473, 474.

EXPRESS AUTHORITY

The "express authority" of an agent is that which the principal directly grants to him. The express authority of an agent includes by implication, whether the agency be general or special, all such powers as are necessary for the purposes of the agency. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 124 N. W. 236, 239, 109 Minn. 440.

EXPRESS BUSINESS

Under St. 1907, p. 957, c. 586, providing for the taxation of express companies, and St. 1906, p. 485, c. 463, pt. 1, § 7, and St. 1908, p. 637, c. 599, defining the authority of the Board of Railroad Commissioners over express companies, and St. 1906, p. 486, c. 463, pt. 1, § 13, and St. 1906, pp. 564, 567, 580, c. 463, pt. 2, §§ 189, 197, 246, and Rev. Laws, c. 70, § 8, and Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 62, as amended by St. 1906, p. 445, c. 427, and Rev. Laws, c. 95, § 7, and chapter 208, § 26, as amended by St. 1906, p. 223, c. 261, § 1, relating to express companies, the term "express business" is not confined to carriers using railroads and railways; and Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 49, as amended by St. 1907, p. 485, c. 517, providing that no person or corporation not regularly conducting a general "express business," except a railroad corporation or a street railway corporation authorized to carry freight or express, shall receive liquors for transportation for hire for delivery in a city in which licenses of the first five classes are not granted, includes those who carry in their own vehicles, as well as those who go on trains and steamers, but involves the idea of regularity as to route and time. Commonwealth v. People's Exp. Co., 88 N. E. 420, 425, 201 Mass. 564, 131 Am. St. Rep. 416.

EXPRESS COMPANY

As common carrier, see Common Carrier.
As corporation, see Corporation.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3312a, providing that all "express companies" shall deliver express matter to persons to whom the same is directed, living within the corporate limits of cities having a population of 2,500, applies to all concerns carrying parcels by express, and there is no variance in alleging a carrier to be a corporation, though the proofs show it to be a copartnership. United States Exp. Co. v. State, 73 N. E. 101, 103, 164 Ind. 196.

EXPRESS CONFESSION

A confession may be either express or implied. An "express confession" is where accused plead guilty and directly admits the truth of the accusation in open court, which is called a "plea of guilty," and is equivalent to a conviction. State v. Branner, 63 S. E. 169, 170, 149 N. C. 559 (citing 1 Chitty's Cr. Law, 429).

EXPRESS CONSENT

"Express consent" to the waiver of jury trials in civil actions occurs where, after appearance of the defendant, a written stipulation is entered into and filed, or an oral stipulation is entered on the record. State ex rel. Clark v. Neterer, 74 Pac. 668, 670, 33 Wash. 535.

EXPRESS CONTRACT

Implied contracts compared therewith, see Implied Contract.
See, also, Express Agreement.

A contract is "express" where the agreement is formal and stated either verbally or in writing. Gillan v. O'Leary, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1024, 1027, 124 App. Div. 498.

"To establish an 'express contract' there must be shown what amounts to a definite proposal and an unconditional and absolute acceptance thereof." Melick v. Kelley, 73 N. W. 945, 53 Neb. 509; Roberts v. Cox, 136 N. W. 831, 832, 91 Neb. 553.

An "express contract" requires the mutual meeting of the minds and an intention to contract, and is established by a proof of the expression of intention. Wojahn v. National Union Bank of Oshkosh, 129 N. W. 1068, 1072, 144 Wis. 646.

A special contract, which is always express is one with peculiar provisions or stipulations not found in the ordinary contract relating to the same subject-matter, and which, if omitted from the ordinary contract, the law will never supply, while an "express contract" is one whose terms are uttered or stated in words or writing, and may or may not be special. Indianapolis Coal Traction Co. v. Dalton, 87 N. E. 552, 554, 43 Ind. App. 330.

The terms "express contracts" and "contracts implied in fact" are used to indicate, not a distinction in the principles of contract, but a difference in the character of the evidence by which the contract is proved, and the same elements are essential in each case. Fordtran v. Stowers, 113 S. W. 631, 634, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 226.

A contract is an agreement between two or more persons for a sufficient consideration to do or not to do a certain thing. It is not necessary that it be in writing, and it may be express or implied. It is "express" when the terms of the agreement are stated in so many words, and "implied" where one party receives benefits from the other under such circumstances that the law presumes a promise on the part of the person benefited to pay a reasonable price for the same. Jones v. Tucker (Del.) 84 Atl. 1012.

An "express contract" is an agreement the terms of which are openly uttered or expressed by the contracting parties. Plaintiff, having worked for defendant as cotton buyer for four previous seasons, testified that about September 1, 1908, he went to defendant's office and told defendant's president that he wanted to close the arrangement for the coming season, that the president told him that the preceding season had been unfavorable, to which plaintiff replied that it would take about $100 a month for plaintiff to live, and to this the president replied, "I will take care of you," and that from September 1, 1908, plaintiff held himself in readiness to perform services for defendant company, but bought no cotton for it during that season because he was not directed to do so, and because defendant did not desire to purchase cotton at the prevailing price, and that in December defendant's president asked him to get work elsewhere. Held, that such facts tended to prove an express, and not an implied, contract of employment, under the rule. W. A. Arthur Cotton Co. v. Willis (Tex.) 125 S. W. 584, 586.

EXPRESS EMANCIPATION

"Emancipation" of a child is the relinquishment by a parent of control and authority over his child, conferring on the child the right to his earnings and extinguishing the parent's legal duty to maintain and support the child. Emancipation is "express" when the parent voluntarily agrees with the child, who is able to take care of and provide for himself, that he may go from home, earn his own living, and control his earnings, or when the father voluntarily transfers the custody and keeping of the child to another. An express emancipation cannot be renounced by the parent. An "implied emancipation" results where the parent, by his acts or conduct, impliedly consents that the minor may leave home and shift for himself; the father, under these circumstances, however, being authorized to renounce the same within a reasonable time. Rounds Bros. v. McDaniel, 118 S. W. 956, 958, 133 Ky. 669, 134 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Ann. Cas. 826.

EXPRESS GRANT

The words "express grant," used in enunciating the principle that an easement for light and air can only be acquired by "express grant" and not by user or implication, do not mean that such easement may only be acquired by grant contained in deed of conveyance. Bryan v. Grosse, 99 Pac. 499, 501, 155 Cal. 132.

EXPRESS INVITATION

See License by Express Invitation.

EXPRESS MALICE

In homicide

"Express malice" exists where one person kills another with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design, which may be manifested by circumstances disclosing the intention or design, such as lying in wait, antecedent menaces or threats, a former grudge, ill will, etc., toward the deceased, preconcerted plans, or the previous procurement or preparation of an instrument or means for slaying or doing great bodily harm to deceased. State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; Turner v. State, 108 S. W. 1139, 1141, 1142, 119 Tenn. 663, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, 123 Am. St. Rep. 758, 14 Ann. Cas. 990 (quoting Whart. Cr. Law, p. 360); State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775, 777, 6 Pennewill, 212; State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 230, 5 Pennewill, 77; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339; State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 748, 1 Boyce, 538;

State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 773; State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 634, 7 Pennewill, 127; State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 221; State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 606, 1 Boyce, 349; State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087; State v. Short (Del.) 82 Atl. 239, 241; State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551; Henderson v. State, 48 S. E. 167, 168, 120 Ga. 504; State v. Hliboka, 78 Pac. 965, 31 Mont. 455, 3 Ann. Cas. 934.

"Malice" within the definition of murder in Pen. Code, § 187, is "express" when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature. People v. Frank, 83 Pac. 578, 579, 2 Cal. App. 283.

"Express malice aforethought" exists only when one person kills another with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design, evidenced by lying in wait for decedent, or by antecedent menaces or threats that disclose a purpose on the part of the prisoner to commit the act charged, or by a former grudge, ill will, spite, hatred, or malevolence toward decedent, or by any other circumstances disclosing a guilty purpose. State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 227.

"The 'express malice' which constitutes murder of the first degree is proved by circumstances satisfactorily evidencing a sedate, deliberate purpose and formed design to kill another, such as the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon, the preparation and use of poison, and the like." State v. Di Guglielmo (Del.) 55 Atl. 350, 351, 4 Pennewill, 336.

An instruction defining "express malice" as that "manifested by external circumstances shown in evidence," instead of in the words of the statute, which defines it as that "manifested by external circumstances capable of proof," was not misleading. Territory v. Gonzales, 68 Pac. 925, 929, 11 N. M. 301.

"Express malice" arises where a person with a deliberate mind and formed design doth kill another, or kills another in the willful perpetration of some unlawful act against the peace." Turner v. State, 126 Pac. 452, 456, 8 Okl. Cr. 11 (quoting 4 Blackstone, Comm. 185).

"Express malice" arises in the law of homicide where there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature. People v. Mendenhall, 67 Pac. 325, 135 Cal. 344.

"Express malice aforethought," essential to murder in the first degree, occurs where one person kills another with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design; and the length of time that the design existed is immaterial. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310.

"Express malice," or malice in fact, is defined to be a deliberate intention of doing any bodily harm to another, unauthorized by law, and by no means necessarily involved an intent to take life. The change, therefore, which the statute has effected, by substituting the word "design" in place of "malice," is not to alter the nature or degree of the premeditation requisite to the crime of murder, but to require—what the law did not require—the existence of an actual intention to kill to constitute that crime under the state. People v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 385, 393.

"Malice" as an element of murder is "express" where there is positive, direct evidence showing that at the time of the killing it was really entertained. State v. Lee, 60 S. E. 524, 525, 79 S. C. 228.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the evidence shows a deliberate intention unlawfully to take the life of deceased, the killing is with "express malice." State v. Fleming, 106 Pac. 305, 813, 17 Idaho, 471.

By "express malice" is meant a wicked, malignant desire to do another an injury for the sake of the suffering that it will cause him. McChristal v. Clisbee, 76 N. E. 511, 190 Mass. 120, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702, 5 Ann. Cas. 769.

"Express malice" is where a man lies in wait or says he is going to kill his fellow man on sight, and he carries that threat into execution. State v. Reeder, 51 S. E. 702, 704, 72 S. C. 223.

"Express malice" may be shown by the acts or conduct of the defendant immediately accompanying the utterance of the words, or by the utterance at other times of other and similar defamatory words having reference to the subject-matter of the words charged." Lauder v. Jones, 101 N. W. 907, 915, 13 N. D. 525 (quoting and adopting Gambrell v. Schooley, 52 Atl. 500, 508, 95 Md. 280, 63 L. R. A. 427).

To constitute "express malice," it must be shown that accused was of sedate and deliberate mind, that he was sufficiently self-possessed to comprehend the consequences of his acts, that his acts were not the result of a sudden, inconsiderate impulse, and that there was a formed design to kill decedent or inflict on him some serious bodily harm. Cano v. State, 111 S. W. 406, 407, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 600.

"Express malice" in murder cases may be proved by a deliberately formed design to kill, by the preparation of the weapon or other means for doing great bodily harm, by circumstances of brutality attending the act or by previous hostility, or threats and declarations of intention to kill or to do serious injury. Esterline v. State, 66 Atl. 269, 270, 105 Md. 629.

Pen. Code, § 188, provides that "malice is 'expressed' where there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature." People v. Mahatch, 82 Pac. 779, 781, 148 Cal. 200.

"A killing upon 'express malice' can only be consummated when the intent is formed and carried out in a cool and deliberate mind." Rice v. State, 103 S. W. 1156, 1172, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 255.

A homicide committed under such circumstances that the law implies malice is not always murder in the first degree, but is such only where there exists at the time on the part of accused a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed or of any human being. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

Where the evidence showed that accused was in need of money, and that he had attempted to collect money from decedent and went to decedent at the time of the killing to collect money from him to inclose in letters written by accused to his creditors, the letters found on accused after the killing were properly received as bearing on the question of deliberation and premeditation. People v. Lumsden, 125 N. Y. Supp. 1079, 1087, 141 App. Div. 158.

In Libel and slander

Civ. Code, § 3294, permits exemplary damages in an action not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied. Held, that the words "express or implied," as used in such section, have reference only to the evidence by which the malice is established, and that such section does not authorize exemplary damages for libel, in the absence of proof of malice in fact, as distinguished from malice in law, consisting of the actual existence of hatred and ill will, actuating the defendant in the publication. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 539, 160 Cal. 143.

"Express malice" in libel is wanton and reckless disregard of the rights of others. Mann v. Dempster, 181 Fed. 76, 79, 104 C. C. A. 110.

"Express malice" in publishing a libel is shown by proof that the publication was made wantonly, maliciously, and with intent to injure, degrade, or destroy one's reputation. Todd v. Every Evening Printing Co. (Del.) 66 Atl. 97, 99, 6 Pennewill, 233.

Statements, confidential, and privileged if believed by the maker to be true, are not actionable unless "express malice" or malice in fact is shown on his part. This kind of malice, which overcomes and destroys the privilege, is, of course, quite distinct from that which the law in the first instance imputes with respect to every defamatory charge, irrespective of motive. It has been defined to be an "indirect and wicked motive which induced the defendant to defame the

In malicious prosecution

"In actions for malicious prosecution it is necessary to show 'express malice'; that is, intent to injure the plaintiff. * * * The term 'express malice,' used in this connection, means malice towards the particular person who was prosecuted, as distinguished from that malice which the law implies from an act done without legal excuse, which he who does it well knows will in all probability produce injury to some human being, though express ill will to the person injured may be actually disproved." Freeland v. Southern Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 11, 12, 70 S. C. 427.

EXPRESS MESSENGER

As passenger, see Passenger.

EXPRESS REPEAL

"An 'express or direct repeal' is where the repealed act is specially designated in the repealing act," and where two statutes on the same subject are enacted by the same Legislature on different dates, the presumption is that they are both operative, unless irreconcilable. A former act, if repealed, is repealed only by implication. Lincoln School Tp. v. American School Furniture Co., 68 N. E. 301, 303, 31 Ind. App. 405.

EXPRESS TRUST

See Trustee of Express Trust.

Trusts are classified into two general divisions, "direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties) and "constructive or implied trusts" (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity)." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

"Express trusts" are those which are created by the direct and positive acts of the parties by writing, deed, or will. Ames v. Howes, 93 Pac. 35, 36, 13 Idaho, 756 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2611; Perry, Trusts, § 2425); United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Smith, 147 S. W. 54, 55, 108 Ark. 145.

"Express trusts" arise by agreement between the parties expressing the particular trust intended. Stevens v. Fitzpatrick, 118 S. W. 51, 55, 218 Mo. 708.

Under our statute an "express trust" must be created or declared in writing. Therefore, where three persons joined in the purchase of a tract of land and title was made to one of them, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was the agreement that one of the others was to have the complete title, and that the grantee and the other purchaser were only to have a home on the land until the happening of a specified contingency. Wilder v. Wilder, 75 S. E. 654, 656, 138 Ga. 573.

To constitute an "express trust" there must be some act on the part of the cestui que trust expressive of intent to create a trust and to designate some one as trustee. McCoy v. McCoy, 121 Pac. 176, 179, 30 Okl. 379, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 146.

"'Express trusts' are those which are created by direct and positive acts of the parties, by some writing, or deed, or will, not that in those cases the language of the instrument need point out the nature, character, and limitations of the trust in direct terms, ipsislimis verbis; for it is sufficient that the intention to create it may be fairly collected upon the face of the instrument from the terms used, and the trust can be drawn as if it were ex visceribus verborum." Jones v. Byrne, 149 Fed. 457, 463.

No particular terms are necessary to create a trust, but the intention of the creator of the trust controls; and where he gives to the person to whom he delivers possession of property power to sell it, receive and invest the proceeds, and power to exercise the usual acts of ownership, with specific directions as to how the property and its income is to be disposed of, a trust is created, though such person is designated in the instrument as attorney, instead of trustee. Mersereau v. Bennet, 108 N. Y. Supp. 868, 872, 124 App. Div. 413.

A valid trust in relation to real property can only be created or declared by an instrument in writing or by operation of law, and where there is no instrument in writing, declaring that a trust was executed, no "express trust" was created. Sanguinetti v. Rossen, 107 Pac. 560, 562, 12 Cal. App. 623.

Where a son has property deeded to his father, for the father to furnish the money to put up a building thereon, it after that to revert to the son, there is an "express trust," which Rev. St. 1899, § 3416, requires to be proved by a writing, and not a "resulting trust," which section 3417 exempts from such a requirement. An express active trust is one in which, from the express directions of the language creating the trust, or from the very nature of the trust itself, the trustee is charged with the performance of active and substantial duties with respect to the control, management, and disposition of the trust property. As stated in Perry, Trusts, § 24, express trusts are those generally created by instruments that point out directly and expressly the property, persons, and purposes of the trust. No special form of words is necessary to create an "express trust." From these considerations, an "express trust" is one which defines and limits the uses and purposes to which certain property shall be devoted, and defines the duty of the trustee as to the control, management, and disposition of the same. Hell v. Hell, 84 S. W. 45, 47, 184 Mo. 665 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 987).

Plaintiff and his father and defendant bought land, taking title as tenants in common. To facilitate the division and sale of the land as city lots, defendant conveyed his interest to plaintiff and his father, an agreement accompanying the deed providing that the parties should use their joint efforts to make sales, and that plaintiff and his father should, from the proceeds, reimburse themselves for money they had advanced in making the purchase, pay a balance still due, and that of the remainder defendant should receive one-fourth and plaintiff and his father three-fourths. Held, that plaintiff and his father held the title as trustees of an "express trust." Sawyer v. Cook, 74 N. E. 356, 357, 188 Mass. 163.

The distinction between an "express trust" and powers in trust is that in the former the trustee takes the legal title, which, however, does not pass to the trustee of the power. Train v. Davis, 98 N. Y. Supp. 816, 821, 49 Misc. Rep. 162.

The rule that no one but a party to a sealed instrument can sue to enforce it will not prevent enforcement of a mortgage in terms to W., but in fact for the benefit of a bank, of which W. was agent, because there was no actual consideration from W., and a seal no longer conclusively imports a consideration, but W., while not the trustee of an "express trust," within Code Civ. Proc. § 449, authorizing the trustee of an express trust, including a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another to sue without joining the beneficiary, will be treated as such to enable him to maintain an action. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Nicholas, 128 N. Y. Supp. 902, 906, 144 App. Div. 95.

The creation of an "express trust" must be manifested or proven by a written instrument, and it is elementary that, in the creation of a trust, whether in regard to real or personal property, the acts of the parties in the creation of such trust must be done with that intent. Where one purchasing land, paying therefor, and taking a warranty deed without conditions, executed an instrument whereby he agreed to allow a third person a half of the profits of the sale of land when sold, "being the same land this day bought by me," the instrument did not create a trust binding the purchaser to hold the legal title for the third person for a half interest in the land. Dexter v. MacDonald, 95 S. W. 359, 364, 196 Mo. 373 (citing Woodford v. Stephens, 51 Mo. 443).

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 8152, "express trusts" are those created and manifested by agreement of the parties. A petition alleging that E., being the owner of land, conveyed the same to defendant to secure an indebtedness of $375; that the conveyance was made by a deed absolute on its face, but upon the following trusts and conditions, defendant to hold the title to the property to secure him in the payment of the indebtedness, without interest, and to sell the same after the death of E., and, after deducting from the proceeds of sale the amount of the indebtedness, to pay the balance to the children of E. in equal proportions; that E. died intestate, owing no other debts than that to defendant; that there has been no administration upon E.'s estate; that such estate is of the value of $3,000; that defendant denies that he holds such property in trust, but claims the absolute title thereto—sets up an "express trust." Eaton v. Barnes, 49 S. E. 593, 594, 121 Ga. 548.

EXPRESS WAIVER

An "express waiver" is a voluntary relinquishment of the right that one party has in his relations to another in the express terms by which it is governed. Astrich v. German-American Ins. Co., 131 Fed. 13, 20, 65 C. C. A. 251.

EXPRESS WARRANTY

A "warranty" is express where the seller makes some positive representation or affirmation with respect to the article to be sold pending the treaty of sale, upon which it is intended that the buyer shall rely in making the purchase. "A 'warranty' is implied where, from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of the sale, or from the nature of the thing sold, it is assumed to be just that the buyer should be protected in addition to the contract of sale by a further implied contract of guaranty on the part of the vendor, and so raises by implication a warranty on the seller's part." Haines v. Neece, 92 S. W. 919, 923, 116 Mo. App. 499 (quoting and adopting definition in Bid. War. Sale Chat. §§ 2, 3).

A "warranty" is an engagement by which a seller assures to the buyer the existence of some facts affecting the transaction, whether past, present, or future (Civ. Code § 2370). To create an "express warranty," the word "warranty" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary. Any affirmation, other than mere dealers' talk, made at the time of the sale, as to the quality or condition of the thing sold, will be treated as a warranty, if it was so intended, and the purchaser bought on the good faith of such affirmation. Whether it was so intended and the purchaser acted upon it are questions of fact. Lander v. Sheehan, 79 Pac. 406, 408, 32 Mont. 25 (citing McLennan v. Ohmen, 17 Pac. 687, 75 Cal. 558).

A provision in a written contract for the sale of jewelry that any of the articles which failed to wear satisfactorily would be replaced by the vendor if returned within five years, headed with the word "warranty," may not be properly called an "express warranty" in regard to the character, quality, or title of the goods, which would exclude the imprinted "warranty" raised by law, and if the goods were entirely different from those sold, and unsuited for the purpose for which they were sold, the purchaser may set up a breach of implied "warranty." Elgin Jewelry Co. v. Estes & Dozier, 50 S. E. 939, 940, 122 Ga. 807 (citing Black's Law Dict.).

To constitute a warranty of an article sold, it is not necessary that the term "warranty" be used, and it is sufficient that the terms used import a representation on which the seller intends that the buyer may and does rely that the article shall be of a certain character or fulfill certain conditions, and a warranty thus implied is an "express warranty." Four Traction Auto Co. v. Hurnl (Iowa) 187 N. W. 1014, 1016.

To constitute an "express warranty," the word "warrant" need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary. Whatever representations are made by the seller at the time of the sale as to the quality of the article is an express warranty. Cummins v. Ennis (Del.) 56 Atl. 377, 4 Pennewill, 424 (citing McLennan v. Ohmen, 17 Pac. 687, 75 Cal. 558).

To constitute an "express warranty," it is not necessary to use the word "warrant," or any other particular word. Positive affirmation of a material fact as a fact, relied on as such, is sufficient to constitute an "express warranty," and actual intent to warrant is unnecessary. Cornish v. Friedman, 126 S. W. 1079, 1082, 94 Ark. 282.

An "express warranty" excludes an implied warranty; and in a suit to recover the purchase price of goods sold under an express warranty, with a plea of partial failure of consideration, the issues presented are whether the goods delivered were of the quality warranted, and, if not, to what extent the purchase price is to be abated. Springer v. Indianapolis Brewing Co., 55 S. E. 53, 55, 126 Ga. 321.

In a case involving the question of whether or not representations made by a seller of goods amounted to a warranty, the court, in passing on the issue raised, said: "Perhaps no subject in the entire domain of law has produced more contrariety of opinion than has the subject of warranty in sales of personal property. Not only have the courts differed in deciding cases, but courts and authors have often failed to discriminate between warranties and deceit or fraudulent representations. As an illustration, it is often said, in considering the subject of 'express warranty,' that it is not necessary that the seller should have intended, by the language used, to warrant the thing sold, and that, in order to create a warranty, the purchaser must be influenced by the statement alleged to constitute the warranty. Both of these propositions are correct, as applied to a question of fraud, based upon a statement made by the seller, but neither is correct in determining whether or not a statement constitutes an express warranty. Such a warranty is entirely a matter of contract, and the contract which creates it must, like all other contracts, embody the mutual intentions of the parties. Nor is it necessary that the buyer must have been deceived before he can recover for the breach of an express warranty." In a written agreement plaintiff agreed to sell an entire crop of cane, to be grown by him on his plantation for four years, and to cultivate all cane in a good manner, and to deliver it clean for the mill, "said cane to be sound, ripe, and merchantable." Held, that there was an express warranty, and that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the stipulated price for all the cane if it was not sound and merchantable. Ellis v. Riddick, 78 S. W. 719, 721, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 256.

The sale of a chattel with any representation or positive affirmation of its quality and condition made with the intention of being relied on, and, in fact, relied upon, is an "express warranty" for the breach of which an action will lie; no special form of words being necessary to create such warranty. A statement by the seller of chattels that his goods are equal in quality to other well-known articles similar in kind is an express warranty. Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald, 122 S. W. 5, 9, 138 Mo. App. 328.

In insurance

"An 'express warranty' [in insurance] is an agreement expressed in the policy whereby the assured stipulates that certain facts are or shall be true, or certain acts shall be done relative to the risk. It may relate to an existing or past fact, or be promissory and relate to the future." A stipulation in a fire policy that the insurance company should not be liable for loss caused, directly or indirectly, by order of any civil authority, is not a warranty, within Civ. Code Cal. §§ 2807, 2808, providing that a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the thing insured or to the risk as a fact, and a statement which imports that it is intended to do or not to do a thing which materially affects the risk, is a warranty, the statute not creating any new definition of warranty in insurance. Conner v. Manchester Assur. Co., 130 Fed. 743, 744, 65 C. C. A. 127, 70 L. R. A. 106 (quoting Phil. Ins. § 754).

EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS

The rule of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" operates to exclude all liabilities of indemnitors, except for actual, as distinguished from imputed, wrongdoing, although Rev. Codes Mont. § 6486, imposes responsibility upon all whose actual wrongdoing contributes to the death of another, whether they be employes or employers, indemnitees or indemnitors. Northam v. Casualty Co. of America, 177 Fed. 981, 985.

"The maxim 'expressio unius est exclusio alterius' is not to be applied with the same vigor in construing a state Constitution as a statute. Only those things expressed in such positive affirmative terms as plainly imply the negative of what is not mentioned will be considered as inhibiting the powers of the Legislature." Sumpter v. Duffie, 97 S. W. 435, 436, 80 Ark. 369 (quoting State v. Martin, 30 S. W. 421, 60 Ark. 343, 28 L. R. A. 153).

While the maxim, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," is not of universal application, it is never more applicable than in the construction and interpretation of statutes. Whitehead v. Cape Henry Syndicate, 54 S. E. 306, 308, 105 Va. 436.

EXPRESSLY

Webster defines "expressly" to mean "in direct terms." Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Virginian Ry. Co., 66 S. E. 863, 868, 110 Va. 631.

In the rule that in construing a will the intention must be gathered from the language, and that language must either give the thing expressly or by necessary implication, the term "expressly" does not mean that it shall be given by any particular formula of words, but means only that the intent must be shown by expressed language, which language must reach to and include the object of the donation, the person to whom the thing is given, and must also take in by some form of description the thing to be given. Griffin v. Fairmount Coal Co., 53 S. E. 24, 66, 59 W. Va. 480, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

EXPROPRIATION

The terms "taking" or "expropriation," as used in Acts 1896, p. 142, No. 96, providing that all claims for damages to the owner caused by the taking or expropriation of land for public works shall be barred by two years' prescription, must be construed as equivalents. Amet v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 41 South. 721, 722, 117 La. 454.

EXTEND—EXTENSION

Good cause for extension of time, see Good Cause.

The word "extend," both by etymology and by common usage, is an exceedingly flexible term, lending itself to a great variety of meanings, which must in each case be gathered from the context, which is owing to the fact that it is essentially a relative term, referring to something already begun; hence, in a concrete sense, it has no persistent meaning, although abstractly it always implies increase or amplification as distinguished from inception; as, for instance, "the extension of a man's business," or "of his line of credit," or "of the due time of his debts." Extension in space may be in any direction. It is not confined to mere linear prolongation. Middlesex & S. Traction Co. v. Metlar, 56 Atl. 142, 143, 70 N. J. Law, 98; Cooper v. Harmon, 83 N. E. 704, 170 Ind. 113.

The word "extend" implies something to be extended, and therefore there can be no inference that the Legislature intended by Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, entitled "An act to extend and regulate the liability of employers," to abrogate any right of action existing under the statutes or common law, unless such an intention is clearly to be drawn from the language of the act itself. Rosin v. Lidgerwood Mfg. Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 49, 51, 89 App. Div. 245.

The term "extension" conveys to the mind an enlargement of the main body; the addition of something of less import than that to which it is attached. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Buffalo & W. Electric Ry. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 418, 421, 96 App. Div. 471.

The word "extend" means to stretch or stretch out, and a note which may be extended is one on which payment may be lengthened to a date beyond that stated in the instrument. Rossville State Bank v. Hesel, 113 Pac. 1052, 84 Kan. 315, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738.

In a note containing a provision that the makers and indorsers "severally waive protest, demand, and notice of protest, and nonpayment in case the note is not paid at maturity, and agree to all extensions and partial payments before or after maturity without prejudice to the holder," the "extension" meant is that which takes place when the debtor and creditor make an agreement upon a valuable consideration for the payment of the debt on some day subsequent to that previously stipulated. Such stipulation does not render the note nonnegotiable on the ground that the time of payment is uncertain. National Bank of Commerce v. Kenney, 83 S. W. 368, 371, 98 Tex. 293.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 56, providing that a case may be entered on the list of those to be tried by jury within such time after the parties are at issue as the court may by general or special order direct, and rule 18 of the superior court, providing that notice of a desire for a jury trial shall be filed not later than 10 days after the time allowed for filing the answer or plea, unless the court by special order shall "extend" the time, it is within the power of the court to make such special order, though the time prescribed by the general order has already expired. Dolan v. Boott Cotton Mills, 70 N. E. 1025, 1026, 185 Mass. 576.

The word "extended," as used in an ordinance as follows: "A memorial was presented by D. in favor of M. in petition of a piece of land containing varas unknown situated west of the lands of R.; and in conformity to petition, it was unanimously ordained that a title be extended to the person interested, conditioned and provided that if no other may show forth a better right,"—was used in the sense of the Spanish word "extender," which means, when used in the connection under consideration, "to commit to writing at length." Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 581, 585 (citing Spanish and Eng. Dict. by Valesquez).

A beneficiary of a transfer in trust, on condition that she shall receive only the income during life unless she shall have a child which shall attain a certain age, takes an estate dependent on conditions whereby it may be "extended or abridged," within Laws 1903, p. 74, c. 44, § 13, subd. 5, as amended providing that such a transfer shall be taxed at the lowest possible rate under the conditions on which it passes at the time of the transfer, and that the tax shall be due and payable forthwith out of the property so transferred. State v. Pabst, 121 N. W. 351, 359, 139 Wis. 561.

Ky. St. § 4426a, subd. 9, provides that the county board shall expend taxes collected for certain designated purposes, including the purchase of "necessary supplies" and the "extension of the school term" in the subdistricts; and that upon petition of 10 voters of a subdistrict the board of education shall submit to a vote the question whether an additional tax shall be levied, and when levied it shall be the duty of the sheriff to collect it and hold it, subject to the order of the county board, for the benefit of the subdistrict voting such tax. Held, that such additional tax was to be expended, under the order of the board of education, for the sole use of the subdistrict levying it, and for the purposes enumerated in the statute, and the board has no power to use an additional tax levy for the purpose of transporting children to and from school; such purpose not being mentioned in the statute, and not coming within the terms "necessary supplies" or "extension of school term." Shanklin v. Boyd, 142 S. W. 1041, 1043, 146 Ky. 460, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710.

As construed

New transaction or new terms authorized

Where the provisions of a parent act mark out a line of conduct touching a given matter, a supplemental act extending such provisions is fully satisfied if such provisions are carried forward intact to the date of such supplement; and, if the purpose be to engraft a radically new provision on those of the original act, some other word than "extended" must be employed in the ti-

Term

An act extending the term of councilmen in one city on its consolidation with another city does not violate the constitutional prohibition against "extending the term" of a public officer. Petition of City of Pittsburg, 66 Atl. 348, 353, 217 Pa. 227.

EXTENDER

"Extender," in Spanish law, means to commit to writing at length. Beach v. Gabriel, 29 Cal. 580, 584.

EXTEND TO

"That which 'extends to' does not necessarily include in." Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 304, 374, 4 L. Ed. 97.

EXTENSION TELEPHONE

A franchise to a telephone company which fixes the rates for business and office use, for residence, for party line residence service, business extension telephones, and residence extension telephones, and which provides that at such time as the exchange of the company shall have in operation a specified number of telephones in the city it may increase the rates, does not contemplate in counting the telephones that business extension telephones or residence extension telephones shall be counted as telephones, for a "telephone," when technically defined, means only the instrument itself, but, when considered with reference to the use to be made of it, it must be accompanied with the necessary apparatus for the reception and transmission of messages, and an "extension telephone" is an instrument consisting of bell, receiver, and transmitter connected with a telephone which appears numbered on the list, and is used solely through such numbered instrument without any independent connection with the switchboard. Panhandle Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Amarillo (Tex.) 142 S. W. 638, 639.

EXTENSIVE

"General" is equivalent to "extensive," and is a relative term, the meaning of which must be determined by a process of inclusion and exclusion. Times Printing Co. v. Star Pub. Co., 99 P. 1040, 1042, 51 Wash. 667, 16 Ann. Cas. 414.

EXTENT

See Appreciable Extent; Full Extent.

"The word 'extent,' in common parlance, varies somewhat in meaning, according to the subject to which it is applied, and as that changes, it may as well refer to time as to space, or proportion; and more especially so, when applied to interests, as in patents, for a particular term of years." Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 646, 698, 11 L. Ed. 1141.

The term "extent" does not ordinarily mean "manner." Hence under Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, providing that, if any purchaser of public land shall fail to reside upon and improve it in good faith, he shall forfeit it and all payments to the same "extent" as for nonpayment of interest, mere failure to reside on and improve the land, does not work a forfeiture ipso facto, as was had under Laws 1896, p. 67, c. 47, § 11, providing that, if such purchaser shall fail to reside upon and improve in good faith public land purchased by him, he shall forfeit it in the same manner as for nonpayment of interest. Adams v. Terrell, 107 S. W. 537, 538, 101 Tex. 331.

The term "extent of injury," within Comp. Laws, § 3173, requiring, as a condition precedent to the right to sue a city for personal injury, the giving of notice of the "extent of such injury," etc., refers to the character of the injury, and not to the amount of the claim. Ridgeway v. City of Escanaba, 117 N. W. 550, 551, 154 Mich. 68.

The expression "extent of the work" in Code, § 813, providing that a notice to bidders for a contract for sewer construction shall state as nearly as practicable the extent of the work to be done, means more than a bare statement of the length of the sewer, the size of the pipe, the number of manholes and flush tanks, and includes some definite information, without which an intelligent bid could not be submitted, respecting the condition under which the work is to be done, and the manner in which it will be required to be done. Bennett v. City of Emmetsburg, 115 N. W. 582, 586, 188 Iowa, 67.

EXTENUATE

As used in an instruction relating to manslaughter, which tells the jury that implied malice would be inferred when the killing took place without any cause which would in law justify, excuse, or extenuate the homicide, the word "extenuate" has the same meaning as "mitigate," and refers to the reduction of the grade of the offense, as well as to a reduction of the punishment. Connell v. State, 81 S. W. 746, 748, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 259.

EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES

Constitutional Amendment, art. 20, provides that the municipal corporation known as the city of Denver, and all municipal corporations included within its "exterior boundaries" when the amendment takes effect, are hereby consolidated as a single body politic and corporate, by the name of the "City and County of Denver." At the same session at which article 20 was proposed for submission, the General Assembly enacted the Parks bill, establishing the limits of Denver, and describing its boundaries by metes and bounds. After the specific description occurred the following: "Excepting, however, all towns and cities incorporated under the general laws of the state and situated within said last-mentioned boundaries." Within the exterior boundaries as thus specifically defined lay the city of Denver proper, and on the other boundaries certain other towns. Held, that the excepting clause did not change the exterior boundaries of the city of Denver, but they remained as defined by metes and bounds in the first part of the act, and hence the town of Montclair and the other towns within such boundaries became merged into the city and county of Denver under the constitutional amendment. Town of Montclair v. Thomas, 73 Pac. 48, 50, 31 Colo. 327.

EXTERIOR WALLS

Where in the specifications for the construction of a building it was provided that all "exterior walls" should be faced with a select quality of brick, and expensive brickwork was to be limited to walls exposed to view, and certain walls of the building were exposed to the weather, but not to view; nor were they anywhere specifically mentioned as "exterior walls," but where they were so mentioned were called "inner walls," it was held that they could not be considered "exterior walls" within the meaning of the contract. Ittner v. St. Louis Exposition & Music Hall Ass'n, 11 S. W. 58, 59, 97 Mo. 561.

EXTERNAL

The word "external" means outward, exterior, visible from the outside, and hence capable of being perceived, apparent; and an "external" examination, such as a purchaser of a machine which is to be used in the place where his employes are to work is required to make, is not necessarily limited to the outer surface, as distinguished from the inner surface, of a valve actually exposed or naturally exposable to view in the process of installation. Petroleum Iron Works Co. v. Boyle, 179 Fed. 433, 438, 102 C. C. A. 579.

The "external violence" intended by a marine policy, exempting the insurer from liability for loss occasioned by the bursting of the boilers, unless caused by unavoidable external violence, is violence external to the vessel, and not merely external to the boilers. Quackenboss v. Insurance Co. of North America, 50 South. 444, 445, 95 Miss. 872.

EXTERNAL, VIOLENT, AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS

See, also, Accident—Accidental.

In a provision of an accident insurance policy restricting the liability to injuries effected through external, violent, and accidental means, the term "external" refers to the means of the injury and not to the injury itself, and the fact that an injury is accidental and unnatural, naturally imports an external and violent agency as its cause. Dezell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 75 S. W. 1102, 1105, 176 Mo. 258.

Under an accident insurance policy, insuring against loss resulting from bodily injury caused or produced through "external, violent, and accidental means," it is only necessary that the cause of the injury or death should be external to the person, though it acts internally. Proof that the plaintiff suffered lesion of a blood vessel of the lungs while assisting to lift a heavy mail sack, and that such lesion subsequently entirely healed, establishes a prima facie case that the injury was caused by external, violent and accidental means within the terms of the policy. Young v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 103 S. W. 557, 559, 563, 128 Mo. App. 325.

EXTINGUISH—EXTINGUISHMENT

"An 'extinguishment' is a discharge by operation of law." Woodrough v. Douglas County, 98 N. W. 1092, 1095, 71 Neb. 354.

Giving a check, which is never paid, is not an "extinguishment" of debt, unless shown to have been accepted absolutely as payment. Sharp v. E. Nathan Mercantile Co., 88 S. W. 305, 75 Ark. 556.

Under Civ. Code, § 1500, providing that an obligation for the payment of money is extinguished by a due offer of payment, if the amount is deposited in the name of the creditor with a bank and notice of the deposit is given to the creditor, the fact that, after demand for rent and nonpayment thereof, the tenant deposits the amount of the rent in bank, is not an "extinguishment" of the obligation for rent, in the absence of any offer of payment, or notice of or acquiescence in the deposit by the landlord. Owen v. Herzikoff, 84 Pac. 274, 275, 2 Cal. App. 622.

EXTORT—EXTORTION

"Extortion" is the wrongful exaction of money; an imposition under color of right; or the taking or obtaining of anything from another by means of illegal compulsion or oppressive exaction. Dudley v. Stansberry, 59 South. 379, 380, 5 Ala. App. 491 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2622, 2623).

In a prosecution for making threats with intent to "extort" money, it is not necessary for the court to define "extort," since it is a common word, used in the statute in its ordinary sense, and the court may well assume that the jury understands its meaning. State v. Louanis, 65 Atl. 532, 534, 79 Vt. 463, 9 Ann. Cas. 194.

"Extort," as used in Code D. C. § 819, providing that "whoever verbally or in writing accuses or threatens to accuse any other person of a crime or any conduct which, if true, would tend to disgrace such other person, or in any other way subject him to the ridicule or contempt of society, or threaten to expose or publish any of his infirmities or failings with intent to extort from such other person anything of value or any pecuniary advantage whatever, or to compel the person accused or threatened to do or to refrain from doing any act, * * * shall be imprisoned, * * * "means moral compulsion, the result of exposing or threatening to expose the person addressed to the ridicule or contempt of society. An intent by a collector to collect a debt due his principal by posting cards conspicuously on the debtor's door, which opened into a public hall, the cards having printed on them the collector's name and business and written demands for payment, is an attempt to "extort" money from the debtor. Slater v. Taylor, 31 App. D. C. 100, 103.

Under the statute of this state, sections 7080 and 7081, Rev. Codes, "extortion" is the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful force or fear or under color of official right, and fear such as will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat to accuse the party of the commission of a crime. Wilbur v. Blanchard, 126 Pac. 1069, 1072, 22 Idaho, 517.

Under Pen. Code, § 518, declaring that "extortion" is committed only when the property is obtained with the consent of the owner, induced by an unlawful use of force or fear, the unlawful use of force or fear must be the operative or controlling cause which produces the consent, and if some other cause is to some extent the primary and controlling one in inducing the consent, there is no "extortion." People v. Williams, 59 Pac. 581, 582, 127 Cal. 212.

For a bricklayers' and plasterers' union to compel a manufacturer of brick to pay a fine for selling brick to a boss mason employing nonunion men, by threatening that unless it was paid they would refuse to handle his brick, was an act of the purest "extortion," using that word in its widest meaning, by means of threats and intimidation, and in the plainest violation of the statute. March v. Bricklayers' & Plasterers' Union No. 1 of Connecticut, 63 Atl. 291, 293, 79 Conn. 7, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1198, 118 Am. St. Rep. 127, 6 Ann. Cas. 848.

Penal Law, § 850, defines "extortion" as the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, etc., and section 851 provides that threats to do an unlawful injury to person or property may constitute extortion. Held, that one who procured for another, without consideration, a position as a painter, and afterward threatened to have him discharged unless he was paid a certain sum each week out of the painter's wages, was guilty of extortion; the word "property" in the statute including every species of valuable right, including the right to employment. People ex rel. Short v. Warden of City Prison, 130 N. Y. Supp. 698, 700, 145 App. Div. 861.

Rev. Laws, § 5096, defines "extortion" as "the obtaining of property from another with his consent induced by wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right" and then proceeds to define in particular what constitutes extortion, and among other things it is declared that "every person who shall induce another by a threat to do an unlawful injury to the person or property of the one threatened, * * * or to accuse him * * * of any crime, or to expose or impute to him * * * any deformity or disgrace, or disclose or to expose any secret affecting him, * * * and every person who shall extort any money or other property from another under circumstances not amounting to robbery, by means of force or any threat hereinbefore mentioned, shall be guilty of extortion." In a prosecution for extortion, charging the defendant with obtaining money from a married man by means of a threat to publicly accuse him of criminal relations with an unmarried woman, the court charged the jury as follows: "'Extortion,' so far as it is necessary to define it in this case, consists in obtaining the property of another with his consent, induced by the wrongful use of fear. The offense differs from larceny, which is unlawfully obtaining the property of another without the consent of the other, in that the consent of the owner of the property does not constitute a defense to the indictment, but, on the other hand, does constitute an essential element of the offense, if such consent is obtained by the wrongful use of force or fear. Under the statute creating and defining the offense, every person who shall induce another by a threat to accuse him of a crime, or expose or impute to him any deformity or disgrace, or to expose any secret affecting him, to consent to part with his money or property, under circumstances not amounting to robbery, is guilty of extortion. There are three essential elements in the offense: (1) A threat to do one or more of the things mentioned in this statute; (2) the existence of a feeling of fear induced by such threats; and (3) the obtaining of property or money of another with his consent, induced by such fear and threat." The court further charged that, if the jury should find from the testimony that defendant did make a threat to expose the man in question, or to impute disgrace to him concerning his relations with the woman, and that such threat induced a fear in his mind through which he was led to and did part with $500, then they should find him guilty of the offense charged. The court further stated that, in determining whether or not a threat was made and the money was paid through fear, the question of the relationship, whether criminal or not, was immaterial, and that the real question for determination was not what the actual relations between the parties were, but did defendant threaten to expose him to disgrace by reason of the improper relations, and did such threat induce him to pay defendant money? Exception was taken to the charge on the ground that the threat to use the knowledge obtained from the relations as evidence in a divorce action is not an unlawful act, and that such declaration was not a threat within the meaning of the statute, and it was held that this criticism of the charge was entirely unfounded. State v. Coleman, 110 N. W. 5, 8, 99 Minn. 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 441.

Pen. Code, § 633, defines extortion as the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear. Section 634 declares that fear such as will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat, either to accuse another of any crime or to expose any secret affecting him, and section 638 declares that every person who, with intent to extort any money or property from another, sends any person any threatening letter shall be punished as if the money or property were actually obtained by means of such threat. Held, that the word "wrongful," as used in section 633, relates solely to the method used; and a person may be guilty of extortion under such sections if he obtains money from another by unlawful means, though he does not seek to obtain any benefit for himself, and believes that the money or property obtained in fact belongs to the person for whom it is obtained; the term "extortion" being construed to mean "to obtain from a holder desired possessions or knowledge by force or compulsion; to wrest from another by force, menace, duress," etc. In re Sherin, 130 N. W. 761, 767, 27 S. D. 232, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 446.

The replication did not allege "extortion" of the loan to procure plaintiff's assent to the composition within the meaning of Bankr. Act § 29b5, penalizing one who attempts to extort, or extorts money from a person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in a bankruptcy proceeding. Zavello v. J. S. Reeves & Co., 54 South. 654, 656, 171 Ala. 401.

Where an attorney for a deserted wife wrote letters to the husband implying that if he did not pay certain money and turn over certain property to the wife, and induce his paramour, with whom, it was claimed, he was living in another state in adultery, to secure the dismissal of certain civil proceedings on a note given by the husband to such paramour, criminal proceedings would be instituted against them, and they would be extradited and tried, such acts constituted "extortion" within Pen. Code, §§ 633, 634, 638, without reference to the justness of the wife's claim or the attorney's intention, requiring the attorney's suspension from practice. In re Sherin, 130 N. W. 761, 767, 27 S. D. 232, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 446.

An information which charges a conspiracy "to commit extortion of and from" a third person, and which alleges that defendants, in pursuance of the conspiracy, extorted a specified sum from the third person, is not bad for failing to use the words "the offense of" or "the crime of," immediately preceding the word "extortion," since the word "extortion" includes the idea of the crime as much so as though the conspiracy were alleged to be to commit a particular crime. People v. Lamb, 117 N. W. 639, 153 Mich. 675.

Under Pen. Code, § 518, defining "extortion" as the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force, or fear, or under color of official right, and under section 519, providing that fear such as will constitute extortion may be induced by a threat to do an unlawful injury to the property of him threatened, an indictment charging that defendants are guilty "of a felony, to wit, extortion"; that they unlawfully and feloniously extorted from persons named, with their consent $1,175, by the wrongful use of fear, induced by means or threats to do an unlawful injury to such persons' property; that such persons sold liquors at retail, and were required to obtain a license from a city and county; that the threat was that if such persons did not pay the sums demanded they could not and would not obtain the license; and that defendants would prevent them from obtaining a license and prevent them from selling liquors—is insufficient for failing to show that the specific injury threatened was an unlawful injury. People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 407, 418, 7 Cal. App. 330, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

One attempting to obtain money from another with his consent by the wrongful use of fear, and a verbal threat to publicly accuse him of adultery, is guilty of the felony of an attempt to commit "extortion," defined by Penal Law, §§ 850, 851, as the obtaining of property from another with his consent induced by wrongful use of fear and by a threat to accuse him of any crime, and is not guilty of the misdemeanor denounced by section 857, providing that a person who verbally makes such a threat as would be criminal if made in writing is guilty of a misdemeanor, which applies only to "black-mail," defined by section 856 as the extorting of money from another by any writing threatening to accuse a person of crime, for the threats under sections 850, 851, may be written or verbal. People ex rel. Perry v. Gilllette, 124 N. Y. Supp. 470, 471, 140 App. Div. 27.

An attorney's charge for professional services is not "extortionate" unless oppressive or illegal. Grievance Committee v. Ennis, 80 Atl. 767, 770, 84 Conn. 594.

By color of office

The technical legal meaning of "extortion" is the taking of money or anything of value by an officer by color of his office, either when none is due him, or more than is due him, or probably where it is not yet due, or the oppressive misuse of official power by the rejection of money. Holt v. State, 74 S. E. 560, 561, 11 Ga. App. 34 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2626); Hanley v. State, 104 N. W. 57, 59, 125 Wis. 396 (citing 4 Blackstone, 141; Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 3 Bush [66 Ky.] 25, 96 Am. Dec. 192); State v. Cooper, 113 S. W. 1048, 1049, 120 Tenn. 549, 15 Ann. Cas. 1116; Commonwealth v. Wilson, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 28, 30.

The soliciting of a bribe by an officer after making an arrest or a threat to arrest is not "extortion" in a legal sense. State v. Browning, 133 N. W. 330, 336, 153 Iowa, 37.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7218, punishing any officer corruptly extorting any "greater fees for any services" than by law are allowed or demanding under color of office any promise securing the payment of a "greater sum of money for any service" than he is authorized by law to demand, defines "extortion" as the corrupt exaction of greater fees for official services than are allowed by law, or the taking under color of office of a promise securing the payment of excessive fees, and contemplates an exaction of an excessive amount when the right exists to demand some amount within lawful provisions because of actual services rendered, and the exaction must be for real or pretended official services demanded of one who at least believes himself to be under legal obligations to pay something, and without the right existing on the one hand to demand legal fees for services actually rendered, and without the obligation of another to pay legal fees, there can be no extortion. State v. Wainright, 97 Pac. 51, 52, 50 Wash. 225.

For a justice of the peace to demand and receive fees before they are due constitutes "extortion" at common law. Under Shannon's Code, §§ 6352, 6353, providing that no officer shall demand or receive fees or other compensation for any service further than expressly provided by law, a justice of the peace, demanding and receiving fees before they are due, is guilty of "extortion," in violation of section 6714, providing that it is extortion by an officer to knowingly demand or receive of another for performing any service or official duty for which a fee or compensation is established by law any greater fee or compensation than legally allowed or provided. State v. Cooper, 113 S. W. 1048, 1049, 120 Tenn. 549, 15 Ann. Cas. 1116.

Under Pen. Code 1910, § 302, providing that "extortion" shall consist of any public officer unlawfully taking by color of his office from any person any money or thing of value that is not due him, or more than is due, an officer who uses his office to exact money, not due him may be guilty of extortion, though he does not pretend to be executing any process, nor does he extort money upon promise not to execute. Dean v. State, 71 S. E. 597, 598, 9 Ga. App. 303.

EXTRA

The term "extra," in a builder's contract, means something outside of or in addition to that exacted by the contract. Chicago Lumber & Coal Co. v. Garmer, 109 N. W. 780, 782, 132 Iowa, 282.

"Extra," as an adjective or a noun, expresses an idea of something beyond, in addition to, or in excess of what is due, usual, or necessary; and, as used in building or similar contracts, it denotes something done or furnished in addition to, or in excess of, the requirement of such contract; something not required in the performance of the contract. Fullerton v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 115 N. W. 607, 611.

EXTRA BRAKEMAN

An "extra brakeman" is one who has no regular employment, but takes the place of a regular employé when off duty. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mulfinger's Adm'x (Ky.) 80 S. W. 499.

EXTRA COMPENSATION

The supervisor's claim for commissions is not a claim for "extra compensation" within the inhibition of Const. art. 3, § 28, and Public Officers Law, § 67, prohibiting extra compensation to any public officer, since he asks only for the compensation given by the town law (Consol. Laws, c. 62). People ex rel. Studwell v. Archer, 126 N. Y. Supp. 750, 752, 142 App. Div. 71.

"Extra compensation," within the meaning of article 24 of the Amendments to the Constitution, prohibiting the General Assembly, or any county, city, etc., to grant any extra compensation to any public officer, is a compensation in addition to, in excess of, or larger than the compensation prescribed by law or settled by contract; one the payee is not entitled by law to demand, nor the payer obliged to pay. McGovern v. Mitchell, 63 Atl. 433, 441, 78 Conn. 536.

EXTRA GOOD ORE

The words "extra good ore," in a contract to indemnify for the expense of sinking a mining shaft, if the drill hole was not as represented, the representation being "1 to 8 feet soil and clay, 110 to 117 feet dark flint, with extra good ore," do not refer merely to the quality of the ore, but require a quantity sufficient to justify mining. Hall v. Chitwood, 81 S. W. 208, 209, 106 Mo. App. 568.

EXTRA OR SPECIAL TERM

Within Rev. St. 1892, § 1373, authorizing the calling of extra or special terms of court an "extraordinary or special term" is merely a term other than a regular spring or fall term, and such a term does not lose its character as such merely because the order calling it designates it an adjourned term, if it appears that it is a term distinct from the regular terms; and hence, where, at the regular spring term in D. county on March 12th, an adjourned term was called for March 28d, and on March 17th, the regular spring term was held in P. county in the same circuit, it was immaterial whether the court had power to adjourn a term to a day subsequent to the convening of the same court in another county, since the so-called adjourned term was an extraordinary or special term within the meaning of the statute. Peeples v. State, 35 South. 223, 224, 46 Fla. 101, 4 Ann. Cas. 870.

EXTRA WORK

The term "extra work," as used in a construction contract providing that no claim for "extra work" shall exist in favor of the contractor, unless the same has been ordered by proper authorities, means only extra work necessitated by a change of plan, and not work which was naturally incident to, though not foreseen by, the contractor at the time the contract was entered into. People ex rel. McCabe v. Snedeker, 94 N. Y. Supp. 319, 324, 106 App. Div. 89.

"The question of what constitutes 'extra work' depends, as a general rule, upon the construction of the working contract, and when the construction of an entire work is called for, at a fixed compensation, the hazards of the undertaking are assumed by the contractor, and he cannot recover for increased cost as 'extra work,' upon discovering that he has made a mistake in his estimate of the cost, or that the work is more difficult and expensive than he anticipated." A building contractor cannot recover for "extra work" in the digging of an excavation and the making of a foundation for a building, where the specifications in the contract provided that the ground was to be excavated to a depth to make the cellar seven feet from the cement floor to the first floor joist, the ground removed from the excavation to be graded up around the houses after the walls were up, and the foundation to go to the solid ground, on a showing that because of the character of the ground it was necessary to excavate more than seven feet to secure solid ground for the foundation, to remove an increased amount of earth and rubbish, and to fill in with sand and gravel, since such work was covered by the specifications in the contract.

Hennessey v. Fleming Bros., 90 Pac. 77, 78, 40 Colo. 27.

Where the specifications of a building contract require the contractor to "rub down all brick work on street sides," the contractor cannot claim pay for cleaning street walls with acid as for "extra work"; the work coming within the terms of the contract. Chamberlain v. Hillbord, 38 Pac. 437, 438, 26 Or. 423.

Under a building contract stipulating that no extras will be allowed, unless ordered by the superintendent in writing, and unless the cost thereof is agreed on in advance and expressed in writing, a contractor performing "extra work," which is work arising outside and independent of the contract, cannot recover therefor, unless the complaint alleges that the conditions of the contract as to extra work were complied with. Rebekah Assembly, I. O. O. F., v. Pulse, 94 N. E. 779, 47 Ind. App. 466.

A contract to construct a public highway provided for the payment of a lump sum, unless changes in the plans increased or decreased the work. The specifications required the contractor to satisfy himself as to the conditions governing the work and the nature and extent of the materials required, and stated that the estimates of the engineer were approximate only. The engineer had estimated the amount of surplus excavation at 8,000 yards, but the excavation amounted to 9,456 yards. Held, that the contractor was not entitled to compensation for the excavation in excess of the estimate of the engineer. Where a construction contract did not require the performance by the contractor of certain work, the work was "extra work," within the provision that no claim should be made for such work, unless performed in pursuance of written orders signed by the engineer in charge of the work. Molloy v. Village of Briarcliff Manor, 129 N. Y. Supp. 929, 936, 145 App. Div. 483.

Where a contract of a borough for the construction of a dam classified the work in different items, and approximated the amount thereof and provided that additional work above the estimate should be paid for at the contract price for work of that class, and that "extra work" should be that "for which no price is fixed in the contract and which is not covered by the contract sum or the specifications," that the condition of the ground required the contractor to expend a much larger amount of work of the various kinds itemized in the contract than was estimated, which work cost more than the rate specified in the contract, did not make the additional work "extra work" within the meaning of the contract. Coryell v. Dubois Borough, 75 Atl. 25, 26, 226 Pa. 103.

Putting in expansion joints in a wood block pavement is "extra work," within a contract requiring, as a condition to a claim therefor, or its allowance, that it shall be first authorized in writing, and the price to be paid therefor be agreed on in the same way. United States Wood Preserving Co. v. City of New York, 123 N. Y. Supp. 538, 539, 188 App. Div. 841.

EXTRAS

"Extras," in a contract for the construction of a system of water works, "consist of labor or materials not called for by the original contract." Casgrain v. Milwaukee, 51 N. W. 88, 89, 81 Wis. 113.

Ordinarily the word "extras" carries the idea of something beyond, in addition to, or in excess of, what is due usually or necessarily; and in a contract it denotes something done or furnished in addition, or in excess of, the requirements of such contract, something not required in the performance of the contract. Within a contract for paving a street with asphalt, exacting the laying of concrete on the old foundation of a wooden block pavement, to bring the surface to subgrade before the laying of the asphalt, and providing that there should be no compensation for "extras," the laying of the concrete, an essential portion of the work, for which separate bids had been taken, is not an extra. Fullerton v. City of Des Moines, 126 N. W. 159, 163, 147 Iowa, 254.

EXTRACT

An information charging that defendant sold in interstate commerce a liquid labeled "Flavor of Vanilla," which did not contain any extract of vanilla, does not state a case of adulteration or misbranding of vanilla extract in violation of Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 2, 34 Stat. 768; the words "extract" and "flavor" not being synonymous terms. United States v. St. Louis Coffee & Spice Mills, 189 Fed. 191, 193.

EXTRACT OF COFFEE BEAN

Not dutiable as article used as coffee, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

EXTRACT OF NUTGALLS

"Extract of nutgalls," an article which is made by grinding nutgalls, digesting the powder in water, and filtering to remove impurities, a chemical being added as a preservative without working any chemical change, is not dutiable as tannin or tannic acid, under paragraph 1, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, nor as a chemical compound under paragraph 3, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, but either directly or by similitude as "drugs, such as * * * nutgalls, * * * advanced in value or condition," under paragraph 20, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, 30 Stat. 152. W. N. Procter & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 586, 588; United States v. W. N. Procter & Co., 145 Fed. 126, 127, 76 C. C. A. 96.

EXTRACTOR

See Hydro Extractor.

EXTRAJUDICIAL CONFESSIONS

"Extrajudicial confessions" are either direct confessions of guilt, or indirect confessions which may be inferred from the conduct of accused, and from his silent acquiescence in the statements of others respecting himself and made in his presence; but the acquiescence must exhibit some act of the mind and amount to voluntary demeanor or conduct of accused. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 542, 7 Pennewill, 479.

EXTRALATERAL

See Extraliminal.

EXTRALIMINAL

"Extraliminal," or "extralateral," with reference to the rights conferred by a lode location, while depending for its existence on something within the boundaries, may, nevertheless, be exercised under certain conditions beyond those boundaries. Jefferson Min. Co. v. Anchoria-Leland Min. & Mill Co., 75 Pac. 1070, 1073, 32 Colo. 176, 64 L. R. A. 925.

EXTRAORDINARY

Difficult and extraordinary, see Difficult.

The word "extraordinary" is defined in the Century Dictionary as follows: "Being beyond or out of the common order or rule; not of the usual, customary, or regular kind; not ordinary. (4) Exceeding the common degree or measure; hence, remarkable; uncommon; rare; wonderful." United States v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., 149 Fed. 809, 814.

"Extraordinary" means exceeding the common degree or measure; remarkable; uncommon; rare; wonderful. Southern Ry. Co. v. Burgess, 42 South. 35, 37, 143 Ala. 364 (citing Gadsden & A. U. Ry. Co. v. Causler, 12 South. 489, 97 Ala. 235).

EXTRAORDINARY CARE

See, also, High Care.

In some courts it is held, even as to such exceedingly dangerous appliances as electricity, that "ordinary care" or "reasonable care" is what is required, while in others an "extraordinary degree of care" is required; that is to say, something more than just mere reasonable care. Winkelman v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 85 S. W. 99, 100, 110 Mo. App. 184.

While "the expression 'extraordinary care' in the view of some courts means no more than that the carrier should use reasonable care, and that this reasonable care is a relative term, having reference to the duties which the carrier has undertaken and to the risks incident to the business," it is not error to instruct that the carrier of passengers is bound to use "extraordinary care" and caution for the safety of the passenger. Hutchins v. Cedar Rapids & M. O. R. Co., 103 N. W. 779, 780, 128 Iowa, 279 (quoting 3 Thompson, § 2746).

The better doctrine is that care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence," or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law writers, but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. The only true measure is "reasonable care," and that expression has been declared by the courts in England and elsewhere to be synonymous with "ordinary care." "Reasonable care" is a relative term, and what is reasonable care in a given case depends upon many considerations. What would be reasonable care under some circumstances would clearly be negligence in others. Reasonable care and vigilance vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention. They relate to the work to be done, to the instrumentalities to be used, to the dangers that may result from their use, to the varying duties owed by those who supply or use them; and in all cases reasonable care means such care as reasonable and prudent men used under like circumstances. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 297, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. R., 1 Allen [83 Mass.] 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Penobscot Lumbering Ass'n, 38 Atl. 108, 90 Me. 193; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray [76 Mass.] 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen [86 Mass.] 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 8 Gray [74 Mass.] 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

EXTRAORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES

It is an "extraordinary circumstance," excusing failure to have a bill of exceptions allowed and signed during the term at which judgment was rendered, though no extension of time was granted, where the trial judge was unable, because of illness, to settle the bill. Roberts v. Bennett, 135 Fed. 748, 749, 68 C. C. A. 386.

EXTRAORDINARY DILIGENCE

"'Extraordinary diligence' is that extreme care and caution which prudent and thoughtful persons use in securing and preserving their own property." Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812 (quoting definitions in Civ. Code 1895, § 2899).

Civ. Code 1895, § 2899, defines "extraordinary diligence" as that extreme care and caution which very prudent and thoughtful persons use under like circumstances. Held that, in determining what very prudent and thoughtful persons would do under certain circumstances, the situation and surrounding facts, including the existence of an emergency if there was one, are to be considered. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., 68 S. E. 1089, 135 Ga. 113.

"Extraordinary diligence," according to Civ. Code 1895, § 2899, is "that extreme care and caution which very prudent and thoughtful persons use in securing and preserving their own property." If at the time of paying the fare, the conductor and passenger stipulate that the latter may be put off at an intermediate point before reaching the destination to which fare was paid, the conductor will be bound to afford the passenger opportunity for leaving the train at that point, and will be bound to extraordinary diligence in seeing that he does not stop the train and induce the passenger to leave at a different place than that named in the stipulation. Williamson v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 56 S. E. 119-121, 127 Ga. 125.

"Extraordinary diligence," as the term is defined and used in this state, means that "extreme care and caution which every prudent person exercises under like circumstances." Southern Ry. Co. v. Cunningham, 50 S. E. 979, 981, 123 Ga. 90.

EXTRAORDINARY EMERGENCY

The building of a public levee on the Mississippi river in the Eastern district of Louisiana cannot be said to present at all times an "extraordinary emergency," within the meaning of Act Aug. 1, 1892, c. 852, 27 Stat. 340, regulating the hours of labor of laborers and mechanics on public works, and making it unlawful to require or permit such employes to work a longer time except in cases of extraordinary emergency. United States v. Garbish, 32 Sup. Ct. 77, 78, 222 U. S. 257, 56 L. Ed. 190.

The term "extraordinary emergency," within Code, § 892, limiting to eight hours the daily labor on public works except in case of such emergency, imports a sudden and unexpected happening; an unforeseen occurrence calling for immediate action to avert imminent danger to health, or life, or property; an unusual peril, suddenly creating a situation so different from the usual course in the prosecution of the public work that the court must conclude that Congress contemplated excepting from the operation of the law such an occurrence. Penn Bridge Co. v. United States, 29 App. D. C. 452, 459.

An "extraordinary emergency" in connection with the building of a dam across the Ohio river cannot be construed as a continuing emergency, which would suspend the eight-hour law during the entire life of the contract, nor an emergency growing out of the scarcity of labor, nor can it be made to include, not only the time of the happening of a flood, but also the time required to repair the injuries resulting therefrom; but it is such an unforeseen, sudden, or unexpected emergency as requires immediate action or remedy, and when the emergency passes the privilege ceases. United States v. Sheridan-Kirk Contract Co., 149 Fed. 809, 814.

A delay, not entirely unexpected, in obtaining the timber required for the construction of a pier at the Boston navy yard, does not create an "extraordinary emergency," within the meaning of the exception in the act of August 1, 1892, forbidding a contractor upon any public work of the United States, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, to permit or require employes thereon to work more than eight hours each day. Ellis v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 601, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURES

Under the section of a city charter providing that, whenever the council shall resolve by a two-thirds vote that an "extraordinary expenditure" for the benefit of the city should be made, the question shall be submitted to the taxpayers at a special election, an expenditure for voting machines is an "extraordinary expenditure." People ex rel. United States Standard Voting Mach. Co. v. Geneva, 92 N. Y. Supp. 91, 92, 45 Misc. Rep. 237.

EXTRAORDINARY FLOOD

An "extraordinary flood" is one of those unexpected visitations whose coming is not foreseen by the natural course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructiveness could not have been anticipated, and prevented by the exercise of ordinary foresight. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. McKone (Okl.) 127 Pac. 488, 490, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709.

"What was an 'extraordinary flood' was a question of fact, to be determined by the jury from the evidence under proper instruction from the court. Freshets are regarded as ordinary which are well known to occur in the stream occasionally through a period of years, though at no regular intervals. * * * The degree of care which a party is bound to use in constructing a dam across a stream * * * must be in proportion to the extent of the injury which will be likely to result to third persons, provided it should prove insufficient, and it is not enough that the dam is sufficient to resist ordinary floods; for if the stream is occasionally subject to great freshets, those must likewise be guarded against and the measure of care required in such case must be that which a discreet person would use if the whole risk were his own. * * *"
Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Thillman, 32 N. E. 529, 532, 143 Ill. 137, 36 Am. St. Rep. 359 (quoting and adopting Gould, Wat. [2d Ed.] § 211c; Gray v. Harris, 107 Mass. 492, 9 Am.

Rep. 61, and citing Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Parker, 50 Tex. 330; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bethel, 11 Ill. App. 17; Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451 [Gil. 347]; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Ramey, 28 N. E. 1087, 139 Ill. 9, 32 Am. St. Rep. 176).

Any inaccuracy in charging, in an action for injuries from the overflow of land, that an "extraordinary flood" is one of the heaviest that ever occurred in the locality, is not misleading to the jury, where they are also instructed that if the river overflowed its banks by reason of an extraordinary flood, or freshet, which it was not capable of carrying within its banks, and was not occasioned by the dam of defendants, plaintiffs could not recover, and that defendants would be excused from liability on account of an extraordinary flood which could not be foreseen and guarded against. Greeley Irr. Co. v. Von Trotha, 108 Pac. 985, 988, 48 Colo. 12.

An "extraordinary flood" is one of those visitations whose coming is not foreseen by the usual course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructiveness could not have been anticipated and prevented by the exercise of ordinary foresight. Town of Jefferson v. Hicks, 102 Pac. 79, 80, 23 Okl. 634, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

The word "extraordinary," in an instruction that no liability attaches to one building and maintaining a bridge over a stream for an "extraordinary freshet," must be limited to a freshet so outside of ordinary experience that its occurrence was not reasonably to have been anticipated, and the failure to so state to the jury might lead them to fail to give to the word such meaning. Broadway Mfg. Co. v. Leavenworth Terminal R. & Bridge Co., 106 Pac. 1034, 1035, 81 Kan. 616, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156 (quoting and adopting the definition in 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2628; Avery v. Vermont Electric Co., 54 Atl. 179, 75 Vt. 235, 59 L. R. A. 817, 98 Am. St. Rep. 818; American Locomotive Co. v. Hoffman, 54 S. E. 25, 105 Va. 343, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 252, 8 Ann. Cas. 773).

EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE

Where a painter was painting the walls of an elevator shaft, the elevators remaining in use, the turning of one of the large wheels was not an "extraordinary occurrence" of which he should have been given notice, although it would have been, had the elevators been shut down. Lauter v. Hedden Const. Co., 83 Atl. 878, 879, 83 N. J. Law, 617.

EXTRAORDINARY REMEDY

See Mandamus; Prohibition (Writ of).

EXTRAORDINARY RISK

In respect of the assumption by a servant of extraordinary risks, a risk becomes transformed from an ordinary one into an "extraordinary risk" whenever, among other conditions, the master's negligence contributes an added hazard to the situation in which the servant is placed; the word "extraordinary" not being used to denote magnitude or as a mark of degree, but to indicate that the risk is one which lies outside of the sphere of the normal. Baer v. Baird Mach. Co., 79 Atl. 673, 675, 84 Conn. 269.

EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES

"Legal services" are "extraordinary services," within Rev. St. 1898, § 3929, providing that an allowance may be made to administrators for all extraordinary services. Sloan v. Duffy, 94 N. W. 342, 344, 117 Wis. 480.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, which declares that in fixing the compensation of an executor or administrator, the court may make "such further allowance" as it may deem just and reasonable "for any 'extraordinary services,'" "extraordinary" means beyond or out of the common order or rule, and where an administrator with the will annexed went out and lived on the ranch which comprised the estate, and made it much more profitable by his management, his services were such as he was not bound to render and should be compensated specially under the statute. In re Broome's Estate, 122 Pac. 470, 472, 162 Cal. 258.

Civ. Code 1910, § 4067, providing that, in cases of extraordinary services, extra compensation may be allowed an administrator, applies to a temporary as well as permanent administrator. "Extraordinary services," for which extra compensation may be allowed, do not include voluntary services rendered in procuring a cemetery lot and rendering assistance in connection with funeral of deceased, though the person so acting is afterwards appointed temporary administrator, nor do they include an application to be appointed permanent administrator, which was denied. Fields v. Case, 72 S. E. 899, 900, 137 Ga. 147, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1266.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1905, allows executors all necessary expenses of management and settlement of the estate, and authorizes any attorney, who has rendered services to an executor, to apply for an allowance of suitable compensation out of the estate. Section 1619 allows administrators, etc., for fees for their attorneys for ordinary probate proceedings, the same amounts allowed for their own services by section 1618 as amended in 1905, with such further allowance as the court deems reasonable for any extraordinary services, as for litigation necessary for the administrator to prosecute or defend. Petitioners applied for compensation from the estate for their services as attorneys in opposing a contest of two codicils, altering legacies given by the will, and giving some additional ones. Held that, while counsel fees incurred in opposing a contest may be charged against the estate, if it goes to the parties benefited by the litigation, under the circumstances the estate had no interest therein, and the application was properly denied, such expenses being chargeable to those legatees having a direct interest in supporting the codicils, and services in probating the instruments, such as the order admitting them to probate, etc., were not "extraordinary services," but were services rendered in "conducting the 'ordinary probate proceedings,'" within section 1619, for which compensation was allowable only on final accounting. In re Hite's Estate, 101 Pac. 448, 452, 155 Cal. 448.

EXTRAORDINARY STORM

Within the rule that a municipality is not liable for injuries from insufficiency of its sewage system to carry off the surface water in case of an extraordinary storm, the word "extraordinary" is not used as synonymous with "unprecedented," but with "unusual," that which is rare or uncommon, happens sometimes, but not so often as to be regarded as a common occurrence. Geuder Paeschke & Frey Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 133 N. W. 835, 839, 147 Wis. 491.

EXTREME

Although, from its derivation, the word "extreme" indicates a superlative degree, in actual use it is often employed as the opposite of "moderate," and to indicate a very high degree, or as the equivalent of "excessive," or "very far advanced." In a charge that a man may be in a state of "extreme" bodily or mental weakness and disease, and yet possess sufficient understanding to direct how his property shall be disposed of, the word "extreme" is not used in the superlative meaning, but in the sense of "grievous," "excessive," or "far advanced," and the charge is not an instruction that one may be competent to make a will, though at the very point of mental extinction or dissolution. In re Nelson's Estate, 64 Pac. 294, 298, 132 Cal. 182.

EXTREME ATROCITY OR CRUELTY

The phrase "with extreme atrocity or cruelty," as used in Pub. St. c. 202, § 1, providing that "murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or in the commission of or attempt to commit a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, or committed with 'extreme atrocity or cruelty' is murder in the first degree," does not mean that knowledge that the crime was extremely atrocious or cruel is required as an element of the offense. Commonwealth v. Gilbert, 42 N. E. 336, 338, 165 Mass. 45.

EXTREME CRUELTY

Cruelty is a relative term; its existence frequently depends upon the character and refinement of the parties, and the conclusion to be reached in each case must depend upon its own particular facts. In considering "extreme cruelty" as a ground for divorce, courts have cautiously given it negative rather than affirmative definitions. Kapp v. District Court of Seventh Judicial Dist., 103 Pac. 235, 237, 31 Nev. 444 (citing Kelly v. Kelly, 1 Pac. 195, 18 Nev. 55, 51 Am. Rep. 732).

"Extreme cruelty" exists when the conduct of the husband or wife is such that the life or health of the other may be endangered, or when such conduct unjustifiably wounds the mental feelings or so destroys the peace of mind as seriously to impair the health or endanger the life of the other, or is such as utterly destroys the legitimate objects of matrimony; and, when words alone are relied upon, it must appear that they were uttered, not merely as complaints against the real or apparent conduct of the other, but that they were uttered without justifiable cause and to inflict pain. Rowe v. Rowe, 115 Pac. 553, 555, 84 Kan. 696.

"Extreme cruelty," as defined in Civ. Code Mont. § 134, relating to divorce, is "the infliction or threats of bodily injury, dangerous to life, or the repeated infliction or threat of grievous bodily injury upon the other party by one party to the marriage, or the repeated publication of false charges against the chastity of the wife by the husband." Ryan v. Ryan, 84 Pac. 494, 33 Mont. 406.

A husband, guilty of dishonesty and fraud towards his creditors by issuing to them worthless checks, and guilty of making false representations to his wife as to his debts, but who does not thereby intend to annoy or injure her, is not guilty of such "extreme cruelty" as justifies a divorce to the wife, suffering mentally and physically in consequence of his acts, since such suffering, to justify a divorce, must have been induced by the voluntary and conscious act of the husband, and must result from direct acts of the husband on the mind of the wife; "extreme cruelty" being the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering by one party to the marriage on the other. McClenahan v. McClenahan (Del.) 80 Atl. 677, 679 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2630).

Wrongful accusations of unchastity by husband may constitute such "extreme cruelty" as to be sufficient ground for divorce. Wetherington v. Wetherington, 49 South. 549, 553, 57 Fla. 551.

Evidence held not to justify a divorce under Rev. Codes, § 2649, defining "extreme cruelty as ground for divorce" to be the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage. Spofford v. Spofford, 103 Pac. 1054, 1055, 18 Idaho, 115.

As acts tending to injure life, limb, or health

In divorce actions, "cruelty," "extreme cruelty," "cruel and inhuman treatment," and the like may be established by evidence of any line of misconduct persisted in by the offending party to such an extent as to cause injury to the life, limb, or health of the other, or to threaten or to create a danger of such injury; and it is not necessary that such injury present or threatened, should be the direct result of such misconduct, but it is sufficient if it is produced by grief, worry, or mental anguish occasioned by such misconduct. Mathewson v. Mathewson, 69 Atl. 646, 648, 81 Vt. 173, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 300.

Any unjustifiable conduct of a husband or wife, which grievously wounds the mental feelings, or utterly destroys the peace of mind, or such as to impair the bodily health or destroys the legitimate objects of matrimony, constitutes "extreme cruelty," as defined in Comp. St., c. 25, § 7, though no physical violence is inflicted or threatened. Preuit v. Preuit, 129 N. W. 175, 176, 88 Neb. 124.

"Extreme cruelty" as a ground for divorce, when there is no actual violence, contemplates treatment, abuse, neglect, or bad conduct, such as damages health, or renders cohabitation intolerable and unsafe, or threats of mistreatment so flagrant as to cause reasonable and abiding apprehension of bodily violence, rendering it impracticable to discharge marital duties. Hancock v. Hancock, 45 South. 1020, 1022, 55 Fla. 690, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 670 (citing Palmer v. Palmer, 7 South. 864, 26 Fla. 215).

Abuse of marital rights

Where a husband had compelled his wife to submit to two abortions, and insisted that she should submit to a third, and that she should bear no children, as a condition to the continuance of the marital relation, such conduct constituted "extreme cruelty," entitling the wife to a divorce. Dunn v. Dunn, 114 N. W. 385, 386, 150 Mich. 476.

Abusive language and threats

Occasional irritability, fault-finding, and outbursts of temper on the part of one, followed by demonstrative affection and forbearance, with a sincere desire for the love and companionship of the other, do not constitute "extreme cruelty," which is ground for divorce. Rowe v. Rowe, 115 Pac. 553, 555, 84 Kan. 696.

Mental suffering

Under Code, § 94, declaring that "extreme cruelty" may consist of "the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage," it is not necessary that there shall be the infliction of bodily injury to constitute extreme cruelty. A course of conduct which entails grievous mental suffering alone is sufficient. Avery v. Avery, 82 Pac. 967, 969, 148 Cal. 239 (citing Barnes v. Barnes, 30 Pac. 298, 95 Cal. 171, 16 L. R. A. 660; Andrews v. Andrews, 52 Pac. 298, 120 Cal. 187).

"It was formerly thought that to constitute 'extreme cruelty,' such as authorized the granting of a divorce, a physical violence was necessary; but the modern and better construed cases have repudiated this doctrine as taking too low and sensual a view of the marriage relation, and it is now very generally held that any unjustifiable conduct, which so grievously wounds the mental feelings of the other, or such as in any other manner endangers the life of the other, or so utterly destroys the peace of mind of the other as to seriously impair the bodily health or endanger the life of the other, or such as utterly destroys the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony, constitutes extreme cruelty under the statutes, although no physical or personal violence may be inflicted or even threatened." In a suit for divorce, evidence held to show personal indignities, rendering life burdensome within the meaning of the statute. Sullivan v. Sullivan (Wash.) 100 Pac. 321, 323 (quoting and adopting definition in Carpenter v. Carpenter, 2 Pac. 122, 80 Kan. 712, 46 Am. Rep. 108).

Unjustifiable conduct on the part of a husband which utterly destroys the objects of matrimony may constitute "extreme cruelty," without physical injury. Mills v. Mills, 130 N. W. 419, 88 Neb. 596; Myers v. Myers, 130 N. W. 254, 255, 88 Neb. 656.

Under a statute defining "extreme cruelty" as the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, a divorce may be granted for the infliction of grievous mental suffering, although such suffering produced no bodily injury. Mahnken v. Mahnken, 82 N. W. 870, 871, 9 N. D. 188.

"Extreme cruelty" means any unjustifiable conduct on the part of either the husband or the wife, which so grievously wounds the mental feelings of the other, or so utterly destroys the peace of mind of the other, as to seriously impair the bodily health and endanger the life of the other, or such as utterly destroys the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony. Whitney v. Whitney, 110 N. W. 555, 556, 78 Neb. 240.

There may be "extreme cruelty," justifying a divorce, without physical injury or violence; and unjustifiable conduct of one of the spouses, which utterly destroys the legitimate ends of matrimony, may constitute such cruelty. That a husband and wife are living apart when false charges of adultery are wantonly made by one spouse against the other does not of itself prevent such charges from constituting extreme cruelty. Miller v. Miller, 181 N. W. 203, 204, 89 Neb. 239, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 360.

The "extreme cruelty" authorizing a divorce is such conduct by the husband or wife towards the other as will endanger life or health, or will cause a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt. The injury may be mental, but must be such as to render it impracticable for the complainant to discharge marital duties with reasonable safety, but mere inconvenience or unhappiness is insufficient. Prall v. Prall, 50 South. 867, 871, 58 Fla. 496, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577.

Under Civ. Code, § 94, defining "extreme cruelty" justifying a divorce as the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, the wrongful infliction of grievous mental suffering is "extreme cruelty," though no injury to the health of the spouse injured is caused thereby, and a single act of cruelty may be of such a nature, though it consists solely of unfounded charges, as not only to inflict the most grievous mental suffering, but also to render impossible the subsequent living together of husband and wife, justifying a divorce. MacDonald v. MacDonald, 102 Pac. 927, 929, 155 Cal. 665, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 45.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 4049, designates extreme cruelty as a ground for divorce, and section 4051 defines "extreme cruelty" as the infliction by one party to the marriage of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other. Held, that grievous mental suffering may constitute extreme cruelty, though not productive of perceptible bodily injury. Whether grievous mental suffering has been inflicted by one spouse upon the other is a question of fact to be determined under the particular circumstances of the case. Rindlaub v. Rindlaub, 125 N. W. 479, 483, 19 N. D. 352.

The acts of a wife in objecting to her husband's building a new house, finding fault with him for losing a hitching post, scolding him for coming home late at night, objecting to the kind of work he did, and the places where he worked, and insisting on having her own way, the result of which conduct was to deprive the husband of some sleep and cause him worry, did not constitute "extreme or repeated acts of cruelty," within a statute making such acts ground of divorce, and providing that they may consist as well of the infliction of mental suffering as bodily harm. Gelsseman v. Gelsseman, 83 Pac. 635, 636, 84 Colo. 481.

EXTREME TECHNICALITY

The expression "extreme technicality" is one which has no fixed and definite meaning. Vincendeau v. People, 76 N. E. 675, 678, 219 Ill. 474.

EXTREMIS

See Error in Extremis.

EXTREMITIES OF THE BODY

The "extremities of the body" are four in number, and "either" is one indifferently, any one of them; and the permanent paralysis of a hand resulting from a cut on the arm brings the plaintiff suing on the policy within the term "permanent paralysis of either extremities" as expressed in the constitution of the association. Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Aday, 134 S. W. 928, 930, 97 Ark. 425, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126.

EXTRINSIC OR COLLATERAL FRAUD

"Extrinsic or collateral fraud," as ground for equitable relief against a judgment, is defined to be actual fraud, such that there is on the part of the person chargeable with it the malus animus; the mala mens putting itself in motion and acting in order to take an undue advantage of some other person for the purpose of actually and knowingly defrauding him. There is an admitted exception to this general rule in cases where, by reason of something done by the successful party to the suit, there was, in fact, no adversary trial or decision of the issues in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case by fraud or deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of a compromise, or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance of the acts of the plaintiffs, or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat, or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side, these and similar cases which show that there never has been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a suit may be sustained to set aside and annul a former judgment or decree and open the case for a new and fair hearing. Flood v. Templeton, 92 Pac. 78, 81, 152 Cal. 148, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579 (quoting and adopting United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93).

By "extrinsic or collateral fraud" for which a court of equity will set aside a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction is meant some act or conduct of the prevailing party which has prevented a fair submission of the controversy. Garrett Biblical Institute v. Minard, 108 Pac. 80, 81, 82 Kan. 338.

EYEWITNESS

An "eyewitness" is a person who testifies to what he has seen. Where insured in an accident policy and a young woman were seen rowing in a canoe within five minutes before it capsized, and they were drowned, the canoe being one easily overturned, the circumstances of the accident and injury were established by eyewitnesses, within the meaning of the policy providing that, when the circumstances of an accident and injury are not established by the testimony of an actual "eyewitness," the company's liability shall be limited to one-twentieth of the death benefit. By the terms of the policy, not only the fact of the injury is to be established by an "eyewitness," but also the facts and circumstances of the accident, that is, the operating cause of the injury, or at least to show that at the time of the injury there was an operating cause to which the accident might fairly be charged, and to indicate in a general way the nature of that cause and the manner of its working. Lewis v. Brotherhood Acc. Co., 79 N. E. 802, 805, 194 Mass. 1, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 714 (citing National Acc. Soc. v. Ralstin, 101 Ill. App. 192).

F

The phrase "f. o. b." means free on board of vessel, car, or other conveyance which is to transport goods to a buyer. Rogers v. Union Iron & Foundry Co., 150 S. W. 100, 104, 187 Mo. App. 228 (quoting 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2636).

The Appellate Court knows that "f. o. b." used in connection with a shipment of goods, means "free on board." Kilmer v. Moneyweight Scale Co., 76 N. E. 271, 272, 36 Ind. App. 568.

"F. o. b." means free on board and ready to go forward at once. Aspegren & Co. v. Wallerstein Produce Co., 69 S. E. 957, 958, 111 Va. 570.

FACE

See Fair on Its Face.

Of the enemy

A soldier who deserted after the signing of the protocol between the United States and Spain, and while a state of peace actually existed, and nothing remained to be done to conclude peace except the settlement of the details of the treaty, is within Act April 11, 1890, c. 78, 26 Stat. 54, providing that no person shall be court-martialed for desertion in time of peace, and not "in the face of an enemy," committed more than two years before his arraignment therefor; said limitation not to begin until the end of his term of enlistment. In re Cadwallader, 127 Fed. 881, 883.

Of the record

See Apparent on the Face of the Record.

A motion in arrest of judgment in a criminal case must be predicated on some defect which appears on the face of the record or pleadings, under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 5363, a defect "on the face of the record" existing in a criminal case where there is some inadequacy in the allegations of the indictment, not cured by the verdict, or where the verdict does not conform to the charge in the indictment; and the "face of the record" does not include the charge of the court or the brief of evidence approved and filed as part of the record in a motion for new trial. Spence v. State, 68 S. E. 443, 444, 7 Ga. App. 825.

FACE TO FACE

Code Cr. Proc. § 7, giving defendant the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him "in the presence of the court," adds nothing to Const. art. 6, § 7, giving him the right to "meet the witnesses against him 'face to face,'" or Const. U. S. Amend. art. 6, giving him the right to be "confronted with the witnesses against him," which are satisfied by his having an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, so as to allow, under an exception to the hearsay rule, admission against him, at the trial on the indictment, of testimony given on the preliminary examination by a witness who has since left the state; and this, though the complaint before the committing magistrate alleged the offense as committed on a day different from that alleged in the indictment, the precise time being immaterial. State v. Heffernan, 123 N. W. 87, 89, 24 S. D. 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868, 140 Am. St. Rep. 764.

FACE VALUE

The "face or prima facie value" of a promissory note at any point of time is the principal, with the interest then accrued. It does not include unearned interest; and this is true, even though the unearned interest has in form been added to the face of the note. Robertson v. Moses, 108 N. W. 788, 790, 15 N. D. 351.

The words "face value of this certificate," as used in a benefit certificate providing that one-tenth of the face value of this certificate should be paid to the member if physically disabled on account of old age, meant that the face value was $2,000, and not one assessment during the month of the member's death. Hall v. Royal Fraternal Union, 61 S. E. 977, 982, 130 Ga. 820.

FACILITIES

See Equal Facilities; Privileges and Facilities; Public Facilities; Public Service Facilities and Conveniences; Reasonable Facilities; Terminal Facility.

Of railroads

In Const. art. 9, § 20, providing that from any action of the Corporation Commission requiring additional facilities an appeal may be taken, the word "facilities" includes a railroad depot. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Miller, 123 Pac. 1047, 1049, 81 Okl. 801.

A siding connection is a "facility for transportation" within Act June 4, 1883 (P. L. 72), providing that any undue or unreasonable discrimination by a railroad company in facilities for the transportation of freight shall be unlawful. Mends v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 77 Atl. 909, 911, 228 Pa. 575.

Where a railroad company acquired 20 acres of station grounds under the provisions of Act Cong. March 3, 1875, c. 152, 18 Stat. 482, for occupation and use as a common carrier, and such grounds are so situated as to abut upon a navigable lake or body of water, and such company constructs thereon a dock or wharf for use in receiving and discharging freight and passengers from boats and for forwarding through freight and passengers, and the same is in fact used both in carrying on through business and local business, such dock or wharf is a public "facility" for the transportation of freight and passengers within the purview and meaning of section 6, art. 11, of the Constitution, and such railroad company cannot make any undue or unreasonable discrimination between competing boat lines engaged in the same kind or class of business with such railroad company. Cœur d'Alene & St. Joe Transp. Co. v. Ferrell, 128 Pac. 565, 567, 22 Idaho, 752, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 965.

Of schools

Laws Mont. 1897, p. 134, § 1940b, provides that the trustees of any school district may, when advisable, submit to the electors the question whether a tax shall be raised to purchase lots and furnish additional school facilities. "Facility" is not a technical word, but one in common use, and its meaning is to be found in the sense attached to it by approved usage. Roget's Thesaurus gives "aid," "assistance," and "help" as equivalents of "facility." Webster, among other definitions of the word, includes "the quality of being easily performed; ease in performance; that which promotes the ease of any action; advantage; valuable aid; assistance." The Century Dictionary follows the definitions of Webster, and adds: "The means by which the performance of anything is rendered more easy; convenience." That which aids, assists, or makes more easy the acquisition of knowledge is a convenience and an advantage, and is clearly a "facility." Books, maps, globes, and charts are facilities to the imparting of knowledge. Through them or by means of them information is conveyed to the pupil. But the meaning of the word is not limited to inanimate bodies or things. Men are often facilities. Without a crew to man his vessel, the master of a ship would not have the necessary facilities. A school with a complement of pupils in every room, but lacking teachers, would certainly not have the facilities to carry on educational work. State ex rel. Knight v. Cave, 52 Pac. 200, 203, 20 Mont. 468 (citing Pol. Code, § 15; State v. Johnson, 51 Pac. 820, 20 Mont. 367).

Failure of the board of education of a township to provide transportation for children living remote from the school is not such a failure to provide suitable school "facilities," under School Law (P. L. 1904) p. 48, § 126, as to authorize the county superintendent of schools to transmit to the custodian of the school fund an order to withhold from the district all moneys in his hands to the credit of such district received from the state appropriation or the state school tax. Board of Education of Frelinghuysen Tp. v. Atwood, 62 Atl. 1130, 1131, 73 N. J. Law, 315.

FACILITIES AND ACCOMMODATIONS

Acts 1882, p. 47, No. 36, requiring railroads to give all persons "reasonable and equal terms, * * * facilities and accommodations" for the transportation of freight, etc., must be construed in the light of Acts 1882, p. 47, No. 37, authorizing a railroad corporation to establish rates, etc., and, when so done, it requires a railroad corporation to make rates reasonable and equal as required by the common law, and it is but declaratory of the common law defining the rights and obligations of carriers; the words "facilities and accommodations" relating to the incidents of transportation, and the word "terms" signifying rates. State v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 81 Vt. 463, 71 Atl. 194, 196, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

FACILITIES AND CONVENIENCES

A telephone is a facility and convenience, within Const. art. 9, § 18, empowering the Corporation Commission to require carriers to establish and maintain all such public service "facilities and conveniences" as may be reasonable and just. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Pac. 11, 14, 23 Okl. 210, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908.

FACT

See Assumption of Facts; Attorney in Fact; Collateral Facts; Conclusion of Fact; Contract Inferred from Facts; Error of Fact; Established Facts; Evidentiary Fact; Ignorance of Fact; Issue of Fact; Jurisdictional Facts; Material Fact; Matter of Fact; Mistake of Fact; Physical Fact; Presumption of Fact; Question of Fact; Selsin in Fact; Statement of Fact; Stipulated Fact.

"Facts" means pleadable facts. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 136, 148 Wis. 334.

Where one of the questions on the report of an action against an insurance company was whether upon the facts the jury would have been warranted in finding a waiver of a stipulation, the word "facts" includes, not only undisputed facts, but also evidence as to the facts in dispute. Rockwell v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 98 N. E. 1068, 1087, 212 Mass. 318.

Some latitude must be given to the term "facts" when used in a rule of pleadings, such as that "facts and not mere conclusions of law are to be pleaded." It must of necessity include many allegations which are mixed conclusions of law and statements of fact; otherwise, pleadings would become intolerably prolix and mere statements of the evidence. Hence it has become a rule of pleading that, while it is not proper to allege a mere conclusion of law, it is proper to plead the fact inferable from other facts, and also anything which according to the common ordinary use of language amounts to a mixed statement of fact and of a legal conclusion. Jones v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 97 N. W. 535, 536, 12 N. D. 348.

The constitutional inhibition against trial judges commenting on "facts" in instructing juries refers only to disputed "facts," and not to those concerning which there is no dispute, or which are admitted. Lowsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co., 78 Pac. 904, 906, 86 Wash. 198.

An information for perjury charging that accused swore to "facts" stated in a complaint is not defective as charging the verification of the statements only; the term "facts" as so used meaning "matter" or "statements." State v. Luper (Or.) 95 Pac. 811, 813.

FACTS IN ISSUE

"Facts in issue" are those facts upon the existence of which the right or liability asserted depends. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Higdon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 732, 734.

It may be stated generally that the ultimate facts upon which the recovery is had—facts which, if found the other way, the recovery must have been different—are "facts in issue." A "fact or matter at issue" is that upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts in his pleading. Casaday v. Lindstrom, 75 Pac. 222, 224, 44 Or. 309 (citing Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514; King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 675; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176, 193).

FACTS OF THE CASE

As the term "facts of the case" is equivalent to the proven facts of the case, where accused pleaded not guilty, and not guilty by reason of insanity, an instruction that the jury could not convict defendant unless the hypothesis of his guilt should flow naturally from the facts proven was proper, was therefore erroneously refused. Odom v. State, 55 South. 820, 172 Ala. 383.

FACTS SHOWN BY THE RECORD

The phrase "facts shown by the record" in rule 15 of the Court of Appeals (87 S. W. 1x), providing that appellant or plaintiff in error shall furnish copies of a brief containing a clear and concise statement of the facts shown by the record, means an abstract of the evidence such as will enable the appellate court to gain such a view of the evidence as to obviate the necessity of reading the entire evidence as preserved in the bill of exceptions. Hess v. Corwin, 84 S. W. 141, 109 Mo. App. 22.

FACTION

Webster's Dictionary defines a "faction" as "a party in political society, combined or acting in union, usually applied to a minority, but may be applied to a majority." The Standard Dictionary defines it as "a number of persons combined for a common purpose usually a party within a party." The Century Dictionary states that it is "a party of persons having a common end in view, usually such a party seeking to bring about changes in any association of which they form a part." The word as applied to political parties "suggests a division of the members thereof, and a separate organization of the parts not a mere division of a regularly called convention into two camps, the body of the party not necessarily being divided." State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 100 N. W. 964, 974, 122 Wis. 534.

Where a county committee was not even voted for and made no contest for election as county committeemen at a primary election conducted pursuant to the primary election law, no "faction or section" was created or existed to give the state convention jurisdiction, within the Election Law of 1896, as amended, providing that election officers in the city of New York shall be appointed from lists authenticated and filed by the chairman of the executive committee of the county committee of the party, and that, if more than one list shall be submitted in the name of the same political party, only that list shall be accepted which is authenticated by the officer of the faction or section of the party which was organized as regular by the last preceding state convention of such party. People ex rel. McCarren v. Dooling, 112 N. Y. Supp. 71, 75, 128 App. Div. 1.

FACTOR

"Factors," by general definition, are agents to whom property is consigned for sale. In re Gulick, 186 Fed. 350, 351.

The term "factors" applies to a class of mercantile agents whose sole business is to sell merchandise consigned to them on a commission, called "factorage." Winslow Bros. & Co. v. Staton, 63 S. E. 950, 150 N. C. 284.

A "factor" is a commercial agent to whom the possession of personal property is intrusted by or for the owner to be sold, for a compensation, in pursuance of the agent's usual trade or business. Rowland v. Dolby, 59 Atl. 666, 667, 100 Md. 272, 3 Ann. Cas. 643.

Under Rev. Codes 1906, § 5801, defining a "factor" as an agent employed to buy or sell property in his own name and intrusted by his principal with possession thereof, a factor may buy, as well as sell, property the subject of the agency. Turner v. Crumpton & Crumpton, 130 N. W. 937, 940, 21 N. D. 294, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1015.

"A 'factor' is said to be an agent employed to sell or to purchase and sell goods or other personal property intrusted to his possession, * * * for a compensation commonly called 'factorage' or 'commission.'" Although "it must not be understood that a factor is a trustee of an express trust in the strict sense of the term," he is such under Rev. St. 1898, § 2607, and authorized thereby to enforce it in his own name. Beardsley v. Schmidt, 98 N. W. 235, 237, 120 Wis. 405, 102 Am. St. Rep. 991 (quoting McGraft v. Rugee, 19 N. W. 530, 60 Wis. 406, 50 Am. Rep. 378).

A "factor" has been defined to be an agent employed to sell property intrusted to his possession by and for his principal, for a compensation usually designated a "commission" or sometimes a "factorage." His agency with respect to the particular property is general, unless expressly limited by instructions. M. M. Walker Co. v. Dubuque Fruit & Produce Co., 85 N. W. 614, 615, 113 Iowa, 428, 53 L. R. A. 775 (citing McGraft v. Rugee, 19 N. W. 530, 60 Wis. 406, 50 Am. Rep. 378; Milburn Mfg. Co. v. Peak, 34 S. W. 102, 89 Tex. 209).

A "factor" is one who sells goods which another person has delivered to him for that purpose and receives compensation for his services by a commission or otherwise. Ommen v. Talcott, 188 Fed. 401, 403, 112 C. O. A. 239.

"A 'factor' or 'commission merchant' is one who has the actual or technical possession of goods or wares of another for sale. Thus the property may be in his own warehouses, or he may have a warehouse receipt or bill of lading. The possession of the property is prima facie evidence of ownership. Being thus intrusted with possession of it by the owner for the purpose of sale, a factor may sell it in his own name, without disclosing the name of his principal, and he may collect the proceeds and give the purchaser a complete acquittance." J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Corsicana Cotton Factory, 99 S. W. 305, 306, 124 Ky. 435, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

Where plaintiff, at defendant's request, delivered to it a car of lemons for the purpose of completing a sale already effected by defendant at a stated price, defendant to receive a certain commission on the sale, though it was not, in the transaction, within the technical definition of a "factor," in that the lemons were not first placed in its possession for the purpose of a sale, but were delivered to it for the purpose of completing a sale already effected, defendant's relation to the plaintiff, after he had delivered them to it, was substantially that of a factor. Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exch., 77 Pac. 993, 994, 144 Cal. 402.

As warehouseman

The word "factor," in Rev. St. 1895, art. 4314, providing that no factor shall employ any person other than a public weigher to weigh produce sold and offered for sale, means a person having possession of merchandise with authority to sell, not including a mere "warehouseman," and that the statute had no application to a "warehouseman" weighing produce merely for sale or to loan money thereon. Hedgpeth v. Hamilton Warehouse Co., 140 S. W. 1084, 1085, 104 Tex. 496; Hedgpeth v. Same, 128 S. W. 709 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2640; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7392).

FACTOR'S LIEN

A "factor's lien" arises by operation of the common law, and is the lien that the factor has on the goods consigned to him while in his possession for all advances to the consignor. It is purely a possessory lien, and is lost by a surrender of possession. Garrison v. Vermont Mills, 69 S. E. 743, 744, 154 N. C. 1, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 450.

FACTORY

See Business and Factory Use; Occupied as Factory; Tenant Factory.

Heydecker's Gen. Laws, p. 2601, c. 32, defines "factory" to include any mill, workshop, or other manufacturing or business establishment where one or more persons are employed at labor. People v. Williams, 100 N. Y. Supp. 337, 338, 116 App. Div. 379.

The word "factory," a contraction of "manufactory," means a building appropriated to the manufacture of goods, and it is the appropriation of a building to such manufacture that makes it a factory; and so, under Laws 1897, c. 415, § 82, providing that such fire escapes as the factory inspector may deem necessary shall be provided on every factory of a certain number of stories in height, and section 83, providing that if there are no fire escapes the fire inspector may, by order of the owner, proprietor, or lessee of the factory, require them to be provided, when a lessee renders such a building a factory by installing machinery therein and devoting it to manufacture, he, at least, is under duty to provide it with fire escapes, and so is liable for death of one from fire, due to the absence thereof. Di Santo v.

Brooklyn Chair Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 8, 10, 140 App. Div. 119.

In an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate, the evidence showed that deceased was sent to repair an engine and make a pump work in its detached pumphouse, and that he was killed while so engaged by an unguarded shaft. Held, that an instruction that the pumphouse was in the same class as a "factory," mill, or workshop, and, if the shaft with the key was so situated to be dangerous to workmen, it would be within Rev. Laws 1905, § 1813, requiring it to be guarded, was correct. Thomas v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 128 N. W. 297, 299, 112 Minn. 360.

A sawmill used for the manufacture of lumber, is a "factory" within the meaning of Laws Or. 1903, p. 79, which prohibits the employment of minors under the age of 16 years in a factory, except on compliance with certain specified conditions. Wind River Lumber Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 196 Fed. 340, 344, 116 C. C. A. 160; Bains v. Stone, 123 Pac. 871, 872, 87 Kan. 116.

A plant for mixing the materials used in making asphalt pavement, consisting of machinery mounted on an open or flat car, moved from place to place as required, is not a "factory," within the meaning of Laws Wash. 1905, c. 84, as amended providing for the protection and health of employes in factories, mills, and workshops, and requiring the boxing or guarding of machinery and shafting therein, etc. Casey v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 192 Fed. 432, 437.

A tugboat used in dredging operations is not a "factory" within the Labor Law, regulating the employment of minors in factories, providing that the term "factory" shall include mills, workshops, and other manufacturing or business establishments, and requiring that shafting, set screws, etc., in factories be properly guarded; the term "factory" being used to designate a structure or plant where something is made or manufactured from raw or partly wrought materials into forms suitable for use. Shannahan v. Empire Engineering Corp., 98 N. E. 9, 10, 204 N. Y. 543, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185.

Labor Law, § 80, providing that all doors leading in and to any "factory" shall be so constructed as to open outwardly where practicable, and shall not be locked, bolted, or fastened during working hours, is not limited in its operation to the owners of tenant factories, defined by section 94 as buildings, separate parts of which are occupied and used by different persons and one or more of which parts are so used as to constitute a factory, but applies to the owners of a factory occupying one floor of a building. People v. Harris, 134 N. Y. Supp. 409, 412, 74 Misc. Rep. 353.

Commercial ice house

The words "factories and workshops," in Gen. St. p. 2345, § 29, requiring the guarding of belting, shafting, etc., in factories and workshops, import a building in which the machinery is so placed as to be dangerous to operatives, and also imply places where machinery is employed in making or manufacturing something, this being the common meaning of a "factory" or "workshop"; and the statute does not apply to a plant for harvesting ice, which is done by carrying the ice from a lake on a conveyor made of boards fastened to two endless chains and operated by a friction shaft driven by steam power, and stopped or started by a lever attached to the shaft extending from the shafting into a small room adjoining the engine house containing no other mechanical appliances. Griffith v. Mountain Ice Co., 65 Atl. 853, 74 N. J. Law, 272.

FACTUM

"Factum," as used in the phrase "animus et factum," referring to change of domicile, "is the transfer of the bodily presence." Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 763, 767, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159.

Of a will

In the probate of a will nothing is to be determined but what relates to mere "factum of the will." The legal effect of its provisions is not involved in that proceeding. While any clause or portion of the paper writing propounded as a will may be rejected, if it appears it was not inserted by the testator, or that he had revoked it, or that it was not embraced by the execution, since such facts go to the actual making of the instrument, all that is embodied in the writing executed by the testator as an integral part of his intended testamentary disposition is to be accepted by the orphans' court as entering into his will. The validity and legal construction of the provisions are matters for subsequent determination by the appropriate tribunals. Home for the Aged of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Bantz, 66 Atl. 701, 703, 106 Md. 147 (citing Ramsey v. Welby, 63 Md. 584, 586).

FAIL

"The word 'fail' imports to become deficient or lacking, to leave unperformed, to omit, to neglect." Under Civ. Code, tit. 13, §§ 23, 166, 167 (Laws 1901), providing that all corporations organized under it should appoint a resident agent, but omitting to provide any penalty for noncompliance therewith, and exempting from such requirements all corporations theretofore organized, unless they elected to come within its provisions, and Laws 1903, p. 147, No. 82, providing that if any corporation, however organized, shall "fail" to appoint a resident agent, it is subject to dissolution, the penalty for a neglect to appoint a resident agent applies only to corporations organized under the former act or those electing to come under its provisions, since the word "fail" imports "a previously imposed duty, and is applicable only in case of neglect or omission to perform such duty." Rillito Canal Co. v. Schmidt, 89 Pac. 523, 525, 11 Ariz. 49 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

In a provision of an insurance certificate requiring the division of a safety fund if at any time the insurance company should "fail" by reason of insufficient membership or should neglect to pay the maximum indemnity provided for by the terms of any certificate, the word "fail" did not mean a default in any obligation assumed by the insurance company, but referred to insufficiency of the mortuary fund "by reason of insufficient membership" to pay the certificate claims against the company. Dresser v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 70 Atl. 39, 49, 80 Conn. 681.

As refuse or neglect

In an action by a passenger for his expulsion from a railroad train, wherein the defendant's plea averred that, when the conductor demanded of him his ticket or fare, plaintiff "refused" and "willfully failed" to present or tender any ticket or fare, and the conductor thereupon ejected him, and plaintiff's replication alleged that, when the conductor demanded his ticket or fare, he had misplaced his ticket in his clothing, and the conductor ejected him without giving him a reasonable time within which to produce the ticket, as the replication was in the nature of a confession and avoidance, it was insufficient, for, while the word "fail" at times is synonymous with "refuse," the word "refuse" here means to decline to accept, or reject, and the words "willfully fail" mean an intentional neglect, and so it does not show that plaintiff attempted to produce his ticket or notified the conductor that he had one, and requested reasonable time within which to search for his ticket, which was necessary before he could complain of his ejection. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason, 58 South. 963, 965, 4 Ala. App. 353 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 631; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7468).

The words "fail," "refuse," and "neglect," as used in Ky. St. 1903, §§ 795, 797, providing that any railroad company which "shall fail, refuse and neglect to comply with the provisions" of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, are used interchangeably, and mean something more than an unavoidable and accidental violation of the statute. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 566, 568, 119 Ky. 519.

The word "failed," as used in an instruction that a defendant, after being notified to produce books and papers, has "failed" to do so, is equivalent to "refused." F. R. Patch Mfg. Co. v. Protection Lodge, No.

215, International Ass'n of Machinists, 60 Atl. 74, 83, 77 Vt. 294.

The terms "refusing" and "failing," as used in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 33, § 24, providing that any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of registry in "refusing" to register him as a qualified voter, or in erasing or misspelling his name, or that of any person on the registry, or in registering or "failing" to erase the name of any fictitious, deceased, or disqualified person, etc., have reference to what may be termed negative action in cases that have been specifically brought before the judgment of the board of registry. Collier v. Carter, 60 Atl. 104, 105, 100 Md. 381.

In an action for breach of an executory contract to sell land, an allegation that defendant "failed and definitely and specifically refused" to perform the contract presents something more than a mere refusal to perform, and is, as against a demurrer, sufficient to show an unqualified repudiation of the contract. Matteson v. United States & C. Land Co., 115 N. W. 195, 197, 103 Minn. 407.

FAIL TO ACCOUNT

The phrase "fail to account," in Code, § 1017, punishing the treasurer of enumerated institutions for his failure to account, does not refer to any failure to pay on demand what is in the hands of the fiduciary, but only requires that he shall render an account or statement of the funds, and an itemized account, if required, in order that it may be known what disposition he has made of the funds intrusted to him. Where the treasurer of an association rendered a statement in writing of his receipts and payments as treasurer, which was extended to the association's officers, he complied with the Code, though he failed to pay over the balance in his hands on demand. State v. Dunn, 46 S. E. 949, 950, 134 N. C. 663.

FAIL TO ELECT

See, also, Failure to Elect.

Laws 1911, c. 62, § 9, which provides that, if a county board of health shall "fail to elect" a county superintendent within two months of the time fixed for such election, the secretary of the state board shall appoint, gives the power of appointment to the state secretary when the county board of health permits the office to remain vacant for the two months, and the state secretary properly made an appointment where the only appointee named within that time by the county board declined to qualify; the act requiring a choosing and induction into office of the superintendent within that period. McCullers v. Board of Com'rs of Wake County, 73 S. E. 816, 818, 158 N. C. 75, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 507.

FAILED AND NEGLECTED

A complainant averring that defendant for a valuable consideration agreed to present a note and to return it at a certain time in case of nonpayment, and that defendant failed and neglected so to do, is for breach of contract and not for negligence; the term "failed and neglected," as used in the complaint, meaning that defendant "omitted" to perform. W. H. Kiblinger Co. v. Sauk Bank, 111 N. W. 709, 131 Wis. 595.

FAILING

See Party Failing.

FAILURE

Willful failure, see Willful—Willfully.

"'Failure' covers both intentional and unintentional nonperformance." Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 391, 90 C. C. A. 384.

As ordinarily defined, a "failure" is a cessation or deficiency of supply, a partial or total deficiency in action, etc. As used in a contract to supply oil, providing that it is to be voidable on a "failure of oil wells," a substantial failure, such as to cause deficiency in supply and render the owner unable to fill his contracts, constituted a "failure of oil wells." San Jacinto Oil Co. v. Ft. Worth Light & Power Co., 93 S. W. 173, 176, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 293.

Under the Mechanic's Lien Law, requiring a notice of a lien to contain the name of the owner against whose interest the lien is claimed, and providing that a "failure" to state the name or a misdescription of the true owner shall not affect the validity of a lien, a notice stating the name of the owner alternatively is sufficient. Abelman v. Myer, 106 N. Y. Supp. 978, 979, 122 App. Div. 470.

As insolvency.

Where the undisputed evidence showed that defendant's transferror, a merchant who had purchased a stock of goods on credit, made the transfer to defendant, either for a consideration the greater part of which was a pre-existing debt or for no consideration whatever, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, the act of such merchant was a "failure" in business within the common acceptance of that term; and in detinue to recover goods sold on credit by plaintiff to such merchant shortly before the transfer it was not error to assume, in a question propounded by plaintiff to one of his witnesses, that the transferror of the goods had failed in business. Pelham v. Chattahoochee Grocery Co., 47 South. 172, 174, 156 Ala. 500.

The action of the master of a vessel in permitting whale oil, which leaked from barrels, to remain in the bilges, with the object of saving it at the end of the voyage, did not pertain to the "management of the vessel," within section 3 of the Harter act, 27 Stat. 445; but injury to other cargo from such oil arose from "failure in proper care of the cargo," within section 1, for which the vessel was liable. The Persiana, 185 Fed. 396, 397, 107 C. C. A. 416.

As refusal

See Refuse—Refusal.

Want synonymous

An instruction in an action for personal injuries that, if plaintiff was injured on a certain day, "it then became her duty to use all reasonable care and precaution to minimize the damages that might result, and, if * * * she failed to do this, then you cannot return a verdict for such damages that resulted by her want to exercise such care and precaution," was not so inaptly phrased as to be unintelligible to the jury notwithstanding that the word "want" was ill chosen, it being synonymous with "failure," so that it was error to refuse the charge, if otherwise correct and applicable, on the ground that it was meaningless and misleading. Tiggerman v. City of Butte, 119 Pac. 477, 478, 44 Mont. 138.

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION

Mere inadequacy in value of the thing bought or paid for is not intended by the legal expression "want or failure of consideration." This only covers total worthlessness to all parties, or subsequent destruction, partial or complete. In re Simmons' Estate, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 1105, 48 Misc. Rep. 484 (citing Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 91, 31 Am. Rep. 423; Godine v. Kidd, 19 N. Y. Supp. 335, 64 Hun, 585).

To entitle one to defend against a contract on the ground of "failure of consideration," the evidence must show something more than inadequacy of consideration. Guss v. Nelson, 78 Pac. 170, 173, 14 Okl. 296.

The failure of a party to a contract to fulfill his promise to do or refrain from doing some act before the other party is to be obligated to perform is a "failure of consideration," and relieves the other party from performing. Ward v. Textile Commission Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 918, 920, 139 App. Div. 109.

Where a conditional seller of automobiles resumed possession for the buyer's alleged failure to pay the installments required, but in fact before the buyer was in default under the contract, the seller's act constituted a repudiation of the agreement, amounting to a "failure of consideration," within Civ. Code, § 1689, providing that a party may rescind a contract for failure of consideration either in whole or in part. Bray v. Lowery, 124 Pac. 1004, 1005, 163 Cal. 256.

FAILURE OF PROOF

See Total Failure of Proof.

To constitute a "failure of proof," the allegation must be unproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in the whole general scope and meaning. Cleveland, C., O.

& St. L. Ry. Co. v. Foland (Ind.) 88 N. E. 787, 789.

Defendants, desiring to borrow money from plaintiff with which to pay their debts, estimated that they would need $1,100, and thereby executed a note to plaintiff for that sum, with interest from maturity and two notes for $44 each, payable in 6 and 12 months after date, representing the interest on the principal sum before maturity. Plaintiff, in fact, advanced only $1,055, whereupon he credited $45 on the principal note and $1.35 on each of the interest notes, so that they would represent the actual transaction. In replevin to recover the chattels mortgaged to secure the note, the petition described the principal note as for $1,055, payable 12 months after date, and the other two as for $42.65, payable 6 and 12 months after date, and on the trial plaintiff offered in evidence the notes described with the credits indorsed thereon. Held, that the entry of the credits amounted to an alteration in the terms of the notes before final agreement, and was not a modification thereof, and hence there was no failure of proof within Rev. St. 1909, § 2021, providing that, to constitute a "failure of proof," the allegations of the cause of action must be unproved in its entire scope and meaning, and not in some particular only. Shantz v. Shriner, 150 S. W. 727, 729, 167 Mo. App. 635.

"Speaking technically, there is a well-defined distinction between variance and 'failure of proof'; but in a sense in which the term 'failure of proof' is constantly used—that is, as the equivalent of insufficiency of evidence—there may not be, and frequently is not, any distinction whatever. Text-books and reports speak of variance amounting to a failure of proof when referring to a case in which the evidence, though it may tend to prove a cause of action, wholly fails to prove the cause of the action alleged." Where the evidence tends to establish a cause of action utterly different from that alleged in the complaint, there is such a variance as amounts to a failure of proof, and the question of such variance may be presented on a motion for new trial, under a specification of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. Forsell v. Pittsburgh & M. Copper Co., 100 Pac. 218, 221, 222, 38 Mont. 403 (citing 1 Elliott, Ev. § 204).

Where the complaint alleged a joint contract with all the defendants, and the evidence disclosed a separate contract with one of them, there was not a "failure of proof," within Rev. Codes, § 6587, providing that, where the allegation of the claim to which the proof is directed is unproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its general scope and meaning, it is not deemed a case of variance, but a "failure of proof." Logan v. Billings & N. R. Co., 107 Pac. 415, 416, 40 Mont. 467.

Where a petition predicated upon an express contract for the exchange of horses, under which plaintiff in a certain event might have back his horse upon returning defendant's, and upon the breach involved in defendant's refusal to give back the horse he had received, avers the happening of the event, the return of defendant's horse, and the refusal of defendant to give back the horse he had received, and that in making the trade plaintiff's horse had been valued by the parties at a certain amount, and there is proof of all the allegations, except that as to the valuation of the horse, there is no "failure of proof," but only a "variance," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1909, § 2021, defining a failure of proof as failure to prove a cause of action alleged in its entire scope and meaning, since the allegation as to valuation is not one pertaining to the cause of action at all, so that an instruction as to reasonable damages, instead of agreed damages, is properly given. Mekos v. Fricke, 139 S. W. 1181, 1183, 159 Mo. App. 631.

FAILURE TO ACT

In a will appointing testator's brother executor, and, in case of his death, resignation, or "failure to act," appointing his brother-in-law, and, "in case of his failure to act," appointing his son, the phrase quoted included the contingency of the estate not being fully administered by the brother-in-law, and not merely his failure to qualify or act at all. In re Coudert's Will, 138 N. Y. Supp. 296, 297, 153 App. Div. 196.

FAILURE TO DELIVER

Where a carrier fails to deliver a part of a shipment of freight, and the part not delivered is necessary to make the whole shipment effective, it is a "failure to deliver" the whole. McKerall & Murchison v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 965, 76 S. C. 338.

FAILURE TO ELECT

See, also, Fail to Elect.

"Failure to elect" means that if there is a failure to hold an election, or if, an election being held, there is a failure to make a choice as provided by law, the other provisions of the law as to holding over become effective. State v. Cahill, 105 N. W. 691, 692, 131 Iowa, 155.

FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT

FAIR

See Full and Fair Cash Value; Unfair.

The term "fair," as used in the expression, "every contract must be fair," means free from deceit, fraud, or misrepresentation, or improper advantage taken through confidential relations. Sheehan v. Erbe, 79 N. Y. Supp. 43, 45, 77 App. Div. 176.

A newspaper publication, to be privileged as a publication of judicial proceedings, must be "fair"; that is, just, impartial, as to the party complaining, and reasonably correct. Jones v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 144 S. W. 441, 444, 240 Mo. 200.

The word "fair," when used in submitting a question for special finding to the jury as to whether or not certain ice was "fair merchantable ice for market," is well adapted to convey the idea of mediocrity in quality, or something just above that. Warner v. Arctic Ice Co., 74 Me. 475, 477.

FAIR AND HONEST CRITICISM

"Criticism," as distinguished from defamatory statements, is an expression of opinion of facts from which differences of opinion may reasonably arise, and if it sticks to that, it is not defamatory, no matter though it be severe, hostile, rough, caustic, bitter, sarcastic, or satirical, for these are the weapons of "criticism"; and no matter how different the opinion may be to the opinion of others, or of a majority, however great, provided it derives its color from the facts, and the rule that all "fair and honest criticism" on any published book is not libelous, unless the critic goes out of his way to attack the private character of the author, is contradictory, for going out of the way to attack an author's private character is not "fair and honest criticism." It is not criticism at all, for criticism is confined to the expression of opinions on facts about which opinions may in good faith differ. It is only false aspersions or statements of fact that can be defamatory. And they are no part of criticism. Where they begin criticism ends. MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 92 N. Y. Supp. 37, 40, 45 Misc. Rep. 441 (citing Sickels v. Kling, 64 N. Y. Supp. 252, 31 Misc. Rep. 287; Baum v. Clauss [N. Y.] 5 Hill, 199; Ullrich v. New York Press Co., 50 N. Y. Supp. 788, 23 Misc. Rep. 168).

FAIR AND JUST

In a suit to set aside a judgment against plaintiff, rendered during his minority, an instruction that if in the former action defendant's agent made an agreement with plaintiff's guardian ad litem by which he was to pay the guardian ad litem a specified amount, and that by reason of such agreement the guardian ad litem failed to present to the court the defense of the infant, and without contest allowed defendant to recover, such judgment was not rendered after a fair and just investigation and trial, was misleading and erroneous, where the guardian ad litem testified that he agreed to the compromise after a full investigation of the infant's rights, by which he was satisfied that his ward could not succeed, and that he was not influenced or controlled by defendant's agent, and it appeared that the court before rendering such judgment heard some evidence, since it is not sufficient to set aside a judgment against an infant that it was not rendered after a fair and just investigation, but it must appear that the infant had a good defense, and the terms "fair and just" may have conveyed to the minds of the jury that fraud or collusion was perpetrated, and that no judgment would be binding on a minor unless all the evidence practicable had been heard by the court. Johnson v. Johnson, 85 S. W. 1023, 1025, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 885.

A statute giving a right of action for the benefit of the next of kin for death by wrongful act, and limiting damages to a "fair and just compensation" for the pecuniary injuries resulting from decedent's death to the person for whose benefit the action is brought, means reasonable compensation for the pecuniary injury, considering the capacity and condition of decedent and the age, circumstances, and condition of the next of kin, but not the mental anguish of relatives. Howey v. New England Nav. Co., 76 Atl. 469, 471, 83 Conn. 278.

FAIR AND REASONABLE PRICE

A "fair and reasonable price," which a city is obliged to pay for a waterworks system at the termination of a franchise granted to a private company, is what would be "a fair and reasonable price," to any one else. Galena Water Co. v. City of Galena, 87 Pac. 735, 737, 74 Kan. 644 (citing National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 853, 10 C. C. A. 653, 27 L. R. A. 827; Town of Bristol v. Bristol and Warren Waterworks, 49 Atl. 974, 23 R. I. 274).

FAIR CASH VALUE

The expression "fair cash value" is the equivalent of "true cash value" for the purpose of taxation. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 489, 44 Or. 78.

By "fair cash value," in the rule requiring the payment of the fair cash value of property taken under eminent domain, is meant market value; but where the property is in actual use by the owner, and it possesses a peculiar value to him, which will be sacrificed if placed on the general market, he is entitled to this value as just compensation for the taking. Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Memphis, 148 S. W. 662, 669, 126 Tenn. 267, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

FAIR CONSIDERATION

See Present Consideration.

The term "fair consideration," as used in the Bankruptcy Act, providing that all conveyances made by a bankrupt within four months next preceding his bankruptcy, with intent to defraud his creditors, shall be void, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present, fair consideration, does not make it necessary that the consideration for the transfer should be a just equivalent of the thing bought. The word "fair," as used in the section, signifies no more than honest or free from suspicion. It is evidently not intended as the equivalent of "adequate," unless the inadequacy is such as to indicate a purpose on the part of the vendor to cheat his creditors; and until one is declared a bankrupt third persons may deal with him as with any other, save that all transfers made by him within four months next preceding his bankruptcy, with intent on his part to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, shall be void, except as to good-faith purchasers for a present fair consideration. Myers v. Fultz, 100 N. W. 351, 352, 124 Iowa, 437 (citing Dunlop v. Thomas, 68 Pac. 909, 28 Wash. 521).

Where an option to purchase realty for $950 recited a consideration of $1, the sum, if actually advanced, would be merely nominal, and would not alone constitute a "fair consideration" required for the specific enforcement of such option. Rude v. Levy, 96 Pac. 560, 561, 43 Colo. 482, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123.

FAIR DOUBT

Under the rule that a preliminary injunction should not be granted on an unadjudicated patent if there is "a fair doubt as to invention, anticipation, construction or infringement," the term "fair doubt" does not refer only to the effect produced on the judicial mind by the direct evidence submitted on the motion, but is wide enough to cover a belief that other reachable testimony exists which by reasonable effort the party may adduce. Vacuum Cleaner Co. v. Waldorf-Astoria Hotel Co., 198 Fed. 865, 867.

FAIR MARKET VALUE

See, also, Fair Value.

The "fair market value" of replevied goods, which plaintiff is entitled to recover in an action on a replevin bond, is the highest price which a normal purchaser, not under peculiar compulsion will pay to secure the goods. Maguire v. Pan-American Amusement Co., 97 N. E. 142, 144, 211 Mass. 22.

The "fair market value" of a corporation's assets, for the purpose of determining its solvency when it committed an alleged act of bankruptcy, was the value which the corporation might have realized on them for itself. In re Marine Iron Works, 159 Fed. 753, 754.

"Fair market value" of land is the price which it would bring when offered for sale by one who is willing, but not obliged, to sell, and bought by one willing, but not obliged, to buy, and is not the price which property would bring at forced sale, but what it would bring in the hands of a prudent seller, with liberty to fix the time and conditions of selling. In condemnation proceedings, an instruction that "fair market value" meant the price which property would bring when offered for sale by one willing, but not obliged, to sell, and bought by one willing, but not obliged to buy; that it did not mean the price which property could bring at forced sale, but what it would bring in the hands of a prudent seller, at liberty to fix the time and conditions of sale, was not erroneous, because of the statement as to "a prudent seller," etc. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, 94 S. W. 860, 961, 197 Mo. 392.

An instruction that the jury must find the fair market value of the strip actually taken as a part of the whole tract, and that the "fair market value" of the strip actually taken as a part of the whole tract, and that the "fair market value" is the "full fair market value," defined as such a sum as the property was worth in the market to persons generally who would pay its "just and full value," was not erroneous for using the words "full fair market value" and "just and full value." American States Security Co. v. Milwaukee Northern Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 844, 876, 139 Wis. 199.

FAIR ON ITS FACE

Within the law of false imprisonment, the term as applied to process of "fair upon its face" does not mean that it shall be perfectly regular and in all respects in accord with proper practice and after the most approved form, but what is intended is that it shall be apparently process lawfully issued and such as the officer might lawfully serve. The true rule on the subject is that a ministerial officer, proceeding regularly and without abusing or exceeding his authority, will be protected in the execution of process committed to him, unless such process is void on its face by reason of apparent want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter or person or precept or by reason of some defect of substance in the language of the writ. The warrant for arrest issued by a United States commissioner is not void, so as to make the marshal serving it liable for false imprisonment, because after his signature is the designation "Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas," though in the body of the warrant he was designated "commissioner appointed for said district"; the designation after his name being a clerical error, and such office having been abolished. Douglass v. Stahl, 72 S. W. 568, 570, 71 Ark. 236 (quoting and adopting definitions Cooley and Freeman, and citing Savacool v. Boughton [N. Y.] 5 Wend. 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181, and notes; Trammell v. Town of Russellville, 34 Ark. 105, 36 Am. Rep. 1).

By process "fair on its face" is not meant that it shall appear in all respects in accord with proper practice, but it is meant "that it shall apparently be process lawfully issued, and such as the officer might lawfully serve. More precisely, that process may be said to be fair on its face which proceeds from a court, magistrate, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature, and which is legal in form, and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it is issued without authority. When such appears to be the process, the officer is protected in making service, and he is not concerned with any illegalities that may exist back of it." A monition and warrant of arrest, under which a marshal acted, issued by one temporarily in charge of the clerk's office, under instructions given by the deputy in a suit in which the libel disclosed only a personal action for damages, of which there was no suggestion on the face of the writ, which was in the usual form of a monition and warrant of arrest in a suit in rem, and which ran in the name of the President, was addressed to the marshal, commanded him to seize the vessel and to detain it until the further order of the court, bore teste of the judge of the District Court, was sealed with the seal of the court, purported to be signed by the deputy on behalf of the clerk, and was transmitted from the clerk's office to the marshal's office in the usual way, was within the rule. Bryan v. Ker, 32 Sup. Ct. 23, 222 U. S. 107, 113, 56 L. Ed. 114.

FAIR PREPONDERANCE

By the term "fair preponderance" of evidence is meant such evidence as, when weighed with that which is offered to oppose it, has more convincing power in the minds of the jury. Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co., 101 N. W. 635, 636, 138 Mich. 469. It is not a technical term, but simply means that evidence which outweighs that which is offered to oppose it. It does not necessarily mean that a greater number of witnesses shall be produced on one side or the other, but that, on the whole evidence, the jury believe the greater probability of the truth to be upon the side of the party having the affirmative of the issue. Devencenzi v. Cassinelli, 81 P. 41, 42, 28 Nev. 222 (quoting and adopting definition in Strand v. Chicago & W. M. Ry. Co., 34 N. W. 712, 67 Mich. 380).

The use of the word "fair" in the phrase "the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to satisfy you by a 'fair preponderance' of the evidence" does not render the charge misleading. Parker v. Fairbanks-Morse Mfg. Co., 110 N. W. 409, 411, 130 Wis. 525. And it was not necessarily prejudicial error to instruct that plaintiff was required to establish his case by a "fair preponderance." Clark v. Thornburg, 92 N. W. 1056, 1058, 66 Neb. 717.

Where there was a verdict for plaintiff, and the trial judge granted a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against a "fair preponderance" of the evidence, the words "fair preponderance" did not express doubt on the part of the judge as to the weight of the evidence, but is an expression of dissatisfaction with the verdict, in that it fails to administer substantial justice. McMahon v. Rhode Island Co., 78 A. 1012, 1014, 32 R. I. 237, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1223.

"Fair," as used in an instruction in an action in ejectment, directing the jury to find for defendant, if plaintiff has failed to prove his title and right of possession by a "fair preponderance" of all the credible evidence, means practically the same as "clear preponderance." Link v. Campbell, 100 N. W. 409, 410, 72 Neb. 307 (citing Altschuler v. Coburn, 57 N. W. 836, 38 Neb. 881).

The term "fair preponderance" of evidence, used in an instruction, is meaningless. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric Ry. Co. v. Antonia, 83 N. E. 766, 769, 41 Ind. App. 835.

FAIR PRICE

Where an agreement is that land sold shall be reconveyed for a "fair price," the terms are not so uncertain as not to be enforced, and the court will direct the valuation to be made by a master, and will enforce the execution of the contract. Van Doren v. Robinson, 16 N. J. Eq. 256, 280.

FAIR STATEMENT OF FACTS

See Full and Fair Statement of All the Facts.

FAIR TRIAL

"A 'fair trial' is a legal trial, or one conducted in all material things in substantial conformity to law." People v. Wolf, 76 N. E. 592, 595, 183 N. Y. 464.

A "fair trial" for a criminal offense consists, not alone in an observance of the naked forms of law, but in a recognition and just application of its principles. State v. Pryor, 121 Pac. 56, 58, 67 Wash. 216.

A member of the police force of New York City charged with violating a rule forbidding maltreatment, etc., did not have a "fair trial" where the deputy commissioner, while the trial was in progress, announced, basing his statement on what he said was the most reliable information, but not stating the source or naming or calling as a witness his informant, that a witness for accused who had sworn that he was present when the occurrence took place, and that the facts were substantially as accused claimed, was not present, and did not see the event at all. In re Greenebaum, 94 N. E. 853, 854, 201 N. Y. 843.

Under a by-law of a labor union, providing that any member, upon being accused of a violation of its laws, should be entitled to due notice and a fair trial, it was unnecessary to determine just what the term "fair trial" meant, or under what circumstances the courts of law could properly ignore the results of a trial held thereunder, on the ground that it was not a fair trial, where the provisions of the by-law relative to due notice were not complied with. Bren- nan v. United Hatters of North America, Local No. 17, 65 Atl. 165, 168, 73 N. J. Law, 729, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 9 Ann. Cas. 698.

FAIR VALUE

See, also, Fair Market Value.

Allegations as to the "fair value" of the property, do not come within Sess. Laws 1901, p. 238, § 10, requiring all taxable property to be assessed at its "full cash value." Humbird Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Pac. 941, 945, 11 Idaho, 614.

Under Bankr. Law, § 1, 30 Stat. 544, providing that a person shall be deemed insolvent when the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have transferred, concealed, or removed with intent to defraud his creditors, shall not at a "fair valuation" be sufficient in amount to pay his debts, the present market value of the property would be its "fair valuation," and there is nothing in the section authorizing that value to be ascertained by what a purchaser would give who desired to take advantage of the necessities and embarrassments of the owner in order to procure the property at a price less than its real or market value. A man's property at a fair valuation may amount to sufficient to pay his debts, although he may not be able to realize at once the amount of that valuation. Swartz v. Frank, 82 S. W. 60, 62, 183 Mo. 438 (quoting and adopting definition in Duncan v. Landis, 106 Fed. 858, 45 C. C. A. 666).

"Fair valuation," within Bankr. Act, § 1, when applied to real property, is such sum as the property will reasonably sell for to a purchaser desiring to buy, the owner wishing to sell, and when applied to merchandise, implements, and other personal property, such sum that may be fairly realized from the sale in bulk or in parcels in the usual and ordinary way of selling such classes of property for cash in the market, and when applied to notes and accounts is the net sum that may be with reasonable diligence realized from the collection thereof within a reasonable time, and not the amounts as shown by their face, unless their face value is the "fair value." Plymouth Cordage Co. v. Smith, 90 Pac. 418, 419, 18 Okl. 249, 11 Ann. Cas. 445.

"Fair valuation," in Bankr. Act, § 1, 30 Stat. 544, means such a price as a capable and diligent business man could presently obtain from the property after conferring with those accustomed to buy such property. Stern v. Paper, 183 Fed. 228, 231.

In determining whether or not a debtor was "insolvent," within Bankr. Act, § 1, 30 Stat. 544, at the time of the commission of an alleged act of bankruptcy by suffering a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, the test of a "fair valuation" of his property is its market value at the time the legal proceedings were taken, where that can be fairly established, and not its value as if may have been affected by such proceedings; and the property to be taken into consideration includes all of his property, whether legally exempt from execution or not, except such as may have been conveyed, concealed, or removed with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors. In re Hines, 144 Fed. 142, 143.

FAIRLY

"Fairly," in a charge instructing the jury "that, if the evidence introduced by the plaintiff * * * fairly raises a presumption * * * that he was guilty of contributory negligence, then the burden is on him," means "reasonably" or "measurably," rather than "clearly." Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Johnson, 82 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 594, 595.

Under the rule that it is essential, to the existence of a presumption that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence, that the bill of exceptions should on its face "fairly" purport to state the evidence or its effect, if there is apparent any attempt to state the effect of the evidence given on the trial, that is, all the evidence, it must be held that the bill fairly purports to state all the evidence, and the presumption will obtain, but where by its terms the bill is limited to the statement of only a portion of the material evidence, where it simply states that "testimony given during the trial included the following," it cannot be said that the bill fairly purports to give all the evidence or its effect. People v. Coulter, 78 Pac. 348, 353, 145 Cal. 66.

FAIRNESS

See Intrinsic Fairness and Honesty.

"The 'fairness' of a contract, like its other qualities, must be judged of at the time it is entered into, or at least when the contract becomes absolute, and not by subsequent events." A contract whereby defendant, aided by the advice and co-operation of her husband, who was a lawyer, contracted to sell for $20,000 all the phosphate rock underlying described land, the right to mine being subject to timber rights, which might prevent plaintiff from mining a large tract of the land until 1923, was not so unfair as to prevent specific performance, though explorations disclosed that on the land there was phosphate rock on which a reasonable royalty would produce $70,000. Heyward v. Bradley, 179 Fed. 325, 331, 102 C. C. A. 509 (quoting and adopting definition in Fry, Spec. Perf.).

FAIR GROUNDS

The words "fair grounds," in Gen. St. 1902, § 1358, declaring a punishment for any one who shall, within one mile of the fair grounds of any incorporated society, expose for sale, from any wagon or temporary stand, any article of provision without the consent of the society, are used as the equivalent of the words "exhibition or fair," used in the original act (Pub. Acts 1868, p. 147, c. 14), so that the prohibition extends only to a sale while a fair is being held. State v. Reynolds, 58 Atl. 755, 756, 77 Conn. 131.

FAITH

See Bad Faith; Confession of Faith; Full Faith and Credit; Good Faith.

"The basic principle upon which presumptions are built is philosophically related to the doctrine of faith. 'Now faith,' says Paul, 'is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.' Heb. xi, 1, q. v. 'Presumption,' says Matthews (1 Math. Pres. Ev.), 'is a principle of law by which, for the furtherance and support of right, facts not established by positive evidence are inferred from circumstances.' That is, where the thing itself is unseen and unknown, in a close sense, it may yet be deemed seen and known in the light of the knowledge of mankind, based on frequent occurrence, and found from experience to be generally accordant with truth." Rodan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 105 S. W. 1061, 1066, 207 Mo. 392.

Statements of the applicant for insurance that he has never been intoxicated and that his deceased maternal grandmother was never insane are statements of opinion, and, where the applicant in good faith believes them, their falsity will not vitiate the certificate warranting the truth of the answers, and stipulating that he agrees that the literal truth of each shall be a condition precedent to any contract issued on the faith of the answers; the word "faith" meaning a firm conviction of the truth of what is declared by another by way of testimony without other evidence. Daniel v. Modern Woodmen of America, 118 S. W. 211, 214, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 570.

FAITHFUL—FAITHFULLY

The word "faithfully," as used in a statute requiring a commissioner to take depositions to be sworn to execute the commission faithfully, fairly, and impartially, cannot be disregarded, and executing the commission involves more than merely taking the testimony. Brennan Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 68 Atl. 765, 76 N. J. Law, 61 (citing Den ex dem. Perry v. Thompson, 16 N. J. Law, 72; Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234, 239, 240).

FAKE

In the publication: "Hints to Advertiser. This is from the fake trade journal published at St. Louis"—the word "fake" is used in the sense of "a swindle; a trick; to steal or filch." Midland Pub. Co. v. Implement Trade Journal Co., 83 S. W. 298, 300, 106 Mo. App. 223 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

FALDAS

The "faldas" of the Sierra Nevada does not mean the foothills, but the base or slope of the mountains. Moore v. Wilkinson, 13 Cal. 478, 486.

FALL

The word "fall," as used in a complaint in an action on an accident policy, alleging that insured fell from the cars and received injuries, from which he died, implies the happening by chance of an undesigned and involuntary event, which resulted in bodily injuries effecting the death of the insured through external, violent, and accidental means, within the terms of the policy. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 100 N. W. 428, 429, 18 S. D. 287, 67 L. R. A. 175.

A "fall," as used in connection with a painter's staging to raise and lower it, consists of four ropes inserted in pulleys, which ropes are attached to a ladder and run from it to the building, where they are connected with a sling by a block and tackle. Bort v. Quadt, 96 Pac. 815, 816, 8 Cal. App. 290.

The clause in a fire policy, "If a building or any part thereof 'fall,' except as the result of fire, insurance shall cease, is properly interpreted by the instructions, taken as a whole, that the building must have fallen in whole or part to such an extent that its integrity as a building was destroyed or substantially impaired; that insured could recover if the building was substantially in its entirety, and not materially impaired after the falling of parts shown to have fallen; and that the insured was not entitled to verdict unless the substantial integrity of the building was impaired to such an extent as to render it unsuitable for use as an entire building, or unless the falling of the parts that fell exposed the interior of the building or its contents to the inclemency of the weather, or rendered the building or its contents more easily subject to ignition by fire, and thereby materially impaired the building as a building. Clayburgh v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 102 Pac. 812, 155 Cal. 708, 18 Ann. Cas. 579.

FALSE—FALSELY

In Rev. St. § 5457, providing that every person who falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits, procures to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, etc., any coin or bars in resemblance or similitude of the gold or silver coin or bars coined or stamped at the mints and assay offices of the United States, or in resemblance or similitude of any foreign gold or silver coin which by law is, or may be, current in the United States, or are in actual use and circulation as money within the United States, or who passes, utters, publishes, or sells, or attempts to pass, utter, publish or sell or bring into the United States from any foreign place, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, with intent to defraud any body politic or corporate, or any other person or persons whatsoever, or who has in his possession any false, forged, or counterfeited coin, with intent to defraud, shall be punished, the adverb "falsely" in the opening line qualifies only the verb "makes," since the verbs "forges" and "counterfeits" carry in themselves the idea of falsity, and hence the intent to defraud is only an element of the offense of having in possession with intent to use, etc. Kaye v. United States, 177 Fed. 147, 151, 100 C. C. A. 567.

The term "false," as used in Pen. Code, § 118, defining perjury, and providing that every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify truly, willfully and contrary to such oath states as true any material fact which he knows to be "false," is guilty of perjury, means false in fact, as distinguished from legal falsity. People v. Wong Fook Sam, 79 Pac. 848, 146 Cal. 114.

An allegation that the "defendants falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff with the intent to deceive him" that one of the defendants was about to abandon his barber business sufficiently alleged a present intent by defendant not to perform their promise existing when it was made; the word "false," when applied to representations inducing an act to another's injury, implying a purpose to deceive, and a "false representation" being an untrue representation willfully made to deceive another to his damage. Salles v. Johnson, 81 Atl. 974, 976, 85 Conn. 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386.

The word "false" has two distinct and well-recognized meanings. It signifies (1) intentionally or knowingly or negligently untrue; and (2) untrue by mistake, accident, or honestly after the exercise of reasonable care. A statement that is false in the former sense is undoubtedly denounced by Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, 26 Stat. 135, prescribing a punishment for the use of a false statement in an entry of imported goods. United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 966, 72 C. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

"False" means erroneous, untrue, the opposite of correct or true, and, as often used, does not necessarily involve turpitude of mind, but in the more important uses in jurisprudence, and even in its popular application, the word implies something more than a mere untruth, but is an untruth coupled with a lying intent, or intent to deceive, or to perpetrate some treachery or fraud. Wil-

The word "false" as used in Bankr. Act 1898, § 14b, 30 Stat. 550, as amended, 32 Stat. 797, with reference to a ground for denying a discharge to a bankrupt, means more than merely erroneous or untrue, being used in its primary legal sense as importing an intention to deceive, and such a statement, in order to constitute a bar to a discharge, must have been knowingly and intentionally untrue. Gilpin v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 165 F. 607, 611, 91 C. C. A. 445, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023.

In Customs Administrative Act, § 9, providing that, if any person shall make any entry of imported merchandise by fraudulent or false invoice or false statement, or shall be guilty of any guilty act or omission, he shall forfeit the merchandise and be fined or imprisoned, the word "false" implies the necessity of guilty scienter and intent. United States v. Twenty Boxes of Cheese, 163 Fed. 869, 371.

As untrue

"False," as used in Bankr. Act, § 14, cl. b (3), 30 Stat. 550, as amended by 32 Stat. 797, forbidding the discharge of a bankrupt who has obtained property on credit upon a materially "false" statement, means no more than "not true," though the word is flexible, and sometimes means "incorrect," and sometimes comprehends wickedness or fraud, as in section 29, where the term "false oath" means a corruptly false oath, such as would subject affiant to a prosecution for perjury. In re Gilpin, 160 Fed. 171, 183.

FALSE AFFIDAVIT

The term "false affidavit" includes one false in recitals of fact, although sworn to by a person really existent under a statute making the presentation of an affidavit in support of a claim against the government a felony, where presented on general intention to defraud by one knowing the same to be false, altered, forged, or counterfeit. Such an affidavit relates to the form of the paper, and it is false, though the officer administering the oath was not qualified, nor the oath administered, nor the paper forged. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 244, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

Where the statements made in an affidavit in support of a pension claim are true, it is not a "false or fraudulent affidavit," the making of which constitutes a crime, under Rev. St. § 4746, merely because it was not in fact sworn to on the date shown in the notary's certificate. United States v. Wood, 127 Fed. 171, 173.

FALSE AUDITING AND PAYING OF CLAIMS

To justify the conviction of an officer for falsely auditing and paying claims in violation of Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1863, the knowledge of accused must be shown to be knowledge that the claim, when certified to, was false and fraudulent, and there must be clearly inferable a criminal intent to do the wrongful act. The elements of the offense denounced by Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1863, punishing the "false auditing and paying of claims," are that accused is a public officer of a city, that it is a part of his duty to audit, allow, or pay a claim against the city, and that he knowingly in any way connives at the auditing, allowance, or payment of a false claim. People v. Gresser, 124 N. Y. Supp. 581, 584.

FALSE CERTIFICATE

A "false certificate" of citizenship, within the meaning of Rev. St. §§ 5425, 5427, which made it a criminal offense to knowingly use, or aid and abet another in using, "any false, forged, antedated or counterfeit certificate of citizenship," etc., is not limited to one which is forged, but includes one which is false in its recital of facts. Dolan v. United States, 133 Fed. 440, 450, 69 C. C. A. 274.

FALSE CHECKS

A check is "false" within Pen. Code 1901, § 489, making it a felony to obtain money or property by a false or bogus check, when it is a willfully untrue written order directing a bank to pay money on demand. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032. A check given by a person upon a bank in which he has no funds, and which he has no reason to suppose will be honored, is a "bogus check." Id.

FALSE CLAIM

A "false claim" means a statement or a claim which is not true; but the law did not intend to make a mere mistake, made through error or inadvertence, to be brought within the definition of a false claim as used in the law, if it was believed by the agent to be true. Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577, 594, 72 C. C. A. 145.

A "false claim," under a statute making it an offense to present a false claim to county or city accounting officers, is a claim presented for more work performed or supplies furnished than was actually performed or furnished. Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019, 1025, 178 Ind. 483 (citing United States v. Shapleigh, 54 Fed. 126, 4 C. C. A. 237).

FALSE ENTRY

Make false entry, see Make.

An entry on the books of a national bank by the cashier as a cash item of a check which actually entered into a transaction of the bank is not making a "false entry," under Rev. St. § 5209, though he knew the check to be worthless and fraudulent, and made the entry with the intent to deceive, as the entry is a truthful statement of the actual transaction. United States v. Young, 128 Fed. 111, 118.

Officers of a national bank may not make a "false entry" in the bank's books with intent to deceive, and escape criminal liability because they go through the idle and deceitful form of making a transaction to which the entry might nominally, but not really, relate. Billingsley v. United States, 178 Fed. 653, 663, 101 C. C. A. 465.

A "false entry" is an entry made in such book by an officer of the bank, that is intentionally and knowingly false when made, and made with intent to deceive the officers of the bank or defraud the association. The offense may be committed personally or by direction to another. A simple mistake by an officer in making an entry in one of the company's books, growing out of a clerical error, is not a false entry. United States v. Wilson, 176 Fed. 806, 808.

The statute includes a report voluntarily made, as well as one required by law, if the "false entry" was made with the requisite unlawful intent. Harper v. United States, 170 Fed. 385, 388, 95 C. C. A. 555.

A national bank, of which defendant was cashier, was in straitened circumstances, so that the president, cashier, and assistant cashier had not drawn their salaries for five months. Each of the officers having overdrawn his individual account with the bank to the amount of their unpaid salaries, the bank examiner required the overdraft to be made good, and the officers induced F., who was solvent, to execute his note to the bank for their accommodation, and this was discounted; the proceeds being credited to the officers' individual accounts. Held, that the note, while accommodation paper so far as the officers of the bank were concerned, was enforceable against the maker by the bank, and hence its inclusion in a report made by the cashier to the Comptroller of the Currency as a loan and discount of the bank did not constitute the making of a "false entry." Hayes v. United States, 169 Fed. 101, 108, 94 C. C. A. 449.

Entries in the books of a national bank, which correctly record actual transactions of the bank, although such transactions may have been unauthorized, or even fraudulent, are not "false entries." Twining v. United States, 141 Fed. 41, 44, 72 C. C. A. 529.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1726, making guilty of forgery one who, with intent to defraud, shall "make any false entry" or shall "falsely alter any entry" in the books of account of a banking corporation, an indictment charging that defendant did feloniously alter, etc., the books, etc., and that "said felonious, fraudulent changes," etc., were made, etc., was defective in not charging that the entry was falsely altered; the word "false" distinctly characterizing a wrongful act known to involve an error or untruth, while the word "fraudulent" relates, not to the act done, but to the intent with which it was done, and the word "falsely" as used in the statute not only imparting an element of fraud or bad faith, but also relating to the act done. Quertermous v. State, 127 S. W. 951, 952, 95 Ark. 48.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT

"False imprisonment" is a wrong akin to that of assault and battery, and consists of imposing, by force or threats, unlawful restraint on a person's freedom of locomotion. It is the unlawful detention of a person against his will. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 82 Atl. 709, 712, 116 Md. 441, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 502.

"False imprisonment" is the unlawful detention of the person of another against his will. The gist of the action is the unlawful detention. Marshall v. Cleaver (Del.) 56 Atl. 380, 381, 4 Pennewill, 450; McCaffrey v. Thomas (Del.) 56 Atl. 382, 383, 4 Pennewill, 437.

"False imprisonment" is defined by Civ. Code 1895, § 3851, to be an unlawful detention of the person of another for any length of time whereby he is deprived of his personal liberty. Michael v. Bacon, 63 S. E. 228, 5 Ga. App. 331.

"False imprisonment" is the unlawful arrest and detention of the person of another, with or without a warrant or other process, or an unlawful restraint upon his person, or control over the freedom of his movements by force or threat; and every such force, restraint or confinement is unlawful, where it is not authorized by law. Smith v. Clark, 106 Pac. 653, 657, 37 Utah, 116, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1366.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 593, relating to circumstances justifying the use of force for the detention of a person against his will, any restraint put upon the actions of another is prima facie unlawful and constitutes a "false imprisonment." Gold v. Campbell, 117 S. W. 463, 465, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 269.

In an action against a railway company, its local commercial agent, and an officer employed by the company for false imprisonment, evidence that while plaintiff agreed to take a trip with the officer, when the time came for starting he refused to go and was compelled to go, justified a charge that the officer in taking plaintiff on the trip to various stations was falsely imprisoning plaintiff. Where plaintiff was falsely detained against his consent by defendant officer employed by defendant railroad company, he did not have to be under legal arrest to make the officer liable for false imprisonment. If plaintiff voluntarily went on a trip with defendant officer employed by defendant railroad company, there was no "false imprisonment," since false imprisonment is based on detention of another against his consent and without express authority of law. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Roberson (Tex.) 138 S. W. 822, 823.

"False imprisonment" is a trespass committed by one man against the person of another by unlawfully arresting him and detaining him without any legal authority." A cause of action for false imprisonment accrues whenever a person is arrested and detained by one not an officer acting without a warrant when no crime has in fact been committed by him, no matter with what good faith the party who caused the arrest acted. Johnston v. Bruckheimer, 118 N. Y. Supp. 189, 191, 133 App. Div. 649 (quoting and adopting definition in Add. Torts, p. 552).

"False imprisonment" is a "trespass committed against a person by unlawfully arresting and imprisoning without any legal authority." The arrest of the right person by the wrong name, through a misnomer in the process, without an allegation that the true name is unknown, has been held to be false imprisonment. A warrant which is void on its face, because the complaint which is recited in the warrant charges no offense, will afford no protection in an action for false imprisonment. Gelzenleuchter v. Niemeyer, 25 N. W. 442, 444, 64 Wis. 316, 54 Am. Rep. 616 (citing Scheer v. Keown, 29 Wis. 586).

The gist of an action for "false imprisonment" is an unlawful detention. Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 83 N. E. 41, 190 N. Y. 276.

One who without first ascertaining whether a crime has been committed causes another to be arrested acts at his peril. An officer who makes an arrest on the sole authority of a telegram from a private person does so at his peril. Janes v. Wilson, 44 South. 275, 276, 119 La. 491.

Force required

"To constitute an unlawful imprisonment, where no force is actually employed, the submission must be to a reasonably apprehended force; and the fact that one considers himself restrained in person is not sufficient to constitute a 'false imprisonment,' unless there is in fact a reasonable ground to apprehend a resort to force upon an attempt to assert one's liberty." A mere unasserted purpose to forcibly detain is not sufficient. Powell v. Champion Fiber Co., 63 S. E. 159, 160, 150 N. C. 12.

Manner or place of imprisonment

To establish "false imprisonment" it is not necessary that the person restrained of his liberty shall be touched or actually arrested. It may be committed by merely operating on the will of the individual by threats, or by personal violence, or both. It is not necessary that the individual be confined within a prison, or within walls, or that he be assaulted; the offense being complete on the submission of the party, where there is reasonable ground to apprehend that coercive measures will be used if he does not yield. Martin v. Houck, 54 S. E. 291, 293, 141 N. C. 317, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576 (citing Voorhees, Arrest, §§ 274-276).

"False imprisonment" is the unlawful and total restraint of the liberty of the person." The right violated by this tort is "freedom of locomotion. It belongs, historically, to the class of rights known as simple or primary rights (inaccurately called absolute rights) as distinguished from secondary rights, or rights not to be harmed. It is a right in rem; it is available against the community at large. The theory of the law is that one interferes with the freedom of locomotion of the other at his peril. The right of freedom of locomotion is violated when one is wrongfully detained against his will, or is in any way deprived, as distinguished from obstructed or subjected to inconvenience, of his right to come, or go, or stay, when and where he wishes. Some conduct imposing restraint or detention is essential, but any conduct resulting therein is sufficient. It is the unlawful interference with the wish or desire of plaintiff which the law seeks to compensate. Free egress must therefore be impossible; the restraint must be total. There is no legal wrong unless the detention was involuntary. Plaintiff entered upon grounds which were lawfully in possession of schoolboys, who were giving a free picnic, and who had given notice in advance that later in the day a game of base-ball would be played, to which a trifling admission fee would be charged. When the game was about to begin he refused, though repeatedly requested so to do, to pay the fee or go out, and he was thereupon taken by the arm by a citizen, one of the assembled guests or patrons, acting in behalf of the boys, though without special authority, and led in the direction of the gate, always with the privilege of paying and staying, and the alternative of not paying and going. Before reaching the gate he paid the fee, and thereafter stayed and witnessed the game. The restraint imposed was not total, and afforded no grounds of an action in damages for false imprisonment. Crossett v. Campbell, 48 South. 141, 143, 122 La. 659, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 129 Am. St. Rep. 862 (quoting and adopting definitions in 19 Cyc. pp. 319-323).

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 618, "false imprisonment" consists of imposing by force or threats an unlawful restraint upon a man's freedom of locomotion, and the wrong may be committed by words alone, or by acts alone, or by both, and by operating on the will of the individual, by personal violence, or by both. Gold v. Campbell, 117 S. W. 463, 465, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 269.

"False imprisonment" is the unlawful restraint of a person, contrary to his will, either with or without process of law. It is the placing of a person, against his will, in a position where he cannot exercise it in going where he may lawfully go, and detaining him at the will of another without lawful authority. It has been said that any deprivation of the liberty of another without his consent, whether by actual violence, threats, or otherwise, constitutes imprisonment within the meaning of the law. Apprehension or fear, by which a person is restrained of his liberty, may consist in his fear of some injury either to his person, reputation, or property. The placing of a person against his will in a position where he cannot exercise it in going where he may lawfully go, and detaining him at the will of another without lawful authority, is "false imprisonment." C. N. Robinson & Co. v. Green, 43 South. 797, 799, 148 Ala. 434.

To constitute "false imprisonment," it is not necessary that the individual be actually confined or assaulted, or even that he be touched. The essence of the wrong is that the one complaining has been wrongfully detained against his will. Where a conductor came to where a passenger was after sustaining an injury and informed him that the law required the conductor to obtain from him a written statement, and relying on the truth of the statement of the conductor the passenger consented to remain and made a statement, and was detained thereby from 15 to 20 minutes, a finding that the passenger's detention was unlawful, and that the carrier was liable for the natural and proximate results thereof, was justified. Whitman v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 116 Pac. 234, 237, 85 Kan. 150, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1029, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 722.

Malice or probable cause

A case of "false imprisonment" is made out when it is shown that plaintiff was intentionally detained as a prisoner by defendant without any warrant therefor. He is not required to prove malice or want of probable cause. Thompson v. Bucholz, 81 S. W. 490, 491, 107 Mo. App. 121.

The gist of an action for "false imprisonment" is the unlawful detention, and, to recover, it is only necessary to prove the detention and the unlawfulness thereof, and want of probable cause need not be proved. Wehmeyer v. Mulvihill, 130 S. W. 681, 683, 150 Mo. App. 197.

"False imprisonment" is treated as a tort and also as a crime. The definition is the same in either case. In our Code (Pen. Code 1895, § 420) it is defined as "the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another," and neither malice, nor, ordinarily, want of probable cause, is an element of the

Where plaintiff in a suit on a judgment against petitioner acts maliciously in causing petitioner's arrest, plaintiff is liable in damages for the injury sustained by reason of such "false imprisonment." Ex parte Morton, 81 N. E. 869, 870, 196 Mass. 21, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087.

"The constituent elements of 'false imprisonment' are, first, the detention or restraint; and, second, the unlawfulness of the detention or restraint. Conversely, it has been held that the defendant, in order to escape liability, must either prove that he did not imprison plaintiff, or he must justify the imprisonment. * * * In the action for damages for false imprisonment, the motives of defendant are not material so far as making out the right of action is concerned, though, as is observed in another place, the contrary is true for malicious prosecution. Where, however, a false imprisonment is shown, the motives of defendant may affect the measure of damages." Southern R. Co. in Kentucky v. Shirley, 90 S. W. 597, 599, 121 Ky. 863, 12 Ann. Cas. 33 (quoting and adopting definition in 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. [2d Ed.] pp. 724, 733).

There is a well-marked distinction between an action for "false imprisonment" and an action for "malicious prosecution." An action for false imprisonment may be maintained when the imprisonment is without legal authority; but where there is a valid or apparently valid power to arrest, the remedy is by an action for malicious prosecution. The want of lawful authority is an essential element in an action for false imprisonment. Malice and want of probable cause are the essentials in an action for malicious prosecution. Roberts v. Thomas, 121 S. W. 961, 962, 135 Ky. 63, 21 Ann. Cas. 456.

The distinction between "false imprisonment" and "malicious prosecution" is "that 'false imprisonment' is some interference with the personal liberty of the plaintiff which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. 'Malicious prosecution' is in procuring the arrest or prosecution under lawful process on the forms of law, but from malicious motives and without probable cause." A presiding judge of an election, who, without authority, arrests and detains a voter, is liable for false imprisonment, though he is a judicial officer and has a judicial discretion within prescribed limits. Smyth v. State, 108 S. W. 899, 901, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 408 (quoting and adopting definition in Herzog v. Graham, 9 Lea [77 Tenn.] 152).

An amendment of a count of a complaint for "malicious prosecution" by striking out an allegation that plaintiff was arrested on a warrant, and substituting an allegation that she was arrested and held without a warrant, changed the cause of action stated, under the law of Alabama, from one in case for "malicious prosecution" to one in trespass for "false imprisonment," and rendered the charge of the court based on the theory that the count was for "malicious prosecution" misleading and erroneous. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Thompson, 144 Fed. 578, 580, 75 C. C. A. 334.

"False imprisonment" is distinguished from "malicious prosecution" in that it is, as defined by Pen. Code, § 236, an unlawful violation of another's personal liberty, an unlawful arrest or detention of one without warrant or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant, illegally executed, while if the imprisonment is under legal process, but the action has been commenced and carried on maliciously and without probable cause, it is a malicious prosecution. Donati v. Righetti, 97 Pac. 1128, 1129, 9 Cal. App. 45.

Where a peace officer arrests a person without process and takes him before a magistrate, before whom he files a written complaint against the prisoner, describing no offense against the law, and after the hearing the person is set at liberty, an action for "malicious prosecution" does not lie, but the party has immediate cause of action for "false imprisonment." Hackler v. Miller, 112 N. W. 303, 79 Neb. 206.

"The two actions of false imprisonment and malicious prosecution are quite distinct and different. 'False imprisonment' is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another (Pen. Code, § 236); the interference with the liberty of the plaintiff in a way which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. * * * The provocation, motive, and good faith of the defendant in an action for false imprisonment constitute no element in the case. * * * In cases of malicious prosecution it becomes necessary to await the final determination of the action. But the same principle does not apply to an action for false imprisonment, as the former action is based on an illegal arrest, and no matter ex post facto can legalize an action which was illegal at the time it was done." A complaint in an action for false imprisonment, setting up a copy of the affidavit made by defendant on which an order for plaintiff's arrest was obtained, was insufficient on its face to confer jurisdiction of the court granting the order, and alleging arrest and imprisonment on the order, that defendant acted unlawfully and without right or authority, and that plaintiff was injured thereby, as against a general demurrer, states a good cause of action for false imprisonment. Neves v. Costa, 89 Pac. 860, 863, 5 Cal. App. 111.

Participation by defendant

arrested by an officer thereunder cannot sue the party making the affidavit for "false imprisonment," though the facts stated in the affidavit are thereafter held not to constitute a crime. Whaley v. Lawton, 40 S. E. 128, 129, 62 S. C. 91, 56 L. R. A. 649.

One who merely prefers a criminal charge before a justice of the peace who has jurisdiction over the subject-matter is not liable for "false imprisonment" of accused by reason of acts done under a warrant issued on the charge, since false imprisonment is a trespass committed against the person of another by unlawfully arresting and detaining him without any legal authority or by instigating such unlawful arrest. McIntosh v. Bullard, Earnheart & Magness, 129 S. W. 85, 87, 95 Ark. 227.

FALSE MAKING

The phrase "false making," as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 1168, providing punishment of any person who shall "falsely make" alter, forge, or counterfeit any public record, certificate, return, or attestation, etc., is synonymous with "forging." Territory v. Gutierrez, 84 Pac. 525, 527, 13 N. M. 312, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375.

FALSE OATH

A finding of a special master, directed to take proof and make report on exceptions to a bankrupt's petition for discharge, that in verifying the answer and in giving his testimony the bankrupt made a false oath either in one or the other, is not a finding that the bankrupt made a "false oath" within Bankruptcy Act, § 29, 30 Stat. 553, and it does not justify a refusal to discharge him. In re Mayer, 195 Fed. 571, 573.

FALSE PRETENSE

Cheating by false pretenses, see Cheat. Representation in false pretense, see Representation.

A "false pretense" is a representation of some fact or circumstance, calculated to mislead, which is not true. State v. Hammelsy, 96 Pac. 865, 52 Or. 156, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 132 Am. St. Rep. 686.

A "false pretense" is a false representation of a subsisting fact, whether by oral or written words or conduct, which is calculated to deceive, intended to deceive, and which does in fact deceive, and by means of which one person obtains value from another without compensation. State v. Whedbee, 87 S. E. 60, 62, 152 N. C. 770, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863.

"A 'false pretense' is defined to be a false and fraudulent representation, or statement of a fact, as existing or having taken place, made with knowledge of its falsity, with intent to deceive and defraud, and which is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value." State v. Seligman, 108 N. W. 357, 358, 127 Iowa, 415.

A "false pretense" is such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact, by one who knows it not to be true, as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value. Young v. State, 46 South. 580, 581, 155 Ala. 145.

A "false pretense" is a fraudulent representation of an existing fact or past event, by one who knows it not to be true, of such a nature as to induce the party to whom it is made to part with something of value. Parker v. State, 137 S. W. 253, 254, 98 Ark. 575; Owens v. Same, 187 S. W. 256, 98 Ark. 609.

"'False pretense' is a false and fraudulent representation, or statement of a past and existing fact, made with knowledge of its falsity, and with the intent to deceive and defraud, by reliance upon which representation or statement another is induced to part with money or property of value." Under a statute providing that if any person shall by any false token, with intent to defraud, obtain from another any property or money, he shall be punished, a bank cashier, issuing his personal check and certifying it, when he had no money on deposit, did not violate the statute, where the person receiving the check knew that he had no money on deposit. State v. Miller, 85 Pac. 81, 83 (quoting and adopting definition in 8 Cyc. p. 857, and citing the definitions in 2 Whart. Cr. Law [9th Ed.] § 1183, and McClain, Cr. Law, § 684).

A "false pretense" is such a fraudulent representation of a fact, past or existing, by a person knowing it to be untrue, as is adapted to induce the person to whom made to part with something of value. State v. Hartnett (Del.) 74 Atl. 82, 83, 7 Pennewill, 204.

The phrase "false pretense," as used in the statute relating to swindling, embraces every false and deceitful pretense made with the intention of swindling. Doxey v. State, 84 S. W. 1061, 1063, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 503, 11 Ann. Cas. 830.

Where it is charged that defendant represented that he was owing but little, that he was owing $ for a pair of oxen, and was not owing for any other large debt, etc., such representations, if false, clearly came within the meaning of the term "false pretense," notwithstanding no precise amount of indebtedness is stated, and though the terms "little" and "large" are inserted. Such representations were well calculated to inspire confidence in his ability to pay and to induce the seller to give him credit. State v. Call, 48 N. H. 126, 132.

A person who, for the purpose of obtaining goods, falsely represents that he has a contract for the upholstering of certain articles at a certain price, and on the strength of which representation the goods are given to him, is guilty of obtaining goods by "false pretenses." Martin v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 102 S. W. 273, 274.

The assumption of a fictitious name amounts to a "false pretense," within the meaning of V. S. 4960 (P. S. 5776), providing that all persons who knowingly and designedly, by false pretense or pretenses, shall obtain from any person any goods, etc., with intent to beat or defraud, shall be guilty of felony. State v. Marshall, 59 Atl. 916, 917, 77 Vt. 262.

Pen. Code, §§ 528, 531, defining larceny by means of false representations or pretenses, apply alike to all persons, attorneys as well as others, who may obtain money by the use of false and fraudulent representations or pretenses, and that offense is not included in section 148, punishing as a misdemeanor deceit or collusion on the part of an attorney, and willfully delaying his client's suit or receiving money or allowance for or on account of money which he has not laid out or becomes answerable for. People v. Reavey (N. Y.) 39 Hun, 364, 365.

Where, in an action for fraud in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy, it appeared that the agents soliciting the insurance represented that the insurer had a certain contract to sell, and that it contained certain provisions that, if plaintiff would give his note for a certain amount, this contract would be delivered to him. The representations constituted "false pretenses," as defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2352. Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 81 N. E. 595, 600, 40 Ind. App. 354.

Where S. had W.'s note for $150, and agreed with him, if he would purchase land of N., he would credit his note for that amount, and W. purchased the land at $130, but represented to S. that N. had raised the price to $150, and S. agreed to take it at that price if W. could not get it for less, and N. conveyed the land as S. directed, and S. gave up the note to W., it was held that, though it was a gross fraud, it was not a "false pretense" in the legal sense. Wallace v. State, 11 Lea (79 Tenn.) 542.

"False pretenses," within Rev. St. U. S. § 3894, punishing the using of the mails in furtherance of scheme devised to obtain money or property under false pretenses, include only schemes having a similitude to a lottery and other like schemes, particularly described, and do not cover the use of mails to promote other schemes to obtain money or property by means of false pretenses, which is embraced by the provisions of section 5480, making criminal the use of the mails to carry on any scheme or artifice to defraud; and the making of false and fraudulent representations through the mails to prospective buyers of cattle, to promote a scheme to defraud by inducing them to come and inspect the cattle, after which inferior cattle were to be substituted in place of those inspected and sold, constitutes the offense prohibited by section 5480. United States v. Stever, 32 Sup. Ct. 51, 52, 222 U. S. 167, 56 L. Ed. 145.

The crime of larceny by obtaining property by "false pretense" consists in obtaining title to property by a false pretense, or by procuring a contract by false pretense under which one party passes title to the other party. Commonwealth v. Althause, 93 N. E. 202, 205, 207 Mass. 32, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999.

One who presents a claim to the county commissioners for services for which he has already been paid by the county, and obtains a warrant and collects the same, is guilty of obtaining money under "false pretenses," whether the county treasurer and the county board knew of the fraud or not. State v. Talley, 57 S. E. 618, 619, 77 S. C. 99, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938, 122 Am. St. Rep. 559.

Where the pretenses which are false are that the defendant was procuring a loan from one R. with which to pay certain notes secured by a real estate mortgage, which had been executed by him, and that he had come to the holder thereof for the purpose and with the intent to pay the notes, coupled with the promise to pay off the notes upon the execution of the release of the mortgage, and the possession of the notes and mortgage being given to him, the pretenses are within the statute. State v. Cowdin, 28 Kan. 269, 273.

In extradition proceedings, allegations that accused in a specified county and state on a day named obtained a specified sum of money from one named person as agent of another by false pretenses by drawing and delivering to such person a check for that amount on a bank at a specified place, and procured such person as such agent to cash the check by falsely representing that he was financially responsible, and had funds in or credit with the bank, and that the check would be honored, and that such person was deceived thereby, sufficiently charges the offense of obtaining money on "false pretenses." Taylor v. Wise (Iowa) 126 N. W. 1126.

Where a bankrupt's false representations as to his property, alleged to have induced an attorney, to accept his defense on a criminal prosecution, were not made until after the attorney had been employed and had contracted to defend the bankrupt, such representations did not constitute a liability for obtaining property by "false pretenses" or false representations within the bankruptcy act, and hence an action to recover the fees in which false representations were alleged was subject to stay by the court in

A judgment obtained by a railroad company against its ticket agent for money collected by him for tickets sold and misappropriated to his own use is not one for a debt which is a liability for obtaining property by "false pretenses or false representations" within the meaning of the bankrupt act, though he made false representations to conceal his conversion of the money, but is one from which he is released by a discharge in bankruptcy. In re Wenham, 153 Fed. 910, 911.

A pledgor and pledgee may agree that the securities pledged, in which the pledgor has the general property and the pledgee a special property for the payment of the debt secured, may be sold by the pledgee and the proceeds used by him as owner of the securities, leaving to the pledgor the unsecured personal obligation of the pledgee to account for the value of the securities at the date of payment of the debt; and such agreement is not an incident to the pledge, but is an agreement authorizing the pledgee to end the pledge and the rights of the pledgor in the securities, and hence that such agreement was induced by a false pretense on the part of the pledgee did not render him guilty of obtaining the pledged goods through larceny by "false pretense." Such agreement, where included in and a part of the pledge agreement, must, if possible, be construed as declaring the terms of the pledge, rather than as authorizing the pledgee to end the pledge and the interest of the pledgor, and, to justify the pledgee in selling the securities and accounting for the value thereof at the date of the payment of the debt secured, must give him that right in terms admitting of no doubt. Where special property in a negotiable receipt for corporate bonds passed to accused as pledgee of it to secure a note executed by the pledgor, who did not lose his general property in the receipt, and accused, procuring his special property by a false pretense, sold the receipt wrongfully, without regard to his rights as pledgee, he was not guilty of "larceny by false pretense," under Rev. Laws, c. 208, § 26, since the only effect which the false pretense had was on the possession of the receipt, which passed to accused by the making of the note for which the receipt was delivered as security. Commonwealth v. Althause, 93 N. E. 202, 204, 207 Mass. 32, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990.

The phrase "obtaining property by means of false representations and pretenses," in a bail bond conditioned on the principal therein appearing to answer the charge of "obtaining property by means of false representations and pretenses," etc., sufficiently describes the offense charged in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2517, punishing every person who, with intent to cheat or defraud another, designedly, by color or aid of any false token or writing or other false pretense, obtains the signature of any person to any written instrument, etc. Territory ex rel. Thacker v. Conner, 87 Pac. 591, 593, 17 Okl. 135 (citing Patterson v. State ex rel. Neff, 12 Ind. 86; Browder v. State, 9 Ala. 58; 5 Cyc. p. 98; United States v. Sauer, 73 Fed. 671; State v. Randolph, 22 Mo. 474; State v. Rye, 9 Yerg. [17 Tenn.] 386; Com. v. Daggett, 16 Mass. 447; People v. Rundle [N. Y.] 6 Hill, 506; Kerns v. Schoonmaker, 4 Ohio, 331, 22 Am. Dec. 757; People v. Gillman, 28 N. E. 469, 125 N. Y. 372; Adams v. State, 48 Ind. 212; State v. Marshall, 21 Iowa, 148; State v. Merrihew, 47 Iowa, 112, 29 Am. Rep. 464; State v. Gilmore, 17 Atl. 816, 81 Me. 405; Turner v. State, 41 Tex. 549; Belt v. Spaulding, 20 Pac. 827, 17 Or. 180).

Constituent elements

To convict one of "false pretenses" the state must prove that accused knowingly made false pretenses with intent to cheat and defraud another, and that by such pretenses he actually defrauded the latter and obtained from it its property. State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 156, 6 Pennewill 401.

To constitute the offense of obtaining property by "false pretenses" there must be an intent to defraud, there must be an actual fraud committed, false pretenses must be used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud, and the fraud must be accomplished by means of the false pretenses made use of for that purpose. Clawson v. State, 109 N. W. 578, 580, 129 Wis. 650, 116 Am. St. Rep. 972, 9 Ann. Cas. 966.

A "false pretense" is such a fraudulent representation of a fact by one knowing it to be untrue as is adapted to induce the one to whom it is made to part with something of value. It may consist of any act, word, symbol, or token calculated to deceive another, and knowingly and designedly employed by any person with intent to defraud another of money or other personal property. State v. Holden (Del.) 79 Atl. 215, 217, 2 Boyce, 429; State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 156, 6 Pennewill, 401 (citing State v. Lynn [Del.] 51 Atl. 873, 3 Pennewill, 316).

To constitute "obtaining goods by false pretenses" there must have been false representation of a subsisting fact, calculated and intended to deceive, and which did deceive, and by which one obtained value from another without compensation. State v. Davis, 64 S. E. 498, 499, 150 N. C. 851.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1927, provides that every person who, with intent to cheat or defraud another, shall designedly by color of any false token or writing or by any false pretense, obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, etc., shall be punished. Held that, in order to make out would probably deceive a person of ordinary understanding. People v. Henninger, 128 Pac. 352, 354, 20 Cal. App. 79.

Defendant must derive benefit

The crime defined in the statute, punishing "false pretenses," is not that of making a false pretense; but the provision is directed against one who obtains something, or, in other words, who gets possession of something, purposely by effort, that is, by a false pretense. State v. Lewis, 26 Kan. 123, 129, 130.

False representation distinguished

See False Representation.

Fraudulent conveyance distinguished

The offense, under Kirby's Dig. § 1689, of obtaining personalty by "false pretense," is distinguished from that, under section 1693, of conveying land to defraud prior or subsequent purchasers or creditors, in that the gist of the former offense is obtaining money or property by any false representation of an existing or past fact, whether relating to land or something else, with knowledge of its falsity, while the latter offense may exist under a conveyance to defraud, regardless of representations, and proof necessary to convict under section 1689 would be essentially different from that required under section 1693. Shelton v. State, 131 S. W. 871, 873, 96 Ark. 237.

Intent or purpose

To constitute the offense of "false pretense" under Rev. St. 1899, § 5143, providing that a person who shall designedly, by false pretense, obtain from another any property with intent to defraud the latter, shall be punished, the property must be obtained from the owner by false pretense, and accused must obtain from the owner at least a voidable title to the property, and must intend to defraud the person from whom the property is thus obtained, and, in the absence of an intent to defraud, the offense is not complete, and, though such intent is present, the crime is not complete unless the person from whom the property was obtained was actually defrauded. Martins v. State, 98 Pac. 709, 711, 17 Wyo. 319, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645.

Where an indictment for removing merchandise from a public warehouse without paying the duty thereon alleged that the goods had been deposited in Brooklyn in a warehouse under bond, and then alleged that on a given day the importer withdrew them under a false pretense that they were to be exported, the term "false pretense" should be construed to mean at least that the defendant did not mean to export the goods when he removed them. United States v. Ehrigott, 182 Fed. 267, 270.

Prosecutor met defendant through a newspaper advertisement, and defendant offered to sell him a half interest in the rooming house department of a brokerage company for $200, and represented that he (defendant) needed an assistant, and that the business netted profits of between $200 and $300 a month. Prosecutor desired a salary, but thereafter paid defendant $50, to be kept by him for 30 days; defendant agreeing to return the same to prosecutor at the expiration of such time if he was dissatisfied, which defendant failed to do. Held, that since the ownership of the money so deposited remained in prosecutor, and there was no intent on his part to deliver possession thereof to defendant except temporarily, the latter's offense, if any committed, was larceny, and not obtaining money by "false pretenses." State v. Anderson, 84 S. W. 946, 949, 186 Mo. 25 (citing State v. Vickery, 19 Tex. 326; 2 Archb. Cr. Pl. 372; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 322, 23 Am. Rep. 123; People v. Morse, 2 N. E. 45, 99 N. Y. 662).

Larceny distinguished

The distinction between the crime of larceny and that of cheating by "false pretenses" is this: "If the false pretenses induce the owner to part with his property, intending to transfer both title and possession, the crime is cheating by false pretenses. If, on the other hand, one by fraud, trick, or false pretense induces the owner to part merely with the possession of his property, there being no intent to pass the title, and the party who receives it, took it with intent fraudulently to convert it to his own use, the crime is larceny." State v. Loser, 104 N. W. 337, 339, 340, 132 Iowa, 419.

Larceny and "false pretenses" are distinguishable, in that in larceny the owner does not intend to part with his property to accused, though he may intend to part with possession; while in false pretenses he does intend to part with his title. People v. Gridler, 110 Pac. 586, 588, 13 Cal. App. 703.

The distinction between "false pretenses" and larceny is that in the former the owner parts with the possession and title of property by reason of false and fraudulent representations knowingly and designedly made, while in the latter the owner of the property stolen must not have intended to part with the title to it. People v. Proctor, 82 Pac. 551, 552, 1 Cal. App. 521.

"Where, by means of fraud, conspiracy, or artifice, possession of the property is obtained with felonious intent, and the title still remains in the owner, 'larceny' is established; while the crime is 'false pretenses' if the title, as well as possession, is absolutely parted with." People v. Delbos, 81 Pac. 131, 132, 146 Cal. 734 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Rae, 6 Pac. 1, 66 Cal. 425, 56 Am. Rep. 102).

Where possession of personal property is obtained from the owner by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner intends to part with both possession and the title when he surrenders control of the property, the offense is obtaining property by "false pretenses"; but if the possession is fraudulently secured, and the owner does not intend to part with the title, the offense is "larceny." Beckwith v. Galice Mines Co., 93 Pac. 453, 455, 50 Or. 542, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723.

The crime of obtaining money or goods by "false pretenses" is closely allied to that of larceny, and the common law and statutes defining the crime were undoubtedly designed for the fuller protection of personal property and in aid of the laws against larceny and theft. State v. Eno, 109 N. W. 119, 120, 131 Iowa, 619, 9 Ann. Cas. 856 (adopting definition 2 Brown & Hadley's Com. 532; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, §§ 476-479).

"If the possession has been obtained by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner of it intends to part with his title when he gives up possession, the offense, if any, is obtaining money by 'false pretenses.' But, where the possession has been obtained through a trick or device, with the intent, at the time the party receives it, to convert the same to his own use, and the owner of the property parts with the possession and not with the title, the offense is 'larceny.'" Where a person gave money to another as a stakeholder on a bet such delivery having been brought about by fraud and artifice of the stakeholder, who intended to appropriate the money in any event, and who did so, the offense was larceny. State v. Ryan, 82 Pac. 703, 106, 47 Or. 338, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862 (quoting and adopting the statement in People v. Tomlinson, 36 Pac. 506, 507, 102 Cal. 19, 23).

If the owner of property part, not only with the possession, but with the right of property also, the offense of the party obtaining the property will not be larceny, but will be that of obtaining goods by "false pretenses." Zink v. People, 77 N. Y. 114, 128, 33 Am. Rep. 589 (adopting definition in Smith v. People, 58 N. Y. 111, 18 Am. Rep. 474).

One who went to a wholesale cigar store, and, giving an assumed name, falsely represented that he had come to get cigars for a retail dealer, and thereby procured the cigars and converted them to his own use, was guilty of "larceny," since the wholesaler intended to deliver him merely the possession of the goods for the retailer, and not to sell them to him personally, and was not guilty of "obtaining property by impersonating another," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 1930. State v. Kosky, 90 S. W. 454, 457, 191 Mo. 1.

Where defendant induced R., who had previously been employed by a dray company authorized to receive goods for a consignee of certain shoes, and who was known to the servants of the carrier holding such goods for delivery, to go to the freight depot of the carrier in Illinois, after his employment by the dray company had terminated, and procure a load of shoes from the carrier, and

R. obtained such shoes and delivered them to a person other than the consignee in Missouri, such act constituted "larceny," and not "false pretenses," and was therefore punishable under Rev. St. 1899, § 2362, providing that every person who shall steal the property of another in any other state and shall bring the same into Missouri may be convicted and punished for larceny as though the property was stolen in Missouri. State v. Mintz, 88 S. W. 12, 16, 189 Mo. 268.

According to Pen. Code, § 528, "larceny" includes every act which was larceny at common law, and in addition such acts as formerly constituted "false pretenses" and "embezzlement." At common law, if a person honestly and in good faith received possession of personal property in trust, and thereafter converted the same to his own use, he was guilty of "embezzlement." If he obtained possession of the property by fraud, the owner intending nevertheless to part with the title as well as the possession, the offense was obtaining property under "false pretenses." If the possession was wrongfully or fraudulently obtained, without the owner's consent, and without color of title, and with a felonious intent of converting the property to the use of the taker or another, the offense was "larceny." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 145, 118 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Miller, 62 N. E. 418, 169 N. Y. 350, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546).

Prosecutor applied to defendant for a position, who introduced him to A. to arrange the terms of his employment. A. required prosecutor to deposit $50 as a guaranty of his honesty, to be returned on termination of his employment; but defendant on the next day told prosecutor that, as $400 or $500 would pass through prosecutor's hands every day, he must deposit $150 more, which he did. Defendant pretended to give him a receipt for this money, which, instead was a bill of sale for a one-half interest in the rooming house business conducted by the concern. Prosecutor worked for $15 per week for three or four weeks, during which time he drew $15.75, and, becoming dissatisfied, demanded the return of his money, which defendant refused to pay him, and then prosecutor discovered that his receipt therefor was a bill of sale. Held that, prosecutor never having intended to part with the title to the money so deposited, defendant, having acquired the same by fraud, with the felonious intent to convert it to his own use, was guilty of "larceny," and not "false pretenses." State v. Buck, 84 S. W. 951, 952, 186 Mo. 15, 2 Ann. Cas. 1007 (citing Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325; People v. Morse, 2 N. E. 45, 99 N. Y. 662; People v. Dumar, 13 N. E. 325, 106 N. Y. 502; People v. Miller, 62 N. E. 418, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546; People v. Gottschalk, 20 N. Y. Supp. 777, 66 Hun. 64).

Promise

A "false pretense" is a misrepresentation as to an existing fact or past event, and not a mere promise to do something in the future or a misrepresentation as to something to take place in the future. State v. Hollingsworth, 109 N. W. 1003, 1004, 132 Iowa, 471.

Where, on a trial for the larceny of a negotiable receipt for corporate bonds, delivered to accused as security for a note executed by the pledgor, the pledgor testified that accused stated at the time of the making of the pledge that he would merely use the security as collateral for a loan, and accused sold the security and claimed that he had a right to do so under the agreement, a charge that a representation as to a future transaction in the nature of a promise was not a "false pretense," within the statute punishing larceny by false pretense, and that it was not a false pretense for one to fail to do in the future a thing he had promised to do, unless the promise was made to induce another to do a particular thing, etc., did not fully charge on the issue of a representation of one present intention as to a future act, as distinguished from a promise that a future act should be done; and the court should have charged that the statement by accused, that he would or would not use the receipt in a certain manner, was not a false pretense, and that a representation, as an inducement to the making of a loan, that something thereafter was or was not to be done, was not a false pretense. Commonwealth v. Althause, 93 N. E. 202, 206, 207 Mass. 32, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999.

Though a mere "false pretense" to do something resting on a future event is not within Ky. St. § 1208, denouncing false pretenses, yet a promise of future performance, when coupled with a false statement as to a past or existing fact or facts which induces another to rely on the false promise, will, in connection with the false statement as to the existing fact or facts, constitute a false pretense. McDowell v. Commonwealth, 123 S. W. 313, 314, 136 Ky. 8.

A "false pretense," within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 751, c. 169, § 677, prescribing the punishment for obtaining anything of value by color of any false token, or writing, or, under section 678, prescribing the punishment for obtaining property from another by color or aid of a certificate or order for the payment of money when the drawer or maker of the check or order is not entitled to draw on the drawee for the sum specified therein, cannot be predicated on the non-performance of a future promise or the happening of a future event, and therefore a postdated and postpayable check, on the faith of which goods are obtained, cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for false pretenses under those sections. Brown v. State, 76 N. E. 881, 166 Ind. 85, 8 Ann. Cas.

1068 (citing 2 Bishop's Cr. Law, § 420; State v. Magee, 11 Ind. 155; Roscoe's Cr. Ev. 465; People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. 557; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. 547; People v. Thomas, 3 Hill, 169; People v. Williams, 4 Hill, 9; Fenton v. People, 4 Hill, 126; Commonwealth v. Drew, 19 Pick. 186).

Reliance on pretense

To constitute the obtaining of property by "false pretenses," it is not necessary that the owner be induced to part with it solely by pretenses which are false, nor that the pretenses be the paramount cause of delivery to accused; but it is sufficient if they are a part of the moving cause, and if without them the defrauded person would not have parted with his property. State v. Merry, 127 N. W. 83, 88, 20 N. D. 337.

In a prosecution for "false pretenses," the state must prove that the representations and pretenses alleged induced the prosecutor to part with his money, or that such representations and pretenses were the main inducement. People v. Emmons, 110 Pac. 151, 154, 13 Cal. App. 487.

Representations as to character or solvency

Obtaining money as a charity on a false representation as to loss is within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7165, making it an offense to obtain money by "false pretenses"; the statute making no exception, and the act not being without the spirit of the statute. State v. Swan, 104 Pac. 145, 55 Wash. 97, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1024, 19 Ann. Cas. 1129.

Token or writing

The obtaining of money or property by means of a check on a bank in which the maker keeps no account was not a cheat at common law prior to 30 Geo. II, c. 24, § 1, making criminal the obtaining of money or property by false pretenses, but after the enactment thereof was indictable as a "false pretense." The offense of obtaining money or property by means of a worthless check may be punished under Pen. Code 1901, § 481, making the obtaining of money under false pretenses a misdemeanor. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

A "false pretense," within the meaning of Acts 1905, p. 751, c. 169, § 677, prescribing the punishment for obtaining anything of value by color of any false token, or writing, or, under section 678, prescribing the punishment for obtaining property from another by color or aid of a certificate or order for the payment of money, when the drawer or maker of the check or order is not entitled to draw on the drawee for the sum specified therein, cannot be predicated on the non-performance of a future promise or the happening of a future event, and therefore a postdated and postpayable check, on the faith of which goods are obtained, cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for false pretenses under those sections. Brown v. State, 76 N. E. 881, 166 Ind. 85, 8 Ann. Cas. 1068 (citing 2 Bishop's Cr. Law, § 420; State v. Magee, 11 Ind. 154, 155).

Where defendant, as part of a horse trade, agreed to pay prosecutor $7.50, and for that purpose handed him a $10 Confederate bill, with the remark, "Give me $2.50; here is a ten dollar bill," and prosecutor received the same believing it was United States currency, such Confederate bill was a "false token," within Ky. St. 1903, § 1208, providing that if any person by false pretenses, statement, or token, with intent to commit a fraud, obtains from another money, property, or other thing which may be the subject of larceny he shall be fined, etc. A false representation or token is not within the statute unless calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and discretion (see 2 Whart. Cr. Law, 2129; Commonwealth v. Grady, 13 Bush [76 Ky.] 285, 26 Am. Rep. 192); but the statute was not designed to protect only the ordinarily wary and prudent, but is aimed at all dishonesty by which even the foolish are led to part with their property. The statute is designed to protect the owner of property against cheats and to punish the cheater. In punishing the wrongdoer his motive and its results are the main subjects of inquiry. Under this statute, the wicked purpose—the fraud—is equivalent to the same ingredients in theft, and the result is the same. It is distinguishable from theft, however, since in theft the owner does not intentionally part with the title and possession of his property, while under this statute he does. Under this statute the pretense or token must be false, and it must be calculated to deceive according to the capacity of the person to whom it is presented to detect its falsity under the circumstances. A token that might be calculated to deceive a blind man, or one in the dark, or a child, would not necessarily be a "false token" when used upon one who could see, or who had mature judgment. Commonwealth v. Beckett, 84 S. W. 758, 759, 119 Ky. 817, 68 L. R. A. 638, 115 Am. St. Rep. 285 (citing State v. Padillo, 11 N. C. 348; State v. Stroll [S. C.] 1 Rich. 244; State v. Grooms [S. C.] 5 Strob. 158; Peckham v. State [Tex.] 28 S. W. 532; Woodbury v. State, 69 Ala. 242, 44 Am. Rep. 515; People v. Crissie, 4 Denio, 525; Commonwealth v. Grady, 13 Bush, 285, 26 Am. St. Rep. 192; Commonwealth v. Haughey, 8 Metc. 223).

FALSE REPRESENTATION

See, also, Fraudulent Misrepresentation; Misrepresentation.

Fraud by false representation, see Fraud.

The term "false representations," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 658, defining acts constituting swindling, is not restricted to the use of words; but they may be made by tokens or symbols, and implied by way of concealment of a part of the truth, or from misleading silence. Ricks v. State, 69 S. E. 576, 578, 8 Ga. App. 449.

The concealment or suppression by a party to a contract, with intent to deceive, of a material fact which he is in good faith bound to disclose, amounts to a "false representation." Barrett v. Lewiston, B. & B. St. Ry. Co., 85 A. 306, 308, 110 Me. 24.

"False representation" may be made by presenting that which is true so as to create an impression which is false, and then profiting by the false impression thus created. Tolley v. Poteet, 57 S. E. 811, 819, 62 W. Va. 231.

To impose a liability for "false representations" in an action for deceit, the representations must have been made with actual knowledge of their falsity, or, if without knowledge, recklessly and without regard to their truth or falsity. Vincent v. Corbitt, 47 South. 641, 642, 94 Miss. 46, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.), 85.

A "false representation," to constitute fraud, must be a representation of alleged existing fact, false in effect, made with intent to deceive, and the person to whom it is made must believe it. Representations by a vendor of lots to an intended purchaser that the lots were situated five to ten minutes from a railroad station, that the lots had some improvements, and that there were cement sidewalks, gas, and water at the property, were material representations of facts, and the purchaser might rely thereon, and sue for their falsity. Scarsdale Pub. Co. v. Carter, 116 N. Y. Supp. 731, 735, 63 Misc. Rep. 271.

The federal bankruptcy act, providing that a discharge shall release a bankrupt from all provable debts except liabilities for "obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations," contemplates positive fraud or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong, and not implied fraud or fraud in law, which may exist without the imputation of bad faith or immorality. A representation as to a fact, made knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently, for the purpose of obtaining money from another, and by means of which such money is obtained, creates a debt by means of a fraud involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong. So, where one obtained sheep on a fraudulent representation to the seller that he was to receive that day a check for more than the price of the sheep, and would give it to the seller, and converted the sheep to his own use without paying for them, he "obtained property by false pretenses or 'false representations.'" Rowell v. Ricker, 66 Atl. 569, 570, 79 Vt. 552.

The legal tariff rate on coarse salt in bulk between Cuylerville, N. Y., and Chicago, was 10 cents, and the rate on similar salt in sacks 14 cents. Defendants, desiring to ship a car of coarse salt in sacks, loaded the car and filed with the carrier a shipping order, describing the merchandise as "coarse salt," with the words "rate 10 cents," when the true description should have been "coarse salt in sacks, rate 14 cents." Held, that if the carrier was induced to rely on such shipping order as to the character of the commodity and apply the lesser rate, and defendants intentionally concealed or suppressed the true character of the freight, such conduct constituted a "false representation," for which they were subject to prosecution under Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 10, 24 Stat. 382, as amended by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 10, par. 3, 36 Stat. 549, providing that, if any person obtains the transportation of goods at a less rate than the legal rate by false representations of the contents of the package, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. United States v. Sterling Salt Co., 200 Fed. 593, 597.

False pretense distinguished

Where a statement of value is given as an opinion merely, it cannot be regarded as a foundation for an indictment for obtaining money and property by "false pretenses"; but where the statement is made as an existing fact, when accused knows it to be false and intends it to be an inducement to the other party, and it is so understood and relied on by the other party, it becomes a "false representation" of a material fact, for which the party making the representation is indictable; and whether a representation of value is intended as an expression of opinion, or whether it is made as a statement of an existing fact, which the speaker intends to be an inducement to the other party, is a question of fact for the jury. Williams v. State, 83 N. E. 802, 77 Ohio St. 468, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1197.

A "false pretense" may consist in any act, word, symbol, or token calculated to deceive another, and knowingly and designedly employed by any person with intent to defraud another of money or any personal property. A representation that is false is synonymous with a false pretense, and hence the term "false representations," in Pen. Code 1895, § 658, defining acts constituting cheating or swindling, is not necessarily restricted to the use of words written or spoken. Ricks v. State, 69 S. E. 576, 578, 8 Ga. App. 449 (quoting and adopting the definition in 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2668).

Intent

Equity will grant relief for "false representations" of defendant, on which plaintiff acted, though defendant supposed they were true. Where plaintiff is induced by "false representations" of defendant that the title to certain property was good to purchase the property, equity will relieve plaintiff, although the false representations were not made knowingly. Welse v. Grove, 99 N. W. 191, 192, 123 Iowa, 585.

A "false representation," to be actionable, must not only mislead, but must be made fraudulently, and with that intent, and one is not liable for a false representation who honestly believed it when made; but he is liable if he knew it to be false, or, knowing nothing about it, asserted it to be true. First Nat. Bank of Newark v. People's Nat. Bank of Springfield, 132 S. W. 1008, 1009, 97 Ark. 15.

An allegation that the "defendants falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff with the intent to deceive him" that one of the defendants was about to abandon his barber business sufficiently alleged a present intent by defendant not to perform their promise existing when it was made; the word "false," when applied to representations inducing an act to another's injury, implying a purpose to deceive, and a "false representation" being an untrue representation willfully made to deceive another to his damage. Salles v. Johnson, 81 Atl. 974, 976, 85 Conn. 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386.

In order to be "false" so as to bar a discharge, the "representations" made by a bankrupt to obtain credit must have been willfully or intentionally misleading. In re Kyte, 174 Fed. 867, 871.

The same statements may be regarded as "false representations" or mere expressions of opinion, according to the circumstances of the particular case. An opinion falsely expressed, with intent to deceive, and which does deceive, is an actionable false representation. A party having superior knowledge of the property sold, and giving a false opinion in regard to a matter of fact, with intent to affect the price to be paid, is guilty of fraud. Schneider v. Schneider, 98 N. W. 159, 163, 125 Iowa, 1.

False statements as to the value of land, and that fences thereon are good, made to induce an exchange for other land, is an "opinion" and not actionable as a "false representation." Else v. Freeman, 83 Pac. 409, 72 Kan. 666.

Statements by a vendor of land and another to a purchaser, who personally examined the land and dealt with the vendor at arm's length, that there were 240 acres under cultivation, that there were 25 or 30 acres more that could be put into cultivation, and not to exceed 50 or 60 acres of waste land out of the 320 acres in the tract, were mere statements of opinion, and not "representations of fact," on which a charge of fraud could be based. Van Horn v. O'Connor, 85 Pac. 260, 261, 42 Wash. 513.

Where one, in order to induce another to exchange a stock of goods for land, without examining the land, represented that it was worth a certain sum per acre, this was a representation of fact, and not a mere "opinion," and, being knowingly false and relied on, was actionable. Mattauch v. Walsh Bros. & Miller, 113 N. W. 818, 819, 136 Iowa, 225.

Mere expressions of opinion by a seller as to the value of property are not actionable, being regarded as "trader's talk," which every man of intelligence receives cum grano salis. Freeman v. Evans, 159 Fed. 26, 32, 86 C. C. A. 216.

A mere expression of opinion, or "trade talk," cannot be construed into a "false representation." Representations that an engine sold had been formerly used, rebuilt, and was practically as good as new, and that it would steam well and was of sufficient power to drive defendant's threshing machine, were mere expressions of opinion, or "trade talk," other than the representation that it had been rebuilt. Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Halverson, 106 N. W. 108, 128 Iowa, 603.

Where, in an action for damages for "false representations" inducing plaintiff to purchase certain corporate stock, plaintiff testified that defendant repeatedly told him that the corporation was perfectly solvent, owned a large amount of property, and had paid dividends of 20 per cent. out of the net earnings for several years, evidence of a further statement that the stock was a splendid investment was admissible, and not objectionable, on the ground that such statement was a mere expression of "opinion," when taken in connection with the other statements. Collins v. Chipman, 95 S. W. 666, 670, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 563.

A statement by one seeking employment, to his prospective employer, that he could induce certain persons to give their patronage to the employer if he was employed, is only an expression of "opinion," and will not support a charge of "fraudulent misrepresentation," on which to base an avoidance of a contract of employment entered into in reliance thereon. Weik v. Williamson Gunning Advertising Co., 84 S. W. 144, 148, 109 Mo. App. 6 (citing Wade v. Ringo, 25 S. W. 901, 122 Mo. loc. cit. 326; McFarland v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 28 S. W. 590, 125 Mo. 253; Chase v. Rusk, 90 Mo. App. loc. cit. 29).

Puffing

"Puffing" mining claims does not amount to such a "false representation" as will authorize the setting aside of a sale of mining stock, where the parties are compos mentis and deal at arm's length. Burwash v. Bal-lou, 82 N. E. 355, 356, 230 Ill. 34, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409; Id., 132 Ill. App. 71.

FALSE RETURN OF PROCESS

As injury to property, see Injury to Property.

FALSE STATEMENT

See Materially False Statement; Obtaining Credit on False Statement.

In law to "know" is to possess information. Bouv. Law Dict., verbo "knowingly." Hence one who states a fact without possessing information does not know the fact, and makes a "false statement." Statements not known to be true by the person making them are in law false. United States v. Bradford, 148 Fed. 413, 424 (citing Lynch v. Mercantile Trust Co., 18 Fed. 486).

The word "false," as used in Customs Administration Act, § 9, 26 Stat. 135, prescribing punishment by forfeiture, fine, and imprisonment for the use of a "false statement" in making an entry of imported goods, means more than incorrect or erroneous, and implies statements knowingly or negligently untrue. United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 966, 72 C. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

"False," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14, cl. b (3), 30 Stat. 550, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. 797, forbidding the discharge of a bankrupt who has obtained property on credit upon a materially "false statement," means no more than "not true," though the word is flexible, and sometimes means "incorrect," and sometimes comprehends wickedness or fraud, as in section 29, where the term "false oath" means a corruptly false oath, such as would subject affiant to a prosecution for perjury. In re Gilpin, 160 Fed. 171, 183.

Of existing fact

Where defendant, convicted of grand larceny by false representations, was shown to have falsely stated that he had an order from a well-known mercantile corporation for a large number of garments, and that he desired to purchase goods from which to manufacture them, by which he induced their delivery, it was a "false statement of an existing fact," and not a warranty as to his financial standing, and was criminal, though not in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby, as required by Pen. Code, § 544, providing that false pretenses relating to the purchaser's financial ability must be in writing. People v. Rothstein, 72 N. E. 999, 180 N. Y. 148, 1 Ann. Cas. 978.

FALSE SWEARING

"False swearing" may be predicated on a promissory oath. Where the managers of an election at the beginning of the day take the usual oath to conduct the election honestly and according to law, and thereupon, having held the election, knowingly and willfully certify false returns, the official oath and the election papers being transmitted by law together to the designated officials, the election managers so falsifying their returns are subject to indictment for false swearing. Norton v. State, 63 S. E. 662, 664, 5 Ga. App. 586.

Any "false swearing" as to anything past or present makes one guilty of "false swearing," without regard to its materiality. Wilson v. State, 93 S. W. 547, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 496.

"False swearing" is defined as follows: One who takes an oath before a person authorized to administer an oath upon a matter of public interest is guilty of swearing. It would have been perjury if taken in judicial proceedings, as where a person makes an affidavit under the English Bill of Sale Act. It is less than perjury, and is an indictable offense. It is also defined as an oath taken before a competent officer in a proceeding which is not judicial, but may affect judicial right, and as swearing corruptly. A law denouncing "false swearing" does not necessarily cover perjury. State v. Coleman, 42 South. 471, 472, 117 La. 973, 8 Ann. Cas. 880 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Black, Law Dict.; 2 Bish. p. 1029, § 14; 2 McClain, 852; Whart. § 1269; 2 Russell, 603; 19 Cyc. p. 448).

"In order to constitute the crime of 'false swearing,' the oath need not be taken, or the false statement made, in a matter judicially pending, or to a matter material to any point in question. It is only necessary that the false statement should have been willfully made, with a knowledge of its falsity, on a subject in reference to which appellant might have been legally sworn, and that the oath was administered by an officer authorized to administer it." Stamper v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 100 S. W. 286, 287.

Under the Texas law the crime of "false swearing," as distinguished from perjury, can only be committed by a false oath to the voluntary declaration or affidavit, "not required by law or made in the course of a judicial proceeding." Pierce v. Creecy, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 719, 210 U. S. 387, 52 L. Ed. 1113 (citing Pen. Code Tex. art. 209).

Where a policy of insurance provides that it shall be void in case "of fraud or false swearing" by the insured, the use of the words "false swearing," in connection with the word "fraud," plainly indicates that either fraud or false swearing was designed to have the effect of defeating the policy, regardless of the ultimate effect of the false swearing upon either party to the contract. False swearing, when knowingly and willfully done, with intent to defraud the insurer, avoids the policy, regardless of the ultimate effect of such false swearing, and it is very plain that the word "fraud" was used in connection with the words "false swearing," so as to cover frauds otherwise than by false swearing. It is clear that, if the words "false swearing" be given their plain ordinary meaning, they cannot be held to mean that it was only "false swearing" which worked an advantage to the insured to the prejudice or injury of the insurer in the adjustment and payment of the loss that can avoid the policy. If the plaintiffs knowingly and willfully, with intent to defraud the defendants, swore falsely in making the proofs of loss, such act amounted to a fraud upon the defendants, which avoided the policies, irrespective of the ultimate effect upon the defendants. If the false swearing must secure an advantage to the insured in the adjustment and payment of the loss, to the prejudice or injury of the insurer, in order to avoid the policies, the purpose of this provision would in many cases be nullified, because the insured, after swearing falsely to proofs of loss in order to recover more than his honest loss, could escape the consequences of his act in case of discovery of such false swearing before payment by the insurer. Such a construction would defeat the object of this wholesome provision, designed to prevent fraud and false swearing, and is wholly inconsistent with its purpose and policy. Meyer v. Home Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 1087, 1088, 127 Wis. 293.

FALSE WRITING

Make false writing, see Make.

FALSELY TO MAINTAIN PLEAS

The phrase "falsely to maintain pleas," contained in 33 Edw. I, St. 2, making it a conspiracy to confer together to falsely maintain pleas, does not mean the setting up of a false defense. "The evident intent of the statute was to include within the definition those who combine for the purpose of perverting or obstructing justice." State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 655, 656, 27 R. I. 252.

FALSIFY—FALSIFICATION

See, also, Surcharge.

To surcharge or "falsify" is to allege an omission in an account or deny the correctness of some or all of the items rendered. One who objects to a stated account must surcharge or falsify it, and an account rendered by an administrator is a stated account. Tate v. Gairdner, 46 S. E. 73, 74, 119 Ga. 133.

Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, punishing "falsifying" any record in any public office, do not make a fraudulent purpose an ingredient of the offense, and a falsification of a public record willfully and knowingly made is an offense without regard to any purpose to defraud. People v. Tomalty, 111 Pac. 513, 515, 14 Cal. App. 224.

To publish of a public official that he was a "falsifier of public documents" is libelous per se, as the word "falsifier," as so used, carried with it the ordinary meaning of "one who falsifies or deceives; a liar." Tawney v. Simonson, Whitcomb & Hurley Co., 124 N. W. 229, 232, 109 Minn. 341, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1035.

FALSUS IN UNO, FALSUS IN OMNIBUS

"Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is but a legal maxim, not an inflexible rule of evidence, and in practice its application is delegated to the jury under appropriate instructions. After defendant had published a libelous article charging plaintiff with being a political coworker with B., plaintiff wrote a letter to defendant, purporting to contain a truthful statement of his political activities, and an argument that he was not guilty of the charge made in the publications. The letter contained a statement that plaintiff had refused to consent to the placing of the names of Democratic nominees for the Supreme Court on the Public Ownership ticket, because they had declared the Constitution itself unconstitutional in order to nail up the ballot boxes, and thus cover evidence of frauds in the municipal election. It was held that the falsity of such charge did not render the entire letter false as a matter of law, under the maxim "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus"; the question whether the letter or the libel spoke the truth in regard to the matters in controversy being for the jury. Meriwether v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co., 97 S. W. 257, 266, 267, 120 Mo. App. 354.

The maxim of "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is not a mandatory rule of evidence, but rather a permissible inference that the jury may or may not draw when convinced that an attempt has been made by a witness to mislead them in some material respect. Where a party speaks to a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, as in relation to the country of his birth, or his being in a vessel on a particular voyage, or living in a particular place, if the fact turn out otherwise, it is extremely difficult to exempt him for the charge of deliberate falsehood; and the courts of justice, under such circumstances, are bound, upon principles of law and morality and justice to apply the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus." Addis v. Rushmore, 65 Atl. 1036, 74 N. J. Law, 649.

The doctrine, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," always dangerous in trials, should never be so broad as to apply where the false testimony was not willfully false. The fact that a witness has sworn falsely to a material fact is not enough to render the doctrine applicable, unless he did it willfully, knowingly, or corruptly. An instruction that, if a witness has sworn falsely to any material matter, the jury may disregard his testimony, is erroneous for failing to state that the false swearing must have been willful, since the doctrine, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," always dangerous in trials, should never be so broad as to leave out the fact of willfulness. Bell v. State, 43 South. 84, 85, 90 Miss. 104 (citing Sardis & D. R. Co. v. McCoy, 37 South. 706, 85 Miss. 392).

The doctrine, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is only applied as a rule of law to a witness who has knowingly and willfully sworn falsely as to some fact material to the issue. An instruction that, if the jury believed that any witness had knowingly sworn falsely on any material point, or had knowingly "belittled any material fact" in the case, they might properly disregard all the testimony of such witness, except so far as corroborated by other credible evidence, was erroneous. Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Kline, 77 N. E. 229, 230, 220 Ill. 334 (citing Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Allen, 48 N. E. 414, 169 Ill. 287).

The usual and approved language in which the doctrine of "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is stated is that, "if a witness testifies willfully falsely as to any material matter in the trial of a case, the jury may, if they see fit, but are not bound to, reject all of such witness' evidence not corroborated by some other credible evidence." Hence this doctrine was not clearly stated in an instruction that "if you find that the testimony of any witness has, when you consider the whole evidence, been impeached, then you may reject the testimony of such witness entirely if you see fit, unless it is corroborated by some testimony, or by some evidence which you believe to be true." Miller v. State, 119 N. W. 850, 860, 139 Wis. 57.

The rule, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," does not mean that a witness' entire testimony must necessarily be disregarded or disbelieved because there may be found falsehood in certain parts of it. The rule merely means that, where the witness is found to have sworn falsely in a certain material part of his testimony, his entire testimony may for that reason be rejected. But no one will attempt to challenge the right of a jury or a judge trying the facts to believe and credit certain parts of the testimony of a witness who has been shown to have sworn falsely as to certain other material parts thereof. However, this rule is one which cannot well be invoked in a court of appeal on a review of the facts. Brandt v. Krogh, 111 Pac. 275, 279, 14 Cal. App. 39.

"The maxim, 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus,' applies only where a witness has knowingly and willfully testified falsely as to matters of fact." An instruction that, if a witness had at another time and place made statements material to the issue in the case at variance with his testimony while on the witness stand, the jury were at liberty to disregard the whole of such witness' testimony, except in so far as he was corroborated by other credible evidence, was erroneous, since it allowed them to reject the entire testimony of a material witness without even finding any of it false, whereas, before they could do so, they must have found some of it false and knowingly and willfully false. Nielsen v. Cedar County, 98 N. W. 1090, 1092, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 430 (quoting and adopting definition in Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 67 N. W. 477, 48 Neb. 553).

The rule, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," does not apply for the purpose of determining the weight to be given to the testimony of a witness where some of his testimony has been corroborated. Jewell v. Kelley, 118 N. W. 987, 989, 155 Mich. 301.

Where the evidence of witnesses is in irreconcilable conflict, and the difference is unexplainable on the theory of mistake, libellant's testimony in important particulars being completely discredited, the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," should be applied. The Helen W. Martin, 180 Fed. 317.

"Where a party swears falsely to a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed likely to mistake, courts are bound to apply the maxim, 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus,' and to give no credit to any fact depending upon his testimony alone." Titterington v. State, 106 N. W. 421, 422, 75 Neb. 153 (quoting Dell v. Oppenheimer, 4 N. W. 51, 9 Neb. 454; citing Young v. Pritchett, 6 N. W. 414, 10 Neb. 357; Freiberg v. Treitschke, 55 N. W. 273, 36 Neb. 880; Johnson v. State, 51 N. W. 835, 34 Neb. 261).

While the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is not adopted as a rule of law, the jury may entirely disregard the testimony of any witness considered willfully false in any particular, and the court could so instruct. Ducharme v. Holyoke St. R. Co., 89 N. E. 561, 564, 203 Mass. 384.

Where evidence invokes an application of the rule, "falsus in uno," etc., the trial court's exercise of discretion in applying the rule will not be disturbed. Pratt v. Welcome, 92 Pac. 500, 501, 6 Cal. App. 475.

To authorize the application of the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," it is not sufficient that the testimony of the witness is in some particular simply untrue, or that he even willfully swore falsely to an immaterial fact. It must appear that he has willfully and knowingly sworn falsely to a material fact. Boykin v. State, 38 South. 725, 728, 86 Miss. 481.

A variant statement made by one in an answer in a former suit, though not between the same parties as in the present suit, may be used to impeach him as a witness, and the principle touching credit of witnesses applies: "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus." In which instance is he telling the truth? A court cannot act on his evidence in this case, when under oath on a former occasion the witness made statements flatly contradictory to his evidence in this case as to the same vital points on which this case rests. Hudkins v. Crim, 61 S. E. 166, 170, 64 W. Va. 225.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 857, subd. 3, requiring the court to instruct that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in all others, an instruction that a witness may be false intentionally or by mistake, and that a mistaken witness is a false witness, etc., was erroneous, since there must be a state of facts from which the jury may be authorized to believe and they must believe the evidence willfully false in some particular before they may discredit the whole of the witness' testimony; the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus" applying only when truth is intentionally disregarded, and not when by defect of memory it is innocently departed from. Simpson v. Miller, 110 Pac. 485, 57 Or. 61, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1349.

The word "false," as used in L. O. L. § 868, subd. 3, providing that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in another, is not the equivalent of "mistaken"; and hence an instruction in the language of the statute is not erroneous for refusal to add "willfully" before "false." State v. Meyers, 117 Pac. 818, 821, 59 Or. 537 (quoting 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1655).

FAMILIAR

"Familiar," as used in a verification of an answer by defendant's attorney, stating that affiant is "familiar with all statements" in the answer, and "the facts in the case as claimed by defendant," signifies that the attorney is well acquainted with, or has knowledge of, the statements in the answer, and with the facts as claimed by defendant; the word being defined as: "Having an intimate knowledge; well knowing; well acquainted." "Closely acquainted with or intimate; * * * having an intimate knowledge of; * * * well known; well understood." "Having intimate knowledge; well acquainted; thoroughly versed"—so that his competency to verify sufficiently appears. Turner v. Loomis, 125 N. W. 662, 664, 146 Iowa, 655.

FAMILY

See Head of a Family; Immediate Family; Person of the Family.
 Member of family, see Member.
 See, also, Household.

A "family" is a collective body of persons living in one house, and under one manager. It consists of those who live with the pater familias. The word is often used interchangeably with "household." Pearre v. Smith, 73 Atl. 141, 142, 110 Md. 531; Birch v. Birch, 86 S. W. 1108, 1108, 112 Mo. App. 157 (Duncan v. Frank, 8 Mo. App. 288; Ridenour-Baker Grocery Co. v. Monroe, 43 S. W. 633, 142 Mo. 165; Leake v. Lucas, 91 N. W. 374, 93 N. W. 1019, 85 Neb. 359, 62 L. R. A. 190; Pearson v. Miller, 14 South. 731, 71 Miss. 379, 42 Am. St. Rep. 470; Bair v. Robinson, 108 Pa. 247, 56 Am. Rep. 198; Menefee v. Chesley, 66 N. W. 1038, 98 Iowa, 55; Neasham v. McNair, 72 N. State*, 23 South. 485, 117 Ala. 146); In re Finklea, 153 Fed. 492, 493 (citing Fant v. Gist, 15 S. E. 721, 36 S. C. 576; Cooper v. Cooper, 24 Ohio St. 488).

The word "family" in a will is one of flexible meaning and will be construed differently as the circumstances require, in order that the apparent meaning in which it is used in any given case may be carried into effect. Farnam v. Farnam, 77 Atl. 70, 72, 83 Conn. 369.

The word "family" in its most usual signification is the group comprising the husband and wife and their dependent children. In a broader sense it consists of a person acting as head or manager with others living with and depending upon him and occupying the same home. Floyd County v. Wolfe, 117 N. W. 32, 33, 138 Iowa, 749.

The word "family," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 235, declaring that, if a man has his family living in one place and he does business in another, the former shall be considered his residence, etc., is any group of persons constituting a distinct domestic body. State ex rel. Young v. Hays, 117 N. W. 615, 616, 105 Minn. 399.

The word "family," as used in Const. art. 16, § 50, and in the statute exempting the homestead from forced sale in the lifetime of the husband or head of the family, has a broader signification and includes a greater variety of persons than the words "widow and minor children and unmarried daughters remaining with the family," for whose benefit the homestead is required to be set apart by Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2046, 2049, on the death of a husband leaving a widow, minor children, and unmarried daughters remaining with the family. Wilkins v. Briggs, 107 S. W. 135, 138, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 596.

"Family," as used in the statute providing for service of a summons by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of abode with some person of his family, may be defined as "a collective body of persons who live in one house, under one head or manager, including parents, children, and servants, and, as the case may be, lodgers or boarders" (quoting 3 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 2673), and where the relation between the person to whom the papers are delivered and the other persons of the household is of a permanent and domestic character, and not merely temporary, he is a person of the family on whom constructive service of process against another member may be made. Colter v. Luke, 108 S. W. 608, 609, 129 Mo. App. 702.

The word "family," as used in the section of the Code defining "domicile," conveys the idea of the unity of the household in which are gathered the members of the family as one collective body under the management of the head thereof, or to which the head of the family, though called away by the demands of business at times, constantly returns or expects to return. Forlaw v. Augusta Naval Stores Co., 52 S. E. 898, 901, 124 Ga. 261.

"The word 'family' is an expression of great flexibility. It is applied in many ways. It may mean the husband and the wife having no children and living alone together, or it may mean children, or wife and children or blood relatives, or any group constituting a distinct domestic or social body. Thus it may include the husband, wife, father, mother, son, daughter, brother, and sister of another." Klee v. Klee, 93 N. Y. Supp. 588, 590, 47 Misc. Rep. 101 (quoting and adopting definition in Carmichael v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 16 N. W. 871, 51 Mich. 494).

Where a testator whose family consisted of himself, his wife, brother and B., a young girl whom he had taken to live in the family, directed that his executor should take proper care of B., supplying her with comfortable wearing apparel, food, etc., as long as she remained "a member of my family, or until she became twenty-one years of age," he used the term "my family" to describe an entity different from and independent of the units of which it was composed, and B.'s right to care and support was not terminated by the death of either the wife or the brother. Miller v. Miller, 39 S. E. 597, 599, 99 Va. 662, 86 Am. St. Rep. 919.

As determined by dependent condition

Where it appears that a grandmother has kept her grandchild since infancy, maintaining her in her own home, and there is evidence that the parents are unable to support the child, the two constitute a family within the meaning of the homestead exemption. First Nat. Bank v. Sokolski (Tex.) 131 S. W. 818, 821.

A "family" has been defined as "a collective body of persons, who live in one house, under one head or manager." A person furnishing a home for himself, his mother, two minor brothers, and an invalid sister, and furnishing the groceries and money for their support, is the head of a "family," within the statute, fixing the amount of wages which shall be exempt. Jarboe v. Jarboe, 79 S. W. 1162, 1163, 106 Mo. App. 459.

As determined by obligation to support

The word "family" in the exemption law implies a collection of persons of which the debtor is the head, and while one may be a member of his family though residing apart from him, especially the debtor's wife and minor children, the debtor's mother, residing apart from him and not shown to be a poor person unable to maintain herself by work, is not a member of his family, so as to exempt money due him for services from execution. Lawson v. Lawson, 111 Pac. 354, 355, 158 Cal. 446.

Though a mother not living with her son is not strictly a member of his family, where she is in poor health, destitute, is supported by him, as the law requires, and resides within the state, she is a member of his family, within the statute exempting a debtor's earnings when necessary for the use of his "family." Lawson v. Lawson, 115 Pac. 461, 462, 15 Cal. App. 496.

To constitute one or more persons, with another, living together in the same house, a "family," it must appear that they are being supported by that other in whole or in part, and are dependent on him therefor, and further that he is under a natural or moral obligation to render such support. Sheehy v. Scott, 104 N. W. 1139, 1140, 128 Iowa, 551, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365 (citing Fox v. Waterloo Nat. Bank, 102 N. W. 424, 126 Iowa, 481).

Where such a social status exists between brother and sister that a moral, if not a legal, obligation rests on the brother to support and take care of the sister, and there is a corresponding state of dependence on her part for such support and care, a family relation exists, within the statute exempting homesteads. H. P. Drought & Co. v. Stall- worth, 100 S. W. 188, 189, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 159.

An adult son, for whose support his father is not legally liable, and who does not reside with his father, is not a member of his father's "family," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. §§ 1879, 2403, which exempt the earnings of a debtor for 60 days, where they are "necessary for the use of a family wholly or partly supported by his labor"; and the payment by a father from his earnings to a son living separate from him of $600, when the father was in fact insolvent, and knew such fact, or at least that his solvency was doubtful, was a transfer with intent to hinder and delay creditors, which constituted an act of bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a (1) 30 Stat. 546. In re Condon, 198 Fed. 947, 948.

As determined by relationship

Where a statute authorizes the incorporation of mutual benefit associations for the payment of death benefits, according to by-laws adopted, "to the husband, wife, father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister and legal representatives of such member," and the certificates of an association incorporated thereunder provide for the payment of benefits "to the family, orphans, or dependents as such member may direct," the word "family" refers to the persons designated in the statute, and includes the mother of a member with whom such member was living. Klee v. Klee, 93 N. Y. Supp. 588, 589, 47 Misc. Rep. 101.

An averment that accused sent a threatening letter to F. and the members of her family, to wit, her granddaughter and her son-in-law, without further stating the relation between F. and the other two, is sufficient to support an indictment under Act No. 110 of 1908, providing a punishment for sending letters to another for the purpose of extorting money, threatening to kill, kidnap, etc., him or any member of his family; the act specifically providing that the term "family" shall include the lineal and collateral relatives, to and including the third degree. State v. Allen, 56 South. 655, 658, 129 La. 733.

The word "family," used in the constitution of a benefit association to designate the class to which the beneficiaries must belong, includes the following persons, who are entitled to take as a general rule in the order named: The wife and unmarried children, or, if no unmarried children, the wife alone, or, if no wife, the unmarried children alone, or, if no wife and no unmarried children, persons related by consanguinity or affinity, living with the member in the same household, or, if none, any person so related on whom the member is dependent, or any person so related, dependent on, and supported by the member, or, if none, the married children, irrespective of dependency, or, if none, father, mother, brothers, and sisters, irrespective of actual household connection and dependence. Starnes v. Atlanta Police Relief Ass'n, 58 S. E. 481, 484, 2 Ga. App. 237.

The relation of brother and sisters alone would not make them decedents' "family" or of his family within the meaning of beneficiary certificates of insurance or articles of incorporation. Walker v. Peters, 124 S. W. 35, 36, 139 Mo. App. 681.

The word "family" in the charter of a mutual benefit society, like "relative," has a very extensive scope and has been held to include relatives and connections both by blood and marriage. The charter of a beneficial association provided that its object was to establish a benefit fund for the families or dependents of members as they shall direct, and a by-law declared that on the death of one or more beneficiaries prior to the death of the member, if no change of beneficiary should have been made, the share or shares to which such beneficiaries would have been entitled shall be paid to the beneficiary's legal representative, to be distributed to his or her heirs at law. Held, that where a member of such order died after the death of his wife, who was named as his beneficiary, without appointing a new beneficiary, the heirs of the wife at the time of the member's death were entitled to the fund. Anderson v. Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion, 60 Atl. 759, 69 N. J. Eq. 176.

As determined by residence together

Where a member of a fraternal beneficiary society lived in the home of friends, and none of them were dependent on such member; and, while he paid no board, they expected to be compensated therefor at his death, it was held that the wife of the person in whose home the member lived was not a member of his "family," within the statute providing that the payment of death benefits shall be to the family, etc., of the member. Supreme Commandery, U. O. G. C., v. Donaghey, 72 Atl. 419, 75 N. H. 197.

Brothers and sisters

"Family," as used in Civ. Code, § 230, providing for the legitimization of a bastard by "receiving it * * * with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family," means no more than that the father must have a home, a settled place of habitation of which he is the head, into which he must receive the child, with the consent of his wife, if he be married; and brothers and sisters, who never live with him, are no part of his family. In re Gird's Estate, 108 Pac. 490, 504, 157 Cal. 534, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131.

The term "family," as defined by the Supreme Court of South Carolina, "is a collective body of persons who live in one home, under one head or manager." The head of the family is not necessarily the father of children. The word has a sort of flexible meaning, yet in construing the homestead law, while there is no well-defined rule that is applicable to every case, and however flexible the term, it is not dependent upon the mere will or caprice of the debtor. A single man, living alone, and whose parents are living, is not the head of a family and entitled to exemptions because he pays the board and expenses of a sister at school. In re McGowan, 170 Fed. 493, 494.

Under Code Miss. 1806, § 2147, giving a debtor, who is a citizen householder and having a "family," certain exemptions, a resident bankrupt, who was a widower, is not entitled to exemptions by reason of the fact that he contributes to some extent to the support of two sisters who do not reside with him. In re Rainwater, 191 Fed. 738, 740.

Children

The word "family" may include an entire household, all descended from a common stock, their husbands and wives, but does not include the child of a son who was born and always resided in a distant state. Brett v. Donaghe's Guardian, 45 S. E. 324, 325, 101 Va. 786.

Where the will made a bequest to a son for certain specific purposes, and provided that the balance, if any, and the son's share of the residuary estate, should be held in trust for the benefit of the son and "his family," it was held that, unaided by the context, the words "his family" should be construed as "his children." Moredock v. Moredock, 179 Fed. 163, 171.

The word "family," in the statute providing that property exempt under the homestead exemption law shall be for the use and benefit of the family of the debtor from whose estate the property has been exempted in homestead proceedings, includes children born afterwards to husband and wife as well as those in esse and designated in such proceedings. Hughes v. Purcell, 68 S. E. 1111, 135 Ga. 174.

A testator bequeathed to one of his daughters a piece of property, to be appraised. The will deprived her of power to sell such property, except for reinvestment in other property suitable for a home for herself and family, and to be used for that purpose, and stated that testator's purpose was to provide a home for his daughter and her family as long as she lived. The will also gave a sum of money equal to the amount at which such house and lot should be appraised, to be invested by the executor for a home for another daughter, to be held in the same manner, for the same purpose, and under the same limitations as provided about the house and lot devised to the first-named daughter. It is held that, though the children of the second daughter were not expressly mentioned in the will, the word "family," as used in the limitation which applies alike to both daughters, includes the children, who therefore have an interest in the fund bequeathed to the daughter for the purpose of securing a home, which she has no authority to apply for any other purpose. Coleman v. Grimes (Ky.) 110 S. W. 349, 350.

Same—Adult children

The term "family" in the charter of a beneficial association authorizing a member to designate, as the beneficiary, a person of his "immediate family," or, in default of such family, one of his blood relatives, includes a daughter of insured living with him as a member of the same household, with him as its head, though she be of age so that he is not legally bound to support her and she is not under his legal control. He may designate her as the beneficiary, though she left his home, intending to make a living for herself, and though he left a widow and minor children, who were at his death a part of his household, dependent on him. The primary meaning of the word "family," as used in our language to specify a definite group of persons, is "the collective body of persons who form one household under one head and one domestic government, including parents, children, and servants" (quoting and adopting definition in Century Dict.). In construing a writing in which the word "family" is used, this primary meaning should be assumed in determining the expressed intention of the writer unless there is something in the context to show that it is used in some other meaning. The same person may be either a member of the "immediate family" of the insured or one of his "blood relatives." Both groups are composed of persons of the same "family" with the member; in the former reference being had to the primary meaning of "family" as denoting members of one household, gathered around one head, and in the latter to "family" as denoting individuals related through descent from one stock. "Family" is frequently used to denote those connected by the tie of common descent as well as that of a common household. The words "immediate family" are used in this connection to indicate a group of persons, of which the insured is one, connected as one "family" and from which is excluded any member who has become separated from the group as constituting one household, and "immediate family" certainly includes all persons bound together by the ties of relationship and parents and children living together as members of one household under one head. Dalton v. Knights of Columbus, 67 Atl. 510, 511, 512, 80 Conn. 212, 125 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 Ann. Cas. 568 (citing Town of Cheshire v. Town of Burlington, 31 Conn. 326, 329; Hart v. Goldsmith, 51 Conn. 479, 480; Wood v. Wood, 28 Atl. 520, 63 Conn. 324, 327; Crosgrove v. Crosgrove, 38 Atl. 219, 69 Conn. 416, 422; Knights of Columbus v. Rowe, 40 Atl. 451, 70 Conn. 545, 550; Hoadly v. Wood, 42 Atl. 263, 71 Conn. 452, 456).

The word "family," in the statute as to allowances on the administration of estates, includes such persons as constituted the family of the deceased at the time of his death, whether servants or children who had attained their majority. Gillett v. Gillett, 69 N. E. 942, 945, 207 Ill. 136.

Husband or wife as member

The word "family" has its root in the Oscan word "famul," which signifies a slave. Much of this primary meaning was applicable to the status of married women at the common law with reference to property. If a husband and wife occupy land belonging to him as a homestead, she is a "family" of the owner. Cross v. Benson, 75 Pac. 558, 560, 68 Kan. 495, 64 L. R. A. 560.

A widow, who continues to occupy the homestead, and whose children have all arrived at majority and moved away, is the "family of the owner," within the constitutional provision exempting as a homestead the residence occupied by the family of the owner. Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Price, 75 Pac. 1019, 68 Kan. 640.

The provision of the Constitution that "a homestead * * * occupied as a residence by the 'family of the owner' * * * shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists," clearly implies that it was not intended that the family, as a family, or any member thereof except the ostensible owner, should be considered as an "owner." "The family" and "the owner" are clearly contradistinguished by the Constitution. Vining v. Willis, 20 Pac. 232, 234, 40 Kan. 609.

Kindred or next of kin

In a bequest of personalty, the word "family" is synonymous with "kindred," those related by blood who are entitled as next of kin under the statute of distribution. Jacobs v. Prescott, 65 Atl. 761, 762, 102 Me. 63.

One person

A woman occupying a dwelling house is a "family," within Manuf. Dig. Ark. § 1800 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 1143), punishing the disturbance of the peace of any town, neighborhood, or "family"; and an indictment alleging the disturbance of the peace of an individual is insufficient, without alleging that the individual constituted a "family." Miles v. United States, 103 S. W. 598, 599, 7 Ind. T. 11.

The term "family" implies dependence, and any number of persons more than one living together under the same roof with some one of their number as head, who controls the affairs of the household, and upon whom the others, or some of them, are by reason of legal or moral obligation dependent, constitute a family, and the person in control the "head of a family," and hence a widow who purchased land and resided thereon alone with no one depending upon her was not the "head of a family" within the statute exempting the homestead from forced sale. Elliott v. Thomas, 143 S. W. 563, 564, 161 Mo. App. 441.

The word "family" denotes a household consisting of more than one person, but a homestead once acquired by one having a family remains to him for his own benefit while occupied as such, though death has taken the rest of the family. Weaver v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 94 Pac. 273, 277, 76 Kan. 540, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, 123 Am. St. Rep. 155.

Same—Husband or wife alone

A wife, who has separated from her husband, constitutes his "family," within the meaning of testamentary provisions for the benefit of himself and family, contained in his father's will, made before the separation, when there are no children, and the husband receives an income from such estate, payable to the benefit of himself and family, but contributes none of it for his wife's support. Oberndorf v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 814, 815, 71 Misc. Rep. 64.

However protracted the abandonment of a wife by her husband may be, they still constitute in law a "family," so far as the homestead is concerned, where there has been no severance of the domestic relation. Stephens v. Stephens, 85 S. W. 1093, 1094, 139 Ky. 810 (quoting language of Baum v. Turner, 76 S. W. 129, 139 Ky. 597).

The duty of a husband toward his children, notwithstanding a divorce awarding to the wife the custody of the children, constitutes the husband and his children, when living together, a family, entitled to a homestead exemption, and, until the children are actually taken from the husband, he, with them, constitute a family. Sykes v. Speer (Tex.) 112 S. W. 422, 426.

Though, when material was furnished for defendant's premises, a suit by him against his wife for divorce for desertion was pending, and a decree for him was subsequently rendered, his status was such as to entitle him to claim a homestead; he being then a married man, the head of a family, consisting of his wife and minor children, and the required elements of a family, constituted of himself and his minor children, existing after the divorce. Dinwiddie v. Tims, 114 S. W. 400, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 72.

A single person is not a "family," and therefore cannot claim a homestead unless continuing in possession as surviving spouse. Sheehy v. Scott, 104 N. W. 1139, 1140, 128 Iowa, 551, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365 (citing Fulleton v. Sherrill, 87 N. W. 419, 114 Iowa, 511; Emerson v. Leonard, 65 N. W. 153, 96 Iowa, 311, 59 Am. St. Rep. 372).

After the death of the children without issue and the sale of the testator's dwelling house, the widow cannot be regarded as constituting the "family" for whose support the testator made provision in his will. Metcalf v. Union Trust Co. of New York, 73 N. E. 498, 503, 181 N. Y. 39.

The fourth clause of a will gave the remainder of testatrix's real estate to the wives of her three sons and to her fourth son, share and share alike, the indebtedness of a certain firm to be deducted from the shares given to the wives of the three sons, and the property so given to the wives to be for the education of their children and the support of "their families." After the death of testatrix, one of the married sons died, leaving no children, and his widow remarried. Held, that such wife was no longer a member of the "family" of the deceased husband, and she took the entire interest in the estate devised to her subject to a particular charge, which trust having been accomplished the trust terminated, and she was entitled to have the property turned over to her. Stone v. McLain, 66 Atl. 375, 378, 102 Me. 168.

Parents

"The Century Dictionary defines 'family' to mean: The collective body of persons who form one household under one head and one domestic government, including parents, children, and servants, and, as sometimes used, even lodgers or boarders. Parents with their children, whether they dwell together or not; in a more general sense, any group of persons closely related by blood, as parents, children, uncles, aunts, and cousins; oftener used in a restricted sense only of a group of parents and children founded upon the principals of monogamy. In the most general sense those who descend from a common progenitor." A minor unless married has no "family" of his own, strictly speaking, but is a member of his father's family, and in that sense every member of the father's family is also a member of the family of the others comprising the household, and hence under Act July 9, 1901, authorizing a summons to be served by handing a copy to an adult member of defendant's family at his dwelling house, service on a minor was good where the copy of the writ was delivered to his father at the dwelling house where defendant resided with his father. Yerkes v. Stetson, 61 Atl. 113, 114, 211 Pa. 556.

Surviving husband or wife and children

Under Code Iowa, § 2972, providing that the "homestead of every family, whether owned by the husband or wife, is exempt from judicial sale," it is not essential to the exemption that there should be one who is the head of the "family" or members who are dependent, and upon the death of a father and mother so long as their children, or any number of them, continue to reside on the homestead property as members of the same family the homestead character continues or a new family is created which is entitled to homestead rights in the property, and in either case it cannot be sold to satisfy the debts of any one of the heirs contracted after the decease of their parents, whether such heirs are members of the family or not. In re Rafferty, 112 Fed. 512, 513.

Rev. St. § 3061, provides that a year's allowance of $300 shall be made to the widow of a deceased person and $100 in addition thereto for every member of the family beside the widow; and section 3062 defines "family" as every person to whom the deceased or widow stood in place of a parent, who was residing with the deceased at his death, whose age did not then exceed 15 years. Held that, where the widow refused to assume the control and maintenance of two stepchildren under 15 years of age for a year after the death of her husband, she was only entitled to an allowance of $300; the allowance for the children being payable to their guardian. In re Stewart, 52 S. E. 255, 256, 140 N. C. 28 (citing Hollomon v. Hollomon, 34 S. E. 99, 125 N. C. 29).

Unmarried man with mistress and children

"While the law will not recognize as a 'family' entitled to the homestead exemption in this state, a man and a woman living together in adultery, yet it has been held that there rests on the father of illegitimate children a natural obligation to support them, and they, living with him, constitute such a 'family' as may assert homestead rights." Rutherford v. Mothershead, 92 S. W. 1021, 1023, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 360 (citing and adopting Lane v. Phillips, 6 S. W. 610, 69 Tex. 240, 5 Am. St. Rep. 41).

Where a woman and her putative husband were living together illegally at the time he bought certain property, they did not constitute a "family" within the meaning of the homestead law, so as to permit such property being declared homestead property, and a conveyance of the land by him was not void because she did not join therein. Middleton v. Johnston (Tex.) 110 S. W. 789, 790.

As relating to time of death

The term "family," as used in Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1469, providing under certain circumstances for the distribution of an entire decedent's estate for the use and support of his family, only includes the widow and those children living as members of the decedent's family immediately before and at the time of his death, and does not include a widow who had abandoned her husband and was not living with him at the time of his death. In re Miller's Estate, 111 Pac. 255, 257, 158 Cal. 420; In re Bose's Estate, 111 Pac. 258, 158 Cal. 423.

A stepfather who was not a member of his stepdaughter's family at the time of her death, though at a previous time he had boarded with her for a time, was not a member of her "family," within Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1903, c. 73, § 1, and the provisions of a benefit certificate issued to her permitting the payment of the death benefit to a member of the "family" of the member of the beneficial association. Supreme Lodge, Order of Mutual Protection, v. Dewey, 106 N. W. 140, 142, 142 Mich. 686, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 113 Am. St. Rep. 596, 7 Ann. Cas. 681.

Under St. 1876, p. 22, c. 16, incorporating a relief association "for the purpose of assisting the families of deceased members of said association," and a by-law of the association providing that on the death of a member there shall be paid to such member of his family as he shall have designated to receive it $1,000, and that each member on joining shall designate some member of his family to whom it shall be paid, provided that he may change such designation, by transferring it to another member of his family, and that, if a member at his death shall have failed to make such designation, the money shall be paid to his widow, the person designated must be a member of his family at his death, so that, his children who were designated having married and moved from his house, his widow, who was a member of his family at his death, is entitled to the money; his children having ceased to be members of his "family." Spear v. Boston Police Relief Ass'n, 81 N. E. 196, 197, 195 Mass. 351 (citing Elsey v. Odd Fellows' Mut. Relief Ass'n, 7 N. E. 844, 142 Mass. 224; Marsh v. Supreme Council A. L. H., 21 N. E. 1070, 149 Mass. 512, 4 L. R. A. 382; Dodge v. Boston & P. R. Corp., 28 N. E. 243, 154 Mass. 229-301, 13 L. R. A. 318; Phelps v. Phelps, 10 N. E. 452, 143 Mass. 570-574; Smith v. Boston & Maine Railroad Relief Ass'n, 46 N. E. 626, 168 Mass. 213).

As too indefinite to describe parties

The word "family" is too indefinite to describe a party to a contract, and hence an allegation that defendant let certain premises to plaintiff and his family did not describe the parties to the contract with sufficient certainty. Davis v. Smith, 58 Atl. 630, 632, 26 R. I. 129, 66 L. R. A. 478, 106 Am. St. Rep. 691, 3 Ann. Cas. 832.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT

A "family arrangement" means practically a family association, under a common roof, by a common fireside, in a common lodging and at a common table. Such arrangement for pupils and head masters of a private boarding school is a mere incident to the school use of the building and does not destroy the tax exemption. State ex rel. Spillers v. Johnston, 113 S. W. 1083, 1086, 214 Mo. 656, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171.

FAMILY ARTICLE

"A carriage is peculiarly a 'family' or household article. It contributes, in a large degree, to the health, convenience, comfort, and welfare of the household or of the family." Arthur v. Morgan, 5 Sup. Ct. 241, 112 U. S. 495, 500, 28 L. Ed. 825.

FAMILY EXPENSE

"Family expenses," within a statute making such expenses chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, includes supplies used in part for domestic servants. Perkins v. Morgan, 85 Pac. 640, 641, 36 Colo. 360.

"Family expenses," within Code, § 3165, making such expenses chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, includes the purchase price of a heating stove, wringer, coal oil and can, buggy and carriage kept for the use of the family. McDaniels v. McClure, 120 N. W. 1031, 1032, 142 Iowa, 370, 134 Am. St. Rep. 424.

The phrase "expenses of the family," as used in 3 Mills' Ann. St. 1891 (2d Ed.) § 3021a, providing that the expenses of the family are chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, is not limited to necessities, and what shall be included in the term must be determined by the facts of each case, subject to the limitations that the articles must have been purchased for and used in or by the family or some member thereof. Gilman v. Matthews, 77 Pac. 366, 20 Colo. App. 170.

Carriage

"Family expenses," within Rev. St. 1908, § 3021, making such expenses chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, includes a purchase by a husband of a buggy for family use while he and his wife are living together, though on one occasion he did not permit her to use the buggy, and though about a year after the purchase they separated. Houck v. La Junta Hardware Co., 114 Pac. 645, 50 Colo. 228, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939.

Medical attendance or service

"Family expenses," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4508, making such expenses chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, includes ordinary medical aid and advice for the wife. Russell v. Graumann, 82 Pac. 998, 999, 40 Wash. 667, 5 Ann. Cas. 830.

FAMILY MEDICINES

"The expression 'family medicines' is synonymous with such expressions as 'domestic remedies,' 'household remedies,' etc., found in the statute of other states and common in general parlance. It includes such things as camphor, quinine, paregoric, spirits of turpentine, castor oil, and salt peter, epsom salts, etc., but not a preparation containing sulphuric acid." Lewis v. Brannen, 65 S. E. 189, 190, 6 Ga. App. 419.

FAMILY SETTLEMENT

An agreement on the part of a brother of a deceased person with another brother and sister to refrain from contesting the will of decedent in consideration of the promise of the latter, beneficiaries named in the will, to pay to him a certain sum of money, is not, on the facts stated in the opinion, a "family settlement," within the meaning of the law upon that subject. Montgomery v. Grenier, 136 N. W. 9, 10, 117 Minn. 416.

FANCIFUL

A trade-name may be such as indicates the purpose of the association or may be arbitrary or fanciful, such fanciful or arbitrary words or phrases, as applied to an association organized for legitimate purposes, constituting a valid trade-name, and such words or phrases are deemed "arbitrary" or "fanciful" when they do not by their usual and ordinary meaning denote the purposes of the association, but come to indicate their purpose by application and association. Creswill v. Grand Lodge K. P. of Georgia, 67 S. E. 188, 191, 133 Ga. 837, 134 Am. St. Rep. 231, 18 Ann. Cas. 453.

FANCY

FANCY STATIONERY

"The term 'fancy stationery' covers a miscellaneous assembly of leather and other goods, such as pocketbooks, bags, card cases, and many kindred articles, which cannot be classified." Crook v. Commissioners' Court of Calhoun County, 39 South. 383, 144 Ala. 505 (quoting and adopting definition in 9 Americanized Enc. Brit. p. 5555).

FANS

The phrase "fans of all kinds," in the Tariff Act does not include so-called fans consisting of unsubstantial paper novelties in the shape of fans. R. F. Downing & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 490.

The phrase "fans of all kinds," in the Tariff Act, does not include everything which may be called a fan, and to an exceedingly limited extent used as a fan. So-called cigar fans and firecracker fans, consisting of small folding fans closing into cases representing cigars, etc., are dutiable as "toys." Morimura Bros. v. United States, 175 Fed. 887, 889.

Embroidered fans are within the term "fans of all kinds," in the Tariff Act, and not within the term "embroidered wearing apparel." United States v. Quong Lee & Co., 173 Fed. 819, 820.

FANTAIL

"Fantail" is a process of floating boats. It differs from the ordinary process in that instead of pulling at right angles with the canal, by means of numerous small pockets at short intervals along the canal in such way that the territory covered from each pocket has the shape of a parallelogram, the pull boat operates at varying angles from one large pocket, and the territory covered has the shape of an open fan. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 342, 117 La. 1.

FAR

See Passenger Paying Fare.

As provisions, see Provisions.

Increase of rate of fare, see Increase.

Refusal to pay fare, see Refuse—Refusal.

A charge to a passenger of 10 cents in addition to the usual fare, making the total 3 cents over the lawful rate of fare, is "fare," within Railroad Law, § 58, providing a penalty for asking and receiving more than the lawful rate of fare, though the amount was repayable on presentation by the passenger of a slip given him on making the payment. Hogan v. Long Island R. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 449, 450, 142 App. Div. 29.

The purchase of a ticket by a passenger is not the payment of a fare. Payment of fares is made to the conductor alone, whether such fare be paid by cash or by ticket. A fare is a payment that is made when the right of carriage is claimed. As defined by Webster's International Dictionary the word "fare" originally meant "journey," and such is still its connotation. When a ticket is accepted by the conductor, it becomes a fare, but not before. Shelton v. Erie R. Co., 66 Atl. 403, 407, 73 N. J. Law, 558, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 118 Am. St. Rep. 704, 9 Ann. Cas. 883.

FARM

See Being Upon Farms; On the Farm; State Farm.

My farm, see My.

The terms "farm" and "lot" in the tax law are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense. A tract of land, 18,000 acres of which are in one town and 14,000 in another, the entire tract being mountainous, woody, covered with lakes, containing a number of buildings, some of which were in each town and used for residences, hunting lodges, servants' residences, and in the manufacture on a large scale of maple sugar and lumber, is not a "farm or lot" within the Tax Law, providing that, if a farm or lot is divided by a line between two tax districts, and the owner resides thereon, it shall be assessed to him in the district in which he lives. People ex rel. Low v. Willson, 98 N. Y. Supp. 1080, 1081, 113 App. Div. 1.

A tract or lot of land consisting of between five and six acres and devoted to agricultural purposes, and which the tenant was required by his contract to keep manured, is a "farm." Kroeger v. Bohrer, 91 S. W. 159, 161, 116 Mo. App. 208 (citing Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. loc. cit. 547; State v. Kennerly, 4 S. E. 47, 98 N. C. loc. cit. 659; In re Drake, 114 Fed. 231; Kendall v. Miller [N. Y.] 47 How. Prac. loc. cit. 448; Webst. Dict.).

The word "farm" has been defined as a tract of land under one control or forming a single property devoted to agriculture, stock raising, dairy produce, or some allied industry, and again as a tract of ground cultivated or designed for cultivation by a farmer, and again as a piece of ground devoted by its owner to agriculture, and again as a body of land, usually under one ownership, devoted to agriculture, either to the raising of crops, or pasture, or both. The term will not apply to a narrow strip of unplatted land about 550 feet long lying in a city and never used for agricultural purposes. Williams v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 1133, 1135, 228 Ill. 593 (citing Standard Dict.; Webster's Dict.; People ex rel. Rogers v. Caldwell, 32 N. E. 691, 693, 142 Ill. 434, 441).

Detached parcels

Where an owner of land, situated in different counties and consisting of separate tracts, resided on one tract, but farmed all the tracts, and one of the tracts was in another county with separate farm buildings, the personal property on the latter tract was taxable in the county in which it was located, under the rule that personal property must be assessed in the district where the owner resides, except when the owner of personalty connected with a farm does not reside thereon, in which case the same must be assessed in the district where the farm is situated; the fact that different tracts of land owned by the same person are managed as parts of one system for farm purposes not making the tracts a single "farm." People v. Scheifley, 96 N. E. 890, 891, 252 Ill. 496.

FARM CROSSINGS

A farm crossing is a crossing used in connection with land employed for agricultural purposes. Williams v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 132 Ill. App. 274, 277; Id., 81 N. E. 1133, 1135, 228 Ill. 593.

The "farm crossings" required to be constructed by law (P. S. 4450), providing that a railroad company shall construct and maintain farm crossings and cattle guards at all farm and road crossings sufficient to turn cattle, are surface crossings. Libby v. Cana- dian Pac. Ry. Co., 73 Atl. 593, 594, 82 Vt. 316.

Where a railroad company covenanted to provide suitable farm crossings, and the successors in title of the original covenantee for many years used one of such crossings to reach a village, post office, and station, in which use the company acquiesced, it could not abolish the crossing on the ground that it ceased to be used as a "farm crossing." Kraer v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 67 Atl. 871, 872, 218 Pa. 569.

In a conveyance of land to a railroad company, the grantee agreed to make and maintain the necessary fences on both sides of the tract conveyed, and to provide the grantor with a suitable and convenient road crossing. At the time of the conveyance, the land was farm land, and the road crossing connected the portions of the farm severed by the railroad. Fences were built with sliding bars at the road crossing, and both parties acquiesced in this arrangement for many years. Held that the crossing was a "farm crossing" only. Speer v. Erie R. Co., 65 Atl. 1024, 1025, 72 N. J. Eq. 411.

The words "farm crossings" in St. 1898, § 1810, requiring the maintenance by railroads of suitable farm crossings for the use of the occupants of lands adjoining, are descriptive of the kinds of crossings required, as distinguished from highway crossings, and are not limited to crossings for the use of occupants of adjoining farm lands; and hence, where a railroad passed through land on which was situated a plant for the making of bricks from clay taken from the land, the railroad was required to make a suitable and convenient crossing so as to enable the use of the clay on both sides of the railroad right of way. Manitowoc Clay Product Co. v. Manitowoc, G. B. & N. W. Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 390, 393, 135 Wis. 94.

See Steam Farm Engine.

FARM HAND

As domestic servant, see Domestic Servant—Domestics.

FARM LABORER

A woman, doing ordinary housework and cooking for laborers on a farm is not a "farm laborer," within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6277, giving a lien for the wages of a farm laborer. Lowe v. Abrahamson, 119 N. W. 241, 242, 18 N. D. 182, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 20 Ann. Cas. 355.

Foreman

A foreman performing manual labor on a farm is a "farm laborer," within Rev. Laws, c. 108, § 79, providing that sections 71 and 78, defining the liability of employers, shall not apply to injuries to farm laborers by fellow employes. Rowley v. Ellis, 83 N. E. 1163, 1104, 197 Mass. 391.

FARM PRODUCT

Beef from slaughtered animals raised and slaughtered on the farm is the "product of the farm," and may be sold within city limits without a license. In re Snyder, 70 Pac. 819, 822, 10 Idaho, 682, 68 L. R. A. 708.

FARMER

Association of farmers as partnership, see Partnership.

See, also, Farming.

A "farmer," as the term is usually understood, is one who directs the business of a farm and works at farm labor. Foglesong v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 97 S. W. 240, 241, 121 Mo. App. 548.

A statement of claim which describes a person as one who "owned and resided on a farm" contains a sufficient foundation for the assumption that such a person is a "farmer," within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act. Miller v. Jackson, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 31, 39.

As chief occupation

Where a man has for years made farming his principal occupation, and intends to do so in the near future, the mere fact that he may not be so engaged, and his team, wagon, and harness not be used in farming when levied upon, does not deprive him of his exemption right as a "farmer." State ex rel. McKee v. McNeill, 107 Pac. 1028, 1029, 58 Wash. 47, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1038.

A woman who is a wife may be a "farmer." If she owns or hires a farm and is engaged in running it, she is a "farmer" within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act, but the mere fact that she actually owns a farm does not make her a "farmer." The word "farmer" is synonymous with agriculturist, husbandman, cultivator, or tiller of the soil. The Century Dictionary says a "farmer" is one who cultivates a farm either as owner or lessee; in general one who tills the soil. A "farmer" is one who resides on a farm with his family, cultivating such farm, and mainly deriving his support from it, though he is also the publisher of a weekly newspaper and the proprietor of patent medicines (citing McCue v. Tunstead, 4 Pac. 510, 65 Cal. 506). A "farmer" is one who is devoted to the tillage of the soil, and persons who follow this occupation may call themselves horticulturists, viticulturists, or gardeners, but they are "farmers." In re Johnson, 149 Fed. 864, 867.

As merchant

See Merchant.

As peddler

See Peddler.

Tiller

The term "farmer" is not synonymous with a tiller of the soil. To constitute one a farmer, it is not essential that he in person till the soil or that his operations should be limited to agricultural planting, sowing, and cultivation of the soil. Bank of Dearborn v. Matney, 132 Fed. 75, 76.

FARMERESS

The Century Dictionary has the word "farmeress" defined as a woman who farms; a farmer's wife. In re Johnson, 149 Fed. 864, 867.

FARMING

The term "farming" does not include the development, by artesian wellboring, of a sufficient supply of water with which to irrigate land absolutely unfit for agricultural purposes unless artificial irrigation can be had. Such land is not "suitable for cultivation" within the meaning of the Constitution. Robinson v. Eberhart, 83 Pac. 453, 454, 148 Cal. 495.

"Farming" includes the cultivation and fertilization of the soil, as well as caring for and harvesting the crops. Corey v. Struve, 116 Pac. 975, 978, 16 Cal. App. 310.

A farmer does not cease to be "engaged principally in farming," within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act (30 Stat. 547), because he establishes a dairy as one of the branches of his industry, to utilize the products of his farm and convert them to profitable uses, nor because he may sell the products of his dairy at retail. Gregg v. Mitchell, 166 Fed. 725, 727, 92 C. O. A. 415, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148, 16 Ann. Cas. 510.

The terms "farming" and "tilling of the soil," as used in Bankrupt Act (30 Stat. 544), providing that any natural person, except a wage earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming and the tilling of the soil, etc., may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, are more or less closely allied. The term "farming" is doubtless employed in the act, as a generic term, in a comprehensive sense. It is reasonable to conclude that the term was not limited merely to the production of grains and grasses, and the like. The farmer may cultivate all or a part of his land. He may be general or special. He may devote his cultivation to the production of corn, or wheat, or oats, or rye, or grasses, whichever in his judgment may be the more useful or profitable. He may include with those breeding, feeding, and rearing of live stock, embracing cattle, horses, mules, sheep, and hogs, for domestic use and for market; and, if he find it more profitable to feed his agricultural products to his live stock than to rely upon marketing the surplus, he may not be limited to the quantity of live stock for such purposes to what he may breed or rear upon his farm. For this purpose he may rely entirely upon the purchase of his live stock from his neighbors or on the markets, and utilize his farm products in feeding and fattening such feeders for market. Bank of Dearborn v. Matney, 132 Fed. 75, 76. See,

Where an alleged bankrupt for three years resided on a farm of 800 acres, which he had bought but on which he had paid little, and he farmed less than 100 acres himself, but expended large sums in the purchase of high-bred cattle, which he kept on the farm for a time, and then sold them at auction sales, and in such business became largely indebted, his farming debts being merely nominal, he was not "engaged chiefly in farming" within the national bankruptcy act, and was subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Brown, 132 Fed. 706, 707.

"Where one's occupation or business which is of principal concern to him, not ephemeral, but of some degree of permanency, and on which he mainly relies for his livelihood and financial welfare, be other than farming, he is not a person chiefly engaged in farming." A man whose products from land cultivated by him amount to not more than $1,500 to $1,800 per year, while during the same time he expends in the purchase of live stock, and feed for the same, something near $15,000 per year, and who has become indebted, mainly through his live stock transactions, to the amount of more than $50,000, is not "chiefly engaged in farming," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, and is not exempt from proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. Bank of Dearborn v. Matney, 132 Fed. 75, 82 (quoting Wulbern v. Drake, 120 Fed. 495, 56 C. C. A. 643).

"In Wulbern v. Drake, 120 Fed. 493-495, 56 C. C. A. 643, it was held that the words in the bankruptcy act, 'a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil,' mean the business of cultivating land or employing it for the purpose of husbandry. In Re Drake, 114 Fed. 229-231, it was said, the meaning of these words being under consideration: 'Nor will it profit to trace historically the meaning of the word "farming." In its purely agricultural sense, its use is comparatively modern. Within the purview of this statute it is understood to mean the business of cultivating land or employing it for purposes of husbandry; and a farm is a tract devoted to cultivation under a single control, whether it be large or small, isolated, or made up of many parcels. For a long time after the words began to be used in an agricultural sense they were applied to lands held on lease, and "demise, lease, and to farm let" are still the operative words of a lease, but they are, in modern use, applied without respect to nature of tenure. Robinson Crusoe says, "I farmed upon my own land." So it appears that the words have been used in their present sense for nearly 200 years. Under the proofs in this case the defendant had the direction and control of the farming operations upon all the land described, and was "engaged in farming," and I am of opinion that these words cannot be given the restricted meaning which would take out of the protection of the statute only those engaged in actual labor upon the farm." In re Johnson, 149 Fed. 864, 868.

An alleged bankrupt had for some years conducted a law and collection office; his principal business in connection therewith being the making of collections, and the renting of property for others, and collecting the rents therefor. During the two years prior to the filing of the petition his total earnings from such business did not exceed $450, and were little, if any, above his expenses. He owned a farm of 470 acres, which was improved and rented until about a year prior to the filing of the petition; he being, however, a partner in the stock thereon and consulted in regard to its management. At this time the lease expired, and he thereafter conducted the farm himself, being at the place a considerable portion of the time and moving his family there some time before the commission of the alleged acts of bankruptcy. The gross income from the farm during that season, which was not a favorable one, was about $1,800. His indebtedness arose principally out of his purchase and operation of the farm. Held, that from the time of his assuming the conduct of the farm he was engaged chiefly in farming, and was not subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In re Hoy, 137 Fed. 175, 178.

FARMING TOOLS AND UTENSILS

A steam engine used in connection with a pump for irrigation, with a thresher, and with machinery for cultivating a crop of rice, and not shown to have been used for any other purpose than the cultivation and harvesting of such crop, is a "farming utensil" within Civ. Code, art. 3259, on which the privilege of the vendor is superior to that of the lessor of the land, and this, whether the engine was bought as part of the pump or of the thresher, or at another time and from another source. Lahn & Co. v. Carr, 45 South. 707, 709, 120 La. 797.

Threshing machine

A steam thresher for harvesting a rice crop is a "farming utensil" within Civ. Code, art. 3259, making the vendor's privilege superior to the privilege of the lessor for rent. The word "utensils" more especially means an implement or vessel for domestic or farming use. See Stand. Dict. As used in the Code, "utensils" is a translation of "ustensiles," used in article 2102 of the Code Napoleon. This word, in France, has been held to include a "machine a battre," or threshing machine. In French jurisprudence the word is used as synonymous with "agricultural instruments," whatever may be their nature. It has been held in other states of the Union that "mowers" and "combined harvesters" used by debtors for necessary farm work are within the meaning of the term "farming utensils or implements," as used in exemption laws. Laporte v. Libby, 88 South. 457, 458, 114 La. 570.

FAST

See As Fast As; Mighty Fast; Very Fast.

FAST MAIL

A "fast mail" in railroad parlance is a train which stops only at the more important stations at long intervals of time and space, and which maintains, and presumably is under contract with the United States government to maintain, a great rate of speed. Hicks v. Union Pac. R. Co., 107 N. W. 798, 800, 76 Neb. 496.

FASTEN AND SECURE

The term "fasten and secure," in an instruction as to the care required in confining cars on a siding to prevent their escape to the main track, does not imply that they are to be anchored by means of chains, but refers to the use of the ordinary appliances consisting of brakes and blocks. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 897, 178 Mo. 528, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434.

FATAL

"Fatal" has been defined as causing death; deadly or mortal. Boyer v. State, 121 N. W. 445, 446, 84 Neb. 407.

FATHER

See Come by the Father; Reputed Father; Stepfather.

The right granted by Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2315, to the surviving father or mother to recover damages for the death of their son, is a right granted to the actual father or mother, and not to an adopting parent. Mount v. Tremont Lumber Co., 46 South. 103, 121 La. 64, 126 Am. St. Rep. 312, 15 Ann. Cas. 148.

A statute referring to a father or mother does not in the absence of special statement, include a natural father or mother. Landry v. American Creosote Works, 43 South. 1016, 1017, 119 La. 231, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387.

Mother

The word "father," as used in section 21 of the act concerning wills, by virtue of the provisions of Rev. St. 1874, p. 833, relative to statutes, includes "mother." Walker v. Hyland, 56 Atl. 268, 271, 70 N. J. Law, 69.

See Next of Kin.

FAULT

See Free from Fault; Without Fault.

"Fault," as used in the statute giving a wife, who, without her fault, is living apart from her husband, a remedy in equity for support and maintenance, means a voluntary consenting to the separation, or such failure of duty or misconduct on her part as materially contributes to a disruption of the marital relation. Harding v. Harding, 25 Sup. Ct. 679, 682, 198 U. S. 317, 49 L. Ed. 1066 (citing Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Ill. 510, 16 N. E. 891).

"Fault," as used in the statute prescribing the grounds for a divorce, means more than a mere wrong in the sense of an error or a deviation from the rules of propriety, but embraces also any defect or blemish or impairment of excellence preventing the full consummation of the marriage relation. Mutter v. Mutter, 97 S. W. 393, 394, 123 Ky. 754, 124 Am. St. Rep. 381.

Where a horse killed on a government transport was in charge of the agents of the government and not of the owner, the loss was not caused by his "fault or negligence," within the meaning of the statute providing for payment. Hardie v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 250, 252.

As negligence

"Fault" being synonymous with "negligence," it was not error to charge that the doing of an act by the plaintiff which materially contributed to his injury would not constitute contributory negligence, unless the jury found "that he was in fault in doing such act." Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Long, 96 N. E. 604, 607, 176 Ind. 532 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2703, 2704).

"Fault," in legal literature, is the equivalent of "negligence," and it is so used in a statute giving an action for damage to person or property by a dog where the damage was not occasioned through "fault" of the person injured. Garland v. Hewes, 64 Atl. 914, 915, 101 Me. 549.

The use of the word "fault," in an instruction that want of ordinary care was not a contributing cause unless there was a proximate connection between the injury and the want of care; "that is, it must appear that there was such a relation between plaintiff's fault and the injury that it was a natural result thereof," is not erroneous, as it evidently refers to "want of ordinary care." Sorensen v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 109 N. W. 84, 86, 129 Wis. 366.

The negligent failure of the master of a vessel to make proper use of the ventilating apparatus during the course of a five months' voyage, by reason of which, and the presence in the cargo of a large quantity of coke, the wicker or straw coverings on a large number of wine bottles were sweated and ruined, was not a fault or error in the management of the vessel, within the meaning of Harter Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, § 3, 27 Stat. 445, but "negligence, fault, or failure in proper * * * care of * * * merchandise or property" within section 1, for which the owner of the vessel is liable. The Jean Bart, 197 Fed. 1002, 1005.

Minerals

A "fault," as the word is used in coal mining, "refers to interruptions in the continuity of the coal deposit caused by displacements in the formation or by a pinching together of the overlying and underlying rock strata." Wilson v. Big Joe Block Coal Co., 112 N. W. 89, 90, 134 Iowa, 594.

FAVOR

See Challenge to the Favor; In His Favor.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 806, authorizing the "party in whose favor the verdict was rendered" to appeal from the decision setting it aside as against the evidence, defendant may appeal from the decision setting aside the verdict as awarding inadequate damages. Steinert v. Whitcomb, 79 Atl. 675, 677, 84 Conn. 292.

FEAR

See Putting In Fear; Reasonable Fear.

The expression, "fears of a reasonably courageous man," in a charge on self-defense, is identical in meaning with the expression, "fears of a reasonable man," in Pen. Code 1910, § 71. Cochran v. State, 72 S. E. 281, 282, 9 Ga. App. 824.

The words "fears or hopes," in an instruction that in passing on the credibility of witnesses the jury may consider their "motives, fears, or hopes," express an amplification of the word "motives," but add nothing to its meaning. People v. Glass, 112 Pac. 281, 292, 158 Cal. 650.

FEATHER

Boas, made by stringing dressed feathers on a cord, are subject to the classification of "feathers * * * dressed," etc., under Tariff Act, 30 Stat. 191. Legg v. United States, 163 Fed. 1006, 1007, 90 C. C. A. 176; Id., 154 Fed. 858.

Crude ostrich feathers, which in that condition are never used for ornamental purposes, but need to be dressed before becoming suitable for such use, are dutiable as "feathers * * * crude," and not as "ornamental feathers," under the Tariff Act, 30 Stat. 191. Brodie v. United States, 135 Fed. 914, 915; Spero v. Same, 135 Fed. 915, 916.

Millinery articles, made almost wholly of feathers, but containing a small quantity of wire, which was an important feature of their construction, are dutiable as "articles in part of metal," under the Tariff Act, rather than as "feathers advanced or manufactured." United States v. Berlinger, Brown & Meyer, 187 Fed. 800, 98 C. C. A. 190.

FEATHER RAILS

The term is applied to the rails of a short detached movable railway track made to fit over and connect with the regular track. Burke v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co., 97 S. W. 981, 120 Mo. App. 683.

FEATHERBONE

The term "featherbone" has become the name of the article produced from the quills of feathers and used as a substitute for whalebone. The patentee of a new product used as a substitute for whalebone, and made from the quills of feathers, gave the same in the specification the generic name of "featherbone," by which name it was referred to by him in subsequent patents and became generally known; the word being so defined subsequently in dictionaries, both American and foreign, and used in foreign tariff laws, etc. On the expiration of the original patent the public had the right, not only to make the article, but to sell it by the name "featherbone," and such name could not be monopolized by the patentee as a trade mark for his own manufacture. Warren Featherbone Co. v. American Featherbone Co., 141 Fed. 513, 516, 72 C. C. A. 571 (citing Cent. Dict.; Stand. Dict.; Murray's Eng. Dict.).

FEDERAL

FEDERAL CORPORATION

Where an act of Congress extended over a territory certain state laws relating to corporations making such laws a part of the act as though incorporated therein in hæc verba, it was held that a private corporation organized in the territory under such laws prior to statehood was not a federal corporation in the sense of being incorporated under a federal law so as to authorize it to remove actions against it in the state courts after the territory became a state. Boyd v. Great Western Coal & Coke Co., 189 Fed. 115, 118.

FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL QUESTION

Suit arising under the laws of the United States, see Arise—Arising.

A "federal question" is involved in a case presenting a question under a treaty, a federal statute, or a provision of the federal Constitution. White Swan Mines Co. v. Balliet, 134 Fed. 1004, 1005.

Whether or not legislative power is unconstitutionally delegated to the American Railway Association and the Interstate Commerce Commission by the provision of Safety Appliance Act, providing that only cars with drawbars of uniform height shall be used in interstate commerce, and that the standard shall be fixed by the Association and declared by the Commission, is a federal question within jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 617, 210 U. S. 231, 52 L. Ed. 1061.

A statement of claim which seeks to recover damages for acts of defendant done in his capacity as judge of a state court does not raise a "federal question," and, where there is no diversity of citizenship, a Circuit Court of the United States is without jurisdiction, and it is its duty, on motion therefor, to dismiss the suit. Kinney v. Mitchell, 138 Fed. 270, 271.

A "federal question" which will confer jurisdiction upon a United States court, either by original process or by removal, must be a question of law as stated by the plaintiff in his complaint, and not a question of fact. Where the facts only are in dispute, and the federal law governing the case is uncontroverted, the United States court cannot take jurisdiction. When a legal question arising under the Constitution or a law or a treaty of the United States is decided by the Supreme Court, it ceases to be a federal question. Myrtle v. Nevada, C. & O. R. Co., 137 Fed. 193, 195 (citing State of Kansas v. Bradley, 26 Fed. 289; Austin v. Gagan, 39 Fed. 626, 5 L. R. A. 476; Montana Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 85 Fed. 367, 29 C. C. A. 462; California Oil & Gas Co. v. Miller, 96 Fed. 12; Peabody Gold Min. Co. v. Gold Hill Min. Co., 97 Fed. 657, 660).

A claim by a railway in a state court of immunity from liability for the negligent killing of an employé in the territory of New Mexico because of noncompliance with the requirements of a statute of that territory governing actions for personal injuries received therein presents a federal question, which, when adversely adjudicated, confers jurisdiction on the federal Supreme Court. El Paso & N. E. Ry. Co. v. Gutierrez, 30 Sup. Ct. 21, 23, 215 U. S. 87, 54 L. Ed. 106.

That defendants are receivers of a railroad appointed by a federal court does not make a suit against them one involving a federal question within the removal act (25 Stat. 433). Dale v. Smith, 182 Fed. 360, 362.

The adequacy of the local facilities existing at a station at which a through interstate railroad train is required to stop by an order made under state authority, though not inherently a "federal question," may be considered by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court in so far as the existence of such adequate local facilities is involved in the determination of the federal question as to whether the order does or does not directly regulate interstate commerce.

The claim that the action of a state board of equalization in making an assessment for a tax pursuant to the command of a writ of mandamus was the action of the state, and, if carried out, would violate the federal Constitution by taking property without due process of law, and denying the equal protection of the laws, constitutes a "federal question" within the original jurisdiction of a federal Circuit Court. Raymond v. Chicago Union Traction Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 12, 207 U. S. 20, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757; Same v. Chicago Edison Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 14, 207 U. S. 42, 52 L. Ed. 90.

When a state court decides that a particular formality was or was not essential under the state statute relating to taxation, the decision presents no "federal question" provided the statute as thus construed does not violate the federal Constitution by depriving one of property without due process of law. French v. Taylor, 26 Sup. Ct. 76, 78, 199 U. S. 274, 50 L. Ed. 189.

The judgment of a state court denying the right of possession of real property under a title founded on an act of Congress, which rests upon the ground that the title of the adverse party under a tax deed was made good by prescription under the state Constitution, involves no "federal question" which will sustain a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States. Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 26 Sup. Ct. 41, 45, 199 U. S. 182, 50 L. Ed. 143.

A decision of a state court enforcing the exclusive common-law performing rights of the owners of an unprinted and unpublished play as against the owner of a copyrighted adaptation substantially identical with the original play, who stood upon his copyright, denies a federal right specially set up and claimed, within the meaning of the statute governing writs of error from the federal Supreme Court to state courts. Ferris v. Frohman, 32 Sup. Ct. 263, 264, 223 U. S. 424, 56 L. Ed. 492.

FEDERALIST (The)

"The opinion of The Federalist has always been considered as of great authority. It is a complete commentary on our Constitution, and is appealed to by all parties in the questions to which that instrument has given birth. Its intrinsic merit entitles it to this high rank; and the part two of its authors performed in framing the Constitution put it very much in their power to explain the view with which it was framed. These essays have been published while the Constitution was before the nation for adoption or defection, and having been written in answer to objections founded entirely on the extent of its powers, and on its diminution of state sovereignty, are entitled to the more consideration where they frankly avow that the power objected to is given, and defend it." Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) 264, 418, 5 L. Ed. 257.

FEE

See Base Fee; Conditional Fee; Qualified Fee; Take a Fee; Title in Fee.

The "fee" is the greatest interest that can be granted in real estate. It includes the right of possession and the right to use for any purpose which may be lawful. Where an owner of a pond, or a part thereof and of lands surrounding it, executed to the owner of a millsite on the river which flowed through the waters of the pond, a deed of "all the land that will be overflowed by raising the water level twelve feet only for the purpose of being flowed," and thereafter gave another deed to the same grantee containing the same description and provisions except that it gave the right to raise the water eight instead of twelve feet, the conveyances were for flowage purposes only, leaving the title to the land in the owner. In re Brookfield, 68 N. E. 138, 140, 176 N. Y. 138.

"In common speech the non-mineral portion of land, the portion which covers and envelops the minerals, is called the 'surface' or the 'land,' and the proprietor of land who divests himself of title to the minerals which it contains is still spoken of as the 'owner' of the 'fee' or of the 'surface' or of the 'land.'" In Laws 1897, providing that where the "fee to the surface" of any land is in any person and the right or title to any minerals therein is in another person, the right to such minerals shall be valued and listed separately from the fee to the land, and the land itself and the right to the minerals therein shall be separately taxed to the owners thereof respectively, the "fee to the surface" and "the fee of said lands" are set in opposition to the right or title to any minerals therein. The law has no application except when the right or title to minerals has been severed from the right or title to the remainder of the land. Kansas Nat. Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 751, 75 Kan. 335.

An "estate in fee" may not be an estate in fee simple properly speaking—a pure inheritance, free from any and every qualification or condition. Estates in fee are not thus restricted in their nature. Every estate which may pass to heirs general by descent and continue forever is a fee; the owner having the entire property in himself. Such an estate may be a pure fee simple; or it may be a qualified, base, or determinable fee. The latter is an estate which may continue forever, and is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event circumscribing its continuance or extent, though the object on which it rests for perpetuity may be transitory or perishable, yet such an estate is deemed a fee, because, as is said, it has a possibility of enduring forever. The material difference between a fee simple and other fees is "that the former estate will, the latter may, continue forever." All fees liable to be defeated by an executory devise are determinable fees, and continue descendible inheritances until they are discharged from the determinable quality annexed to them, either by the happening of the event or a release. Ed. died in 1798, having by his last will and testament devised a farm to his son M., his heirs and assigns forever, and another farm to his son J., in like manner. The will contained this clause: "It is my will, and I do order and appoint, that if either of my sons should depart this life without lawful issue, his share or part shall go to the survivor." In 1801, the sheriff sold all the estate which M. then had in his share, by virtue of a f. fa. against him; and J. died in 1813, leaving M. surviving. Held, that the estate devised to M. was a base, qualified, or determinable fee, which became a fee simple on the death of J., and belonged to W. Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Comm. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Prest. Est. 429-431).

Under the rule that an estate in fee conditional cannot be created by implication, a devise to a child, followed by a provision that on his death without bodily heirs the property shall be divided among the surviving heirs of the testator, is a "devise in fee," and is not converted into a fee conditional because of the absence of express words vesting an estate in the bodily heirs. Barber v. Crawford, 67 S. E. 7, 9, 85 S. C. 54.

The word "heirs" is not necessary to create an estate in fee. Tone v. Tillamook City, 114 Pac. 938, 939, 58 Or. 382.

As fee simple or fee simple absolute

A "fee" is the largest possible estate which a man can have being an absolute estate. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 69 N. E. 804, 806, 207 Ill. 611.

"Fee" originally signified the right of the tenant to the use of the land held of a superior, but this meaning passed into the modern signification of an estate of inheritance. Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Atl. 210, 211, 76 N. J. Eq. 568.

As applied to easement or franchise

There is no substantial difference between a qualified "fee" in trust for street uses and an easement for street uses, and in either case the municipal corporation has possession and control of the street for street uses and for nothing further. In re City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 45 Misc. Rep. 162.

The term "fee" in the statute providing that all streets and other public places designated as for public use on the plat of a city shall be deemed to be public property, and the fee thereof be vested in the city, is not used according to its technical legal meaning, but as vesting in the city a complete, perpetual, and continuous title to the places designated as streets so long as it uses them for the purpose intended. City of Leadville v. Bohn Mining Co., 86 Pac. 1038, 1040, 37 Colo. 248, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 11 Ann. Cas. 443.

The word "fee," as used in the eminent domain statute, providing that the condemning corporation shall become seised in "fee" or shall have the exclusive right, title, and possession of the land required to be taken, and may take possession of and use the same for the purposes of a ditch, means only such estate or interest, as is reasonably necessary to accomplish the purpose in view, and where the corporation only asks for a right of way it acquires merely a right of way or easement and not an absolute fee. Smith Canal or Ditch Co. v. Colorado Ice & Storage Co., 82 Pac. 940, 943, 34 Colo. 435, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148.

FEE SIMPLE

See Forever in Fee Simple; Ownership in Fee Simple.

A "fee-simple estate" is so called because it is clear of any condition or restriction as to particular heirs. It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land, being an absolute estate in perpetuity. It is a pure fee; an absolute estate of inheritance; that which a person holds inheritable to him and his heirs general, forever. Where the estate given in the opening sentence of an item of a will is one in fee simple, the further statement that it is to be "possessed absolutely" neither qualifies nor enlarges the estate granted. Frank v. Frank, 111 S. W. 1119, 1121, 120 Tenn. 569 (citing 16 Cyc. p. 602; Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686; Friedman v. Steiner, 107 Ill. 125).

Generally the words "fee simple" mean an absolute estate of inheritance, but not necessarily so. A title in fee simple determinable is in a qualified sense a fee simple; and, where the language in a will is followed by a clearly expressed qualification, it must be held that the testator used the first words in that sense. Orr v. Yates, 70 N. E. 731, 735, 209 Ill. 222.

"Ownership in fee simple implies something more than being the holder of the naked legal title to land. It implies an indefeasible legal title—the entire title and estate in land.” United States v. Hyde, 132 Fed. 545, 550.

The phrase “seised in fee simple,” in Act Cong. May 2, 1890, c. 182, 26 Stat. 91, § 20, providing that no person who shall at the time be “seised in fee simple” of 160 acres of land in any state or territory shall be entitled to enter land in the territory of Oklahoma, designates the highest character of estate known to the law and must be given its settled meaning. Congress only intends to withhold the right to enter public lands from such otherwise qualified persons as are “seised in fee simple” of other lands to the extent of 160 acres. Gourley v. Countryman, 90 Pac. 427, 430, 18 Okl. 220.

In an equitable action for dower, an allegation in the bill that complainant’s husband was, during his lifetime and their intermarriage, seised and possessed of the land in fee simple, is sufficient as against the objection that the words “fee simple” do not describe an estate which will support dower, since a widow is entitled to dower in lands owned by her husband in “fee simple”; a “fee simple” estate being the largest possible estate in land, even without the employment of the word “absolute.” Sprague v. Stevens, 79 Atl. 972, 978, 32 R. I. 361.

Where the granting clause of a deed conveyed the land to the grantee and her children, the natural offspring of her body, thus creating at common law an estate tail, which, by Kirby’s Dig. § 735, vests in the first taker a life estate, with remainder in fee to those to whom it would first pass after termination of the life estate, the use in the habendum clause of the words “to hers and their own proper use, benefit and behoof forever” will not enlarge the estate of the immediate grantee into a fee simple, the word “heirs” being necessary to convey a fee simple by deed, and hence the habendum clause merely referred to estate in fee which the heirs of the immediate grantee would take. Dempsey v. Davis, 136 S. W. 975, 977, 98 Ark. 570.

Under a deed to a man and his wife “for their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them,” and “to their joint heirs,” the first takers take a joint estate in fee simple, to the exclusion of their heirs; especially where the grantors covenant to give the grantees any further deed necessary to secure to them a good and sufficient title in fee simple. Waller v. Pollitt, 64 Atl. 1040, 1041, 104 Md. 172.

The phrase “fee simple” means an absolute title or estate in lands wholly unqualified by any reversion, reservation, condition, or limitation or possibility of any such thing, present or future, or precedent or subsequent, and it follows of necessity that, when a grant is made expressly pursuant to and in compliance with an act of the Legislature requiring the creation of such a title or estate as a condition to its validity for any purpose, the grantor is estopped to allege anything in contravention of the legislative intent or in diminution of the estate described by the statute. State v. Alter, 114 N. W. 293, 294, 80 Neb. 405.

As fee simple absolute

“Fee simple” and “fee simple absolute” are equivalent terms and well-defined legal expressions, and an estate in “fee simple” is the greatest that one can possess. When the pleader said that plaintiff was the owner in “fee simple,” it implied an unlimited estate of inheritance. Parker v. Conrad, 85 Pac. 810, 74 Kan. 111.

As applied to easement

“The word ‘fees,’ as used in the fee and salary act of 1895, must be construed as fixing a compensation to be paid by individuals for official services rendered, and by which a certain fund is created, out of which the salary, as provided, by law, for the officer rendering the service, is to be paid.” The sheriff is entitled to retain as his own property the fees fixed by law for prisoners committed and discharged. Starr v. Board of Com’rs of Delaware County, 76 N. E. 1025, 1027, 79 N. E. 390, 40 Ind. App. 7.

“Fee simple,” as used in an act incorporating a toll road company and authorizing it to receive land for a right of way by gift, purchase, or otherwise, and also to take land acquired by condemnation proceedings, and providing that the judgment should vest in the corporation a fee-simple title to the strip condemned, does not contemplate that the corporation shall own such toll road in fee, but it only acquires an easement over the same during the term of its corporate existence. State ex rel. Hines v. Cape Girardeau & Jackson Gravel Road Co., 105 S. W. 761, 766, 207 Mo. 85 (citing Kellogg v. Malin, 50 Mo. 406, 11 Am. Rep. 426; State ex rel. Hines v. Scott County Macadamized Road Co., 105 S. W. 752, 207 Mo. 54, 13 Ann. Cas. 656; Venable v. Wabash West. Ry. Co., 20 S. W. 493, 112 Mo. 103, 18 L. R. A. 68; Chouteau v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 22 S. W. 458, 30 S. W. 299, 122 Mo. 385; Boyce v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 68 S. W. 920, 168 Mo. 589 et seq., 58 L. R. A. 442).

FEE SIMPLE ABSOLUTE

“Fee simple absolute” is the broadest term describing title to real estate, and the whole title is included in the term. Seton v. City of New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 565, 569, 130 App. Div. 148.

FEE-SIMPLE OWNER

As owner, see Owner.

FEE TAIL

While under the statute de donis a “fee tail” may be created by implication, it was not so created by a will giving land to testator's sons, their heirs and assigns forever, with a provision that if either of them should die without issue testator's surviving heirs should take the property. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1165, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

FEIBLE CHURCHES

A devise of a fourth of testator's estate remaining after the death of his wife to the feeble Congregational churches of the state designates the particular object and purpose of the gift, and the failure to name the particular churches does not render the devise invalid; but the state must see that the gift is divided among such churches as come within the class described, by reason of their inability to sustain themselves financially. French v. Lawrence, 81 Atl. 705, 708, 76 N. H. 234.

FEED

See Oat Feed.

As materials, see Materials.

The word "feed," adopted by a corporation as descriptive of its business, signifies food for cattle, and characterizes the business in which the corporation was to be engaged. Atlas Feed Products Co. v. City of New Orleans, 37 South. 531, 533, 118 La. 611.

FEED LUBRICATOR

See Force Feed Lubricator.

FEED ROLL

A feed roll, or automatic feeder, used in connection with a rip saw, is a toothed appliance, something like a saw, but working in front of the saw proper, and feeding the board to it automatically, and tending to prevent the board from being thrown against the sawyer by the hold its teeth take. Dean v. St. Louis Woodenware Works, 80 S. W. 292, 294, 106 Mo. App. 167.

FEEDER

See Press Feeder.

As applied to cattle, "feeders" are such as are not ready for slaughter but required fattening to place them in condition for consumption. McGraw v. O'Neill, 101 S. W. 132, 135, 123 Mo. App. 691.

FEEDING AND WATERING

The duty of "feeding and watering" live stock imposed by the contract of shipment does not include the duty to shower them to protect them from excessive heat. The phrase has reference alone to the ordinary sustenance the animals require in the course of transportation. Peck v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 115 N. W. 1113, 1114, 138 Iowa, 187, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 128 Am. St. Rep. 185; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 42 Ill. 474, 488, 92 Am. Dec. 85.

FEES

See Attorneys' Fees; Counsel Fee; Docket Fee; Entrance Fees; Illegal Fee; License Fee; Reasonable Attorney's Fee.

A "fee" is a payment for services done or to be done, usually for professional or special services; the amount being sometimes fixed by law or custom and sometimes optional. Board of Com'rs of Teller County v. Trowbridge, 95 Pac. 554, 555, 42 Colo. 449.

"Fees" are sums fixed by law, while "allowances" are those made under the discretion of court, and not fixed. Nease v. Smith, 73 S. E. 910, 913, 70 W. Va. 325.

"Fees" are the amount paid for a privilege, and are not an obligation, but the payment is voluntary. Thompson v. Wyandanch Club, 127 N. Y. Supp. 195, 200, 70 Misc. Rep. 299.

Fee and Salary Law 1895, providing that for each retail liquor license $4 shall be paid by the licensee, and for taking, approving, indexing, and recording the bond, $1, was not impliedly repealed by Act March 4, 1911, providing that the license fee prescribed by that act shall be the only fee required for the issuing of licenses, the term "fees" as used in the latter act not being intended to mean compensation for services of officers as in the fee and salary act, but an amount paid for the privilege of carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer. Beard v. State, 95 N. E. 1103, 1104, 176 Ind. 353.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7335, which provides that a sheriff shall tax and charge the fees provided by law on account of services performed by him, the fees and amounts so charged to be designated "sheriff's costs," which shall be the property of the county, and section 240 which provides that words and phrases used in a statute shall be taken in their plain, ordinary, or usual sense, but that technical words and phrases shall be understood according to their technical import unless such a construction would be repugnant to the legislative intent or to the context of the statute, the amounts charged and collected by a sheriff as statutory mileage in the service of writs, summonses, notices, etc., are to be considered as fees provided by law on account of service in the discharge of official duties, and not as a reimbursement to him for expenses incidentally incurred in the service of such writs, so that when collected they belong to the county, and not to the sheriff personally. Roberts v. Board of Com'rs of Brown County (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1015.

Commissions

"The terms 'fees,' 'compensations,' and 'commissions,' are distinguishable in meaning." Harrington v. Bayles, 82 N. Y. Supp. 379, 388, 40 Misc. Rep. 388 (citing Delavan v. Payn [N. Y.] 8 Paige, 459; Gulnivan v. Carroll, 4 N. Y. Law Bul. 6; Innes v. Purcell [N. Y.] 2 Thomp. & C. 539; Hobart v. Hobart, 86 N. Y. 436; Race v. Gilbert, 6 N. E. 592, 102 N. Y. 298).

As compensation for all services

A county clerk is required to account for, as "fees," the salary allowed him by the county board under Comp. St. 1901, c. 28, § 14. Holcombe v. Dawson County, 95 N. W. 835, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 743.

The unexpended balance of the fund collected by the state superintendent from applicants for teachers' certificates are "fees and profits" arising from his office within the meaning of the state Constitution, requiring the same to be paid into the state treasury, although his expenditure of the entire fund for office assistants authorized by statute was avoided by his own performance of official duty. State v. Stockwell, 134 N. W. 767, 780, 23 N. D. 70.

In Acts 25th Leg. Ex. Sess, c. 5, § 10, fixing the maximum amount of fees of all kinds that may be retained by any officer as compensation for his services, the phrase "fees of all kinds," as applied to the clerk of the county court, embraces every kind of compensation allowed by law to him, unless excepted by some provision of the act. Navarro County v. Howard (Tex.) 129 S. W. 857, 859.

Though a townsite trustee became such by virtue of his office as district judge, the compensation allowed under the statute for his services as trustee is not a fee or perquisite of the office of district judge within Const. art. 6, § 10, forbidding a judicial officer, other than justices of the peace or city recorders, from receiving to his own use any fees or perquisites of office. State ex rel. Jennett v. Stevens, 116 Pac. 601, 604, 34 Nev. 128.

Under the fee and salary law fees for all services performed by county officers for which a charge is authorized by statute and designated as a fee are the property of the county, and must be collected by the officer and paid into the county treasury, unless the act expressly provides that the same shall belong to the officer; the term "fees" signifying compensation for particular acts or services rendered by proper officers in the line of their duties to be paid by the persons obtaining the benefit of the services or at whose instance they were performed. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County v. Carey (Ind.) 84 N. E. 761, 762.

The surplus remaining in a sheriff's hands of moneys paid to him from the county treasury for the victualing of prisoners confined in the jail under Gen. St. p. 1446, relating to fees, and allowing a sheriff a per diem "fee" of ten cents "for victualing a prisoner," unless such fee was increased or diminished by the Board of Freeholders under authority conferred by P. L. 1876, p. 230, relating to county jails, which surplus belonged to the sheriff and constituted a part of his compensation as jail keeper, is a "fee or compensation" within Laws 1905, c. 6, § 4 (Pamph. Laws, p. 19), providing for the payment of a salary to the sheriffs of counties of the first class in full compensation for all services rendered by them, and "in lieu of all fees and other compensation heretofore provided," and therefore belongs to the county. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County v. Kaiser, 69 Atl. 25, 27, 75 N. J. Law, 9.

Costs distinguished

The terms "fees" and "costs" are often used interchangeably as having the same application; but accurately speaking the term "fees" is applicable to the items chargeable between an officer and a person whom he serves, while the term "cost" has reference to the expenses of litigation as between litigants. Bohart v. Anderson, 103 Pac. 742, 744, 24 Okl. 82, 20 Ann. Cas. 142.

Loc. Acts 1901, p. 671, No. 468, § 37, provides that all moneys paid to the justice of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, except jury, officer, and witness fees and fines and costs recovered for violation of law, shall be for the use of the city; also that expenses of prosecution for violation of penal laws of the state shall be paid by the county. Held, that the justice was not entitled to retain the fees authorized by the general laws of the state to be collected in criminal cases by justices of the peace; they not being "costs" nor expenses within the statute. Harrison v. Board of Sup'rs of Chippewa County, 114 N. W. 851, 852, 151 Mich. 91.

"Costs" are the expenses incurred by the parties in the prosecution or defense of a suit, whereas "fees" are compensation to an officer for services rendered in the progress of a cause. In re Terry, 123 N. Y. Supp. 258, 260, 67 Misc. Rep. 514.

As between a party to a suit and the officer or witness, the charges allowed are usually denominated "fees"; but as between the parties to the suit these charges are usually called costs. City of Carterville v. Cardwell, 132 S. W. 745, 746, 152 Mo. App. 32.

As disbursements or expenses

Expenses incurred by an officer under the statute in caring for animals impounded are not "fees" within the rules governing the right of a de facto officer to fees. White v. Town of Clarksville, 87 S. W. 630, 631, 75 Ark. 340.

Mileage

Code, § 511, fixes the mileage of sheriffs for serving civil process, and Code Supp. 1902, § 510a, authorizes retention by the sheriff of all such mileage collected, but declares that all "fees" earned and uncollected at the end of each year shall belong to the county. Held, that mileage charges were "fees" within the latter section, and, when uncollected at the end of the year, in which the services were rendered, belonged to the county. Cremer v. Wapello County, 117 N. W. 954, 139 Iowa, 580.

Per diem

The county clerk is entitled to retain the per diem allowed by Acts 1895, p. 336, c. 145, § 114, for attending sessions of court, such per diem not being referred to in Acts 1895, p. 355, c. 145, § 124, providing for the payment by the clerk to the treasurer of the amount of "fees" collected. State ex rel. Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Flynn, 69 N. E. 159, 166, 169, 161 Ind. 554.

Salary and wages distinguished

The word "salary" imports a specific contract for a specific sum for a specified period of time, while "fees" are compensation for particular acts, and "wages" are compensation for services by the day or week. Blick v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. of Baltimore, 77 Atl. 844, 846, 113 Md. 487 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6287-6291).

The word "fees," as used in a section of the statute providing that if a prosecuting attorney is sick or absent the court shall appoint some person to discharge the duties of the office, and declaring that the appointee shall possess the same powers and receive the same fees as the proper officer would if present, is not synonymous with "salary," and such section has no application to counties in which the prosecuting attorney receives an annual salary, and is required to account for all fees received by him by virtue of his office. State ex rel. Harrison v. Patterson, 132 S. W. 1183, 1185, 152 Mo. App. 284.

A clerk of the district court was given a stated salary, together with fees paid in civil actions by the litigants and in nearly all criminal actions by the county. When a demand for fees was presented to the board of supervisors, it was necessary to check every item and deduct erroneous charges, and extrinsic evidence was sometimes necessary to determine the correctness of particular items. Held, that a claim of such clerk against a county for fees in actions brought for the collection of delinquent taxes was not a claim for a "salary" within Civ. Code 1901, par. 989, requiring the presentation of claims against the county within six months, but providing that this requirement shall not apply to claims for official salaries made demand against the county by some express provision of law; the words "salary" and "fees" having their ordinary signification, the distinction between which is that a salary is a fixed compensation for regular work, while fees are compensation for particular services rendered at irregular periods, payable at the time the services are rendered. Cochise County v. Wilcox (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 758, 759.

Const. art. 4, § 28, requires the subjects of each bill to be clearly expressed in its title. Under "An act to repeal section 3240, chapter 27, article 1 of the Revised Statutes of 1899 relating to fees and to enact a new section in lieu thereof to be known as section 3240," the Legislature enacted what is now Rev. St. 1909, § 10,695, requiring each probate judge to keep an account of fees collected, and whenever such fees in any one year deducting expenses shall exceed the annual compensation provided by law for a judge of the circuit court with jurisdiction in the county to pay such excess less 10 per cent. into the treasury of the county. Held that as the section repealed fixed the fees of probate judges, the title was broad enough to give notice of the subject of section 10,695, and that, as "salaries are the form of compensation prescribed for paying public officers for their services, the subject of salaries was also germane to the subject of fees expressed in the title. State ex rel. Buchanan County v. Imel, 146 S. W. 783, 785, 242 Mo. 293.

FEIGNED ISSUE

A "feigned issue" is one submitted to the jury in an equity case for the assistance and advice of the court. Nashville Ry. & Light Co. v. Bunn, 168 Fed. 862, 864, 94 C. C. A. 274.

FELLOW SERVANT

See, also, "Association Theory; Superintendence; Superintendent; Superior or Servant Rule; Vice Principal.

Fellow servants are those who are serving and controlled by the same master in a common employment. Harris v. Det Farenede Dampskibsselskab, 70 Atl. 155, 156, 75 N. J. Law, 861.

The presumption is that all who enter the service of a common master, and engage in a common service or in the same general undertaking, are "fellow servants." Weeks v. Scharer, 129 Fed. 333, 335, 64 C. C. A. 11.

The true test of "fellow service" is community in that which is the test of service—which is subjection to control and direction by the same common master in the same common pursuit. Prather v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 9 S. E. 530, 531, 80 Ga. 427, 12 Am. St. Rep. 263 (citing 3 Wood, Ry. Law, § 388).

Whether a workman is the fellow servant of another workman depends upon the character of the act performed, which may be a question for the jury. Kronzer v. Spencer-Kellogg Co., 124 N. W. 6, 7, 109 Minn. 392.

It is not the grade, or title, or the position in the service, that determines whether a person is a fellow servant or a vice principal of the master, but it is the duty which the servant performs towards the other servants. Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 843, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772 (citing 2 Labatt's Mas. & Ser. § 508 et seq.; 6 Cur. Law, 555 et seq.; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7313, "Vice Principal").

The fellow-servant act (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56) applies to a corporation engaged in manufacturing, in aid of which it owns and operates a railroad. Bird v. United States Leather Co., 55 S. E. 727, 728, 143 N. C. 283.

All persons who are in the employment of the same master engaged in the same common enterprise, and are employed to perform duties and services tending to accomplish the same general purpose, are "fellow servants." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hendricks, 108 S. W. 745, 746, 750, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 314.

"All serving a common master, working under the same control, deriving authority and compensation from the same source, and engaged in the same general business, although in different grades or departments, are 'fellow servants,' and take the risk of each other's negligence." Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 374, 107 Va. 553.

All serving the same master, deriving authority and compensation from the same source, and engaged in the same general business, though in different grades, are fellow servants, taking the risk of the others' negligence, except when one of them stands as the representative of the master as to a duty incumbent on the master towards the others. Leach v. Martin, 71 S. E. 170, 171, 69 W. Va. 219.

Where two persons are both engaged in the common service of a master, in conducting and carrying on the same general business, and neither is in any sense under the control or direction of the other, they are fellow servants. Sauls v. Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co., 81 S. W. 89, 90, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 155.

"Fellow servants" may be said to be persons who are engaged in a common employment in the service of the same master, as distinguished from a vice principal, who is a servant representing the master in the discharge of those personal or absolute duties which every master owes his servant. Hollweg v. Bell Telephone Co., 93 S. W. 262, 264, 195 Mo. 149.

An employé engaged in painting iron columns for shipment, necessitating his going on a car where they were being loaded to paint parts which had rested on the floor, was a fellow servant of employés engaged in loading them; they all being employed by the same master, on the same definite object, at the same time, and under immediate direction of the same foreman. American Bridge Co. v. Valente (Del.) 73 Atl. 400, 402, 7 Pennewill, 370, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 69.

All who serve the same master, work under the same control, derive authority and compensation from the same source, and who are engaged in the same general business, although it may be in different grades or departments, are "fellow servants"; each taking the risk of the other's negligence. Where the members of a theatrical company engaged in a charivari on the last evening of their closing performance, and while the members were on the stage threw missiles at them, resulting in injury to one of their number, they were fellow servants for whose acts the master was not liable. Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 106 Pac. 1012, 1014, 47 Colo. 110, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514 (citing 26 Cyc. p. 1282).

Employés of a common master, engaged in labor for the furtherance of the general purpose of the business in which they contract to serve are "fellow servants" within the purview of Civ. Code, § 2810, providing that, "except in the case of railroad companies, the master is not liable to the servant for injuries arising from the negligence or misconduct of other servants about the same business." Under this rule, a teamster employed to assist in hauling a boiler from his employer's furnace plant to its coal mines, to be used there, was a fellow servant of the engineer and fireman of a locomotive operated in the employer's yards in connection with the furnace plant, and could not, therefore, recover for injuries sustained by the alleged negligence of the engineer and fireman. Georgia Coal & Iron Co. v. Bradford, 62 S. E. 193, 195, 131 Ga. 289, 127 Am. St. Rep. 228.

Comp. Laws 1907, § 1343, provides that all employés who, while at work, are in the same grade of service, and are working together at the same time and place and to a common purpose, neither of such persons being intrusted with any superintendence over his fellow employés, are fellow servants. Held that, where the facts are undisputed, whether coemployés are fellow servants under the statute is a question of law for the court; but if they are in dispute, or conflicting inferences may be drawn therefrom, the court should construe the several clauses of the statute defining the relation, and charge that if the jury find the facts to be as stated they must find for or against the relation, as the hypothesized facts establish. Shepherd v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (Utah) 126 Pac. 692, 695.

A "fellow servant," for whose negligence resulting in injury to another servant the master is not liable, is one who is engaged in the same general undertaking with the injured servant, though they are not engaged in the same portion or particular work; it being sufficient that they are employed by the same master and engaged in the same common enterprise and employed to perform duties tending to accomplish the same general purpose. Mollhoff v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 82 Pac. 733, 734, 15 Okl. 540.

One employed to shovel from between construction cars dirt pushed there from such cars by the plow attached to the engine by a cable, is a "fellow servant" of the engineer as to an injury received by the engine starting while the employé was assisting in replacing the plow in position. Bradford Construction Co. v. Heflin, 42 South. 174, 183, 88 Miss. 314, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 8 Ann. Cas. 1077.

Where a hod carrier employed by the day, after finishing his day's work, went to a shed on the premises to get his coat which he had left there, and thence went to the employer's office for a key, and while a watchman was unlocking the shed for him was injured by a blast negligently fired by another employé, he was the employer's servant, and hence a "fellow servant" of the one by whose negligence he was injured, so that he could not recover. Willmarth v. Cardoza, 176 Fed. 1, 2, 99 C. C. A. 475, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376.

The engineer in charge of the engine operating tram cars on a tramway by means of a cable, and an employé charged with the duty of inspecting and keeping the tramway in repair and oiling machinery used in the operation of tram cars, are "fellow servants"; the employé, in the performance of his duty, being frequently at the engine house and having opportunity to observe the attention the engineer gave to his work and the manner of his performing it. Larson v. Kiebertz, 128 Pac. 216, 218, 71 Wash. 231.

Plaintiff's intestate, a minor, in defendant's employ, was killed between cars as he was crossing one of defendant's tracks in the factory yard, in the course of his employment. The cars on each side of the path used by intestate were a short distance apart, and defendant's yard foreman let down other cars against one of the cars divided by the crossing, and decedent, who was not seen by either the foreman or another employé, was caught between such cars. Held, that the foreman was decedent's fellow servant, for whose negligence, if any, defendant was not liable. Schwind v. Floriston Pulp & Paper Co., 89 Pac. 1066, 1068, 5 Cal. App. 197.

Association promotive of caution

The servants of a common master, whose usual duties bring them into habitual association, so that they have opportunity and power to influence each other to the exercise of caution, are fellow servants within the law. Illinois Terminal R. Co. v. Chapin, 128 Ill. App. 170, 173.

To create the relation of fellow servants, the servants must be directly co-operating with each other in the same work, or their duties must be such as to bring them into habitual association, so as to afford them the power and opportunity of exercising a mutual influence on each other promotive of proper caution. Bennett v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 735, 243 Ill. 420; Lindquist v. Hodges, 152 Ill. App. 491, 498.

All persons engaged in the business of a common master and so related that each in the exercise of ordinary sagacity ought to foresee, on accepting his employment, that he would be exposed to injury in the event of negligence on the part of the others, and they to injury from his, are "fellow servants." Kniceley v. West Virginia Midland R. Co., 61 S. E. 811, 814, 64 W. Va. 278, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870.

Limited by the departmental doctrine, those are "fellow servants" who are in the employ of a common master to the end of a common undertaking and are so associated and related in the performance of the work that they can observe and influence each other's work, and report any delinquency to a correcting power. Oker v. Hill-O'Meara Const. Co., 188 S. W. 84, 85, 158 Mo. App. 218.

Persons employed by the same master to accomplish one common object, and so related in their labors and service as ordinarily to be exposed to injuries caused by each other's negligence, are "fellow servants." Kenefick-Hammond Co. v. Rohr, 91 S. W. 179, 180, 77 Ark. 290 (quoting and adopting St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Triplett, 15 S. W. 831, 832, 54 Ark. 289, 296, 11 L. R. A. 773).

The employés of a common master, to be "fellow servants" so as to exempt the master from liability for injuries to one from the negligence of the other, must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular service, as distinct from indirect co-operation in the general service of the master, or their usual duties must bring them into habitual association so that they may exercise a mutual influence on each other promotive of proper caution. Lyons v. Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, 90 N. E. 288, 290, 242 Ill. 409.

Whenever co-employés under the control of one master are engaged in the discharge of duties directed to one common end, such duties being so closely related that each employé must know he is exposed to the risk of being injured by the negligence of another, they are "fellow servants." Donnelly v. Cudahy Packing Co., 75 Pac. 1017, 1018, 68 Kan. 653.

The servants of the same master to be fellow servants so as to exempt the master from liability on account of injuries sustained by one, resulting from the negligence of the other, must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular business, that is to say, the same line of employment, or their usual duties must bring them into habitual association, so that they may exercise a mutual influence upon each other promotive of proper caution. Gathman v. City of Chicago, 127 Ill. App. 150, 153.

To create the relation of "fellow servants," the servants must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular work, or their usual duties must be such as to bring them into habitual association so as to afford them the power and opportunity of exercising a mutual influence on each other promotive of proper caution, and, where they are engaged in different lines of employment and their usual duties bring them into habitual association, the association must be sufficiently personal to furnish an opportunity and power to exercise an influence on each other promotive of proper caution. Thompson v. Northern Hotel Co., 99 N. E. 878, 882, 256 Ill. 77.

In order to constitute co-employees fellow servants, so as to exempt the master from liability for the negligence of one resulting in injury to the other, they must be directly co-operating with each other in the particular business, in the same line of employment, as distinguished from indirectly co-operating, or co-operating in the general business or employment of the master. It is not sufficient that they are employed by the same master, and their duties must be such as to bring them into habitual association with each other, so that they may exercise a mutual influence on each other promotive of proper caution. Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 77 N. E. 190, 192, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

The rule exempting a master from liability for injuries from negligence of a fellow servant applies only in cases where the two servants are so associated and related in their work that they can observe and influence each other's conduct and report delinquencies to a common correcting power; otherwise they are not "fellow servants" within any fair meaning of the rule. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 484, 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

Since a convict hired out by the state was under no express or implied obligation to assume the risk of negligence of his employer's servants, he was not a "fellow servant" of any of them. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Long, 53 South. 910, 169 Ala. 337, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 564.

To create the relation of "fellow servants," the employees must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular work at the time of the injury, or their usual duties must be such as to bring them into such habitual association as will afford them the power and opportunity of exercising an influence, each on the other, promotive of their mutual safety. Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Otstot, 72 N. E. 887, 890, 212 Ill. 429.

To create that relation between servants, they must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular work at the time of the injury, or their usual duties must be such as to bring them to such habitual association as will afford them the power and opportunity of exercising an influence, each upon the other, promotive of their mutual safety. The crews of separate trains hauling freight in opposite directions on the same division of a double track railroad are not "fellow servants" as a matter of law. Aldrich v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 89 N. E. 702, 703, 241 Ill. 402, 132 Am. St. Rep. 220 (quoting and adopting Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Otstot, 212 Ill. 429, 72 N. E. 887).

"Fellow servants" is defined to be "persons employed by the same master to accomplish one common object and so related in their labors performed in the service of the master as ordinarily to be exposed to injuries caused by each other's negligence." An employé whose duties were to inspect cars in the yards, and, when found slightly out of repair, to repair them on a track set aside for that purpose, is a fellow servant of a brakeman and his crew employed to switch cars from one track to another in the yards and no recovery can be had for injuries to one from the negligence of the others. Snellen v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 102 S. W. 193, 82 Ark. 334 (citing Railway Co. v. Rice, 51 Ark. 467, 11 S. W. 699; St. L. I. M. & So. Ry. Co. v. Gaines, 46 Ark. 555; Railway Co. v. Shackelford, 42 Ark. 417; Railway Co. v. Triplett, 54 Ark. 299, 15 S. W. 831, 16 S. W. 266; St. L. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Henson, 61 Ark. 302, 32 S. W. 1079; Railway Co. v. Brown, 87 Ark. 295, 54 S. W. 865; Kenefick-Hammond Co. v. Rohr, 77 Ark. 290, 91 S. W. 179).

The general rule of the master's liability in case of injury to an employé through the negligence of a fellow servant is not changed by Rev. St. Utah, 1898, § 1343, defining "fellow servants" as "all persons who are engaged in the service of such employer, and who, while so engaged, are in the same grade of service and working together at the same time and place to a common purpose, neither of such persons being intrusted by such employer with any superintendency or control over his fellow employés," except in relation to the matter of superintendency; the statute not requiring, by the provision that they must be "working together," that the servants should be doing the same kind of work, or engaged in aiding each other in the same detail of labor, but only that they shall be working to a common purpose and sufficiently near each other to arouse in the one a reasonable appreciation of probable danger from the neglect of the other. The exception to the general rule of the master's liability in case of injury to an employé through the negligence of a fellow servant is based on the doctrine of assumption of risk, which extends to the risk of injury from negligence of other servants of the same master whose service is so related to his own that negligence on their part in the natural and expected course of events may injure him, notwithstanding a complete performance by the master of his nonassignable duties, and his assumption is as broad as his reasonable anticipation of danger. Under such rule a laborer engaged in the construction of a roadbed of a railroad and a brakeman on a construction train hauling gravel for such roadbed are "fellow servants." Lukic v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Fed. 135.

A skilled workman employed in a separate room from a common laborer is not the fellow servant of such common laborer where they were not at the time of the accident in a position to exercise an influence over each other promotive of caution for their common safety. E. Schneider & Co. v. Carlin, 120 Ill. App. 533, 540.

An instruction that if plaintiff, a trackman, and a brakeman were engaged in a common employment, and were so situated as to have opportunities to use precautions against each other's negligence they were "fellow servants," and, if the accident happened through the negligence of a fellow servant, the master would not be liable, correctly stated the rule for determining who are "fellow servants." Hale v. Crown Columbia Pulp & Paper Co., 105 Pac. 480, 482, 56 Wash. 236.

A brewery maintained brewing and bottling departments under separate foremen, and the brewers and bottlers worked under different contracts of employment, made in their behalf by their respective unions. A shipping clerk, supervising the loading of cars, selected men from the two departments to load cars under his supervision. Held, that the men, while loading cars, were "fellow servants," within the rule that fellow servants are those who are so related in their work that they may observe and have an influence over each other's conduct and report delinquencies to the master. Brandt v. Kansas City Breweries Co., 141 S. W. 444, 445, 159 Mo. App. 568.

An employé in a steel manufactory whose duties were to superintend and direct other employés in the process of converting iron into steel and to give warning when a blast or heat was about to be blown was not a "fellow servant" of another employé not under the former's immediate control, whose duties were confined strictly to taking care of stoppers used in the vessels in which the steel was blown, within the rule exempting an employer from liability for injuries to an employé resulting from the negligence of another employé. Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 77 N. E. 190, 192, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

Common master

It is essential to the relation of "fellow servants" that they should be servants of the same master; mere co-operation or community of labor and ultimate purpose being insufficient, unless they are under the control of a common master. United States Board & Paper Co. v. Landers (Ind.) 92 N. E. 203, 204.

Employment in the service of a common master is not alone sufficient to make two men fellow servants, but there must be some consociation in the same department or line of employment. Nocita v. Omaha & C. B. St. Ry. Co., 181 N. W. 214, 216, 89 Neb. 209.

A servant of a contractor erecting a building and a servant of an independent contractor are not fellow servants. Buchanan & Gilder v. Murayda (Tex.) 124 S. W. 973, 976.

"Servants of an independent contractor and servants of a principal by whom the contractor is employed are not 'fellow servants,' although they work side by side in a common employment, if they are not under the control of a common master. Lookout Mountain Iron Co. v. Lea, 39 South. 1017, 1019, 144 Ala. 169.

The relation of fellow servants may exist between the employés of different masters where the employés of one of such masters have been loaned to the other and all are under the direction and control of a single master. Pioneer Fire-Proofing Co. v. Clifford, 125 Ill. App. 352, 356.

Persons employed by different masters, though engaged in a common work, are not ordinarily fellow servants. Where the servant of one master has an interest in the work in any proper capacity, and at the request or with the consent of another's servants undertakes to assist in the work, he does not do so at his own risk, and, if he is injured by their carelessness, their master is responsible. Kelly v. Tyra, 114 N. W. 750, 751, 115 N. W. 636, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334.

Servants in the hire of a general employer and servants of his subcontractor or an independent contractor are not fellow servants, unless the circumstances show that the servant submitted himself to the control of another person than his proper master, and consented to accept that person as his master for the purpose of a common employment. "One who, in the performance of his own interests or those of his master, assists servants of another in the performance of their work, is not a 'fellow servant' of such servants, nor a 'volunteer,' but occupies a third position, viz., that of a 'licensee with an interest.'" Kelly v. Tyra, 114 N. W. 750, 753,

A mine manager is the servant of the operator and not of the state, and the operator or owner is liable for his willful failure to perform the duties prescribed by statute. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Lucas, 127 Ill. App. 61, 62; Same v. Lucas, 80 N. E. 560, 226 Ill. 23.

Where a blower works company contracted to erect a shavings or sawdust blower in the mill of a lumber company, and the lumber company directed plaintiff and certain other of its employees to assist in constructing a scaffold and in placing a portion of the blower in position, plaintiff was prima facie a "fellow servant" of the employees of the blower company and of the lumber company engaged in the construction of the scaffold. Hoveland v. National Blower Works, 114 N. W. 795, 797, 134 Wis. 342, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1254.

Where a railroad company delegated its duty of loading a car to a lumber company making a shipment, it is liable for any injury to its own employee caused by negligence of the employees of the lumber company in loading the car. Britt v. Carolina Northern R. Co., 56 S. E. 910, 914, 144 N. C. 242.

The cars of a railroad company were operated on a siding constructed for the sole use of a coal company by the employees of the railroad, and an employee of the coal company was killed by the negligence of the trainmen while he was repairing a railroad company's car on the siding of the coal company. Held, that he was a fellow servant of the trainmen, within Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58). Miller v. Northern Cent. Ry. Co., 64 Atl. 924, 216 Pa. 105.

One not in the employment of a railroad company, but using its facilities under a contract between the railroad company and his employer, the Pullman Car Company, which simply permits his carriage for and in connection with the business of his employer conducted on the railroad, is not a "passenger," but a fellow servant, under Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), of the trainmen. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 60 Atl. 821, 822, 220 Pa. 317, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279, 13 Ann. Cas. 1142.

Where a railroad company and a news company enter into a contract by which an agent of the news company, employed to sell papers and fruit on trains, is permitted to ride thereon, he is employed on the train, and not a passenger, within Act April 4, 1868, § 1 (P. L. 58), and when killed by the negligence of an employee of the railroad company, no recovery can be had for his death. Smallwood v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 64 Atl. 732, 215 Pa. 540, 7 Ann. Cas. 525.

The act of a switchman of a union depot company in throwing a switch for a railway company's train is the act of the depot company; and, where it is the servant of the railway company, the latter is liable for negligence resulting in injury to its employee. A switchman employed by a union depot company is not a fellow servant of a switchman employed by a railroad company running trains to the depot, within the common-law rule that a master is not liable for injury received through a fellow servant's negligence. Floody v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 123 N. W. 815, 816, 109 Minn. 228, 184 Am. St. Rep. 771, 18 Ann. Cas. 274.

A railroad company is liable to its servants for negligence of employees of a union depot company whose duty it is to operate the switches in the depot yards, as, for the occasion, the servants of the depot company became the servants of the railroad company. Floody v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 112 N. W. 875, 877, 102 Minn. 81, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196.

The employee of a railroad company, while working under an independent contractor in installing a new electric signal system, in order to learn such system, is a "fellow servant" of the employees of such contractor. Wirth v. General Railway Signal Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 66, 67, 136 App. Div. 536.

The servants of a railroad operating its cars on the tracks of another under a contract between the roads are not, in the absence of any contractual provisions showing operation of trains, "fellow servants" of the employees of the road owning the tracks. Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Vandenberg, 73 N. E. 990, 993, 164 Ind. 470.

An arrangement between two railroad companies whereby both use the tracks owned by one of them, the train employees of both, when running on the tracks, being subject to the train and signal rules and orders of the company owning the tracks, does not make the employees of the owner and licensee fellow servants, so as to bring them under the rule of law applicable to such relation. Jennings v. Philadelphia, B. & W. Ry. Co., 29 App. D. C. 219, 232.

Plaintiff was the driver of one of several teams owned by his father, who hauled steel plates for defendant as an independent contractor. The driver of another wagon had placed the same to receive plates which were lowered by two overhead cranes, and requested plaintiff to superintend the placing of the plates in position on his wagon. Plaintiff directed the cranes to be moved slightly ahead, when defendant's servant in charge of one of the cranes moved it forward before the other crane was started, which resulted in plaintiff's injury. Held, that plaintiff was not a "fellow servant" for the time being of the crane operator. Otis Steel Co. v. Wingle, 152 Fed. 914, 915, 82 C. C. A. 62.

porting sugar to the dock of defendant sugar refining company, operated by steam, and an engineer furnished by it was used by the lighterage company, which paid the refining company an agreed price per hour for such use, and plaintiff was injured by the negligence of such engineer, though the refining company was in a measure interested in the work, the engineer, under such circumstances, was plaintiff's "fellow servant," for whose negligence the refining company was not liable. Quinn v. National Sugar Refining Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 95, 96, 102 App. Div. 47 (citing Breslin v. Sparks, 89 N. Y. Supp. 627, 97 App. Div. 69; Wyllie v. Palmer, 33 N. E. 381, 137 N. Y. 248, 258, 19 L. R. A. 285; Higgins v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 N. E. 500, 156 N. Y. 75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537).

The tracks of a street railway company at the place of an accident were the property of a traction company, but in joint use by it and defendant street railroad, under a traffic agreement, which provided that the cars of defendant were to be cleaned and repaired by the traction company. Two cars of defendant had been delivered to the traction company, which dismantled one of them, attached it by chains to the other, and started it towards the car barn for repairs. The coupling chains broke, and the dismantled car ran down a grade until it collided with a car of defendant, in which deceased was a passenger. The workmen who were to repair and clean the cars were employed and controlled by the traction company, and defendant paid on the basis of an account kept of their wages. Held, that such workmen were not coemployees of defendant. Beckman v. Meadville & C. S. St. Ry. Co., 67 Atl. 983, 985, 219 Pa. 26.

The C. Railroad, by which decedent was employed as engineer, used the tracks of defendant company for a certain distance entering Philadelphia, and decedent, on approaching the junction with a fast freight, found the tower signal turned against him. He waited six minutes, when a white light was displayed from the tower, signaling his train to proceed, which signal indicated that decedent had the right of way, and that the track to the south was unobstructed. When decedent's train arrived at a point somewhat south of the signal station, it struck the engine and tender of a local freight train belonging to defendant company, which was crossing from the south to the north-bound track, and the engineer of such freight testified that, in violation of the rules, he had been on the south-bound track after cars, without having a man out either ahead or behind his train to guard against accidents. Held, that neither the operatives of defendant's train nor the signalman in the tower, all of whom were employed and paid by defendant company, could be regarded as decedent's fellow servants. Baker v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 149 Fed. 882, 884.

"The most usual requirement to constitute the relation of fellow servants is that the servants are in the employ of a common master. To this there seems to have grown the exception arising from the lending, between employers of the servants of one to the other. In the latter case, where the servant is temporarily loaned by the master to another for some special service, and the servant for the time becomes wholly subject to the direction and control of the person to whom loaned and for whom the special service is performed and is wholly freed during such time from the direction of his master, he becomes the servant, for the time, of the person to whom loaned or hired, and during such time may bear the relation of fellow servant to the other servants of the master to whom he is thus loaned." Servants in charge of a caboose, the negligent switching of which in the yards of another company killed a switchman employed by such other company, are not rendered fellow servants of the switchman by the mere fact that the yardmaster of the company owning the yard directed on what tracks the cars of outside companies might be operated. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bovard, 79 N. E. 128, 130, 223 Ill. 176 (citing Grace & Hyde Co. v. Probst, 70 N. E. 12, 208 Ill. 147).

Control and direction of work of men

An employé authorized to control workmen is not a fellow servant of the other employés in respect to his commands. Casey v. Kelly-Atkinson Const. Co., 88 N. E. 982, 985, 240 Ill. 416.

Where one servant is put under the control of another servant of a common master and is injured through the negligence of his superior while acting in the common service, the master is liable. Bell v. Rocheford, 110 N. W. 646, 648, 78 Neb. 304, 126 Am. St. Rep. 595.

All who enter the employment of a common master to accomplish a common undertaking are prima facie "fellow servants," although their grades of service are different, and some direct and supervise the men subject to their command and their work, while others perform the labor. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. v. Callaghan, 155 Fed. 397, 399, 83 C. C. A. 669, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361.

A common-law master was not responsible to a servant for the negligent acts of another servant exercising superintendence in the management and detail of the work; such person being deemed a "fellow servant." Chisholm v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 622, 625, 116 App. Div. 320.

A foreman directing an employé to work in a particular place is not a "fellow servant" of the employé. Commerce Milling & Grain Co. v. Gowan (Tex.) 104 S. W. 916, 919.

A servant engaged in the excavation of a trench and the foreman directing the work are "fellow servants" in a common employment. Rocco v. F. A. Gillespie Co., 64 Atl. 117, 118, 73 N. J. Law, 591.

A superintendent and painter employed under him are "fellow servants" at common law. Kennedy v. New York Tel. Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 887, 890, 125 App. Div. 846.

A statement does not show that an employé was other than a "fellow servant" when it shows no more than that he was foreman of a gang and does not disclose that he has power either to employ or discharge. Pipkin v. Hayward Lumber Co. (Tex.) 96 S. W. 635, 636.

The negligent failure of a section foreman to inform one of his sectionmen of a scheduled train which afterwards struck such sectionman was the act of a "fellow servant." House v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 155, 156, 128 App. Div. 756.

A laborer working in discharging a vessel is not the fellow workman of the one who has charge of the laborers, and who is to see to the unloading of the ship. Ingham v. John B. Honor Co., 37 South. 963, 964, 113 La. 1040.

An employé who improvises a machine to do the work of defendant and employs men to assist him in running it and has the power to discharge such men is not a "fellow servant" of the men working under him. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lile, 45 South. 699, 701, 154 Ala. 556.

A foreman, who worked with his men, and who was not at the head of a department, but was simply over two or three men, and who was intrusted with no function which belonged to the master, but was superintending and assisting the men in the loading, weighing, and handling of cars, and who had a man over him, was a "fellow servant" with the men whom he was superintending. Dill v. Marmon, 73 N. E. 67, 73, 164 Ind. 507, 69 L. R. A. 163.

A foreman in the employ of an electric illuminating company having charge of the electricians and wiremen, and himself under the orders of a superintendent, was a "fellow servant" of such electricians, for whose negligence, resulting in injury to an electrician, the company was not liable. Guest v. Edison Illuminating Co., 114 N. W. 226, 227, 150 Mich. 438.

An instruction that plaintiff and a hostler were "'fellow servants' unless they had control over each other in the way of employing each other" was properly refused as embodying an improper definition of the term "fellow servant." Fordyce v. Key, 84 S. W. 797, 798, 74 Ark. 19 (citing Kirby's Dig. §§ 6658, 6659; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Thurmond, 68 S. W. 488, 70 Ark. 411; Kan- sas City, Ft. S. & M. Ry. Co. v. Becker, 39 S. W. 358, 63 Ark. 477).

A servant whose duty it is to pour vitriol from a bottle into a vat in a bleaching department of a manufacturing plant is the fellow servant of the superintendent of such department. Bryant v. Gaffney Mfg. Co., 56 S. E. 9, 10, 75 S. C. 487.

In an action for personal injuries to an employé, action of foreman in directing the engineer to start the machinery by which plaintiff was injured held that of a fellow servant, for which a defendant was not liable. Berneche v. Hilliard, 112 N. W. 392, 393, 101 Minn. 366.

Where a foreman had general charge of a mine, including the particular work in which plaintiff, a miner, was engaged when injured, and hired the miners and told them what to do and where to work, he was a vice principal, and not a fellow servant of plaintiff. Vasby v. United States Gypsum Co., 128 Pac. 606, 607, 46 Mont. 411.

The one in immediate charge of the work of loading lumber on a vessel from a dock, with power to hire and discharge the hands, is not a fellow servant of a laborer placing the lumber in a sling to be hoisted, but a vice principal. Schroeder v. Brown & McCabe, 116 Pac. 335, 336, 59 Or. 81.

A servant placed in entire charge of a distinct branch of the master's business, not merely to superintend it but to control it, with no one else to exercise any discretion or oversight, is a vice principal of the master and not a fellow workman of another servant. Groves v. McNeill, 75 Atl. 600, 601, 226 Pa. 845.

Where the master has conferred upon a member of a class of workmen carrying on a particular branch of his business authority to control or direct the movements of men under his charge, while in the exercise of such authority the relation of fellow servants does not exist. East St. Louis Connecting Ry. Co. v. Meeker, 82 N. E. 202, 205, 229 Ill. 98; Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Reddick, 82 N. E. 598, 599, 230 Ill. 105.

Mere supervision, and nothing more, by one of a number of servants, over the work in which they are engaged, will not necessarily raise the employé from the position of a fellow servant to that of a vice principal; but supervision, coupled with the discharge of other duties in connection therewith, may have this effect. Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 842, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772 (citing Bloyd v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 22 S. W. 1089, 58 Ark. 66, 41 Am St. Rep. 85).

The mere fact that one of a number of servants who are in the habit of working together in the same line of employment for a common master has the power to control and direct the actions of the others with respect to such employment will not of itself render the master liable for the negligence of the governing servant resulting in an injury to one of the others, without regard to other circumstances; if the negligence complained of consists of some act done or omitted by one having such authority which relates to his duty as a collaborer with those under his control, and which might just as readily have happened with one of them having no such authority, the common master will not be liable. Anderson v. Higgins, 122 Ill. App. 454, 457.

One having the general control and supervision of railroad repair work and giving general directions respecting the movements of work trains is a vice principal, and not a "fellow servant," of the laborers employed to do repair work. Jachetta v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 105 Pac. 100, 103, 38 Utah, 470.

A flagman who had been instructed to obey the orders of conductors and engineers while the conductors are in charge of trains, while obeying the orders of such conductors is a fellow servant of the engineers. Lyon v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 53 S. E. 12, 15, 77 S. C. 323; Id., 56 S. E. 18, 20.

An employé operating a machine with the assistance of co-employés, with incidental authority to supervise the work of the assistants, is a fellow servant with the assistants, and the employer is not liable for injuries to the assistants resulting from the employé's negligence. Bovi v. Hess, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1001, 1006, 123 App. Div. 389.

Where a telegraph company employed a gang of men to clear its right of way, the foreman thereof was a "fellow servant" with the men who were subject to his orders, so that the company was not liable to one of the men, injured while obeying the orders of the foreman, if he had been selected with due care. Brabham v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 50 S. E. 716, 717, 71 S. C. 53.

Where an oil company established a boiler repair shop and intrusted its sole charge to a superintendent, who hired and discharged workmen and gave orders in relation to the work, the superintendent was a vice principal, not a "fellow servant" of the workmen in the repair shop. Green v. Washington Oil Co., 64 Atl. 877, 878, 216 Pa. 35.

An employé directing a gang engaged in loading iron rails on a flat car and controlling the manner of performing the work is a vice principal and not a fellow servant, though he has no power to employ or discharge the men. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Rathneau, 80 N. E. 119, 120, 225 Ill. 278; Id., 124 Ill. App. 427.

Where an employer places a foreman in charge of the construction of a building, with authority to control and direct the workmen, who are instructed to obey his orders, and a workman receives injury while obeying the foreman's order, the foreman's negligence is the employer's. McCracken v. Lantry-Sharpe Contracting Co., 101 S. W. 520, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 485.

Where plaintiff and two others in defendant's employ were engaged in repairing a broken belt, and plaintiff was injured by the negligence of one of them in failing to properly adjust a clamp, they were all "fellow servants," for whose negligence the master was not liable, though one of them had general control as foreman. Standard Pottery Co. v. Moudy, 73 N. E. 188, 191, 35 Ind. App. 427.

The foreman of a crew building a trestle for a logging railway is not such a fellow servant of an ordinary workman thereon as to preclude recovery for injuries resulting from the foreman's negligence, since the foreman is a vice principal of the master. Cook v. Chehalis River Lumber Co., 94 Pac. 189, 191, 48 Wash. 619.

Where defendant's foreman, in entire charge of the lowering of a telephone pole by which plaintiff was injured, stood at the foot of the pole and gave orders at every step in the proceedings, which plaintiff was bound to obey, the foreman was not plaintiff's "fellow servant." Sandquist v. Independent Telephone Co., 80 Pac. 539, 540, 38 Wash. 318.

A yard foreman, who had no authority over a yard engineer except to direct him when and where to move his engine, and who did not have the right of employment or discharge of the engineer, was not a vice principal as to the latter, but a "fellow servant." Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 374, 107 Va. 553.

An assistant general manager of a corporation, who has general authority in the conduct of its business and the direction of its work, is a "vice principal," and not a "fellow servant" engaged in the actual operation of the business, although he has no power to employ and discharge such inferior servants. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 91 S. W. 607, 608, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 342.

Where employés are engaged in assisting one another in a common task, the fact that one takes the lead in directing the work because of age, experience, or common consent, does not change the relation of "fellow servants" and make the one so directing a vice principal. Frangen v. Stone & Webster Engineering Corp., 119 Pac. 193, 195, 66 Wash. 204.

It is not the law in the state of Wyoming that "persons employed in the same general work" of the master are "fellow servants," and on principle, and by the weight of authority, persons engaged in the service of the master, who are intrusted by him with the management or direction of his general work, or with some particular part thereof, are not "fellow servants" with the subordinate employes, but are "vice principals." Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 76 Pac. 1089, 1097, 28 Utah, 46, 67 L. R. A. 506.

Where, in an action for injuries received by an employe while breaking stone in a quarry, by the explosion of dynamite left in a stone, it was shown that prior to the accident the person in charge of the work for the master examined the stone, assured the employe that it was free from dynamite, and directed him where to strike, such person was not, as a matter of law, the employe's "fellow servant." Di Stefano v. Peekskill Lighting & R. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 179, 182, 107 App. Div. 293.

If a master confers upon one member of a crew authority to control and direct the movements of the other members of the crew, then, in exercising such authority, that member is not a "fellow servant" of the others. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Strong, 81 N. E. 1011, 1012, 228 Ill. 281 (citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Illinois Southern Ry. Co. v. Marshall, 71 N. E. 597, 210 Ill. 562, 66 L. R. A. 297).

One who, under a contract, provides all labor and materials to complete the grading and ballasting of a railroad bed and has the management and control of the men employed in the work "subject to the direction and acceptance of the engineer" is not a "fellow servant" of the men employed under him. Hooe v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 72 N. E. 341, 187 Mass. 67.

Plaintiff was ordered by a straw boss to throw a block under a casting which they were raising. Plaintiff did not like to do so for fear the hook would slip. The straw boss said: "He hold this time. He take the risk"—and, while plaintiff was obeying the order, the casting fell. Held, that plaintiff and the straw boss were "fellow servants." Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., 117 N. W. 479, 480, 105 Minn. 132, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153.

A foreman of a railroad construction gang employed in unloading cinders from cars and preparing the roadbed had power to hire and discharge the laborers and direct their movements. He had also power to direct the movements of a train crew employed in placing the cars where they were to be unloaded. Held, that the foreman was not a "fellow servant" of a member of the gang, but was the employer's vice principal. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 77 N. E. 936, 937, 221 Ill. 547.

Where plaintiff employed to operate a candy-cutting machine obtained the candy to be passed through the machine from his foreman, who had no authority to hire or discharge his co-employees, he was plaintiff's fellow servant, so that plaintiff could not recover for the foreman's negligence in furnishing him candy which was not sufficiently cooled to be cut in safety by the machine. National Candy Co. v. Miller, 160 Fed. 51, 55, 87 C. C. A. 207.

Where defendant directed plaintiff, a boy 14 years of age, to work opposite the operator of a trip hammer to keep the dies clean, but without warning or instruction, and plaintiff was justified in believing that he was to obey the orders of the hammer operator, by whose negligence he was injured in assisting him at his direction in the removal of a die, plaintiff and the operator were not "fellow servants." B. F. Avery & Sons v. Cottrill's Guardian (Ky.) 107 S. W. 332, 333.

Where a helper in a machine shop required to obey the foreman of the shop was directed by the foreman to aid the operator of a turning lathe in placing pieces of iron on the machine, and the operator directed the helper what to do, the foreman, in sending the helper to the operator, put him under the direction of the operator, and they were not "fellow servants" under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4560f, 4560g, defining vice principals and "fellow servants," and the master was liable for the negligence of the operator to the same extent as if the foreman had given the directions. Sherman v. Texas & N. O. R. Co., 91 S. W. 561, 562, 99 Tex. 571.

Where an employe in a railroad shop was required by the foreman to assist the machinist in charge of the drilling press in the drilling of a hole in a vise, and the machinist directed the employe what to do, the employe and the machinist were not "fellow servants," and the employe was not responsible for the negligence of the machinist. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex.) 99 S. W. 738, 740.

In an action for injuries to an employe in a railroad switchyard by the alleged negligence of his foreman in permitting a car to be switched onto a track on which plaintiff was working, without providing for a signal or warning plaintiff, etc., there could be no recovery at common law, plaintiff and the foreman being "fellow servants." Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lain (Ind.) 79 N. E. 547, 548.

Plaintiff and P. were common day laborers in defendant's employ. P., at the direction of his superior, neither of whom were authorized to employ or discharge plaintiff, called him to assist in holding a chisel which was being driven into a piece of timber. The chisel was insecurely fastened, so that, when plaintiff pulled down on it as he was directed to do, it flew out, and he fell, and was injured. Held, that P. was plaintiff's fellow servant, and that plaintiff could not recover for his negligence, if any, in setting the chisel. Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Kent, 105 S. W. 525, 526, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 462.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6658, making all persons in railroad service intrusted with superintendence of other persons "vice principals," and not "fellow servants," and section 6659, making all persons engaged in the common service of a railroad, and who, while so engaged, are working together to a common purpose, neither of such persons being intrusted with superintendence, fellow servants, the foreman of a gang of section hands, having control of their actions, is not a fellow servant of the section hands. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harmon, 109 S. W. 295, 297, 85 Ark. 508.

Plaintiff, a brakeman on a train consisting of an engine and dump cars used by defendants in construction work in the state of Washington, was injured by the derailment of the train. One of the charges of negligence was that the engineer operated the train at an excessive rate of speed, thus causing the accident. It is held, under the law of Washington, as proved by the decisions of the highest court of that state received in evidence at the trial, the engineer and plaintiff were not fellow servants, if the engineer was in control of the train and vested with authority to control the movements and its rate of speed. Walson v. McGregor, 139 N. W. 353, 354, 120 Minn. 233.

Where a master sent a competent foreman with a sufficient number of men to string wires upon poles, and the master had made provisions whereby any one of them might turn off the current from neighboring electric light wires, and it had been agreed between the servants that the foreman should perform such duty, his failure to do so or to give warning, whereby one of them was injured, was the negligence of a fellow servant. Anglin v. American Construction & Trading Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 49, 109 App. Div. 237.

Plaintiff, employed as a laborer in the construction of a roadbed, was injured while assisting his foreman to put a charge of powder into a rock under the direction of a "walking boss." The foreman superintended the work of the men in his gang, and had power to hire and discharge them, and it was the duty of the "walking boss" to go from place to place on the road to see that the foremen of the several gangs and the men under them properly prosecuted their work. Held, that the foreman and "walking boss" were not "fellow servants" of plaintiff. Pitts & Hankins v. Wells (Ky.) 101 S. W. 1192, 1193.

ing, and decedent, who was not seen by either the foreman or another employé, was caught between such cars. Held, that the foreman was decedent's "fellow servant," for whose negligence, if any, defendant was not liable. Schwind v. Floriston Pulp & Paper Co., 89 Pac. 1066, 1068, 5 Cal. App. 197.

Plaintiff, with other laborers, was engaged in moving bones from the pressroom in defendant's packing house to a dump, with trucks passing over a gangway six feet wide and five feet above the surface. A foreman was placed over the men, whose duty it was to receive orders from the superintendent each day and direct the work. Plaintiff and another laborer were pushing one of the trucks along the gangway when it became stalled. The foreman ordered them to hurry, and exclaimed, "Pull it up," at the same time seizing one of the wheels and giving it a jerk which caused the shafts to turn, suddenly striking plaintiff and knocking him from the gangway and injuring him. Held that, though the foreman was negligent, yet the negligence was that of a fellow servant, and plaintiff could not recover. Lunn v. Morris & Co., 105 Pac. 15, 16, 81 Kan. 94.

Plaintiff, employed by a railroad company, was charged with the duty of cleaning out the office of the master mechanic, and of removing ashes from a building containing an engine used to move cars on a turntable. While plaintiff was loading ashes on a car on a turntable, as was his custom, the engineer and his assistant caused the car to be moved, whereby plaintiff who had not been given proper warning by the others was injured. Plaintiff was under the general control of the engineer, and the engineer was a subforeman under the master mechanic and the general foreman of the repair shops and yard. His duties consisted mainly in operating the turntable. Held, that the parties were "fellow servants" at the time of the accident. Peterson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 59 Atl. 502, 504, 77 Conn. 351.

A plumber, employed to fit and repair pipes in a blacksmith shop, without power to hire or discharge his helper, who is hired by the employer and directed by him to serve as helper and obey the directions of the plumber, is a fellow servant of the helper and not a superintendent within Employers' Liability Act, making an employer liable for injury to an employé caused by the negligence of an employé intrusted with superintendence, etc., and the employer, having supplied suitable appliances, is not liable for injuries to the helper in consequence of the plumber selecting defective appliances. McConnell v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 80 N. E. 190, 191, 187 N. Y. 341, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419, 10 Ann. Cas. 205.

with the injured person, even though he has power to oversee the man and direct the work immediately in his charge, unless his authority in that regard is entire and absolute. To constitute the foreman of a gang of laborers a vice principal, for whose negligence the master will be liable for personal injuries to an employé subject to his control, the master must confer on him the absolute management, exercising no discretion as to the conduct of his business except in providing safe tools, a safe place to work, safe materials to work on, competent fellow servants and, where necessary, proper rules and regulations for conducting the same. E. Van Winkle Gin & Machine Co. v. Brooks, 116 Pac. 908, 909, 29 Okl. 351.

To facilitate the work of removing old ties from an elevated structure, the foreman of a track gang directed employés to go down into the street and as the ties were thrown down to remove them; and directed other employés to station themselves near the place to warn the public, and he himself stationed himself where he could see when the ties were to be thrown. The foreman gave a signal that all was clear as each tie was thrown down; and an employé while in the act of removing a tie was struck by a tie which was thrown on the signal of the foreman that all was clear. Held, that such facts were insufficient to place on defendant any common-law liability for the negligence of the foreman. Larson v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 545, 548, 134 App. Div. 679.

Defendant had established an elaborate organization in its factory, and appointed a superintendent and assistant superintendent, on duty day and night. It had also employed J., whose duty it was to put on all belts that came off and mend them when they broke, and if a belt came off it was the duty of the foreman of the department to notify the assistant superintendent or the belt man, whereupon the machinery would be stopped until the belt could be replaced. W., a machine operator in the same line of employment as plaintiff replaced a belt on plaintiff's machine on two occasions, and the second time, directing plaintiff that if it came off again to put it on himself. It came off the third time, and plaintiff, in endeavoring to replace it, was injured. Held, that W. was a fellow servant of plaintiff, and had no authority on behalf of defendant to direct him to replace the belt. Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Matthews, 151 Fed. 761, 762, 81 O. C. A. 385.

Under Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, making the master liable for death of an employé caused by the negligence of any person in the service of the employer intrusted with or exercising superintendence, whose sole or principal duty is that of superintendence, etc., as supplemented by Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, declaring that persons having authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employment of a railroad or with authority to direct or control any other employé in the performance of his duty, etc., are vice principals, and not "fellow servants," the foreman of a railroad section crew in the performance of his duty to warn a member of the crew of the danger from an approaching express train was a vice principal, and not a "fellow servant." La Placa v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 797, 799, 127 App. Div. 843.

Plaintiff and D. were employed by defendant in dismantling heavy machinery in the World's Fair Buildings. D. was foreman under a superintendent who was under a manager there. The day before the accident a heavy wooden frame 25 feet high had been erected and temporarily fastened in place with guy ropes under the direction of D. to be used to lift and move the heavy parts of an engine. On the day of the accident plaintiff and four other men were working under D. to permanently secure this frame in place. D. directed plaintiff to go upon the frame, and, after he had climbed there for the purpose of moving one of the ropes which held this frame in place so that they could use it at another place as a permanent guy rope, D. untied it below, and the frame fell and injured plaintiff. Held, D. was not a "vice principal" but was a "fellow servant" of plaintiff, and defendant was not liable for his negligence. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. v. Callaghan, 155 Fed. 397, 401, 83 C. O. A. 669, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361.

Laws 1906, p. 1682, c. 657, as amended so as to provide that in all actions against a railroad corporation for personal injury, or death resulting from personal injury, while in the employment of such corporation, arising from its negligence or that of any of its officers or employées, it shall be held that persons in the service of any such railroad corporation, who are intrusted with the authority to direct or control any other employé in the performance of duty of such employé, or who have as a part of their duty for the time being physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, switch, locomotive engine, car, train, or telegraph office, are vice principals of such corporation, and are not "fellow servants" of such injured or deceased employées, is not unconstitutional, and does not create a new cause of action, but merely declares what may be regarded as prima facie evidence, and as such a rule of evidence is valid. Schradin v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 73, 74.

Where plaintiff, a machinist, was employed by defendant to assist in cleaning the sheaves and cables of the elevators in defendant's building, on the day he was injured he had undertaken to do such work in company with O., who was second assistant to the engineer, and plaintiff claimed that he was told by the chief engineer to assist O., and that he acted under O.'s orders, and was injured because of his negligence in telling plaintiff to go ahead with the work without giving warning to the men in charge of the elevator, plaintiff being subsequently injured by the starting of the elevator, plaintiff and O. were "fellow servants"; the mere fact that O. was directed to stand guard and give directions when to proceed with the work being insufficient to constitute his acts "acts of superintendence" within Employer's Liability Act, Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, making the master liable for injuries to a servant by the negligence of a person exercising acts of superintendence, or acting with superintendence with the consent of the employer, etc. Falk v. Havemeyer, 108 N. Y. Supp. 140, 142, 123 App. Div. 657 (citing McConnell v. Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 80 N. E. 190, 187 N. Y. 341, 10 L. R. A. [N. S.] 419, 10 Ann. Cas. 205; McLaughlin v. Interurban St. R. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 883, 101 App. Div. 134; Quinlan v. Lackawanna Steel Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 942, 107 App. Div. 176).

The responsibility of the master is not determined by the difference in rank between the servant injured and the one in fault, or by the fact that the negligent servant is foreman or in control of others, but upon the nature of the act complained of, whether it is an act of service or an attempted performance of a nondelegable duty of the master. Plaintiff was injured by an explosion of gas while cleaning a hydraulic main in defendant gas company's plant under the direction of defendant's foreman. Defendant had provided valves for shutting off the gas from its mains while they were being cleaned, and it does not appear that the act of shutting off the gas or of airing the mains required any special skill. Held, that the negligence of the foreman in failing to shut off the gas from the main or to air it before it was cleaned was not negligence in the performance by him of a nondelegable duty owed by defendant to plaintiff, but such action was purely an act of service, which defendant could properly delegate, and for the negligent performance of which defendant was not liable. Nor can plaintiff recover on the ground that defendant had failed to provide a safe place for him to work, since defendant provided proper appliances for securing plaintiff's safety, and the place was rendered unsafe only by the neglect of the foreman to properly use these appliances; the operation of the appliances being a duty defendant could delegate to an employ. Tilley v. Rockingham County Light & Power Co., 67 Atl. 946, 947, 74 N. H. 816 (citing Hilton v. Fitchburg R. Co., 59 Atl. 625, 73 N. H. 118, 119, 68 L. R. A. 428; McLaine v. Head & Dowst Co., 52 Atl. 545, 71 N. H. 294, 58 L. R. A. 462, 93 Am. St. Rep. 522; Galvin v. Pierce, 54 Atl. 1014, 72 N. H. 79; Wallace v. Boston & M. R. R., 57 Atl. 913, 72 N. H. 504).

Dependence on relation to each other

In Missouri, those only are "fellow servants" who, under the direction and management of the master in person, or some servant placed by him over them, are engaged in the performance of the same common work, with no dependency on or relation to each other except the bare fact that they work together without rank, the test not being that all work for the same person or company; but they must be engaged in the same common employment and under the same common master. McMurray v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 125 S. W. 751, 761, 225 Mo. 272.

Where a master confers authority upon one of his employes to take charge and control of a certain class of workmen in carrying on some particular branch of his business, such employe, in governing and directing the movements of the men under his charge with respect to that branch of the business, is the direct representative of the master and not a mere "fellow servant." Those under the direction and management of a master or of a servant placed over them by him and engaged in the same common work, without dependence upon or relation to each other, are "fellow servants." Burkard v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., 117 S. W. 35, 41, 217 Mo. 466 (quoting City of La Salle v. Kostka, 60 N. E. 72, 190 Ill. 130; Sambos v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 114 S. W. 569, 134 Mo. App. 460).

Different departments of service

The doctrine of distinct departments is not limited to railroad cases alone. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 484, 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

A servant is entitled to recover from the master for injuries caused by the negligence of a collaborer engaged in a different line of work. Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 122 S. W. 228, 230.

The homogeneous business of a master cannot be divided into distinct and separate departments by the testimony to that effect of his servants, the nature of the business alone separating it into departments. Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. v. Callaghan, 155 Fed. 397, 399, 88 C. C. A. 669, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361.

Under Civ. Code, § 2320, declaring that masters are liable for damages occasioned by their servants in the exercise of the functions in which they are employed, the master is answerable for damages by his servants and overseers to another servant engaged in a different department of the same business. Payne v. Georgetown Lumber Co., 42 South. 475, 477, 117 La. 983.

An employe whose duty it is to fire a steam shovel used in the construction of a railroad is not a fellow servant of employes engaged in operating a train on the railroad. Oliver v. Roach (Ky.) 102 S. W. 274, 275.

A coal trimmer, working in a vessel which was being loaded with coal, was a "fellow servant" with a "wheelman," whose duty it was to empty the coal into a barrow, and, when full, to run the barrow over a hatch and dump the coal. Griffin v. Curran, 80 N. E. 509, 510, 194 Mass. 359.

Under the statutes of Arkansas in force in November, 1905, a brakeman and a car inspector were not "fellow servants." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Holmes, 114 S. W. 221, 222, 88 Ark. 181 (citing Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Becker, 53 S. W. 406, 67 Ark. 1, 46 L. R. A. 814, 77 Am. St. Rep. 78; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dupree, 105 S. W. 878, 84 Ark. 377, 120 Am. St. Rep. 74).

An employé, engaged as a carpenter in repairing cars for a railroad company, is a "fellow servant" with the engineer of the locomotive belonging to the same railroad company, who is engaged in driving cars upon the railroad of such company. Unfried v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 12 S. E. 512, 515, 517, 34 W. Va. 260.

Plaintiff, who was employed in defendant's machine shop and injured, while cleaning a reservoir, by falling tools which were being used by carpenters on the roof thereof, the latter being under a different foreman, was nevertheless a "fellow servant" of the carpenters. Taylor v. Washington Mill Co., 97 Pac. 243, 244, 50 Wash. 308.

A brakeman and a station porter are not "fellow servants," within the meaning of the statute providing that all persons engaged in the common service of a railway corporation and working together at the same time and place to a common purpose of the same grade are fellow servants. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Elmore, 79 S. W. 891, 894, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 58.

A fireman employed on a locomotive, and engaged in the movement of a train, is not a "fellow servant" with the superintendent of construction and the foreman of a bridge gang, who are present and engaged in supervising and directing the work on the bridge, being engaged in separate departments of work. McCabe & Steen Cons. Co. v. Wilson, 28 Sup. Ct. 558, 560, 209 U. S. 275, 52 L. Ed. 788.

A member of a car repairing gang working under a foreman was not a fellow servant with a construction train crew working under a separate foreman, neither foreman having any authority and control over the other crew. McMurray v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 125 S. W. 751, 762, 225 Mo. 272.

Where a painter, working on a car under the direction of a paint foreman having authority to hire and discharge men and direct their work, was injured through the negligence of a switchman working under the direction of the general superintendent of the whole carworks, in which from 1,000 to 2,500 men were employed, the painter was not a fellow servant of the switchman. Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 485, 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

A draftsman in the employ of the engineering department of a railroad is a fellow servant with the man running the elevator in the building in which the draftsman works. Fouquet v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1105, 1107, 53 Misc. Rep. 121.

A carpenter constructing a building and a man operating a freight elevator in a retail store are engaged in different departments of labor, and are not "fellow servants," under Civ. Code, § 1970, as amended by St. 1907, c. 97, limiting the fellow-servant rule to cases of servants of the same master engaged in the same department of labor. Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 107 Pac. 695, 698, 157 Cal. 348.

An architectural draughtsman provided by his employer with a room in its building is a fellow servant of one employed by the same company as operator of an elevator in the building used by all the employes therein, as affecting liability for injury to the draughtsman caused by the operator's negligence. Fouquet v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 108 N. Y. S. 525, 528, 123 App. Div. 804 (citing Ross v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. [N. Y.] 5 Hun, 488; McDonald v. Simpson-Crawford Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 269, 114 App. Div. 859; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 564; Vick v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 267, 47 Am. Rep. 36; Spees v. Boggs, 47 Atl. 875, 198 Pa. 112, 52 L. R. A. 933, 82 Am. St. Rep. 792).

A car inspector and an engine foreman in charge of a switch engine, not working together for a common purpose, but engaged in different departments of the service, are not fellow servants within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6658-6660, providing that all persons engaged in the common service of a railroad, and who are working together to a common purpose, are fellow servants, etc. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Dupree, 105 S. W. 878, 879, 84 Ark. 377, 120 Am. St. Rep. 74.

Under Const. art. 9, § 15, providing that an employé of a railroad company shall have the same right to recover for injuries received from the negligence of employes as is allowed to persons not employes when the injury results from the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in another department of labor, a watchman at a railroad crossing is engaged in another department of labor from his fellow servants running a train across the crossing. Betchman v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 55 S. E. 140, 141, 75 S. C. 68.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 6659, making all persons engaged in the common service of a railroad, and who, while so engaged, are working together to a common purpose, neither of such persons being intrusted with superintendence, "fellow servants," provided that servants are not thereby made fellow servants with other servants engaged in any other department or service of the railroad, members of a train crew are not fellow servants of section hands being carried to work. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Harmon, 109 S. W. 295, 297, 85 Ark. 508.

Where a shoveler employed in a phosphate mill, and the men who were pushing a car, were working in different departments of the mill under different foremen, neither of whom had power to hire laborers, provide machinery or the place of labor, or to do any duty imposed by law on the master, the employes pushing the car and the shoveler were "fellow servants," for whose negligence the employer was not liable. The change in the fellow servant's law made by the Constitution of 1895 affects only the employes of railroad corporations. Wilson v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 58 S. E. 1019, 1020, 78 S. C. 381.

"The doctrine that the employes of a railroad company, engaged in different departments of the company's service, are not 'fellow servants,' and do not assume the risks incident to the negligence of each other, while not recognized in the courts of the United States, is well established in Tennessee," and a foreman of the water supply of a division of a railroad, whose duties relate to the physical condition of the water tanks located along the line, is not a "fellow servant" of an engineer of a detached engine, on which he is riding in the performance of his duties, but with the operation of which he has nothing to do, and hence does not assume the risk of the engineer's negligence. Stuber v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 87 S. W. 411, 414, 113 Tenn. 305.

The term "fellow servant" can properly be used in more than one sense. Its general sense is exceedingly broad. One's fellow man would include all men, and one's fellow servant would include all servants of the same master. But "fellow servant," as applied to the liability of a master, is a technical expression, which makes it necessary to limit or restrict its meaning so that it may be confined within the reason for its adoption as a rule of law. Its adoption and enforcement arises from public policy; some have said a mistaken policy. But it was thought that, if a servant knew he was without a remedy if he was injured by the negligence of his fellow servant, he would keep watch on such fellow and report his delinquency to a correcting power, who could discipline him. Guided by the reason for the rule, it seems to us it should be applied, and applied only in those cases where the servant injured and the one inflicting the injuries are so associated and related in their work that they can observe and have an influence over each other's conduct, and can report delinquences to a common correcting power or head. In short, they should be fellow servants in fact, and not simply in dialectic theory. If in separate and distinct departments, so that the circumstances just stated do not and cannot exist, then they are not fellow servants within any just or fair meaning of the rule. A switchman, under the control of the railroad company's trainmaster, and a car repairer, in the mechanical department of the railroad company under the general management of its master mechanic, were in different departments of service, and were therefore not fellow servants at common law. Kelly v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 125 S. W. 818, 821, 141 Mo. App. 490 (quoting and adopting definition in Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 107 S. W. 481, 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. [N. S.] 292; Parker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 19 S. W. 1119, 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802).

Where a vice principal does the work of an ordinary laborer, and is negligent therein, his employer is not liable for injuries to another employe from such negligence. Miller v. American Bridge Co., 65 Atl. 1109, 1110, 216 Pa. 559.

One may act as foreman and still be the "fellow servant" of whom he directs, and it is necessary to look beyond the description of the person to determine the ground of liability. Doyle v. Melendy, 75 Atl. 881, 885, 88 Vt. 339.

It is the act itself that characterized the performer as a "vice principal" or a "fellow servant," and not the title of the actor or the fact that he does superior duties. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

If one who is a vice principal in a general sense undertakes the performance of a duty which usually belongs to a fellow servant, he is, as respects that particular act, a "fellow servant" and not a vice principal. Roebbling Const. Co. v. Thompson, 82 N. E. 196, 197, 229 Ill. 42 (citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Gail v. Beckstein, 50 N. E. 711, 173 Ill. 187; Baier v. Selke, 71 N. E. 1074, 211 Ill. 512, 103 Am. St. Rep. 208).

In so far as a "working foreman" is performing the work of a laborer, he is, under the laws of Illinois, the fellow servant of another laborer, so the master is not liable for his negligence in such respect causing injury to the other laborer. Bokamp v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 100 S. W. 689, 691, 123 Mo. App. 270.

One is a "vice principal" who is employed to hire, direct, and discharge employes or to whom the employer has delegated a duty owing to workmen, though otherwise he may be a fellow servant; it being the authority given in a particular matter, and not the grade of service, which determines the issue of vice principal or fellow servant. Lantry-Sharpe Contracting Co. v. McCracken (Tex.) 184 S. W. 363, 364.

One may be a vice principal as to certain acts and a fellow servant as to others, and a foreman in giving commands to his men is a vice principal, but, where he joins the men in doing the common labor which they are doing, he is, as to such work, a fellow servant. Chenoweth v. Burr, 89 N. E. 1008, 1010, 242 Ill. 312.

Although another employé of the same master was called a manager, yet where the only duty which he was shown to perform was to help plaintiff to load logs on a wagon, and it was alleged that he was so engaged at the time of the injury, his action in this regard was that of a "fellow servant." Van Dyke v. Menlo Fruit Co., 59 S. E. 215, 129 Ga. 532.

A foreman under whom workmen are employed is a "fellow servant" with the workmen, when engaged in accomplishing with them the common task or object, but, when discharging or assuming to discharge the duties toward the workmen which the law imposes on the principal, is a vice principal. Crist v. Wichita Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 83 Pac. 199, 201, 72 Kan. 135.

Under the modern rule of the federal courts the theory of vice principal as determining the liability of a master to a servant for the negligence of another employé has been largely discarded, and the distinction between negligence which is to be imputed to the master and that which is to be considered as merely and solely the negligence of a fellow servant turns rather on the character of the act than on the relation of the employés to each other. Peters v. George, 154 Fed. 634, 639, 83 C. C. A. 408 (citing Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 5 Sup. Ct. 184, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772).

The question of whether or not one is a "fellow servant" is to be settled by the nature of the act rather than the rank of the respective servants. In relation to the doctrine of vice principals, there are many servants who represent the master but have, in the division of labor, control, more or less general in their respective departments, who are called "fellow servants," and it is the effort of the servants, on the one hand, to extend this relation, and on the part of the master, on the other hand, to curtail it. La Barre v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., 94 N. W. 735, 737, 133 Mich. 192.

In the absence of a statute, "unless the negligent servant is the general manager, or general superintendent of the business of the master, it is not his rank or authority over other employés, but it is the nature of the duty he is discharging when he is guilty of the negligence that determines whether he is a 'vice principal' or a 'fellow servant,' and when the master is liable or is exempt from liability for the injury caused by his negligence. If he is discharging one of the absolute duties of the master, the latter is liable for his acts and for his negligence, but, if he is discharging one of the primary duties of the service, his employer is exempt from liability." Southern Pac. Co. v. Schoer, 114 Fed. 466, 468, 52 C. C. A. 268, 57 L. R. A. 707.

The mere fact that one of a number of servants who are in the habit of working together in the same line of employment for a common master has the power to control and direct the actions of the others with respect to such employment will not of itself render the master liable for the negligence of the governing servant resulting in an injury to one of the others, without regard to other circumstances; if the negligence complained of consists of some act done or omitted by one having such authority which relates to his duty as a collaborer with those under his control, and which might just as readily have happened with one of them having no such authority, the common master will not be liable. Anderson v. Higgins, 122 Ill. App. 454, 457.

The foreman is not the fellow servant of a switching crew in the performance of duties peculiar to his position, but is presumptively the representative of the master. Berglund v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 123 N. W. 928, 109 Minn. 317.

Where the duty of inspecting a mine for gas is delegated to a certain servant while performing it, he is as to his co-workers a vice principal, irrespective of his ordinary duties. Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Buchanan, 102 S. W. 694, 695, 82 Ark. 499.

A boss of a crew, loading rails onto a flat car, engaged in the same work as the crew, although he may have direction of it, is not a "vice principal" of the master, but a mere "fellow servant" of the members of the crew. Whitfield v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 66 S. E. 973, 975, 7 Ga. App. 268.

A foreman, directing the work of constructing a building, was not, while temporarily running the engine by which the derrick was operated in the absence of the regular engineer, the fellow servant of a stone mason receiving stone from the derrick. When a foreman for the time being takes a place made vacant by the absence of a laborer who was under him, he does not surrender the duties and obligations of a superior; but the master will be responsible for his negligence if it results in injury to an employé also subordinate to the foreman. John Die- bold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 122 S. W. 212, 213.

Where a servant is injured through the negligence of a superior servant in exercising the authority of the master by negligently directing the performance of a dangerous task, the master is prima facie liable for the injury if the injured servant was in the exercise of due care. A servant injured by the acts of another occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant cannot recover against the master without showing that the injury resulted from an act in the exercise of the authority of the master distinct from any manual act in the common employment, unless such act operated as a breach of a non-delegable duty of the master. The act of one occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant in prematurely starting a machine at which both he and plaintiff worked, resulting in plaintiff's injury, was in the capacity of fellow servant for which the master is not liable. English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co., 122 S. W. 747, 748, 145 Mo. App. 439.

Where a carpenter, employed with others on the repair of a house, acted as foreman of the work, his negligence in constructing a scaffold or in causing the same to be constructed was not the negligence of a "fellow servant" as to the other servants, notwithstanding that at other times he labored with them in the common employment. Neves v. Green, 86 S. W. 508, 509, 111 Mo. App. 684.

A foreman directing employes engaged in moving things in a railway yard did not lose his status of vice principal, fixed by Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560g, declaring that all persons intrusted by a railway company in controlling other employes are vice principals, and become "fellow servants" of the employes by assisting them in moving a tool box in the yard pursuant to his orders. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dean (Tex.) 89 S. W. 797, 798.

The fact that a foreman in charge of a single job of work being done by defendant corporation, who worked with the men under him, had the power to hire and discharge them and to direct their movements in that particular work did not erect that single job into a department of defendant's business, so as to make the foreman a "vice principal," but he remained a "fellow servant" with the men under him, and, for his negligence resulting in an injury to one of such men, defendant cannot be held liable. Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Otte, 157 Fed. 230, 232, 84 C. C. A. 673.

Where the foreman pulled a box which a trucker was moving from a freight car to the platform after the truck wheel had caught on the edge of the gangplank, causing the box to fall on the trucker, the foreman's determination that the box should be pulled for the trucker's assistance was an act of superintendence, while his manual act in pulling it was that of a fellow servant. Silvia v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 89 N. E. 1061, 1063, 203 Mass. 519.

Where plaintiff, an ironworker, was injured by the negligence of defendant's foreman in allowing "wash plates" to be used in the construction of a boat, to be so negligently on the deck of such boat that they fell into the hull, where plaintiff was working, and struck him, the foreman was engaged in a delegable duty, and was a fellow servant of plaintiff, and not a vice principal, for whose negligence defendant was liable. Amoe v. Great Lakes Engineering Works, 114 N. W. 1010, 1011, 151 Mich. 212.

Where a belt became entangled, and while the foreman was attempting to loosen it, and directing the plaintiff in assisting him, the foreman, severed the belt, so that plaintiff was caught and injured, the injury was caused by the foreman's act as a fellow servant, and not by his superintendence of the work, so that as matter of law the master was not liable either at common law or under the employers' liability act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600). Gulmartin v. Solvay Process Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 118, 122, 115 App. Div. 794.

Where the foreman of defendant's shipping department carried a broken bottle from the packing room and left it in the corner of a hall, and thereafter plaintiff, while sweeping the hall, slipped and fell on the bottle and was injured, the act of the foreman was the act of a fellow servant for which defendant was not liable, since the duty to pick up broken glass in the packing rooms where bottles are constantly handled might properly be committed to another without the master's liability for negligence. Freebourn v. Chamberlain Medicine Co., 118 N. W. 918, 126 Iowa, 484.

Where the negligence of the superintendent of a factory consisted in his ordering a servant to take hold of material which the superintendent was running through a circular saw when the saw was so out of repair that it was liable to kick the material and bring the servant's hand in contact with the saw, and the servant was injured by having his hand come in contact with the saw, the master could not escape liability on the ground that the servant and the superintendent were fellow servants. Chenoweth v. Burr, 89 N. E. 1008, 1010, 242 Ill. 312.

Plaintiff was injured while operating a steel drop press by the parting of a belt due to a defective lacing. The work of adjusting the lacings was not easily accomplished by operators of the presses, and had been placed on a superior servant in charge of some 35 of such presses in defendant's factory. Held, that such servant, whose duty it was to lace the belt, was not plaintiff's "fellow servant" with reference to such act, but a vice principal, although when his other duties permit-

Plaintiff was employed as a miner at a specified price for coal delivered at the mouth of the pit, plaintiff being required to run his cars of coal to the entry, where they were transported to the mouth of the pit by mule power. Plaintiff was promised assistance in running his cars out, in order to facilitate his mining efforts, and, on the derailment of a car in the room, he was assisted by the pit boss to rerail the same, in which operation his fingers were pinched between the bottom of the car and a wooden prop the pit boss had been using, and which he had dropped near the car. Held, that the acts of the pit boss in assisting plaintiff were those of a fellow servant and not of a vice principal. Cavanaugh v. Centerville Block Coal Co., 109 N. W. 303, 306, 131 Iowa, 700, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

Plaintiff was employed to run an elevator in defendant's factory, and the foreman got in and ran up to the third floor, where plaintiff had a bundle to deliver. The foreman then told him to deliver the bundle, and he would wait for him till he came back. On his return, he found the chain down and the door partly open, and in the darkness attempted to step on the elevator, which in the meantime had presumably been run up the fourth floor by the foreman, and he thus fell to the bottom of the shaft. Held that, independently of the foreman's direction and assurance, the foreman's act of moving the elevator without putting up the chain and closing the door was the act of a fellow servant, for which the master was not liable; the running of the elevator involving no "element of superior duty, supervision, or command." Martin v. Cornell, 121 N. Y. Supp. 119, 120, 136 App. Div. 585.

A conductor in charge of a freight train backed his train into a siding with such force as to throw a heavy casting from a car, which was standing on the siding and which was struck by the freight train, onto the main track, where it was struck by a passenger train, which it wrecked, thereby injuring the fireman of such passenger train. A rule of the railroad required employes in charge of trains to promptly report to the superintendent any incident involving the obstruction of the road, to repair damages and take entire charge of necessary work, and to first protect the train with proper danger signals, and take every precaution to prevent further accident. Held that, under the laws of Tennessee, the crews of the freight and passenger trains were "fellow servants" up to the time when the casting was thrown upon the main track, but, from that time until the time when the passenger train was wrecked, the conductor of the freight train was, by virtue of the railroad's rule, a vice principal, whose duty it was as a representative of the railroad to remove the obstruction from the main track and to warn the approaching passenger train for its protection. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Curd, 89 S. W. 140, 141, 133 Ky. 138, 134 Am. St. Rep. 444.

A street railway barn foreman, whose duty it was to give orders with reference to the running of cars, with authority to lay off men for infraction of rules, directed plaintiff to take out a new car, which plaintiff stopped just outside the car shed, at a sandhouse, to get sand for his trip. While plaintiff was getting sand, the foreman got on the standing car and started it forward without signal, crushing plaintiff against the side of the sand bin. Held, that the foreman was plaintiff's "vice principal," and that his act in momentarily moving the car, instead of ordering another to do so, did not render his negligence in so doing that of plaintiff's "fellow servant." Bien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 83 S. W. 986, 987, 108 Mo. App. 399 (citing Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R., 55 S. W. 108, 153 Mo. 380, 48 L. R. A. 399, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721; Bane v. Irwin, 72 S. W. 522, 172 Mo. 306; Miller v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 19 S. W. 53, 109 Mo. 350, 82 Am. St. Rep. 678; Hawk v. McLeod Lumber Co., 65 S. W. 1022, 166 Mo. 121; Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 15 S. W. 554, 103 Mo. 575, 23 Am. St. Rep. 900; Russ v. Wabash West. Ry. Co., 20 S. W. 472, 112 Mo. 45, 18 L. R. A. 823; Donahoe v. City of Kansas City, 38 S. W. 571, 136 Mo. 670; Foster v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 21 S. W. 916, 115 Mo. 165; Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 79 S. W. 669, 180 Mo. 490, 1 Ann. Cas. 136; Hutson v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 50 Mo. App. 300; Haworth v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 68 S. W. 111, 94 Mo. App. 215; Donnelly v. Aida Min. Co., 77 S. W. 130, 103 Mo. App. 349; Strode v. Conkey, 78 S. W. 679, 105 Mo. App. 12).

Plaintiff was employed in a box factory as a belt repairer and assistant to the machinery foreman, to whose orders he was subject. The freight elevator having fallen, plaintiff and the foreman started to repair it, and without making any examination of the machinery assumed that the elevator fell because of the breaking of the cord. A new cord was put in, and a stop put on for the ground floor, when plaintiff and the foreman went up on the elevator to the second floor to put the stop on there; but before they could do so the elevator fell, injuring both of them. After the accident a complete examination of the elevator disclosed that the drum shaft was bent, and that the sprocket wheel and gearing were so broken as to be inoperative, either of which might have caused the accident. Held, that plaintiff and the foreman, while engaged in repairing the elevator, were fellow servants, so that plaintiff could not recover for the foreman's negligence in failing to discover the defects in the elevator. Reed v. Moore & McFerrin, 153 Fed. 358, 360, 82 C. C. A. 434, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331 (citing American Bridge Co. v. Seeds, 144 Fed. 605, 75 C. C. A. 407, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041; Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Carlisle, 152 Fed. 933, 82 C. C. A. 81).

Plaintiff was employed to assist in aligning bridge piles which were held in place by timber caps; an iron bolt being driven through each cap into the top of the pile. Defendant's foreman discovered that one of the bents of piles was too high, and undertook to lower the same by sawing into the bolts, and then by driving down the caps to the ends of the piles. After plaintiff had sawed away the piles, the foreman, without bracing them, and without notice to plaintiff, who stood on a scaffold beside the same, directed plaintiff's "fellow servant" to strike the cap, and when he did so it sprang from the pile and struck and injured plaintiff. Held, that the act of the foreman in adopting the method he did to lower the cap was not the act of the plaintiff's "fellow servant." Deputy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 84 S. W. 103, 104, 110 Mo. App. 110 (citing Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 79 S. W. 664, 180 Mo. 490, 1 Ann. Cas. 136; Barnicle v. Connor, 81 N. W. 452, 110 Iowa, loc. cit. 240).

A mere foreman, not the head of a separate department, is a "fellow servant" of the workmen under him or a "vice principal" dependent on the nature of the duties he is discharging at the time of the negligent act, with which he is charged. If he is discharging one of the absolute or personal duties of the master, he is a "vice principal," and his negligence is imputable to the master. Where a bridge company sent a force of men under a foreman to make repairs on a railroad bridge, consisting in part of replacing certain old parts with heavy steel girders, and in doing this it was necessary to construct on the spot wooden frames or bents to support the weight of the girders, while they were being put in place, which were made by the workmen as an incident to the work, the foreman was not a "vice principal" either with respect to the construction of such frames or their subsequent inspection. Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry, 131 Fed. 175, 179, 180, 65 C. C. A. 481.

Engaged in same particular work

A "fellow servant" is defined to be one employed about the same work with the servant injured, whose negligence caused the injury to the servant complaining. Krogg v. West Point R. R., 77 Ga. 202, 214, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77 (citing Hough v. Texas Pac. R. R., 100 U. S. 214; Balne v. Athens Foundry, 75 Ga. 718; Cooper v. Mullins, 30 Ga. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 638).

An employer is liable to an employé, injured through the negligence of another employé in the performance of different work under their common employment. Taylor v. E. C. Palmer & Co., 50 South. 522, 523, 124 La. 531.

A servant engaged in the excavation of a trench and the foreman directing the work are "fellow servants" in a common employment. Rocco v. F. A. Gillespie Co., 64 Atl. 117, 118, 73 N. J. Law, 591.

A servant employed to operate in the nighttime a particular machine was not a "fellow servant" with others employed to operate the same machine in the daytime. Goshorn v. Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., 64 S. E. 22, 24, 65 W. Va. 250.

An employé engaged in hauling rock and unloading it and another whose duty it was to carry the rock after being unloaded to the place where used were "fellow servants." Martin v. Mason-Hoge Co. (Ky.) 91 S. W. 1146.

Two servants tamping the floor of a furnace, one of them holding a block of wood on the floor, and the other pounding it with a sledge hammer, are "fellow servants." Wilkinson Co-Operative Glass Co. v. Dickinson, 73 N. E. 957, 959, 35 Ind. App. 230.

An employé engaged in charging holes in rock with dynamite and exploding the same is a "fellow servant" of the employés engaged in drilling the holes for the charges. Hooe v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 72 N. E. 341, 342, 187 Mass. 67.

A helper in a machine shop, engaged with another helper in painting an engine, and an engine tester, all three of whom were working under the same foreman and on the same engine, were "fellow servants." Millett v. Puget Sound Iron & Steel Works, 79 Pac. 980, 981, 37 Wash. 438.

Workmen engaged in the ordinary occupation of unloading a railroad car under the direction of a common overseer are "fellow servants," and the master is not liable for an injury to one engaged in such occupation caused by the negligence of a competent fellow servant. Westlake v. Murphy, 122 N. W. 684, 685, 85 Neb. 45, 19 Ann. Cas. 149.

An engine wiper and roundhouse hostler, who was temporarily engaged with the wiper in cleaning an engine, were "fellow servants"; and for injuries to the former caused by the negligence of the latter, while engaged in the common work, there could be no recovery against the common master. Cloyd v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 408, 410, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 506.

A trackman and a brakeman in charge of cars operated on the track, though working for a common master, were not engaged in a common employment, and were not therefore fellow servants. Hale v. Crown Columbia Pulp & Paper Co., 105 Pac. 480, 482, 56 Wash. 236.

The conductor and porter of a sleeping car are fellow servants in so far as their duties require that they shall during certain night hours keep watch over said car, one serving during one portion of the night and the other during the remainder thereof. Pullman Co. v. Woodfolk, 121 Ill. App. 321, 327.

When any duty connected with operating an appliance is delegated to another by the master, such other becomes a "fellow servant" of all those engaged by the master in carrying on the common enterprise. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N.E. 369, 371, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

An employé engaged in mixing concrete for a building in process of construction is a "fellow servant" of the carpenters and employés engaged in sweeping rubbish into the basement; all being engaged in the common work of erecting the building, with no one having authority over the others. Armour & Co. v. Dumas, 95 S. W. 710, 711, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 36.

The engineer and hostler in charge of an engine while being run on an ash pit track in a railroad yard, and a servant employed to wet down the ashes dumped into the pit by engines and thereafter shoveling them into empty cars on a siding, are "fellow servants." Konoski v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 74 Atl. 516, 517, 77 N. J. Law, 645, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a master is not liable to one servant for injury caused by the negligence of another servant in the same common employment, unless the negligent servant was the master's representative, or the master was negligent in employing or retaining him. McIntosh v. Jones, 93 Pac. 557, 560, 36 Mont. 467, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933.

Where one who was employed to remove broken stone from a trench after blasting was injured through the carelessness of those who did the blasting, it was negligence of his fellow servants, for which the master could not be liable at common law. Citrone v. O'Rourke Engineering Const. Co., 80 N. E. 1092, 1094, 188 N. Y. 339, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

A servant employed in a glue factory engaged in sacking hair and loading it on wagons for shipment, and a servant engaged in driving a wagon and in assisting in loading it, are "fellow servants," while engaged in loading the wagon, since they are engaged by the same master in the prosecution of the same enterprise and common duty. McCaffrey v. Tamm Bros. Glue Co., 123 S. W. 944, 946, 143 Mo. App. 24.

An engine crew and common laborers engaged in construction work are fellow servants upon the principle that they were actually employed by the same master and that the work of each had for its object the accomplishment of a common end sought to be performed by the united efforts of all. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 123 Ill. App. 382, 384.

Where plaintiff, a skilled machinist employed by defendant, was engaged in the work of chipping a casting, and held a handled chisel, while a helper struck it with a plainly defective sledge hammer supplied by the defendant, and a sliver of steel broke from the head of the sledge, flew into plaintiff's eye, and destroyed his vision, under all the circumstances of the case stated at length in the opinion, it was held that plaintiff and the helper were not "fellow servants." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Quinlan, 93 Pac. 632, 635, 77 Kan. 126.

A member of a pile-driving crew, engaged in driving piling for the erection of falsework essential to the reconstruction of a bridge, is a "fellow servant" with a machinist employed by the same master to repair stationary engines located in the midst of the work upon barges, upon the bridge, and upon the falsework, and used for hoisting material and driving piling in the progress of the general enterprise of building the falsework. Atchison & E. Bridge Co. v. Miller, 80 Pac. 18, 29, 71 Kan. 13, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632.

Where plaintiff's intestate, a blacksmith's helper in a machine shop, was killed by the explosion of a piston head while it was being heated by H., who was employed at a forge adjoining that at which plaintiff's intestate worked, H., not having been intrusted by defendant with any duty with regard to other employés, was deceased's "fellow servant," for whose negligence defendant was not liable. Duff v. Willamette Iron & Steel Works, 78 Pac. 363, 364, 45 Or. 479.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h, defines "fellow servants" as follows: "All persons who are engaged in the common service of the person, receiver or corporation controlling or operating a railroad or street railway and who while so employed are in the same grade of employment and are doing the same character of work or service and are working together at the same time and place and at the same piece of work and to a common purpose, are 'fellow servants' with each other." Within such statute, one employed by a lumber company to cut and scale timber was not a fellow servant to employés operating a logging train. Keystone Mills Co. v. Chambers (Tex.) 118 S. W. 178.

If two coservants are associated together in the same service, and neither is under the control or direction of the other, they are fellow servants, and one cannot recover damages from the employer caused solely by the negligence of the other. A woman of mature age was employed as housekeeper in general charge of the housework, and was injured by an accident caused by the negligence of the 14 year old son of her employer, who was also performing ordinary household services, in the absence of his father, but pursuant to the father's general directions to perform such service. Held, that the woman and the boy were fellow servants, and that she could not recover from the employer for her injuries. Waxham v. Fink, 125 N. W. 145, 148, 86 Neb. 180, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 367, 21 Ann. Cas. 301.

To render employes fellow servants, it is not necessary that they should be engaged in the same particular work; but it is sufficient if they are in the employment of the same master, engaged in the same common enterprise, and are both employed to perform duties intended to accomplish the same general purpose, where such duties are not peculiar to the master as such. Stearns & Culver Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 50 South. 680, 683, 58 Fla. 362.

A "fellow servant" is not necessarily one engaged in the same particular work, nor belonging to the same grade or rank, as the servant injured; but it is sufficient if both are employed by the same master under the same control and performing the duties and services for the same general purpose. A servant whose business it is to letter monuments is not a fellow servant of cranimen whose duty it is to place monuments in a position for lettering, although the cranimen are called upon by the letterers to place the monuments for them, in the performance of which duty they are sometimes assisted by the letterers; such work, however, not being a part of their duty. Halwas v. American Granite Co., 123 N. W. 789, 793, 141 Wis. 127.

The term "fellow servants" in connection with evidence in an action for injuries to a switchman, while uncoupling cars, through the negligence of fellow servants, another switchman and the engineer, implies that each of them was engaged with the injured switchman in the common purpose of coupling and uncoupling cars; the other switchman in giving signals in furtherance of the work, and the engineer in operating the engine. Southern Pac. Co. v. Allen, 106 S. W. 441, 447, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 66.

Whether a duty to be performed is that of a fellow servant or of the master does not depend so much on the relative situations of the servants as upon the nature of the duty, and the fact that all are engaged in a common enterprise does not necessarily render their several employments those of fellow servants, neither does the circumstance that they are engaged in different lines of duty alone warrant the opposite conclusion. Streicher v. Davenport Brick & Tile Co. (Iowa) 124 N. W. 327, 329.

One who, at the time of the accident, was engaged in the particular business of converting iron into steel, is not the fellow servant of a coemploye, who at such time was engaged in cleaning and earing for certain tools used in such occupation (if such coemployes were not brought into habitual consociation), inasmuch as such relationship did not constitute a direct co-operation in a particular business in the same line of employment. Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 123 Ill. App. 285, 294.

Within the rule that those persons are "fellow servants" who work together at the same time and place to a common purpose, one who was in charge of engines as hostler, whose duty it was to receive incoming locomotives and carry them to the roundhouse and take out-going locomotives from the roundhouse and deliver them to the engineers, and a car repairer, who at the time injuries were inflicted was on a car under orders to proceed to assist in repairing damages caused by a wreck, were not "fellow servants." San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Keller, 32 S. W. 847, 848, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 569.

Where defendant, through its proper servants, was attempting to repair a feed pipe in its ore reduction plant, and had provided abundant means of support therefor, and appliances convenient at hand for holding the lower section of the pipe in place, but during the progress of the repairs the lower section of the pipe was either pushed by one of the other employes or fell out of place and struck plaintiff, an employe, causing the injuries complained of, the negligence, if any, by which the pipe was caused to fall, was that of plaintiff's "fellow servants," for which the defendant was not liable. Colorado-Philadelphia Reduction Co. v. Fretz, 88 Pac. 631, 632, 84 Colo. 472.

Defendant operated a steam log skidder, consisting of a flat car, on each end of which were disconnected engines operating separate skidding cables. Plaintiff, who was employed as a decker in the crew attached to one of the cables, was injured by being struck by a log negligently moved by the order of the decker connected with the other cable. Held, that plaintiff and such other decker were not engaged at the same piece of work at the time of the injury and, were therefore not "fellow servants" within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h. Hampton v. Woolsey (Tex.) 139 S. W. 888, 891.

Where a railroad bridge gang, in repairing a depot platform, divided into two squads to remove cotton bales from a portion of the platform to another part on which the repairs had been made, and during the removal all the men worked together, and plaintiff, while rolling a bale, was injured by another squad rolling another bale on him from the rear, they were engaged in the "same piece of work," and were fellow servants, within Sayles' Rev. Civ. St. art. 4560h, defining the same. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Still, 101 S. W. 442, 444, 100 Tex. 499.

Decedent, a member of a car repairing crew, under the immediate direction of a foreman, was killed by the fall of a car. After the car had been jacked up and blocked, the foreman ordered it to be raised higher, and, without putting any further blocks under the car, directed decedent to get under it and perform the work, after which the end of the car, resting only on the jacks, slipped, and fell to the ground. Held, that decedent and the foreman were fellow servants, and that defendant was not responsible for the foreman's negligence unless it was at fault in retaining him with knowledge of his incompetency. McClure v. Detroit Southern R. Co., 109 N. W. 847, 848, 146 Mich. 457.

Plaintiffs' intestates, their foremen, and defendant's roadmaster were all engaged in removing debris from defendant's track, caused by a landslide into a cut. During the afternoon one of the section foremen had been warned that the adjoining mountain side was dangerous, and in the evening the roadmaster stated, in the hearing of those present, that he had examined the mountain side before dark and that it was all right. Thereafter several of the employes were killed by a rock which rolled down the side of the mountain during the night. Held, that all engaged in the work were fellow servants. Maloney v. Florence & Cripple Creek R. Co., 89 Pac. 649, 651, 39 Colo. 384, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, 121 Am. St. Rep. 180, 12 Ann. Cas. 621.

Servants not in the same grades of employment are not "fellow servants." El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Kelly (Tex.) 83 S. W. 855, 861.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 1343, providing that all employes of a common master, engaged in the same grade of service and working together at the same time and place and to a common purpose, are "fellow servants," neither a section foreman and those working under him on the tracks, nor a telegraph operator, are "fellow servants" of an engineer. Neesley v. Southern Pac. Co., 99 Pac. 1067, 1069, 35 Utah, 259.

Under the employers' liability statute, making railroads liable for damages for personal injuries suffered by employes while in their service in certain cases, where the injured employe is in the exercise of due care, a liability may arise for an injury to the conductor of a railroad train through the negligence of the engineer of the train, notwithstanding a rule of the road makes the conductor in some respects the superior servant. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Collins, 80 N. E. 415, 420, 168 Ind. 467.

Where the conductor of a freight train, who had business elsewhere, gave the switch list to the rear brakeman, who, in co-operation with the head brakeman, proceeded to select certain cars in the yard and put them into the train, the rear brakeman, taking the lead in the switching operations and in the selection of the cars and giving signals, in which connection it was his duty to cut off the cars and adjust switches, while it was the duty of the head brakeman to ride the cars when kicked or moved, and to set the brakes and stop them at the proper places, the two employes were "fellow brakemen," each with his own duties to perform, and the rear brakeman did not represent the company nor stand in such relation as to make him the superior of the head brakeman. Higgins v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 79 Pac. 679, 680, 70 Kan. 814.

Although the rules of a railroad company direct that the enginemen must show their orders to the firemen, who are required to read them, and that after reading them they must keep such orders in mind, and, should there be occasion to do so, must remind the enginemen of them, a fireman could not be held guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for his death caused by a collision by reason of the disobedience by the conductor and engineer of a train dispatcher's order, in the absence of a showing that such order was shown to the fireman, since he was an inferior employe, whose duty it was to remain on the engine and obey the orders of the engineer, in the absence of knowledge on his part of the contents of such train dispatcher's order. Sinclair's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 236, 238.

Exercise of master's duties

A fellow servant is one to whom the master has not intrusted the performance of some nonassignable duty. Anderson v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 122 N. W. 794, 796, 108 Minn. 455, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624.

Only those servants who are engaged in common employment, who are not discharging any of the duties of the master, are "fellow servants." Gadsden v. Catawba Power Co., 61 S. E. 960, 963, 80 S. C. 239.

The question whether a certain servant was the "fellow servant" of another does not depend on the former's right to hire or discharge the latter, but on whether the former was intrusted by the master with the discharge of duties owing by him. Chesson v. Walker, 60 S. E. 422, 423, 146 N. C. 511.

In the absence of some statute defining fellow servant, the test to be applied is whether the negligent act, which caused the injury, was a breach of a positive duty owing by the master to his servant, in which case the person performing the act is a vice principal, and not a fellow servant. Morrison v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 88 Pac. 998, 1002, 32 Utah, 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 81 Pac. 86, 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695).

In determining who are "fellow servants," the usual test is not whether one has the power to direct the services of the other but lies in the nature of the acts done by the offending servant, whether such offending servant was in the performance of some duty which the master had intrusted to him and which the master owed to the injured servant. James v. Fountain Inn Mfg. Co., 61 S. E. 391, 392, 90 S. C. 232 (citing Brabham v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 50 S. E. 716, 71 S. C. 56; Tucker v. Buffalo Cotton Mills, 57 S. E. 626, 76 S. C. 549, 121 Am. St. Rep. 957).

Agents who were charged with the business of supplying the necessary machinery cannot be regarded as "fellow servants." Lininger v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 59 Atl. 430, 431, 210 Pa. 62 (quoting Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. 296, 58 Am. Rep. 722).

A roadmaster of a railroad, in discharging his duty of seeing that a portion of the tracks were clear of clinkers, was not a "fellow servant" with a brakeman. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Keefe, 84 S. W. 679, 682, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 588.

A roadmaster of a railroad, in discharging his duty of seeing that a portion of the track was in good and safe condition, was not a "fellow servant" with a locomotive fireman. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Birk, 99 S. W. 753, 754, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 615.

The negligence of a superintendent in failing to inspect a way used by employes in their work was the negligence of the master. Kirby v. Montgomery Bros. & Co., 90 N. E. 52, 197 N. Y. 27.

An employé, regardless of rank or title, who performs with the master's consent a nondelegable duty, is not a fellow servant of the laborers who do the work. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co., 62 S. E. 1008, 1009, 5 Ga. App. 125.

The foreman is not the fellow servant of a switching crew in the performance of duties peculiar to his position, but is presumptively the representative of the master. Berglund v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 123 N. W. 928, 929, 109 Minn. 317.

A distinct and independent employé, to whom is delegated the duty to disconnect and make safe the wires on which others must work, is a "vice principal" and not a "fellow servant" with the linemen and other like workmen. Massy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 126 N. W. 544, 546, 143 Wis. 220, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1096.

An employé, to whom the master leaves the regulation of matters which ought to be provided for by specific rules, will be regarded as the master's representative, and not a fellow servant of those who do the work. McDuffie v. Ocean S. S. Co., 62 S. E. 1008, 1009, 5 Ga. App. 125.

Where the custom of giving a warning by the foreman is proven, it is embraced in the duty owed by the master to the servants, and for the failure of the foreman to properly discharge that duty the master is responsible. Germanus v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 67 Atl. 79, 80, 74 N. J. Law, 662 (citing Bellville Stone Co. v. Mooney, 39 Atl. 764, 61 N. J. Law, 253, 39 L. R. A. 834).

A foreman of a crew in which a servant is working is not his fellow servant, but a vice principal of the master, in respect to informing the servant of dangers attendant upon the place where the foreman directs the servant to work. Hume v. Ft. Halifax Power Co., 75 Atl. 300, 303, 106 Me. 78, 138 Am. St. Rep. 332.

Instructions which an employé receives from a co-employé, to whom the duty of giving instructions has been delegated by the master, are the instructions of the master, and negligence in the giving of the instructions is the negligence of the master. Morena v. Winston, 80 N. E. 473, 474, 194 Mass. 378.

A mine boss discharging the duty of the employer in furnishing to an employé engaged in mining ore as a common laborer a reasonably safe place in which to work is a vice principal, and not a fellow servant of the employé. Low Moor Iron Co. v. La Bianca's Adm'r, 55 S. E. 532, 535, 106 Va. 83, 9 Ann. Cas. 1177.

A mining boss, employed to inspect the safety of the mine, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7479, in the performance of his duty to see that the mine is safe, is the vice principal and not the "fellow servant" of a miner injured by the negligence of the boss. Antioch Coal Co. v. Rockey, 82 N. E. 76, 78, 169 Ind. 247.

A car inspector is the master's alter ego, and his failure to exercise ordinary care in inspecting and examining instrumentalities furnished by him to his servants with which to do their work is negligence of the master, and not the negligence of a "fellow servant." El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Vizard, 88 S. W. 457, 460, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 534.

It being defendant's duty to see that its cars were properly inspected for the safety of its employes, if it delegated this duty to one of its employes, such employé in making the inspection would be a vice principal, and not a fellow servant. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Blachley, 109 S. W. 995, 999, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 141.

Where the superintendent of an electric railway company takes out a car to test it, acting as a motorman, he is not a fellow servant of a motorman injured by the negligence of the superintendent while so operating the car. Latscha v. Shamokin & E. Electric Ry. Co., 70 Atl. 1002, 1004, 222 Pa. 201.

Under the law of Virginia, the maintaining of a safe roadbed by a railway company is a duty, in the performance of which a servant is a vice principal for whose neglect, resulting in the injury of another servant, the company is responsible, and not a "fellow servant." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer's Adm'r, 69 S. W. 1108, 1113, 118 Ky. 952.

Where the duty of a stone company to keep its quarry in a reasonably safe condition devolved upon its foreman, whose duty it was to inspect the quarry, in the discharge of such duty such foreman was not the fellow servant of workmen in the quarry. Black's Adm'r v. Virginia Portland Cement Co., 55 S. E. 587, 591, 106 Va. 121.

Where a servant in charge of a straw chopper, superintending the work, puts another servant to work thereon, such superintending servant is not a fellow servant of the other, but a vice principal of the master as to the duty of giving instructions. Wyman v. Berry, 75 Atl. 123, 127, 106 Me. 43, 20 Ann. Cas. 439.

Under the laws of Pennsylvania, a flagman employed at a place where the track was obstructed to give warning to approaching trains, the place being a crossing of the railroad by a highway at grade, was not a fellow servant of a fireman on the engine. Ferguson v. Central R. Co., 67 Atl. 602, 604, 74 N. J. Law, 691.

Servants to whom a master delegates the duty to use reasonable care to furnish other servants with a safe place to work, and to see that rules and regulations regarding care and condition of appliances are complied with, are "vice principals," and not "fellow servants." Girard v. Grosvenordale Co., 73 Atl. 747, 750, 82 Conn. 271.

Employees charged with the duty of keeping a place to work and machinery in a safe condition, and of inspecting the same, are "vice principals" of the employer, regardless of their rank. Neither a roundhouse inspector, charged with the duty of inspecting the pilot of an engine, nor a section foreman and his men, required to keep the track in safe condition, are "fellow servants" of a brakeman. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Wise (Tex.), 106 S. W. 465, 468.

A machinist, employed by the master to repair an elevator cable, was the representative of the master as to his duty to use reasonable care to provide the elevator operator with a reasonably safe place in which to work and reasonably safe appliances. Haynie v. Hammond Packing Co., 103 S. W. 581, 582, 126 Mo. App. 88.

An employé, while engaged in assisting the foreman or superintendent in making an inspection after a blast of dynamite for the purpose of ascertaining whether any part of the charge had failed to explode, is performing a part of the master's duty, and is not a "fellow servant" of those engaged in drilling holes for the charge and removing the rock after the blast. Hooe v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 72 N. E. 341, 342, 187 Mass. 67.

Under Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 480, c. 415, § 81), providing that all machinery shall be properly guarded, and that when guards are taken off to make repairs they shall be promptly replaced, where the foreman of a printing shop took a guard rail off a press, and failed to replace it, whereby a press feeder was injured, the negligence of the foreman was that of the master, and not that of a "fellow servant." Pinndorf v. E. L. Kellogg & Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 617, 620, 108 App. Div. 209.

Where defendant directed its superintendent to obtain and set up a pile driver for use on the succeeding day, the negligence of the superintendent in failing to properly stay the pile driver, which resulted in an injury to a servant while working on the same, was the negligence of a vice principal, and not of a fellow servant. Wilder v. Great Western Cereal Co., 109 N. W. 789, 792, 134 Iowa, 451.

A railroad fireman, employed in removing snow from the track, was killed by a derailment of the locomotive in consequence of the existence of ice as high as the top of the rails. The ice was visible to the track walker, and he did not point out the particular places at which the patches of ice were found. Held that, as the duty of the track walker to point out the ice to be removed was a detail of work, the track walker and the fireman were "fellow servants," relieving the railroad from liability. Neagle v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co., 77 N. E. 1064-1066, 185 N. Y. 270, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821.

If a master invests a person with authority to employ and discharge employees in one department of its business, and intrusts such person with the supervision and care of making necessary repairs and caring for the machinery used in its mill, such person, while engaged in performing these duties, is a representative of the master, and not a "fellow servant." Allen v. Standard Box & Lumber Co., 96 Pac. 1109, 1111, 53 Or. 10.

A shift boss and powderman, who had charge of blasting and drilling in connection with railroad construction work, and who used dynamite which required skill and great care, were not the "fellow servants" of a common laborer engaged in shoveling earth into cars in the cut which was being constructed, and who had no means of knowing what they were doing, and no means of guarding against their acts, but were "vice principals," and were bound to notify laborers in places made dangerous by their work. Ongaro v. Twohy, 94 Pac. 916, 917, 49 Wash. 93.

Where the foreman of a powder gang in a rock quarry directed plaintiff to strike the drill while it was being held by such foreman in a hole, without removing the blast, with reference to the duty to warn plaintiff of the dangers attending the work he was called to perform, the foreman was a vice principal, and not plaintiff's fellow servant. Burrows v. Ozark White Lime Co., 101 S. W. 744, 82 Ark. 343.

Negligence of a master in failing to provide safe tools, machinery, and appliances to work with or a safe place to work in, safe materials to work on, and competent fellow servants and proper regulations for the work, will render the master liable without regard to the standing or authority of the employé through whose direct fault the injury is occasioned. E. Van Winkle Gin & Machine Co. v. Brooks, 116 Pac. 908, 910, 29 Okl. 351.

Where the foreman of the mechanical department of a cotton mill in making repairs worked under the orders of the superintendent and left unguarded a hole in the floor of the dyerroom, into which the boss dyer fell and was injured, the foreman and superintendent represented the master in doing the work, and the master could not defeat a recovery on the ground that the boss dyer and the foreman and superintendent were fellow servants. Shives v. Eno Cotton Mills, 66 S. E. 141, 143, 151 N. C. 290.

Plaintiff, employed to drill pop holes in a stone quarry, injured by the discharge of an unshot battery hole, was not the fellow servant of the employé charged with the duty of discovering unexploded charges and warning other workmen of their locality, it being a duty which the master was bound to fulfill, and failure to do so constituted actionable negligence on his part. Harper v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 93 Pac. 179, 180, 76 Kan. 612.

Where defendant's carpenter shop was strictly a part of its molding department, in which plaintiff was employed, and the foreman of the carpenter shop was under control and direction of the foreman of the molding department, and it was essential that the molding flasks be put together by the carpenter in the molding department for use by the iron molders, who were required to prepare the molds the foreman of the carpenter shop was a "fellow servant" of a molder. Leishman v. Union Iron Works, 83 Pac. 30, 34, 148 Cal. 274, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, 118 Am. St. Rep. 243.

The duty of an engineer in a sawmill to warn employés by sounding the whistle before starting the machinery in motion was that of a vice principal and not that of a fellow servant, and the master is liable for failure to perform the duty. Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co., 87 Pac. 517, 519,

Where an employé, engaged in the operation of a steam shovel used in removing a bank of earth, was injured by the falling of an overhanging ledge, and the master had furnished a competent foreman and suitable appliances with which to work, excepting explosives, if the injury was attributable to the omission of the foreman to make use of the tools at hand or procure other appliances to break away the ledge, the negligence was that of a fellow servant. Russell v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 81 N. E. 122, 123, 188 N. Y. 344, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344.

The direction of a foreman, who had power to stop machinery, that it be stopped, or the failure to so direct, while a condition of the machinery was being remedied which necessitated the loosening of a belt running from the main shaft to a countershaft, which had become wound around a pulley, on the countershaft, was an act of "superintendence," within Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injuries to an employé by the negligence of any person in the service of the employer exercising "superintendence," and it was not the negligence of a "fellow servant" in a detail of the work for which the master was not liable. Guilmartin v. Solvay Process Co., 82 N. E. 725, 726, 189 N. Y. 490.

Where a servant is injured in performance of work of his master, and the negligence of a coemployé is involved, whether such coemployé is to be deemed a fellow servant or a vice principal is to be determined, not so much by the rank or title, if any, used to describe him, but chiefly by the character of the duties intrusted to him; and an employé performing for the master the duty to provide the place and instrumentalities of work, a coterie of competent servants, or to arrange the general system of work, is deemed the vice principal of the master. Mills v. Bartow Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 983, 985, 9 Ga. App. 171.

Where a wreck on one track of a railroad did not in any way obstruct a parallel track, a flagman on a wrecking train, whose duty it was to warn trains approaching on the parallel track was not performing a duty of the railroad, which the latter could not delegate, but was a mere fellow servant with the trainmen on such trains, and the railroad was not responsible for his negligence in failing to warn a train approaching at a time when the parallel track was temporarily obstructed by a crane projecting out from the wrecking train. McAuley v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 681, 112 App. Div. 906.

Plaintiff was employed by defendant as a stationary engineer in its car shops, where he was under the orders of a chief engineer, who called him from his regular duties to another part of the works to assist in testing a new electric motor. Plaintiff had no knowledge of such machines, but the chief engineer had and directed the work. The motor became heated, as the evidence tended to show, from the presence of water therein, which was a recognized source of danger; but the chief engineer, although having knowledge of such fact, again turned on the current, when an explosion took place by which plaintiff was injured. Held, that the rule of "fellow servants" did not apply. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Brinkman, 146 Fed. 712, 714, 77 C. C. A. 138.

In determining who are "fellow servants," the test or rule in this state is not whether the servants are of different grade, rank, or authority, one of them having the power to control and direct the services of another, but the test is in the character of the act being performed by the offending servant, whether it was the performance of some duty the master owed to the injured servant. Tested by this rule, a section boss whose duty it is to oil rollers in a mill, and in charge of the employes in his section, is not a "fellow servant" of an infant whom he sent to get oil to oil a roller near an unguarded machine. Tucker v. Buffalo Cotton Mills, 57 S. E. 626, 629, 76 S. C. 539, 121 Am. St. Rep. 957 (citing Brabham v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 50 S. E. 716, 71 S. C. 56).

An employé intrusted with the performance of the employer's personal duties is, in regard to those duties, a vice principal, and the employer is liable for injuries to a co-employé resulting from the negligence of the employé. Within this rule a car dispatcher, having not only control of the motormen and conductors of an interurban electric railway, but also control of the cars and their operation, is not a "fellow servant" of the motormen and conductors, but is a vice principal. Edge v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., 104 S. W. 90, 95, 206 Mo. 471.

The delegation to a coemployé of the duty to furnish suitable and safe machinery and to keep the same in repair will not, under the doctrine of coservice, defeat an action for negligence by an employé, where the delinquent was discharging one of the personal duties of the employer. Where the employer is a corporation, the performance of such delegated duty by the subagent or employé is the act of the corporation, and it is responsible for its faithful and prudent performance to the same extent as if the service was performed by the highest officer of the corporation. Kane v. Babcock & Wilcox Co., 67 Atl. 1014, 1016, 75 N. J. Law, 698 (citing Nord Deutscher Lloyd Steamship Co.

v. Ingebregsten, 31 Atl. 619, 67 N. J. Law, 400, 51 Am. St. Rep. 604; Curley v. Hoff, 42 Atl. 731, 62 N. J. Law, 758, 763; Burns v. Delaware & A. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 59 Atl. 220, 592, 70 N. J. Law, 745, 754, 67 L. R. A. 956).

Plaintiff was employed by defendant at its stone quarry, and engaged in breaking waste rock, working beside a large pile, on which the rock were dropped from time to time by a derrick. The derrick was in charge of a boss derrickman, whose duty it was, under instructions from defendant, to operate the same, and also to give warning to plaintiff and other workmen when rock were about to be deposited on the pile. On one occasion he neglected to give such warning, and a rock slid down the pile and injured plaintiff. Held, that the giving of such warning signals was a part of the work of operation, in which the boss derrickman acted as a "fellow servant" of plaintiff, and not as representative of the master in the performance of a nondelegable duty to provide a safe place to work, and that his negligence gave plaintiff no right of recovery against defendant. Maine & N. H. Granite Corp. v. Hachey, 173 Fed. 784, 786, 97 C. C. A. 508.

A superintendent received an order from the general manager to cut down a portion of a bridge over a sidewalk; the details of the work being left to the superintendent. There was plenty of material furnished to properly support the remaining portion of the bridge, but without supporting it the superintendent directed plaintiff to cut off the portion to be razed. During the work another directed the superintendent's attention to the fact that the remaining structure should be supported, and was directed to do so, but before the supports could be put in plaintiff sawed through the timbers and the structure fell, causing plaintiff's injuries. Held, that the furnishing of such supports was a mere detail of the work, in doing which plaintiff, the superintendent, and foreman were fellow servants, and that defendant was therefore not liable for their negligence. Connolly v. Hall & Grant Const. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 599, 602, 603, 117 App. Div. 387.

The miners' statute of 1890 (Rev. St. 1899, c. 133, art. 2, § 8823) requires entryways in mines to be run parallel for ventilation purposes with cross cuts not more than 50 feet apart. Section 8826 requires, in part, that all shots prepared by the miner for extracting coal from the solid shall be so placed, drilled, and charged that, when fired, they shall perform safely the work required of such shots. Two entries in a mine were allowed to converge until only seven or eight feet apart at a point where by law a new cross-cut was made, and a shot was driven deep into the dividing wall, so that, when fired, it broke through into the other entry, and killed plaintiff's husband. Held, that while section 8826 requires the safe placing of shots to be done by the miner, a fellow servant of deceased, yet the fact that the entries were allowed by the pit boss to converge to such a short distance apart at a spot where a new cross-cut must be made, and that he allowed a shot to be placed at such spot, was negligence on his part, rendering the employer liable. Kirby v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co., 106 S. W. 1069, 1071, 127 Mo. App. 588.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565) § 42a, as added by Laws 1906, c. 657, provides that in actions against a railroad company for death resulting from personal injury to an employé arising from the company's negligence or that of its employés, the employé or his legal representative shall have the same rights and remedies as are now allowed, and, in addition thereto, it shall be held that persons engaged in the company's service, or intrusted with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other employés, or with the authority to direct them in the performance of their duties, or who have, for the time being, physical control or direction of the movement of a signal, engine, etc., are vice principals, and not "fellow servants," of the injured employé. Decedent was third-rail patrolman in defendant's employment, and it was the custom of such patrolman to work in pairs; one of them repairing minor defects, while the other kept watch for the approach of trains and warned the working patrolman thereof, alternating in working and watching as they themselves determined. Held that, since the duty of the other patrolman to warn decedent of approaching trains was only incidental to his work, he was not a vice principal as to decedent, but a "fellow servant"; the statute only making an employé a vice principal in such case, where his special or sole duty was to give warning. Hintze v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 644, 646, 140 App. Div. 852.

In the performance of those duties placed upon the master by express law, or implied to him under the contract of employment, and variously designated as the "positive," "absolute," "personal," "nondelegable," or "nonassignable" duties of the master, the servant intrusted with them, even though he be the most menial in point of rank, is to the extent of such duties the alter ego or vice principal of the master. Conversely the co-employé, however important be his official title, who is doing mere servant's work, or is engaged merely with the ordinary details of the labor, is to be regarded as a "fellow servant" in the business at hand. In a suit by a servant against the master, where the injury was occasioned by the negligence of another employé, the defense of a common employment is excluded, or allowed to prevail, according as the delinquency was or was not a breach of one or more of what the law regards as the absolute, personal or nondelegable duties of the master. Dennis v. J. S. Schofield's Sons Co., 57 S. E. 925, 1 Ga. App. 489 (citing Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 127 Ga. 609, 56 S. E. 839, 10 L. R. A. [N. S.] 772).

A mere foreman or gang boss is a "fellow servant" of those working with or under him, and for his defaults, by which a fellow servant is injured, the master is not responsible, unless the duty as to which the default is made is an absolute duty of the master, the performance of which has been delegated to such foreman. Defendant railroad company owned barges on which cars were transported into a dock to be loaded from a pier alongside. There were two parallel tracks on the barge and between them a platform at about the height of the car doors used in loading the cars. There was a space a foot wide between the platform and the cars and iron plates were provided to be placed across such space from the car doors to the platform. Plaintiff was a workman employed by defendant with others in loading cars on such a barge under direction of a foreman. Having occasion to move one of the cars the foreman directed that the plate be not replaced, and plaintiff while assisting to roll a cask from such car to the platform in obedience to an order of the foreman, without knowledge or notice that the plate was not in place stepped backward into the opening and fell and was injured. Held, that defendant having provided proper appliances to make the work safe was not under the personal duty to see that such appliances were replaced after being temporarily removed by the workmen, and that plaintiff's injury was due to the negligence of the foreman, who was his fellow servant, for which defendant was not liable, but which was one of the assumed risks of the employment. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Brown, 146 Fed. 24, 28, 76 C. C. A. 482.

Defendant railroad company was engaged in constructing a railroad on which trains west of C. were operated under bulletin orders issued by defendant's trainmaster. An order was issued that all east-bound work trains should have right of way over west-bound trains between 12 o'clock noon and 12 o'clock midnight, and vice versa between 12 o'clock midnight and 12 o'clock noon. On the day of the accident plaintiff, as engineer, was running an extra east-bound train about 60 miles west of C., and at 1 o'clock p. m. his train, having the right of way under such orders, was run into by a west-bound train in charge of the trainmaster as foreman in charge of a crew of laborers. The latter train was run at a high rate of speed on a crooked track through a rough and mountainous country, and no flagman was put out or any steps taken to protect plain-tiff's east-bound train. Held, that the negligence of the trainmaster in permitting his train to be run in violation of the bulletin was negligence in his capacity as vice principal, and not as plaintiff's fellow servant, for which the railroad company was responsible. Morrison v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 88 Pac. 998, 1001, 32 Utah, 85 (citing Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 37 N. E. 466, 142 N. Y. 416, 25 L. R. A. 396, 40 Am. St. Rep. 616; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Lewis v. Seifert, 11 Atl. 514, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 44 N. W. 502, 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. App. 611).

Among the duties which the master owes to the servant, and which he cannot delegate to others so as to absolve himself from liability for negligence in their performance, are the duties of the master to warn the servant of latent defects and dangers which are or ought to be known to the master, and of which the servant without fault is ignorant, and to exercise reasonable diligence to furnish the servant a reasonably safe place in which to perform his work. Whoever is set to perform these duties, no matter what be his grade or rank, represents the master in that particular and is not a "fellow servant" of those to whom the duty is due but is a "vice principal." If the servant by whose negligence the injury is caused was at the time, with the knowledge, consent, and procurement of the master, engaged in the performance of a duty which under the law the master owed to the servant, the relation of "fellow servant" does not exist between the offending employé and the injured servant. A driver in a coal mine, after putting his mule away for the day, returned through the main entry of the face of the coal to get his coat and bucket. While he was walking through the entry, an explosion of dynamite occurred in the roof above his head, and he was injured as a result. The shot had been placed and ignited by two of defendant's timbermen, whose duty it was to keep the roof in safe condition, and in the performance of such the timbermen were "vice principals" engaged in performing the master's nondelegable duty to keep the mine safe, and the master was responsible for their negligence in failing to warn plaintiff of the impending explosion. Whether servants are fellow servants of the person injured or vice principals does not depend on whether they were engaged in a common employment under the same general contract and paid by the same principal, but whether the negligent servant, in the act or omission complained of by the direction or consent of the master, was in discharge of a duty which the master personally owed to the injured servant. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co. v. Thil, 81 N. E. 857, 858, 859, 228 Ill. 233 (citing Hess v. Rosenthal, 43 N. E. 743, 160 Ill. 621; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Scanlan, 48 N. E. 826, 170 Ill. 106; *Chicago & A. R. E. 1044, 181 Ill. 549).

Defendant corporation operated a plant for the manufacture of machinery, one of the buildings being a blacksmith shop, in which plaintiff was employed as head blacksmith, and where he was injured by the explosion of a piston head which was being heated by him and another employé for the purpose of being shrunk onto a new piston rod. The head was hollow, and it was dangerous to heat it without drilling a vent for the escape of moisture from the inside, but plaintiff did not know the danger. The entire plant was under the management of a superintendent who employed and discharged the men, and directed their work. There was evidence that he sent the other employé with the piston to the blacksmith shop with directions that it be heated, although there were other safe ways of attaching the rod without heating, and, although he knew the danger unless a vent was made and that plaintiff did not, he gave no warning nor directions as to how the work should be done. Held, that his negligence in that regard was that of the master, and the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict finding defendant liable for plaintiff's injury. If the master has delegated the general control and management of the business to a superintendent, it is his duty as representing the master to warn a servant who is under his orders of latent dangers, and his negligence in failing to do so is the negligence of the master, and renders him liable to an employé for an injury of which such negligence is the proximate cause. Gagnon v. Klaunder Weldon Dyeing Mach. Co., 174 Fed. 477, 480.

Keeping machinery, etc., in repair

to keep the machinery in the plant in good order and condition. Goshorn v. Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., 64 S. E. 22, 24, 65 W. Va. 250.

Where defendant employer intrusted a paper cutting machine and its care and repair into the hands of a foreman, who, knowing of the defective condition of the machine, directed plaintiff, who was ignorant of such condition, to operate it, the foreman was the representative and agent of defendant, and not a "fellow workman" of plaintiff. Brunger v. Pioneer Roll Paper Co., 92 Pac. 1043, 1045, 6 Cal. App. 691.

The plaintiff was employed to strike a steel chisel with a hammer, and was injured by a piece of steel struck off in the process of hammering. The defect alleged was the deterioration of the chisel due to the constant use. Held, that the duty of inspection and repair was incidental to the duty to use, and the negligence was that of the plaintiff's "fellow servants," and not of the master. Demato v. Hudson County Gas Co., 67 Atl. 23, 74 N. J. Law, 793 (citing Nord Deutscher Lloyd Steamship Co. v. Ingelbregsten, 31 Atl. 619, 57 N. J. Law, 400, 51 Am. St. Rep. 604; Campbell v. T. A. Gillespie Co., 55 Atl. 276, 69 N. J. Law 279).

A distinct and independent employé to whom is delegated the duty to disconnect and make safe electric wires on which others must work is ordinarily a vice principal, and not a fellow servant with the linemen and other like workmen. Massy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 126 N. W. 544, 546, 143 Wis. 220, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1096.

The operator of a lathe in a machine shop and a blacksmith employed in the shop to temper the steel portions of lathes are "fellow servants," and in the absence of evidence of the incompetency of the blacksmith, or of his negligence in tempering the steel in the lathe, or of defects in the quality of the steel itself or the appliances for tempering it, the employer is not liable for injuries sustained by the operator in consequence of the steel in the lathe bursting shortly after the same had been tempered by the blacksmith. Hohl v. Hewitt Motor Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 121 App. Div. 866.

Plaintiff was assistant engineer in charge of a stationary engine. He worked nights, and reported to the chief engineer for orders, and when the plant was not running acted as night watchman, and had instructions to report the necessity of repairs to the chief engineer, who was to have them made. He occasionally made simple repairs himself. The engine became defective, and plaintiff reported the fact to the chief engineer, who neglected to make the repairs, and plaintiff was injured. Held, that the chief engineer was a vice principal and not a fellow servant of plaintiff, and that the latter was entitled to recover for the injuries received. Peterson v. G. W. Van Dusen & Co., 111 N. W. 839, 840, 101 Minn. 50.

Defendant's elevator being out of repair, the engineer went on top of it and discovered that a screw was loose in the dog on the cable, which was a part of the device for stopping the elevator, and asked plaintiff, whose duty it was to run the elevator and do anything the engineer asked him to do, to come up on the top of the elevator and hold the dog while the engineer fastened it, and he told plaintiff, in response to an inquiry, that it was all right for him to come up on top. As soon as plaintiff stepped on top, the elevator went up to the roof, injuring plaintiff. There was nothing to show that the engineer was a superintendent, within the employers' liability act. Held, that the statement of the engineer was the act of a fellow servant. Archer v. Eldredge, 90 N. E. 525, 526, 204 Mass. 323.

Those entering into the service of a common master engaging in a common service are, as a general rule, "fellow servants," and prima facie the common master is not liable for the negligence of one of the servants resulting in an injury to a fellow servant. A master must provide safe tools. A railroad is liable for injuries to a servant resulting from failure of its foreman to inspect a hand car, though the foreman was a fellow servant of the person injured, since the duty of providing safe appliances could not be delegated. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wilhoit, 98 S. W. 341, 345, 6 Ind. T. 534.

Laborers on buildings

A servant employed in excavating for a building, having nothing to do with the blasting of the frozen earth, is not a "fellow servant" of the person employed specially to do the blasting. Rankel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co., 120 N. W. 269, 271, 138 Wis. 442, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180.

An engineer in charge of a derrick engine hoisting stone to be set in the walls of a building and a stone mason receiving and placing them in position were "fellow servants." John Diebold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 122 S. W. 212, 213.

An engineer in charge of an engine and a derrick used to raise girders to be placed on pillars in a building in process of construction, and an employé charged with the duty of putting the girders in position on the pillars, are fellow servants, and the employer is not liable for the negligence of the engineer. Cooper's Adm'r v. Oscar Daniels Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 1100, 1101.

An employé engaged in mixing concrete for a building in process of construction is a "fellow servant" of the carpenters and employés engaged in sweeping rubbish into the basement; all being engaged in the common work of erecting the building, with no one having authority over the others. Armour & Co. v. Dumas, 95 S. W. 710, 711, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 36.

Where an employé of defendant, while engaged in clearing away débris from around a pillar that was being incased in brick, was injured by being struck by a brick knocked off a scaffold by one of the bricklayers working above him, the injury was due to the negligence of a "fellow servant," for which defendant was not liable. Willis v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 668, 670, 54 Misc. Rep. 238.

A foreman in charge of construction of a building is a "fellow servant" of carpenters employed on the building, in construction of a scaffold under his direction, to be used in their work, as the master's responsibility in case of accident is not fixed by grade of service, but character of the act, and the act to furnish a safe scaffold was not a part of his duty. McDonald v. Hoffman, 102 Pac. 673, 674, 10 Cal. App. 515.

Where the foreman of a contractor who was erecting a building directed a carpenter to move a certain derrick with the assistance of a gang of men, the situation warranted a finding that the carpenter, as concerning the moving of the derrick, was a superintendent or foreman, in the absence of the regular foreman, with the authority and consent of defendant. Farrell v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., 80 N. E. 469, 470, 194 Mass. 431.

If the building of staging and scaffolds is not within the duty of a servant who may have to use them in doing his work, and if he has no hand in erecting them, he is not a party to the negligence of those servants to whom the master assigns the duty of providing such appliances, and he may recover from the master for an injury resulting from their negligent construction. Thompson-Starrett Co. v. Fitzgerald, 149 Fed. 721, 722, 79 C. C. A. 427.

An employer constructing a building supplied derricks and ropes to properly guy them. A derrick used in raising building material was moved from place to place as the work required. An employé and co-employés under a foreman used the derrick. When the derrick was installed in place a single guy rope was used, and it toppled over and injured the employé. Held, that he and the foreman were fellow servants, defeating a recovery. Christiansen v. W. H. & F. W. Cane Co., 69 Atl. 453, 454, 75 N. J. Law, 262.

A superintendent received an order from the general manager to cut down a portion of a bridge over a sidewalk; the details of the work being left to the superintendent. There was plenty of material furnished to properly support the remaining portion of the bridge, but without supporting it the superintendent directed plaintiff to cut off the portion to be razed. During the work another directed the superintendent's attention to the fact that the remaining structure should be supported, and was directed to do so, but before the supports could be put in plaintiff sawed through the timbers and the structure fell, causing plaintiff's injuries. Held, that the furnishing of such supports was a mere detail of the work, in doing which plaintiff, the superintendent, and foreman were fellow servants, and that defendant was therefore not liable for their negligence. Connolly v. Hall & Grant Const. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 599, 602, 603, 117 App. Div. 387.

Mill employés

Employés in a sawmill who are not co-associated in the same work are not fellow servants. Payne v. Georgetown Lumber Co., 42 South. 475, 477, 117 La. 983.

A boss in a spinning department of a cotton mill, who was the immediate superior of an employé in that department, was not the "fellow servant" of such employé. Morrisett v. Elizabeth City Cotton Mills, 65 S. E. 514, 515, 151 N. C. 31.

Where the owner of a sawmill operates in connection therewith a private railroad to transport his employés from the mill to their work in the woods and to haul logs to the mill, the servants engaged in operating the log train and the servants riding thereon from the mill to their work are "fellow servants." Roland v. Tift, 68 S. E. 133, 134, 131 Ga. 683, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354.

The electrician of a pulp mill, to whom was intrusted the charge of the electric lights thereof, was a fellow servant of one engaged in hauling pulp from one room to another of the mill, and who was injured through negligence of the electrician in turning off lights, leaving the elevator shaft dark. Miller v. Centralia Pulp & Water Power Co., 113 N. W. 954, 955, 134 Wis. 316, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 742.

Where a mill company desired to remove an engine across a street occupied by railroad tracks laid in a cut, and a trestle was built by a miller and men employed about the mill from an abundant stock of sound material supplied by the company, and the men were allowed their discretion as to the plan of the structure, and all the work was performed under the control of the miller, and the trestle collapsed from faulty construction, liability of the company for the injury cannot be based on the superior rank of the miller, but must rest on the breach of some nonassignable duty. Maib v. Aetna Mill & Elevator Co., 109 Pac. 688, 689, 82 Kan. 660.

other employes in the process of converting iron into steel, and to give warning when a blast or heat was about to be blown, was not a "fellow servant" of another employe, not under the former's immediate control, whose duties were confined strictly to taking care of stoppers used in the vessels in which the steel was blown, so as to exempt the employer from liability for injuries to the latter resulting from failure of the former to give such warning. Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 77 N. E. 190-192, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

"To constitute 'fellow servants,' it is not necessary that the negligent workman causing the injury and the one injured should both be engaged in the very same particular work. It is sufficient if they are employed by the same master, under the same control, and performing duties and services for the same general purpose." "Fellow servants" are defined as "those engaged in the same common pursuit, under the same general control," as "persons employed in the same general business by a common employer"; that the question is not "controlled by the fact that different parts of the work necessary to the general enterprise are placed in hands of employes remote from each other, and receiving immediate command from different superiors, or, indeed, one from the other." A head sawyer operating the carriage of a circular saw, and edger men engaged in managing the saws for edging the lumber, being employed by a common master, and performing duties for the same general purpose, are "fellow servants." Grant v. Keystone Lumber Co., 96 N. W. 535, 537, 119 Wis. 229, 100 Am. St. Rep. 883 (citing Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 31 N. W. 104, 33 N. W. 433, 69 Wis. 188).

Miners and other employes

A mine boss appointed pursuant to statute (Code [Ed. 1899] Appendix, p. 1052 [Ann. Code 1906, § 410]) is a "fellow servant" with the miners. McMillan v. Middle States Coal & Coke Co., 57 S. E. 129, 130, 61 W. Va. 531, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 840.

One who had entire charge of the work of timbering in a mine, and was in full control of the timbermen, was not a fellow servant with one working under him in the work of timbering. Cripple Creek Mining Co. v. Brabant, 87 Pac. 794, 796, 37 Colo. 423; Same v. Esteb, 87 Pac. 796, 37 Colo. 431.

A mine boss and fire boss in a coal mine employed under Code 1906, §§ 409, 410, in performance of their duties, including that of the mine boss to see as the working places advance break-throughs for air are made, or that the brattice shall be used, are fellow servants of the miner employed therein, and the master is not liable for injuries to a miner by the negligent performance of such duties. Bralley v. Tidewater Coal & Coke

Co., 66 S. E. 684, 685, 66 W. Va. 278, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 19 Ann. Cas. 510.

A coal mine foreman who hired the miners and had charge of the operations had authority to make any reasonable promise to induce a miner to remain at work, so that, in promising a miner that he would warn him when workmen driving an adjoining room were about to blast through an air passage between it and plaintiff's room, such foreman was not a fellow servant of the miner. Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 104 Pac. 876, 880, 40 Mont. 1.

Where an assistant track repairer in a mine had full charge of the track in the portion of the mine in which decedent, a miner, was suffocated on the day of the injury, and was directed to repair a curtain hung across a gallery as a part of the ventilating appliances, such act was administrative in character, in the performance of which he did not act as a fellow servant of decedent. Wilmington & Springfield Coal Co. v. Sloan, 80 N. E. 265, 266, 225 Ill. 467.

Officers, crew, etc., of vessel

A kitchen boy on a steamship was a "fellow servant" of the ship's carpenter, and was therefore not entitled to recover for injuries sustained by the latter's negligence. The Esperanza, 133 Fed. 1015, 1016.

A stevedore and a winchman, both being at the same time working in a common employment under the same general control and direction, were "fellow servants." The Elton, 142 Fed. 367, 374, 73 C. C. A. 467.

A coal trimmer, working in a vessel which was being loaded with coal, was a fellow servant with a "wheelman," whose duty it was to empty the coal into a barrow, and, when full, to run the barrow over a hatch and dump the coal. Griffin v. Curran, 80 N. E. 509, 510, 194 Mass. 359.

Where two vessels came into collision as the result of excessive speed, maintained at the direction of the master, the latter represented the shipowner, so that the personal representatives of the subordinate officers and crew who were drowned in the collision were not precluded from a recovery on the ground that they were fellow servants of the master. The Hamilton, 146 Fed. 724, 727, 77 C. C. A. 150.

Libellant was injured by the breaking of the capstan of a vessel while it was being used to heave the vessel carrying a deck load of lumber alongside a wharf at low tide. The master superintended the navigation of the vessel from the bridge, and libellant alleged that the negligence consisted in the master giving orders to take additional turns of a hawser around the capstan, instead of requiring the hawser to be removed to the bits of the vessel provided for such maneuvers. Held, that the negligence of the captain in giving such orders, if any, was in the ordinary navigation of the vessel, in which he was libellant's "fellow servant." The Westport, 136 Fed. 391, 398, 69 C. C. A. 235 (citing Olson v. Oregon Coal & Navigation Co., 104 Fed. 574, 44 C. C. A. 51).

Plaintiff, a longshoreman, engaged in loading a vessel as an employé of a master stevedore, who had contracted to do such loading, and who had contracted with defendant for the steam power, is not a fellow servant of the employé of defendant, who worked the steam winch, and through whose negligence plaintiff was injured; the winchman being hired and paid by defendant, and the master stevedore having no power to discharge him. Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 152 Fed. 166, 167, 81 C. C. A. 399.

A mate and floatman belonging to the same crew, having the same employer, and being engaged in a common object, although of different rank, and working on different lines to accomplish the undertaking, are "fellow servants," and the negligence of the mate, whereby the floatman was injured, is the negligence of his fellow servant; and neither the vessel nor its owner is chargeable with the consequences of such negligence, in the absence of evidence showing that the owner was negligent in the selection of such servant. Smith v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. of New Jersey, 141 Fed. 192, 194.

Railroad employés

The relation of "fellow servant" does not exist as to employés engaged in operating the cars, locomotives, or trains of a railroad, and those not so engaged. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. McAdams, 84 S. W. 1076, 1080, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 575.

A conductor and an engineer on a train are not "fellow servants." Snipes v. Southern Ry. Co., 166 Fed. 1, 6, 91 C. C. A. 593.

The engineer and conductor of a train are "fellow servants" of the fireman of said train. Hayes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 592, 598, 121 App. Div. 198.

An engineer and brakeman on the same train are "fellow servants" at common law. Breed v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 1019, 1020, 131 App. Div. 492.

The fireman and a brakeman of a train are "fellow servants." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Percy (Ky.), 121 S. W. 1037, 1040.

Under the statute in force in November, 1905, a brakeman and car inspector were not "fellow servants." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Holmes, 114 S. W. 221, 222, 88 Ark. 181.

A switchman under the orders of a conductor is not a "fellow servant" of such conductor. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 145 Ill. App. 11, 24.

A station agent and a freight brakeman on a train switching at the station are "fellow servants." Hallock v. New York, O. & W. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 1124, 197 N. Y. 450.

One employed in unloading rails from a train was a fellow servant of the engineer. De Santes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 849, 119 App. Div. 95.

The members of a train crew, such as engineer, fireman, and brakeman or switchman of the same train, are fellow servants. Prairie Pebble Phosphate Co. v. Taylor, 60 South. 114, 115, 64 Fla. 403.

A railroad section foreman and the members of the crew working under him are "fellow servants" within the rule of the federal courts. Zikos v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 179 Fed. 893, 895.

A section hand working on a railroad track is not a fellow servant of the engineer of a passenger train by which he was killed, under the fellow servant law of 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 96). Degonia v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 123 S. W. 807, 815, 224 Mo. 564.

An employé of a railroad, while being transported to his work on the train of his employer, is a "fellow servant" of the trainmen. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Clapp, 74 N. E. 267, 268, 35 Ind. App. 403.

Employés working under a superintendent in repairing the roadbed of a railroad are not, while being carried by a train to their work, fellow servants of the train crew; the employés having nothing to do with the operation of the train, nor with making up the train, and the train crew being governed by rules as to the management and operation of trains distinct from the rules under which the employés perform their work. Jachetta v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 105 Pac. 100, 102, 36 Utah, 470.

One employed to clean the cinders out of engines in a cinder pit is a "fellow servant" of an assistant hostler employed to move engines, from one part of the yards to another. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 106 S. W. 750, 756, 7 Ind. T. 16.

A railway company is not liable in an action by a crossing tender for injuries caused by the negligence of a yardman in leaving a switch unlocked, since the injuries were due to the act of a fellow servant. Dixon v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 111 N. W. 200, 201, 147 Mich. 667.

A crossing tender and a switchman are "fellow servants," and the railway company is not liable for injuries to the former by the negligence of a switchman. Dixon v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 946, 948, 155 Mich. 169.

A fireman on one train and a conductor of another train are "fellow servants," and the railway company is not liable for the death of the fireman resulting solely from the negligence of the conductor. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., 98 Pac. 672, 674.

154 Cal. 559, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177.

A conductor, who was not at work but was traveling in the caboose under orders to report for duty, and the engineer running the train on which he traveled are not "fellow servants," as defined by the statute. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Crawford, 29 S. W. 958, 961, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 245.

Where plaintiff, a brakeman on a freight train, was injured by the alleged negligence of the engineer in backing his engine against a defective car, plaintiff and the engineer were prima facie "fellow servants." Southern R. Co. v. Elliott, 82 N. E. 1051, 1055, 170 Ind. 273.

Conductors and engineers, engaged in running and operating trains, are "vice principals" and not "fellow servants" of a brakeman, and their negligence is the negligence of the company. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Baker, 77 N. E. 64-66, 37 Ind. App. 405.

A locomotive engineer is a "coservant" of the fireman and of an employé in charge of a switch and semaphore signals, and the employer is not liable in a common-law action for injuries received by the engineer in consequence of the negligence of the fireman or employé. Pearsall v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 82 N. E. 752, 753, 159 N. Y. 474.

A train dispatcher is a "vice principal," and not a "fellow servant," of an engineer of a train running under his orders. Santa Fe Pac. R. Co. v. Holmes, 136 Fed. 66, 69, 68 C. C. A. 634 (citing Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 24 Sup. Ct. 683, 194 U. S. 338, 48 L. Ed. 1006; Oregon Short Line v. Frost, 74 Fed. 965, 21 C. C. A. 186; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mix, 121 Fed. 476, 57 C. C. A. 592).

A dispatcher of an interurban electric railway company was a vice principal, and not a fellow servant, of the conductors and motormen. Edge v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., 104 S. W. 90, 95, 206 Mo. 471.

A train dispatcher, whose duty is to issue telegraphic orders for movements of trains in the name of the superintendent, and to see that they are transmitted, is not a fellow servant of a fireman on one of the locomotives. Ricker v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 64 Atl. 1068, 1069, 73 N. J. Law, 751, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 9 Ann. Cas. 785.

A towerman, in charge of the semaphore and interlocker at the crossing of two railroads, employed by the two railroads, each paying half of his compensation, is a fellow servant of an engineer of one of the railroads. Stever v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 125 N. W. 47, 48, 160 Mich. 207.

A student brakeman, on freight trains of defendant at his own request and by permission of defendant, for the purpose of gaining experience to render him competent to act as a regular brakeman, and who was entirely subject to defendant's orders, and was required to perform such ordinary duties of brakeman as were allotted to him, was a "fellow servant" of the other trainmen, although he was receiving no pecuniary compensation. Weisser v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 83 Pac. 439, 440, 148 Cal. 426, 7 Ann. Cas. 636.

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 6248, providing that persons engaged in the operation of a railroad, who are intrusted with the duty and authority of superintendence of other persons in the railroad service, are vice principals of the railroad and not "fellow servants" with those superintended by them, a train dispatcher, who governs the movement of trains and originates their running orders, and a conductor, under whose direction a train is actually run, are not "fellow servants" with a fireman on the train. Choctaw, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. Doughty, 91 S. W. 768, 769, 77 Ark. 1.

"All serving a common master, working under the same control, deriving authority and compensation from the same source, and engaging in the same general business, although in different grades or departments, are 'fellow servants' and take the risk of each other's negligence." A yard foreman who had no authority over a yard engineer except to direct him when and where to move his engine, and who did not have the right of employment or discharge of the engineer, was a "fellow servant." Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 374, 107 Va. 553.

A railroad section foreman is a "fellow servant" of the engineer operating trains over the road, under the rule that all who enter the same employment are prima facie fellow servants; the burden being on him who denies the relation to prove the contrary. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 83 N. E. 369, 374, 169 Ind. 670, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 14 Ann. Cas. 375.

A checkman on an interurban electric road, employed to look after the reception and discharge of freight and express matter, is a "fellow servant" of a general trainmaster, as affecting the company's liability to the checkman for injuries caused by the trainmaster's negligence in running a car against one on which the checkman was employed. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Pring, 83 N. E. 733, 734, 41 Ind. App. 247.

Where intestate, a cub brakeman, was killed by the starting of a portion of the train on which he was employed by reason of the negligence of one of the brakemen in signaling the engineer to proceed before he had emerged from between two cars, where he had gone to couple the air hose, the negligence of the brakeman was the negligence of intestate's "fellow servant," for which the railroad company was not liable. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vincent, 95 S. W. 179, 188, 116 Tenn. 317, 8 Ann. Cas. 66.

The boss of a gang of four or five sectionmen or track repairers is, when not charged with duties of the master, a "fellow servant" of those under him, notwithstanding he has been authorized to give orders to those under him, with respect to the performance of their duties. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kinney, 85 N. E. 954, 958, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

One employed to shovel from between construction cars dirt pushed there from such cars by the plow attached to the engine by a cable, is a fellow servant of the engineer as to an injury received by the engine starting while the employé was assisting in replacing the plow in position. Bradford Construction Co. v. Heflin, 42 South. 174, 183, 88 Miss. 314, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 8 Ann. Cas. 1077.

A railroad section foreman charged with the duty of keeping the tracks in repair, and an employé in a roundhouse, charged with the duty of keeping the engines in repair, are not, by the common law in force in Indian Territory, "fellow servants" of a brakeman. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wise, 109 S. W. 112, 101 Tex. 459.

An engine crew and common laborers engaged in construction work are fellow servants upon the principle that they were actually employed by the same master and that the work of each had for its object the accomplishment of a common end sought to be performed by the united efforts of all. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kimmel, 123 Ill. App. 382, 384.

A telegraph operator, whose mistake in receiving a train order from a train dispatcher in another city resulted in a collision, was a "fellow servant" of the engineer to whom the order was given; that the order originated with the train dispatcher, a vice principal of the engineer, not changing the engineer's relation to the operator. Rogers v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 131 N. W. 159, 160, 166 Mich. 42, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 881.

When a fireman is injured by a collision between his engine and another through the negligence of the switch tender in failing to change the semaphore signal, or by want of due care on the part of the engineer in failing to observe the danger signal, it must, in each instance, be deemed the result of the negligence of a fellow servant. Tillson v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 67 Atl. 407, 409, 102 Me. 463.

Where two sections of a train are operated as two distinct and independent trains, the members of the crew of one section are not fellow servants of the members of the crew of the other section within the statute defining fellow servants as persons engaged in the service of a common employer, working together at the same place and time, and to a common purpose. Meyers v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 104 Pac. 736, 742, 36 Utah, 307, 21 Ann. Cas. 1229.

A locomotive engineer is a "fellow servant" of a locomotive cleaner, and the latter cannot recover for injuries caused by failure of the engineer to report defects in the engine which he was required to do under the rules of the company, and which neglect caused an injury to the cleaner. If a master employs competent servants for inspection, and gives them reasonable facilities for the work, he will not be liable for the negligent performance of such labor to a "fellow servant," unless he knew of the defective manner in which the inspection was conducted. Sage v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 67 Atl. 985, 987, 219 Pa. 129.

Where plaintiff drives a buggy on the premises of a railroad company to superintend the work of his employé in unloading coal on a siding, and continues to drive along the siding and turns across the track at a permissive crossing and is struck by a train negligently operated, as his business of superintending the work in the railroad company's premises had ceased, and he was on his way to attend to his own business, he was no longer a fellow servant of the railroad company's employé under Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), so as to be barred from recovery, because of the negligence of such employé. Sloan v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 80 Atl. 366, 367, 231 Pa. 332.

A petition, in an action for injuries to a railroad employé while loading trucks on a flat car, which alleges that the vice principal and a fellow servant of plaintiff negligently caused the trucks to fall on the employé by permitting the blocks behind the wheels to fall from their proper positions, etc., shows that the vice principal is but a "fellow servant," engaged in the performance of the duties of a laborer, within fellow servant act (Ann. St. 1906, § 2875), declaring that persons engaged in the common service of railroads, and working together at the same time and place, are fellow servants. Robinson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 112 S. W. 730, 734, 133 Mo. App. 101.

Where a wreck on one track of a railroad did not in any way obstruct a parallel track, a flagman on a wrecking train, whose duty it was to warn trains approaching on the parallel track was not performing a duty of the railroad, which the latter could not delegate, but was a mere fellow servant with the trainmen on such trains, and the railroad was not responsible for his negligence in failing to warn a train approaching at a time when the parallel track was temporarily obstructed by a crane projecting out from the wrecking train. McAuley v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 631, 112 App. Div. 906.

Plaintiffs' intestates, their foremen, and defendant's roadmaster were all engaged in removing debris from defendant's track, caused by a landslide into a cut. During the afternoon one of the section foremen had been warned that the adjoining mountain side was dangerous, and in the evening the roadmaster stated, in the hearing of those present, that he had examined the mountain side before dark and that it was all right. Thereafter several of the employees were killed by a rock which rolled down the side of the mountain during the night. Held, that all engaged in the work were fellow servants. Maloney v. Florence & Cripple Creek R. Co., 89 Pac. 649, 651, 39 Colo. 384, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 348, 121 Am. St. Rep. 180, 12 Ann. Cas. 621.

Decedent, a member of a car repairing crew under the immediate direction of a foreman, was killed by the fall of a car. After the car had been jacked up and blocked, the foreman ordered it to be raised higher, and, without putting any further blocks under the car, directed decedent to get under it and perform the work, after which the end of the car, resting only on the jacks, slued, and fell to the ground. Held, that decedent and the foreman were fellow servants, and that defendant was not responsible for the foreman's negligence unless it was at fault in retaining him with knowledge of his incompetency. McClure v. Detroit Southern R. Co., 109 N. W. 847, 849, 146 Mich. 457.

A station telegraph operator and a locomotive engineer, both working for the same company, under the control of and subject to the orders of the company's train dispatcher, and with no control of either one over the other, are fellow servants, both at common law and within the fellow servant law (Laws 1897, p. 97, § 3), providing that persons, engaged in the common service of a railroad, working together at the same time and place, to a common purpose of same grade, neither of such persons being intrusted with any superintendence over his fellow employees, are fellow servants with each other, provided that no agent or servant shall be a fellow servant with an agent or servant of the common master engaged in another department or service of the master. Strotzman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 109 S. W. 769, 771, 211 Mo. 227.

Defendant, pursuant to a contract to furnish logs for a mill, used a logging railroad and certain extra spur tracks to which the logs were hauled by means of a steam skidder. Plaintiff and B., by whose negligence plaintiff was injured, were employed to take logs as they were hauled by two disconnected engines and skid cables to the edge of the spur track. Neither plaintiff nor B. had anything to do with the movement of the skidder. Plaintiff was injured by being struck by a log negligently moved by the orders of B. Held that, since the employment of both plaintiff and B. had nothing to do with the operation of the railroad, they were "fellow servants," and were not within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h, defining fellow servants in the employ of a person operating a railroad. Hampton v. Woolsey (Tex.) 129 S. W. 888, 892.

Kirby's Dig. Ark. § 6658, provides that all persons engaged in the service of any railroad corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in said state, who are intrusted by such corporation with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other persons in the employ of such corporation, or with authority to direct any other employee in performance of any duty, are vice principals of such corporation and not "fellow servants" of such employee. The members of a train crew who set cars on a spur track are "fellow servants" of the brakeman on another train, injured while his car is passing the cars on the spur track because the cars on the spur track are left too close to the main track. Ham v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 117 S. W. 108, 109, 136 Mo. App. 17.

At common law, all persons engaged in the service of the same master and working to a common purpose, whether or not they are in the same grade of service, or in the same department, or however widely their service may be separated, are "fellow servants." Under Laws 1891, c. 24, and Laws 1897, c. 6, providing that, to make the servants of a railroad company fellow servants, they must be engaged in the common service of the master in the same grade and department of service for a common purpose and working together at the same time and place, in the same character of work, and at the same piece of work, servants constituting a bridge gang under the direction of one foreman when divided into two squads and ordered to move bales of cotton from one side of a platform which was being repaired by the gang to the other, and one of them was injured by the servants of the other squad, the injured servant and the others were not "fellow servants." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Still, 88 S. W. 257, 258, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 22.

An engineer of a freight train is a "fellow servant" of the brakeman and not a superior officer or agent nor a person having a right to direct or control the services of the brakeman. The railroad company is therefore not liable for an injury to a brakeman caused by the negligence of the engineer on the same train. The relation of the brakeman to the engineer is entirely different from that of the fireman, and the fact that the management of the engine requires greater intelligence and more discretion than the management of the brakes does not constitute the engineer an officer or agent superior to the brakeman. To make the superiority of the officer or agent dependent on the shades of intelligence or discretion required in carrying out the rules of railroad companies would be to sweep away the whole fellow-servant doctrine as to railroads; nor does the requirement that the brakeman shall respond to the signals of the engineer determine the relation. Pagan v. Southern Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 32, 34, 78 S. C. 413, 13 Ann. Cas. 1105.

Under Const. S. C. art. 9, § 15, which abolishes the fellow-servant rule, when injury to a railroad employé results from the negligence of a superior agent or officer, from that of a fellow servant engaged in another department of labor from that of the party injured, or that of a fellow servant on another train or one engaged about a different piece of work, the question of who is a "fellow servant" is not to be determined by the department to which the servant belongs or his grade or authority, but the true test is as to the relations they sustained to each other at the time, and whether the act being performed by the offending servant was the performance of some delegated duty the master owed to the injured servant. A car coupler, acting under the directions of a conductor in going between a train of cars to make a coupling, is a fellow servant of an engineer who, acting without order from the conductor, moves the train. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Farmer, 176 Fed. 692, 696, 697, 700, 701, 100 C. C. A. 244.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4560g, providing that persons engaged in the common service of a railroad in the same grade of employment, and doing the same character of work, and working together at the same time and place, and to a common purpose, are fellow servants, and employes not within the provisions are not fellow servants, the night hostler in a railroad yard, charged with the duty, pursuant to the orders of his superior, of inspecting a switch engine to determine whether it has been properly wiped, is not a fellow servant of an employé engaged in putting steam into another switch engine. Galveston, H. & N. Ry. Co. v. Cochran, 109 S. W. 261, 263, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 591. Where two of defendant's employes, by whose negligence plaintiff claimed to have been injured, were not working with plaintiff at the same place at the time of the injury, nor employed at the same character of work nor at the same piece of work, they were not plaintiff's fellow servants within the statute. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Barwick, 110 S. W. 953, 955, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 544.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2874, provides that persons intrusted by a railroad corporation with the authority of command of other persons in the employ of the corporation, or the authority to direct any other servant in the performance of any duty, or with any duty owing by the master to the servant, are vice principals of the corporation. A rule by a railroad corporation provided that passenger conductors have entire charge of their trains and of all persons employed thereon, and will be held responsible for the prompt and safe movement of their trains and the conduct of the trainmen. Held, that a conductor is not a fellow servant of the master mechanic while the latter is riding on the locomotive for the purpose of discovering and remedying a defect in the locomotive, but is a vice principal; and the railroad corporation will be liable for the death of the master mechanic, caused by the negligence of the conductor, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), providing that a railroad corporation shall be responsible for the death of a person resulting from the negligence of any employé while running a train. Tabor v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 109 S. W. 764, 766, 210 Mo. 385, 124 Am. St. Rep. 728.

Street railroad employes

The motorman and conductor on a street car are "fellow servants." Houts v. St. Louis Transit Co., 84 S. W. 161, 164, 106 Mo. App. 686 (citing Stocks v. St. Louis Transit Co., 79 S. W. 1176, 106 Mo. App. 129; Godfrey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 1230, 107 Mo. App. 193; Sams v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 73 S. W. 686, 174 Mo. 53, 61 L. R. A. 475).

The conductor of one street car and the motorman of another are "fellow servants." Stocks v. St. Louis Transit Co., 79 S. W. 1176, 1177, 106 Mo. App. 129.

A motorman would be a "fellow servant" of a conductor on another street car of the same railway operating cars over the same lines and both working for the same master, over the same line, for the same purpose. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Moseley, 51 South. 424, 426, 164 Ala. 111.

Men engaged in constructing railroad tracks, who are taken to and from the place of work in a special car, are "fellow servants" of the motorman, relieving the company from liability for injuries sustained in a collision between the car and the wagon. Kilduff v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 191, 195 Mass. 307, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873.

The act of the motorman of a street car in approaching a railroad crossing at the rate of 30 miles an hour, with knowledge that the brakes on the car were defective, whereby a collision occurred resulting in injury to the conductor, was the negligence of a fellow servant. Craig v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 106 Pac. 155, 156, 56 Wash. 640.

Where coal was put into the cellar of a street car barn in such quantity and manner that a piece of it was liable to fall, and did fall, on the watchman while he was making his rounds, any negligence of the street railway company's superintendent, who, having been told that the coal ought to be pushed back or no more could be put in, had gone in the cellar before the accident, and on returning merely said to the watchman that he would find there was plenty of coal for a good while, was that of a "fellow servant." Lapre v. Woronoco St. Ry. Co., 82 N. E. 9, 196 Mass. 363.

To constitute the relation of "fellow servants," the servants must not only be engaged in a common employment, but must have opportunity to use precautions against each other's negligence. The motorman and conductor of one car on a street railroad, the cars of which run on schedule time, are fellow servants of the motorman and conductor of another car on the line, so that one of the motormen injured through the negligence of the other motorman in not performing his duty of turning on the lights of a block-light system, and of the conductor of the other car in not performing his duty to see that his motorman performed such duty, cannot recover of the company. Berg v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 34, 86, 44 Wash. 14, 120 Am. St. Rep. 968 (citing Grim v. Olympia Light & Power Co., 84 Pac. 635, 42 Wash. 119; Howe v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 70 Pac. 1100, 30 Wash. 569, 60 L. R. A. 949; Conine v. Olympia Logging Co., 78 Pac. 932, 36 Wash. 345; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 21 Pac. 32, 1 Wash. St. 599; Millett v. Puget Sound Iron & Steel Works, 79 Pac. 980, 37 Wash. 438; Stevick v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 81 Pac. 999, 39 Wash. 501).

The definition of "fellow servants" is a question of law, and whether two servants of a common master are "fellow servants" is a mixed question of law and fact. The relation of "fellow servants" is ordinarily one of fact and only becomes a question of law when there is no dispute with reference to the facts, and the evidence, with all legitimate inferences to be drawn therefrom, is such that all reasonable and intelligent men must reach the same conclusion. To create the relation of "fellow servants," the servants must be directly co-operating with each other in a particular work at the time of the injury, or their usual duties must be such as to bring them into habitual association so as to afford them the power and opportunity of exercising a mutual influence upon each other promotive of proper caution. A conductor on a cable car operated on a street, and a motorman on an electric car operated by the same company on a street crossing the first at right angles, are not, as a matter of law, "fellow servants," where the employes on the two lines are under the control of different superintendents in charge of different car barns, and the lines are not operated on a schedule requiring the meeting of the cars at the crossing, though rules of the company require, when cars on the lines meet at the crossing, that cable cars shall have the right of way, and though on a signal from the gripman the motorman may cross first. Bennett v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 735, 737, 243 Ill. 420.

FELO DE SE

Where a man of the age of discretion, which at common law was 14 years, voluntarily kills himself after he loses his mind by sickness, infirmity, or accident, he is not "felo de se," nor can he be said to commit murder upon himself. McMahan v. State, 53 South. 89, 91, 168 Ala. 70 (quoting 1 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, p. 411).

Pleading

The doctrine of "felo de se" is operative only where one cause of action stated is destroyed by another, which shows that no cause of action exists in fact, and does not apply where petition states that deceased was negligently shot, if as a fact he was shot with criminal intent. O'Brien v. St. Louis Transit Co., 110 S. W. 705, 707, 212 Mo. 59, 15 Ann. Cas. 86.

FELON

See Convicted Felon.

FELONIOUS—FELONIOUSLY

"Feloniously" imports criminal intent. An indictment charging that defendant "feloniously and with the intent then and there to steal," etc., sufficiently charges a felonious intent. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 178, 34 Mont. 403 (citing Whart. Prec. 415; State v. Rechnitz, 20 Mont. 488, 52 Pac. 264).

The word "feloniously," in an indictment, includes the word "wrongfully." State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 162, 118 Ga. 547.

An instruction that the term "feloniously" means an intent to commit a felony, or an intent to commit a wrongful act which might result in the commission of a felony, and that under the statutes the crime of receiving stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, is a felony, is faulty in that by the use of the word "might" the jury is told that a person is by law presumed to intend all the possible, rather than the reasonably probable, consequences of his voluntarily wrongful act, and is also objectionable in informing the jury that an intent to commit a wrongful act which might result in receiving stolen property, knowing the same to have been stolen, constituted a felonious intent. State v. Denny, 117 N. W. 869, 870, 17 N. D. 519.

Criminal intent implied

The term "feloniously," in an information, means that the act was done with a mind bent on doing that which is wrong, or with a guilty mind. State v. Connors, 94

Pac. 199, 201, 37 Mont. 15 (citing State v. Rechnitz, 52 Pac. 264, 20 Mont. 491).

It is said that the word "feloniously" signifies an intent to commit a crime; that it means that the act proceeded from an evil heart or purpose; that it is ordinarily but a repetition of what is expressed in other and simpler words. State v. Clark, 75 Atl. 534, 535, 83 Vt. 305, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 261.

"'Felonious,' when used in defining the crime of robbery or larceny, implies an intent to steal." State v. Fordham, 101 N. W. 888, 889, 13 N. D. 494.

In an indictment alleging that defendant assaulted the prosecutor and attempted to feloniously rob him, the word "feloniously" means "done with intent to commit" the crime. State v. Hughes, 102 Pac. 562, 563, 31 Nev. 270 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2731).

An information for robbery, which alleges that accused "feloniously" took from a person named by violence a specified sum, is fatally bad for failing to allege the ownership of the property; the word "feloniously" characterizing the act as being done with a criminal intent, and not being a substitute for an allegation of ownership. McGinnis v. State, 91 Pac. 936, 937, 16 Wyo. 72.

The words "unlawfully, feloniously," as used in an indictment charging accused with "unlawfully, feloniously" receiving property theretofore feloniously stolen, mean that the act which they characterize proceeded from a criminal intent and evil purpose, and thus exclude all color of right and excuse for the act. Bise v. United States, 144 Fed. 374, 375, 74 O. C. A. 1, 7 Ann. Cas. 165.

The word "felonious," standing alone, rather designates the grade of the crime as a felony, in distinction to a misdemeanor, than any particular form of the felonious intent, but yet in a general sense it points to the intent which enters into a felony, and an indictment charging a person with feloniously receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, is sufficient, although it does not allege an unlawful intent. State v. Bannister, 65 Atl. 588, 79 Vt. 524 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Bishop's New Crim. Law, 427).

An indictment for attempt to escape from a county jail, alleging that, while accused was lawfully confined in the jail of said county, he "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously attempt to break out of said county jail and in pursuance of said attempt did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously break out of a cell in said county jail" in which he was confined, and assaulted and overpowered a jailer of said jail, contrary to the statute, etc., sufficiently alleges that the acts complained of were done with intent to escape, as the word "feloniously" means "done with intent to commit a crime," and with a design on the part of the accused to commit the felony with which he is charged. State v. Clark, 104 Pac. 593, 595, 32 Nev. 145, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 754.

The use of the word "feloniously," to characterize the obtainment of money in another state, expresses the mere conclusion of the pleader, and purports that the obtainment was with criminal intent, and is not an allegation that the facts stated were criminal, either under the common law as interpreted in the state in question, or the equivalent to a setting forth of a provision of a statute of that state making the act criminal; the presumption being, in the absence of such allegation, that the common law prevailed. People v. Arnstein, 138 N. Y. Supp. 806, 811, 78 Misc. Rep. 18.

Deliberation implied

On a trial for murder, the court should instruct that the word "feloniously" means proceeding from an evil heart or purpose. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

The word "feloniously," as used in the instructions defining willful murder and voluntary manslaughter, and in the indictment charging willful murder, means proceeding from an evil heart or purpose, done with a deliberate intent of committing a crime. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 960, 125 Ky. 601; Gambrell v. Commonwealth, 113 S. W. 476, 480, 130 Ky. 513.

As affecting grade of offense

The mere use of the term "feloniously," in charging an offense, does not make it a felony. That term is simply a technical one which is indispensable in informations and indictments in a charge of a felony; but, in order to constitute an act a felony, there must be a valid and existing law making the commission of such an act that grade of offense. An indictment charging that accused broke into a building, with intent to feloniously, etc., cut, wound, and maim a certain horse, did not charge burglary in the second degree, within a statute making the breaking into any building, with intent to commit a felony, burglary in the second degree, where the offense of willfully and maliciously cutting, wounding, and maiming a horse, was not a felony, but a misdemeanor. State v. Taylor, 85 S. W. 564, 565, 186 Mo. 608.

As descriptive of grade of offense

The word "felonious" is descriptive of the grade of the offense rather than the criminal act which constitutes the offense, and ordinarily has no place in the instructions and can be omitted without affecting the sufficiency of the same. An instruction defining murder in the second degree, and stating what the jury must find to convict of that degree, is not bad for not containing the word "feloniously." State v. Miles, 98 S. W. 25, 29, 199 Mo. 530.

As maliciously or willfully

"Feloniously" means with a deliberate intent to commit a wrongful act, contrary to law, constituting an offense, an act done with intent to commit a crime, and, as so used, includes "maliciously." State v. Smith, 105 S. W. 68, 70, 119 Tenn. 521 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2731 et seq., and 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4307).

As applicable to misdemeanors

The use of the adverb "feloniously," in charging a misdemeanor, does not vitiate the indictment. Barnewell v. Stephens, 38 South. 662, 663, 142 Ala. 609.

In charging simple larceny of property of less than the value of $35, it is surplusage to charge that the act was "feloniously" committed. State v. Minnick, 102 Pac. 605, 607, 54 Or. 86.

Necessity of use of word "feloniously" in indictments for felonies

The word "feloniously," as used in the Code of Criminal Procedure is a term of art adapted to define one of the constituent elements of a felony. There is no other word in the English language which is a perfect synonym for it and which can supply its place as a necessary requisite of the charging part of an indictment for a felony. Hocker v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 111 S. W. 676, 679.

Where the word "feloniously" is unnecessarily used in charging a felony, it amounts to no more than saying that the crime charged was a felony, and cannot be construed as meaning knowingly or with knowledge. State v. Judd, 109 N. W. 892, 893, 132 Iowa, 296, 11 Ann. Cas. 91.

Under the statute providing that it shall not be necessary to allege that the offense charged is done feloniously, the omission of the word "feloniously" from an information for grand larceny is not fatal. Baldwin v. State, 35 South. 220, 221, 46 Fla. 115.

The word "feloniously" is not essential to an indictment under a statute establishing a form for a bill of indictment for perjury without using the word, and declaring that this form shall be sufficient. State v. Harris, 59 S. E. 115, 116, 145 N. C. 456.

Specific intent implied

The word "feloniously" imports only that criminal intent which is the necessary part of every felony, or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific "purpose" to do the act which is an element of the crime charged. Whether the indictment is on a statute or at the common law, it is a rule universal and without exception that every intent, like everything else, which the law makes an element of the offense must be alleged, for otherwise no prima facie case appears. Newby v. State, 105 N. W. 1099, 1100, 75 Neb. 33.

As unlawfully

A charge that an act was done "feloniously" includes the charge of unlawfulness. State v. Miller, 89 S. W. 377, 380, 190 Mo. 449.

The word "feloniously" includes "unlawfully" in its meaning, for an act cannot be said to be "feloniously" done and not be "unlawfully" done. People v. St. Clair, 91 N. E. 573, 574, 244 Ill. 444 (citing Carroll v. State, 75 S. W. 471, 71 Ark. 403).

The word "feloniously," as used in an information for assaulting a female under 12 years, is fairly equivalent, in connection with the illegal act charged, to the word "unlawfully," for the purpose of charging the manifestly illegal act to have been "unlawfully" done. Barnard v. State, 60 N. W. 1058, 1059, 88 Wis. 656.

As wickedly and against admonitions of the law

"'Felonious' means wickedly and against the admonition of the law; unlawfully." State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192; State v. Forsha, 88 S. W. 746, 751, 190 Mo. 296, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110.

The word "feloniously" means wickedly, wrongfully, and against the admonition of the law. State v. Platner, 93 S. W. 403, 404, 196 Mo. 128; State v. Wissing, 85 S. W. 557, 559, 187 Mo. 96; State v. Temple, 92 S. W. 494, 496, 194 Mo. 228; State v. Lehman, 81 S. W. 1118, 1122, 182 Mo. 424, 66 L. R. A. 490, 103 Am. St. Rep. 670; State v. Bateman, 95 S. W. 413, 414, 196 Mo. 35.

The word "feloniously" means wrongfully and wickedly, and also refers to the punishment imposed by law. State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1.

FELONIOUS ASSAULT

Ordinarily the words "felonious assault," when applied to an assault upon a female, are intended to characterize an assault with intent to commit rape; but they do not exclude all other felonious assaults, such as assaults with intent to murder, assaults with intent to rob, nor do they exclude the suggestion of the consummated act of rape. Huey v. State, 66 S. E. 1023, 1027, 7 Ga. App. 398.

FELONIOUS HOMICIDE

"Felonious homicide" is either murder in the first or second degrees or manslaughter. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 309; State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 634, 7 Pennewill, 127; State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 220; State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538.

"Felonious homicide" is the killing of one human being by another without jurisdiction or excuse. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W.

1115, 1117, 20 S. D. 135 (citing Anderson's Law Dict. 512).

A "felonious homicide" at common law is of two kinds, manslaughter and murder, the difference between which consists principally that in murder there is the ingredient of malice, while in manslaughter there is none. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

FELONIOUS INTENT

"Felonious intent," where used in penal statutes, means criminal intent. People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 100 N. Y. Supp. 427, 430, 50 Misc. Rep. 198 (quoting People v. Moore, 37 Hun, 93).

Under Rev. Laws 1905, § 3045, providing that no trust company shall lend its funds or other property to its officers, the "felonious intent" to appropriate the funds of the company is inferred from the fact that an officer becomes indebted to it, and no specific intent need be shown, but under the general larceny statute (section 5078) the state is compelled to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the money was appropriated with the intention to deprive the company of it. Upon a trial under section 3045, the state having shown an indebtedness, a prima facie case of guilt is made out, but under section 5078 indebtedness may be consistent with innocence. In a prosecution under section 5078, it was error to charge that section 3045 might be considered as bearing on the question of intent. State v. Barnes, 122 N. W. 4, 5, 108 Minn. 227.

At common law the term "felony" comprehends a large class of high crimes as well as those of a less atrocious character. The term "felony" always drew after it a forfeiture of goods and chattels. Perry v. Man, 1 R. I. 263, 265.

At common law, a felony was an offense, a conviction for which caused forfeiture of lands or goods, or both, and was also subject to punishment by death, or otherwise. Burton v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 628, 633, 147 App. Div. 557; Tucker v. United States, 196 Fed. 260, 266, 116 C. C. A. 62; Ex parte O'Shea, 105 Pac. 776, 779, 11 Cal. App. 508 (quoting and adopting definitions in Bouv. Law Dict.; Moz. & W. Law Dict.); Dolan v. United States, 133 Fed. 440, 452, 69 C. C. A. 274 (citing Considine v. United States, 112 Fed. 342, 50 C. C. A. 272; Ban- non v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 467, 156 U. S. 464, 39 L. Ed. 494; United States v. Copperamith, 4 Fed. 198).

Felony by common law is against the life of a man, as murder, manslaughter; against a man's goods, such as larceny and robbery; against his habitation as burglary, arson and houseburning; and against public justice, as breach of prison. Leeman v. Public Service Ry. Co., 72 Atl. 8, 9, 77 N. J. Law, 420.

"An offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, absolutely or in the alternative, is a 'felony.'" Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 918, 929, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162.

A "felony" is an offense punishable by death or imprisonment at hard labor. State v. Melles, 42 South. 199, 200, 117 La. 656 (citing Hen. Dig. p. 356, No. 4).

A "felony" means an offense for which the offender, on conviction, shall be punished by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, and not otherwise. Freeman v. State, 57 S. E. 924, 1 Ga. App. 276.

By the statutes of many states, a "felony" is a crime punishable with death or imprisonment in the penitentiary. People v. Smith, 77 Pac. 449, 450, 143 Cal. 597; Cochran v. United States, 147 Fed. 206, 208, 77 C. C. A. 432 (citing Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okl. 1903, § 1926); Ex parte Tanl, 91 Pac. 137, 29 Nev. 385, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 518; State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 248, 187 Mo. 590; People v. Russell, 91 N. E. 1075, 1076, 245 Ill. 268; Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 209, 141 Ky. 461; Cochran v. United States, 76 Pac. 672, 673, 14 Okl. 108; Territory v. Gonzales, 89 Pac. 250, 251, 14 N. M. 31. Walden v. State, 39 South. 151, 50 Fla. 151; State v. McKee, 104 S. W. 486, 487, 126 Mo. App. 524; Milne v. People, 79 N. E. 631, 632, 224 Ill. 125.

At common law, "felony" was an offense which occasioned a total forfeiture of land or goods, or both, and a "misdemeanor" was an offense less than a felony. In Oregon, conviction of crime does not work a forfeiture of the defendant's estate, and hence, in the absence of statute, the term "felony" is not descriptive of any offense, but by B. & C. Comp. § 1230, a felony is defined as a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, every other offense being declared a "misdemeanor" by section 1231. State v. Biggs (Or.) 97 Pac. 713, 714.

Every "felony" includes trespass. State v. Waller, 74 S. W. 842, 844, 174 Mo. 518.

The word "felony" is not the name of any distinctive offense, but is a generic term employed to distinguish certain high crimes, such as murder, arson, and larceny, from minor ones, known as misdemeanors, and an averment that accused broke and entered a car for the purpose of committing a felony fails to apprise him of the specific offense which it is claimed he intended to commit. State v. Doran, 59 Atl. 440, 441, 99 Me. 329, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278.

By the terms of the statute, any theft from the person is a "felony." Campbell v. State, 135 S. W. 548, 549, 61 Tex. Cr. Rep. 504.

Slander being, under Kirby's Dig. § 1861, a felony, and the law not requiring one instituting a prosecution for felony to give a bond, a bond for costs given by one instituting prosecution for slander, and the judgment based thereon, is void. Emerson v. Hopper, 127 S. W. 487, 94 Ark. 384, 140 Am. St. Rep. 121.

The words "felony" and "misdemeanor," in the statute, authorizing disbarment on an attorney's conviction of felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, and making the conviction record conclusive evidence, are used in their statutory sense, and, there being no offense known to the state law as "conspiracy to suborn perjury," an attorney's conviction of such offense in a federal court is not conclusive evidence, in a disbarment proceeding, of his commission of an act warranting disbarment. State v. Biggs (Or.), 97 Pac. 713, 714.

Since the punishment for retailing spirituous liquors is that fixed for a misdemeanor, under Revisal 1905, § 3291, providing that a "felony" is a crime punishable by either death or imprisonment in the state's prison, and that any other crime is a "misdemeanor," the word "feloniously," in a warrant charging that accused unlawfully, willfully, and feloniously retailed spirituous liquors, is superfluous. State v. Shine, 62 S. E. 1080, 1081, 149 N. C. 480.

The word "felony," in the statutes defining justifiable homicide as the killing of a human being in self-defense or in defense of property against one manifestly intending to commit a felony, and providing that one who shall willfully destroy any fence or other valuable improvement shall be guilty of a "felony," does not include the mere placing by one of his hand on a post in a fence, not for the purpose of destroying the fence, but for the purpose of pulling it down to make a gap through which he might drive his cattle into a field, especially where the act was done under a claim of right. Driggers v. United States, 104 S. W. 1166, 1170, 7 Ind. T. 752.

Under the state Constitution, declaring that the term "felony" shall be construed to mean any criminal offense punishable with death or imprisonment in the state prison, and the statute, declaring any crime punishable by death or imprisonment in the state prison a felony, and providing that it shall not be necessary to allege in an indictment that the offense charged is a felony or felonious, or done feloniously and that no indictment shall be quashed by reason of the omission of the words "felony," "felonious," or "feloniously," a failure to allege that the acts charged were feloniously committed, where that is not a part of the statutory definition of the offense, does not affect the validity of an indictment. The punishment fixed by statute determines whether the offense charged is or is not a "felony." McCaskill v. State, 45 South. 843, 844, 55 Fla. 117.

Misdemeanor distinguished

In general terms, all crimes are "felonies" and "misdemeanors." The former include more serious offenses, consequently receive more severe punishment. Misdemeanors include offenses less serious and usually punished by fine or imprisonment or both. State v. Williams, 88 South. 686, 687, 114 La. 939.

Under the statute, defining a "felony" as a crime punishable by death or state imprisonment, and making other offenses misdemeanors, obstructing a street being punishable by a fine only, is a "misdemeanor." Commonwealth v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 92 N. E. 766, 769, 206 Mass. 417, 19 Ann. Cas. 529.

The statute defining trusts, and for a violation thereof providing a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment not less than six months nor more than a year, or both, prescribes a "misdemeanor," since by statute a "felony" is a crime punishable by death or by imprisonment in the state prison, and every other crime is a "misdemeanor." Union Ice Co. v. Rose, 104 Pac. 1006, 1007, 11 Cal. App. 357.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2393 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1466), defining "felony" as any offense for which the offender shall be liable to be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, etc., and section 2396 defining a "misdemeanor" as any offense punishable by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, or both, one convicted of violating section 1888 (page 1272), providing that one carnally knowing an unmarried female between the ages of 14 and 18 years shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, or by imprisonment in the county jail or by fine, or both, is convicted of a felony though he is punished by imprisonment in the county jail. State ex rel. Sanks v. Johnson, 121 S. W. 780, 781, 784, 138 Mo. App. 306.

The word "felony" is not the name of any distinctive offense, but is a generic term employed to distinguish different crimes, as murder, arson, and larceny, from "misdemeanors," or minor ones, and hence an averment in an indictment that accused broke and entered a car for the purpose of committing a felony is insufficient because failing to apprise him of the specific offense which it is claimed he intended to commit. State v. Doran, 59 Atl. 440, 441, 99 Me. 329, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the court instructed the jury that: "It is only when a felony is intended that the killing is justifiable. A 'felony' is any offense punishable by death or by imprisonment in the penitentiary"—it was not error to further instruct that "simply pointing a gun at another is not a felony. It is a misdemeanor," where the theory of the state was that, while the deceased had pointed a gun at the accused, he had also at the same time pointed it at two others, and the contention of accused that the instruction in reference to pointing a gun at another, being only a misdemeanor, was calculated to create the impression that the defense of accused rested solely on the ground of reasonable fear, resulting from the gun being pointed, whereas the defense also rested upon the ground that the deceased was about to use a pistol, was not well taken, since it was the duty of the judge to submit to the jury all of the theories of the accused. Long v. State, 56 S. E. 444, 446, 127 Ga. 350.

At common law, "felony" was an offense which occasioned a total forfeiture of land or goods, or both, and a "misdemeanor" was an offense less than a felony. In Oregon, conviction of crime does not work a forfeiture of the defendant's estate, and hence, in the absence of statute, the term "felony" is not descriptive of any offense, but by B. & C. Comp. § 1230, a felony is defined as a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, every other offense being declared a "misdemeanor" by section 1231. State v. Biggs (Or.) 97 Pac. 713, 714.

A "felony" at common law was an offense punishable by death, or to which the old English law attached the total forfeiture of lands or goods; but the essential difference between a felony and a misdemeanor is now practically lost in England since the felony act of 1870. In this country it simply denotes the degree or class of crimes. In fact, the distinction between a felony and a misdemeanor is for the Legislature. The Legislature may leave much to the discretion of the jury and the trial judge as to the punishment for crime, and it makes no difference that the Legislature has designated certain crimes as felonies which at common law were offenses punishable by death, or to which forfeiture of property was attached, and certain other crimes as misdemeanors, or divided crimes into two classes based on the punishment imposed, as is done in Pen. Code, § 17. Ex parte O'Shea, 105 Pac. 776, 779, 11 Cal. App. 568 (quoting and adopting definitions in Bouv. Law Dict., Moz. & W. Law Dict.).

A "felony" at common law is an offense which occasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods or both, and to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt. By the early common law in England, felonies were those crimes punishable capitally or by forfeiture of land, or goods, or both, but the term was not one of settled meaning, and by some authorities the test was the liability to forfeiture, rather than the liability to capital punishment. In statutes creating or defining offenses, the language usually expressly indicates whether the offense is to be deemed a felony or misdemeanor, and for practical purposes it may be said that those crimes which by the common law, were punishable capitally, or which are expressly made felonies by statute, are now to be considered of that class, while all other criminal offenses are to be deemed misdemeanors, and no offense is to be deemed a felony unless it comes within this description. But, if the offense has been a felony, the mere reduction of the punishment will not of itself change it to a misdemeanor. An offense shall never be made felony by the construction of any doubtful and ambiguous words of a statute; and therefore, if it be prohibited under a pain of forfeiting all that a man has or of forfeiting body and goods it shall amount to no more than a high misdemeanor. The word "misdemeanor," in its usual acceptance, is applied to all those crimes and offenses for which the law has not provided a particular name, and they may be punished according to the degree of the offense, by fine or imprisonment, or both. A misdemeanor is, in truth, any crime less than a felony; and the word is generally used in contradistinction to felony: misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offenses which do not amount to felony. The selling of intoxicating liquors at common law was not a felony, not even a crime. So, when it is made a crime, and the statute does not expressly state as to whether it is a felony or misdemeanor, the presumption is that it is a misdemeanor. Ex parte Cain, 93 Pac. 974, 976, 20 Okl. 125 (citing 1 Russ. Cr. [9th Ed.] c. 4, pp. 77, 78; 1 McClain, Cr. Law, § 18; State v. Hill, 91 N. C. 561; U. S. v. Belvin [C. C.] 46 Fed. 385).

Rev. Laws Mass. c. 215, § 1, provides that any crime punishable by death or by imprisonment in the state prison is a felony, and that all other crimes are misdemeanors. When such statute was enacted the state had but one state prison, in which both men and women were confined, but subsequently it established a women's prison, and provided by statute that women convicted of offenses for which they would previously have been sent to the state prison should thereafter be sentenced to the women's prison, and also that women convicted of lesser offenses punishable by imprisonment in a jail or house of correction might be sentenced to such women's prison. Held, that the latter class of offenses were not thereby made felonies, but that so far as relates to women the grade of the offense was no longer determined by the place of imprisonment to which they might be sentenced, but rather by the place in which a man guilty of the same offense would be confined. Ex parte Brown, 151 Fed. 710, 711.

Offense must be declared to be a felony

A "felony" at common law is an offense which occasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods, or both, and to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt. In statutes creating or defining offenses, the language usually expressly indicates whether the offense is to be deemed a felony or misdemeanor, and for practical purposes it may be said that those crimes which, by the common law, were punishable capitally, or which are expressly made felonies by statute, are now to be considered of that class, while all other criminal offenses are to be deemed misdemeanors, and no offense is to be deemed a felony unless it comes within this description. But, if the offense has been a felony, the mere reduction of the punishment will not of itself change it to a misdemeanor. An offense shall never be made felony by the construction of any doubtful and ambiguous words of a statute; and therefore, if it be prohibited under a pain of forfeiting all that a man has, or of forfeiting body and goods, it shall amount to no more than a high misdemeanor. The word "misdemeanor," in its usual acceptation, is applied to all those crimes and offenses for which the law has not provided a particular name, and they may be punished according to the degree of the offense, by fine or imprisonment, or both. A misdemeanor is, in truth, any crime less than a felony; and the word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offenses which do not amount to felony. The selling of intoxicating liquors at common law was not a felony, not even a crime. When it is made a crime, and the statute does not expressly state as to whether it is a felony or misdemeanor, the presumption is that it is a misdemeanor. Ex parte Cain, 93 Pac. 974, 976, 20 Okl. 125 (citing 1 Russ. Cr. [9th Ed.] c. 4, pp. 77, 78; 1 McClain, Cr. Law, § 18; State v. Hill, 91 N. C. 561; United States v. Belvin, 46 Fed. 385).

A "felony" is defined by statute to be a public offense punishable with death, or which is, or, in the discretion of the court, may be, punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary or territorial prison, or any other public offense which is or may be expressly declared by law to be a felony, and the statute, in relation to an assault with a deadly weapon, does not declare the crime to be a felony, although it may become one by the penalty imposed. Hence, on a prosecution for such assault, it is not necessary that the indictment should charge the act to have been done feloniously. Territory v. Gonzales, 89 Pac. 250, 251, 14 N. M. 81.

Rev. St. § 5427, provides that "every person who knowingly and intentionally aids or abets any person in the commission of any felony denounced in the three preceding sections" shall be punished, etc. In the original statute said four sections were all embraced in one section, which expressly declared the offenses now contained in the first three sections to be felonies, and the part which now constitutes section 5427 read, "Any person who shall * * * aid and abet any person in the commission of any such felony," etc. In the revision such express declaration was omitted, and it has since been settled by decision that the offenses described in the first three sections are not felonies, but misdemeanors, under the common-law rule of construction applied to federal statutes, although the punishment prescribed is imprisonment in a penitentiary at hard labor, which, by the general understanding in this country, makes the offense a felony. Held, that such construction does not render section 5427 a nullity, but that the word "felony," as used therein, should be given its popular meaning, in order to give effect to the section in accordance with the manifest intention of Congress. Dolan v. United States, 183 Fed. 440, 444, 69 C. C. A. 274; United States v. York, 181 Fed. 828, 325.

Minor offense distinguished

An offense punishable by imprisonment in the parish prison or by hard labor in the penitentiary is a "minor offense" and not a "felony." State v. Wall, 52 South. 556, 560, 126 La. 400.

Abortion

Rev. St. 1899, § 1823, provides that for a person to kill any woman by administering to her any drugs or using on her any instrument with intent to destroy a pregnancy, not a medical necessity, should constitute manslaughter. Section 1825 declared that for a person to destroy any quick child while attempting to commit an abortion, unless a medical necessity, should constitute manslaughter in the second degree, and section 1853 made it a misdemeanor to administer to a pregnant woman any drug or to employ any other means with intent to produce an abortion, unless such act was a medical necessity, etc. Act March 20, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 230) expressly repealed section 1825, and in lieu thereof enacted that any person who, with intent to produce an abortion, advises, gives, sells, or administers to a woman whether pregnant or not, or who, with such intent, procures or causes her to take any drug, medicine, or article, or uses upon her or advises her to use any instrument to produce an abortion (unless necessary to preserve life), etc., shall, in the event of the death of the woman or any quick child whereof she be pregnant, on conviction be adjudged guilty of manslaughter in the second degree, and in case death does not ensue shall be guilty of the "felony of abortion," and shall be punishable accordingly. Held, that every element of the crime of abortion contained in sections 1823, 1825, and 1853 was included in the act of 1907, and that such act repealed such sections, so that thereafter the administering of a drug to a pregnant woman or the employment of any means (with intent to procure an abortion) was a felony, and not a misdemeanor. State ex rel. Gaston v. Shields, 130 S. W. 298, 300, 230 Mo. 91.

Adultery

As adultery may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, it is a felony, as Code, § 5093, defines a felony as a public offense, which may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary. State v. Clemenson, 99 N. W. 139, 123 Iowa, 524.

Assault with intent to kill

An assault with intent to kill, being punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, is a "felony" under the statute, making any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary a felony. State v. Wilson, 126 S. W. 998, 140 Mo. App. 726.

Bribery

Bribery denounced by the statute, providing that every person who shall by bribery deter a witness from giving evidence in any cause shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and that, if the cause be a prosecution for a felony, the person so offending, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years, or in the county jail, or by fine, is not a "felony" within the statute declaring that the term "felony" means any offense punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary or with death, but the offense is a "misdemeanor," defined by statute as including every offense punishable only by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, or both. State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 247, 187 Mo. 590.

Petit larceny

At common law petit larceny was a "felony," and the effect of the statute providing that, on a subsequent conviction for petit larceny, the offender should be sentenced to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years was to make petit larceny charged as second offense a felony. People ex rel. Cosgriff v. Craig, 88 N. E. 38, 39, 195 N. Y. 190.

"Felony" being defined by statute to be an offense punishable with death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, petit larceny, which is declared to be a misdemeanor, is not a felony within the statute making conviction of a felony ground for divorce. Hartwig v. Hartwig, 142 S. W. 797, 799, 160 Mo. App. 284.

"Felony," in American law, has no very definite meaning except in cases where it is defined by statute. The words "minor offenses," as used in the state constitution, authorizing the Legislature to grade all "misdemeanors and minor offenses against the state" and to fix the minimum and maximum penalty therefor, must be construed as meaning minor crimes, such as petty larceny and the like, which may be punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. The words were used to designate minor crimes which, in the discretion of the court, may be punishable by imprisonment in the parish jail or in the penitentiary, or, in other words, as misdemeanors or as felonies. Hence the act grading misdemeanors and minor offenses is constitutional in so far as it grades the offense of petty larceny and makes the same punishable by imprisonment in the parish jail. State v. Eubanks, 88 South. 407, 408, 114 Ga. 428.

Pursuing liquor business in local option territory

The offense of pursuing the business of selling intoxicating liquors in local option territory is a distinct offense from that of making a sale of intoxicating liquors, and is a "felony." Byrd v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1068, 1070.

Rape

The offense of rape, being punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, is a "felony" under the statute of Kansas defining a felony to be an offense punishable by confinement in the penitentiary, and a boy being put upon his trial under an information charging that offense, even though he is under the age of 16 years at the time of his conviction is entitled to exercise six peremptory challenges in the selection of a jury. State v. Davidson, 80 Pac. 945, 71 Kan. 494.

FEMALE

In "an indictment under the statute concerning rape on infants under 12 years of age, * * * sex need not be alleged. The indictment is sufficient if it gives a woman's name and uses the pronouns 'she' and 'her' in speaking of the person on whom the rape was committed. The word 'female' in an indictment is equivalent to the word 'woman.'" Com. v. Landis, 112 S. W. 581, 582, 129 Ky. 445, 16 Ann. Cas. 901 (quoting and adopting Rob. Cr. Law, § 271, and citing Commonwealth v. Fogerty, 8 Gray [74 Mass.] 489, 69 Am. Dec. 264).

FEMALE RELATION

Under the statute declaring that insulting conduct of decedent towards a "female relation" of accused is adequate cause to reduce the killing to manslaughter, and providing that any female under the temporary protection of accused at the time of the killing shall be included within the term "relation," accused, who had been raised by a husband and wife, and who lived at their house, could show adequate cause for the killing of decedent by proving his insulting conduct towards a cousin of the wife present at the house. Williams v. State (Tex.) 144 S. W. 620, 621.

A mother is the "female relative" of her son, within the contemplation of the statute and if accused, on trial for the murder of his stepfather, was informed and believed that deceased had struck accused's mother, it would be adequate cause, requiring a charge on manslaughter. Stapleton v. State, 120 S. W. 866, 867, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 422.

FENCE

See Division Fence; Good Fence; Lawful Fence; Legal and Sufficient Fence; Partition Fence; Securely Guarded or Fenced; Spite Fence.

Under a statute providing that all fences 4½ feet high, consisting of rails, timber, boards, stone, or any combination thereof, and all hedges or other things which shall be considered equivalent thereto in the judgment of the fence viewers, shall be deemed legal and sufficient, an ordinary worm or Virginia "fence" is one that owners of farm land may lawfully build, though it requires the use of a strip of land from 3 to 5 feet wide, and a stump fence built in accordance with the common practice of a locality may be lawfully built, if it meets the approval of the fence viewers. Rose v. Linderman, 110 N. W. 939, 940, 147 Mich. 372, 11 Ann. Cas. 198.

Under a statute declaring that, if a railroad company fence in its track, it shall only be liable in case of injury to stock resulting from want of ordinary care, a railroad track is not "fenced in," where it is inclosed on two sides and on one end, leaving the other end open. To fence in a place, as against live stock, means to surround it by a fence, so as to prevent the intrusion of such animals upon the inclosed premises. Ft. Worth & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Swan, 78 S. W. 920, 922, 97 Tex. 338. To "fence in," within the meaning of this statute, means to inclose the premises in such a way as, under ordinary circumstances, to effectually prevent stock of the ordinary kind from entering upon the roadbed and tracks, and requires the railroad company, after it has fenced in its track, to keep the same fenced in by making the necessary repairs. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Sproles, 105 S. W. 521, 522, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 294. A railroad is "fenced in," so as to avoid liability for stock killed, when it is inclosed in such a way as at least under ordinary circumstances to effectually exclude live stock of the ordinary kind and docility from entering on the roadbed and tracks. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Pruitt, 109 S. W. 925, 926, 101 Tex. 548.

A "railroad cattle gap" or "guard" is a contrivance to restrain cattle. In a sense it is a "fence," but the construction of the gap or guard itself is not limited in its dangerous quality, as is a fence. To be at all effective and serviceable, it cannot be a barrier erected perpendicular to the surface of the ground, and rising above it, but must, in order to answer the purpose in view, be so constructed that its appearance of dangerousness will, under ordinary circumstances, deter cattle from attempting to pass over it; and, in so ordering the gap or guard, a really dangerous contrivance may be properly installed without, in the event of injury to cattle attempting to cross it, rendering the railway company liable, if the fact of its want of safety for that purpose is the proximate cause of the injury. Carrollton Short Line Ry. Co. v. Lipey, 48 South. 836, 837, 150 Ala. 570.

As building

See Building.

Gate or bars

A gate is a part of the "fence," within the statute requiring railroads to maintain fences beside their tracks, and the road is under the same duty to erect gates in the first instance and keep them in repair when erected as it is regarding any other part of the fence. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 104 Pac. 713, 716, 11 Cal. App. 278.

To escape the absolute liability that the statute declares in favor of the owner for the value of stock killed, a railway company must show that it had its road so fenced in at the time as to prevent stock of ordinary disposition from entering upon its roadbed, and a gate in the fence is a part of the fence. Texas Cent. Ry. Co. v. Wills (Tex.) 116 S. W. 145, 146; Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Jenkins (Tex.) 120 S. W. 948, 949; Houston E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Lee (Tex.) 135 S. W. 694, 695; Texas Cent. Ry. Co. v. Pruitt, 110 S. W. 966, 968, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 370.

Hedge

The statute, authorizing a person who has laid a fence on a division line to remove it, is not applicable to trees and timber grown in a hedge "fence" on the line. Griffith v. Carrothers, 119 Pac. 548, 549, 86 Kan. 93.

A "hedge" is not a "fence," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2502, specifying when and how a person may withdraw or separate a fence connected with other fences. Brown v. Johnson (Tex.) 73 S. W. 49, 50.

As private nuisance

See Private Nuisance.

Wall

Where plaintiff built a fence by first erecting a wall of split stone some 2½ feet high on the side next to the street but filled with earth on the side next to the lot and on the wall placed a light wooden fence, the wall constituted a part of the "fence," within a fair construction of the special order under which a street commissioner was acting, in being ordered to remove the "fence," so that damages were recoverable against the city on the theory that he was acting in the course of his employment.—Woodcock v. City of Calais, 68 Me. 244, 246.

FENCE (Receiving Stolen Goods)

A "fence" is a place where burglars or thieves can dispose of their plunder without inquiry, and their identity be concealed. State v. Rosenbaum, 68 Atl. 250, 251, 80 Conn. 327, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 125 Am. St. Rep. 121; Schulman v. Whitaker, 39 South. 737, 115 La. 628; State v. Cohen, 63 Atl. 928, 929, 930, 73 N. H. 543.

FENCED

What is meant by the word "fenced," in a reservation in a deed of a right of way which is not to be fenced, is not that the lands of the servient donor should be left entirely open and exposed on every side, but that the way shall not be closed at the ends by a permanent fence. Frazier v. Myer, 31 N. E. 536, 132 Ind. 71.

FENDER

As applied to sawmills, a "fender" is a guard to protect employes from flying pieces of wood driven by the saws. Burns v. Rud-dock Orleans Cypress Co., 38 South. 157, 158, 114 La. 247.

As applied to street cars, a "fender" is a guard or protection against danger to pedestrians. Spiking v. Consolidated Ry. & Power Co., 93 Pac. 838, 845, 33 Utah, 313 (citing 19 Cyc. p. 489); Whitt v. Public Service Corp. of New Jersey, 64 Atl. 972, 74 N. J. Law, 141.

FERÆ NATURÆ

Animals feræ naturæ as private property, see Private Property.

Migratory fish in navigable waters of a state, like game within its borders, are classed as animals feræ naturæ, the title to which, so far as it is susceptible to being asserted before possession is obtained, is held by the state in its sovereign capacity, in trust for all its citizens, and, as an incident of the assumed ownership, the state may protect the species from extinction by exhaustive methods of capture. State v. Hume, 95 Pac. 808, 810, 52 Or. 1.

FERMENTED

FERMENTED AND MALT LIQUORS

As intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquor.

As liquor, see Liquor.

As used in the Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, c. 312), regulating the sale of "fermented or malt liquors," includes a liquor known as "malt rose," which is a beverage made to imitate lager beer, having the same general color, taste, and appearance, and containing from .74 to 1.18 per cent. of alcohol. People v. Cox, 94 N. Y. Supp. 526, 527, 529, 106 App. Div. 290.

In a prosecution for selling intoxicants on Sunday, in violation of Liquor Tax Law, § 31, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312, and Laws 1903, p. 1111, c. 486, the magistrate could take judicial notice that lager beer is a fermented and malt liquor within Liquor Tax Law, § 2, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312, § 1, and Laws 1903, p. 1111, c. 486, § 1, defining "liquors" as including fermented and malt liquors, etc. People ex rel. Landt v. O'Reilly, 114 N. Y. Supp. 258, 260, 129 App. Div. 522.

FERRET

See Tax Ferret.

FERRO-CHROME

"Ferro-chrome" is produced by reducing chrome iron ore with carbon in an electrical furnace. It contains iron chromium and carbon. One of its principal uses is in the manufacture of armor-piercing projectiles and armor plates. It is also generally used to impart hardness and toughness to steel structures and implements where these qualities are particularly needed, such as burglar-proof safes, crushers, cutting tools, and the like. United States v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., 137 Fed. 770, 771, 70 C. C. A. 346.

FERRO-MANGANESE

"Ferro-manganese" is produced by smelting the ore containing iron and manganese. It is added to steel in the process of manufacture. It is used in making steel for the cheaper class of projectiles and for other purposes where hardness, strength, and ductility are necessary. United States v. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., 137 Fed. 770, 771, 70 C. C. A. 346.

FERRO-TUNGSTEN

Tungsten iron or "ferro-tungsten" is made from tungsten or wolframate by roasting it, freeing it from sulphur and arsenic by treatment with muriatic acid, and strongly igniting it with charcoal in a closed crucible, giving a sintered or scaly mass which is fusible with iron ore. O. G. Hempstead & Son v. Thomas, 122 Fed. 538, 539, 59 C. C. A. 342.

FERRULE

"Knight's Mechanical Dictionary" describes a ferrule as 'a metallic ring or sleeve on the handle of a tool or the end of a stick to keep the wood from splitting.' The Imperial Dictionary defines a ferrule to be 'a ring of metal put around a column, cane, or other thing, to strengthen it or prevent its splitting.'" The common understanding is that a ferrule for an umbrella or cane is a ring or short tube of metal fitted on or inclosing the lower end of a cane or umbrella stick. It is in that sense that the term is employed in a patent, the specification of which describes a ferrule as primarily a tube open at both ends. Evans v. Newark Rivet Works, 126 Fed. 492, 494, 61 C. C. A. 474; Evans v. Newark Rivet Works, 121 Fed. 133, 134.

FERRY

See Private Ferry.

"A 'ferry' is a public rather than a private right, and has been aptly called a public highway across a stream of water by boat instead of by bridge." Warner v. Ford Lumber & Mfg. Co., 93 S. W. 650, 651, 123 Ky. 103, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667.

The word "ferry" cannot be held to mean merely the landing place where it is operated by a railroad company and is a mere link in a great line of communication. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 65 Atl. 860, 863, 74 N. J. Law, 367.

One who employs a flatboat to transport his employes and his wagons and teams across a stream to and from his sawmill, and does not transport any part of the public for hire, is not operating a ferry. The term "ferry" imports the idea of charging or receiving toll for transportation. A ferry is the right of carrying passengers across streams, or bodies of water, or arms of the sea, from one point to another for a compensation paid by way of toll. Futch v. Bohannon, 67 S. E. 814, 815, 134 Ga. 813.

A "ferry" is, in respect of the landing, not the water, and the water may belong to one; the ferry to another. The state of Ohio has the right to establish ferries on the Ohio side of the Ohio river and to fix their charges for ferrage over the river from Ohio to West Virginia, and West Virginia cannot punish one who acts under a ferry franchise given by Ohio to operate a ferry from its side of the Ohio river over that river, for charging one coming from Ohio more than is allowed by West Virginia law for ferrage over that river. State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 272, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104.

A public ferry being merely a part of the highway, a county may establish such ferries in the absence of special statutory authority. Rev. Codes, § 2935, provides that notice of election to authorize a county bond issue shall clearly state the object of the loan, and Const. art. 13, § 5, provides that no county shall incur any indebtedness or liability for any single purpose to an amount exceeding $10,000, without the approval of a majority of the electors voting. Held, that as the notice required by the statute was merely a general notice, and as the people of the county may, in the absence of constitutional provision, expend the county moneys for any purpose they desire, the order and notice for special election held for the issuance of bonds to create a highway system, with bridges, and which included public ferries, was not invalid because merely generally stating those purposes, and not mentioning ferries; a "ferry" being a mere incident or movable portion of a highway where it crosses a stream. Reid v. Lincoln County, 125 Pac. 429, 438, 46 Mont. 31.

The term "ferry," in the chapter of the statutes entitled "Ferries," presupposes a road traveled by the public which is bisected by a water course, so that a ferry serves the purpose of a bridge; a ferry in its general sense being a highway over narrow waters and a continuation of a highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, and is for the transportation of passengers, their teams, and vehicles and other property. State ex rel. United Rys. Co. v. Wiethaupt, 133 S. W. 329, 333, 231 Mo. 449 (quoting 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2749-2751).

In one sense a ferry is a continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, and is for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their teams and vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them. In a strict sense the ferry business is confined to the transportation of persons, with or without their property, and a ferryman carrying on only a ferry business is bound to transport in no other way. St. Clair County v. Interstate Sand & Car Transfer Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 300, 304, 192 U. S. 454, 48 L. Ed. 518.

As railroad

See Railroad—Railway.

FERRY FRANCHISE

A "ferry privilege" is a public highway across a stream of water by boat, and the owner of such privilege must conform to the statutory requirements by giving bond, operate the ferry according to the statutory restrictions, and undertake to serve the public at all reasonable times. The owner of a ferry in operating it performs a public service, with the incidents of monopoly and the right to levy toll, but he has no exclusive right to the use of the stream. He has the same right to navigate it that every other citizen of the state enjoys. The fact that he may by condemnation acquire a landing and take private property for public use by making just compensation therefor shows that a ferry is more for public than private use.

Though the owner of a ferry, in operating it, performs a public service, with the incidents of monopoly and the right to levy toll, he has no exclusive right to the use of the stream crossed by his ferry. He has the same right to navigate it that every other citizen of the state enjoys. The owner of land taken for a ferry landing is entitled only to such damages as will result from the taking of his land for the ferry landing, and cannot recover damages for injuries to a boom on the river, resulting from a proper operation of the ferry. Warner v. Ford Lumber & Mfg. Co. 93 S. W. 650, 651, 123 Ky. 103, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687 (citing and adopting Brown v. Given, 4 J. J. Marsh. [27 Ky.] 30; 1 Farman, Water & Water Rights, pp. 130, 131).

FIBROUS

"Fibrous," as used in the steel making art, is a generic term to denote a condition in contrast to the crystalline state. The "fibrous" state is obtained by annealing. Fried. Krupp Aktien Gesellschaft v. Midvale Steel Co., 191 Fed. 588, 607, 112 C. C. A. 194.

FIBROUS VEGETABLE SUBSTANCES.

The term "Fibrous vegetable substances" in the Tariff Act does not include birch bark. Reed & Keller v. United States, 172 Fed. 453.

FICTION

"When logic and the policy of a state conflict with a fiction due to historical tradition, the 'fiction' must give way." Blackstone v. Miller, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 278, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. Ed. 439.

FICTION OF LAW

"It seems to be a rule founded in common sense, as well as strict justice, that 'fictions of law' shall not be permitted to work any wrong, but shall be used ut res magis valeat quam pereat." United States v. 1,900 Bags of Coffee, 8 Cranch [12 U. S.] 398, 415, 3 L. Ed. 602.

A "fiction of law" is an assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place. Leavell v. Blades, 141 S. W. 893, 895, 237 Mo. 695.

"The law often regards money as land and land as money, and, through the forms in which property may be put, will, if possible, trace and establish the original ownership." McIntosh v. Aubrey, 22 Sup. Ct. 561, 563, 185 U. S. 122, 46 L. Ed. 834.

Though a judgment upon an entry nunc pro tunc, in taking effect by a legal relation at a time before it was actually entered or existed, is based on a "fiction of law," it cannot be contradicted. Mahaska County v. Bennett, 129 N. W. 838, 839, 150 Iowa, 216.

FICTITIOUS

The phrase "fictitious increase of stock," as used in Const. art. 12, § 6, declaring that all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void, must include an issue of new stock when both the corporation and the recipient of the stock know that it is being issued for less than its face value. Coler v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 54 Atl. 413, 414, 65 N. J. Eq. 347, 103 Am. St. Rep. 786.

An increased issue of stock which was actually sold for cash was not "fictitious and void," within the Missouri Constitution providing that no corporation shall issue stock except for money paid, or property actually received; and that "fictitious increase of stock shall be void" because the statement which the state law required to be made, to the Secretary of State before such increase, was also false as to the corporation's assets and liabilities, and as to the fact of payment for the stock. Scott v. Abbott, 160 Fed. 573, 576, 87 C. C. A. 475.

Under Const. art. 12, § 11, providing that no corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid or property actually received, and that all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void, a corporation cannot issue bonds as a bonus to subscribers to the capital stock, and where the subscribers paid for the stock issued to them, so that they were entitled to fully paid stock, bonds of the corporation issued to them in addition to the stock were void, as against creditors while in the hands of stockholders, not purchasers for value and without notice; they being a "fictitious increase of indebtedness" within the Constitution, even though they were issued and delivered as security for additional money advanced by the subscribers as a loan, either to or for the benefit of the corporation before issuance of the bonds, or though such sum advanced became a part of the consideration for the bonds, such advance amounting to only one-fourth of the amount of bonds issued, and as against the corporation they could not be enforced for any amount in excess of what the corporation received for them from the stockholders. Rolapp v. Ogden & N. W. R. Co., 110 Pac. 364, 368, 37 Utah, 540.

Under Const. art. 12, § 5, providing that all "fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness" of a corporation shall be void, indebtedness incurred for less than full consideration is fictitious, and that some consideration is paid does not relieve the indebtedness from such character. Rolapp v. Ogden & N. W. R. Co., 110 Pac. 364, 368, 37 Utah, 540.

FICTITIOUS BANK BILL

"Webster defines 'fictitious' as 'feigned,' imaginary, not real, counterfeit, false, not genuine." Defendant passed an alleged $20 bank bill in payment of rent. The bill consisted of two bills pasted together; the exposed sides being similar to each other. Both bills were of the denomination of $20 and purported to be issued by a bank which had had no existence since 1865. One of the exposed faces bore a number and the date 1884, and the other showed the number blank, the date incomplete, the signature by the president, but a blank for the signature of the cashier. Held that, though such bills were genuine in so far as they were complete, they were nevertheless false and fictitious, within Pen. Code, § 476, prohibiting the passing of a fictitious bank bill of a bank not in existence with intent to cheat and defraud. People v. Harben, 91 Pac. 398, 399, 5 Cal. App. 29.

FICTITIOUS CLAIM

A fictitious claim against the government is one preferred against it for supplies said to have been furnished to the government, or for services said to have been rendered to it, no part of which said supplies or services were in fact rendered or supplied. Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577, 594, 72 C. C. A. 145.

FICTITIOUS NAME

A firm name, showing the surnames only of the partners, is not a "fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the partners," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 3901, 3903, providing that every partnership transacting business under a "fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners," must file a certificate stating the names of the members of the partnership, etc. Patterson v. Byers, 89 Pac. 1114, 1115, 17 Okl. 633, 10 Ann. Cas. 810.

In negotiable instrument

A draft drawn by a bank, payable to an existing partnership, on the fraudulent request of a depositor's bookkeeper, who thereafter indorsed the partnership's signature, and deposited the draft in his own account, was not payable to a fictitious or non-existing person, so as to pass by delivery, within Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 724, c. 612, § 28), as it is only where a person making an instrument knows that he is making it payable to a fictitious or non-existing person that it can be treated as payable to bearer. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Bank of America, 85 N. E. 829, 832, 193 N. Y.

26, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 499. The name of the maker of checks purporting to have been signed by an administrator, made payable to beneficiaries entitled to a greater amount from the estate than the amount of the checks, was forged. The checks were accepted and paid by the drawee. The names of the payees were also forged. It did not appear who forged the maker's name, but the person who did so knew that the payees would never have any interest in the instruments. Held, that the payees were fictitious within the statute, and the drawee could not recover the money paid. Trust Co. of America v. Hamilton Bank of New York City, 112 N. Y. Supp. 84, 88, 127 App. Div. 515.

Where the drawer of a check intended to use the name of payee, and did use it, as that of a person who should never receive the check nor have any right to it, such payee, though an existing person, was a fictitious one, within the negotiable instruments act of May 16, 1901 (P. L. 194), making a check payable to bearer, if payable to the order of a fictitious or nonexisting person, and such fact is known to the person making it so payable. Snyder v. Corn Exch. Nat. Bank, 70 Atl. 876, 878, 221 Pa. 599, 128 Am. St. Rep. 780.

Where checks, obtained by fraud, were made payable to S., whether they were made to a fictitious person depended on whether the name given by the person who suggested it, and whose suggestion was followed by the drawer, was used as designating the person to whom the name belonged, or as a mere name without reference to its belonging to any person, and with an intention that it should not designate any particular person. Jordan Marsh Co. v. National Shawmut Bank, 87 N. E. 740, 742, 743, 201 Mass. 397, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250.

FIDEI COMMISSUM

A "fidei commissum" differs from the "substitution," in that the charge imposed on the first recipient is to be executed during his life. A better founded distinction, perhaps, lies in the fact that in case of a substitution the first recipient and ultimate beneficiary both take title to the thing given directly from the donor, while in the case of the fidei commissum the title vests in the ultimate beneficiary, for whom the first recipient holds and administers the gift as trustee. In re Billis' Will, 47 South. 884, 886, 122 La. 539, 129 Am. St. Rep. 355.

FIDELITY

"Fidelity" imports sincere and single intention to administer the trust for the best interest of the parties beneficially interested, and according to the duty which the trust imposes. And this is but a paraphrase of 'good faith.' In re Burr, 96 N. Y. Supp.

225, 230, 48 Misc. Rep. 56 (quoting King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76).

FIDELITY GUARANTY

The term "fidelity and guaranty company," as used in the gross receipts tax law, is to be given its accepted and ordinary meaning by holding to be appropriate to such corporations all kinds of business which fairly fall within the powers usually found in their charters or currently conducted by them. State v. Central Trust Co., 67 Atl. 267, 270, 106 Md. 268.

FIDUCIARY

FIDUCIARY CAPACITY OR CHARACTER

See Debt of Fiduciary Character;

While Acting in Fiduciary Capacity.

See, also, Confidential Relation.

The defendants in attachment, being the general owners of the property attached, cannot be regarded as standing in a "fiduciary capacity" to the property after it is left undisturbed in their possession and under their control. Fowles v. Treadwell, 24 Me. 377, 380.

Where the superintendent in charge of laborers purchased beer for them from time to time as authorized by them and deducted from their wages sufficient to pay the seller of the beer, the fiduciary relation created, if any, was between the laborers and the superintendent, and the seller could not rely thereon to establish a "fiduciary relation" between himself and the superintendent, within Bankruptcy Act. In re Camelo, 195 Fed. 632, 635.

Executor or administrator

An executor of a deceased executrix having rendered a final account of the administration to which exceptions were taken by an administrator de bonis non, such executor was a party in a "fiduciary capacity" within the meaning of the statute allowing a trustee who has given a fiduciary bond to appeal without bond. In re Sidwells' Estate, 66 N. E. 521, 523, 67 Ohio St. 464.

As limited to express or technical trusts

The term "fiduciary capacity," as used in the Bankruptcy Act, embraces only cases of technical trusts and not those of implied trusts. Stickney v. Parmenter, 52 Atl. 73, 74 Vt. 58; Young v. Clark, 93 Pac. 1056, 1057, 7 Cal. App. 194 (quoting and adopting Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. 202, 11 L. Ed. 236); Flanders v. Mullin, 66 Atl. 789, 80 Vt. 124, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010; Ehrhart v. Rork, 114 Ill. App. 509, 511; In re Wenham, 153 Fed. 910, 911; In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 973 (adopting definition in Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. [43 U. S.] 202, 207, 11 L. Ed. 236); In re Camelo, 195 Fed. 632, 635; Clarke v. Milliken, 127 N. Y. Supp. 339, 341, 70 Misc.

Rep. 492. The term does not embrace officers of private corporations. In re Harper, 133 Fed. 970, 972. But it has been held to include a bank's vice president having full control of its affairs. Harper v. Rankin, 141 Fed. 626, 631, 72 C. C. A. 320. It does not include commercial transactions in which some trust was impliedly imposed in the bankrupt. Lewis v. Shaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 1014, 122 App. Div. 96. It does not describe the relation which a broker holds to his customer for whom he is buying and selling and who has deposited with him money or collaterals. Crosby v. Miller, Vaughn & Co., 55 Atl. 328, 25 R. I. 172. As the term has reference only to technical trusts, and not those which the law implies from contract, a debt arising out of an implied understanding had on a conveyance in the ordinary form of an absolute deed from R. to N. of certain parts of P.'s real estate, no trust being expressly declared, was not excepted from the operation of the discharge. Reeves v. McCracken, 60 Atl. 332, 333, 69 N. J. Eq. 203. The term has been held to include a laundry agent authorized to make collections, and remit to his principal, after deducting commissions. Shipley v. Platta, 97 N. W. 1, 2, 17 S. D. 357.

Partners and surviving partners

Misappropriation by a partner of partnership funds is not a misappropriation while acting in a "fiduciary capacity," within the provision of the Bankrupt Act excepting from the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy liabilities created by misappropriation while acting in any fiduciary capacity; the term "fiduciary capacity" referring to technical or express trusts, and excluding the relationship of agents, brokers, and partners to funds held generally by them in such capacities. Karger v. Orth, 133 N. W. 471, 472, 116 Minn. 124.

In view of a contemplated partnership between defendant and intestate, intestate paid money to defendant for the benefit of the firm, which money defendant deposited in a bank in his own name and converted to his own use after intestate's death. Held, that intestate's death dissolved the partnership after which defendant became trustee of the money for the benefit of intestate's estate, holding the same in a "fiduciary capacity" within the provision of the bankruptcy act, exempting from a discharge debts created by misappropriation while acting in a "fiduciary capacity." Haggerty v. Badkin, 66 Atl. 420, 422, 72 N. J. Eq. 473.

FIDUCIARY RELATION

The terms "fiduciary relation" and "confidential relation," are frequently used interchangeably; in general, the relationship is one in which if a wrong arise the same remedy exists on behalf of the injured party as would exist against a trustee on behalf of the cestui que trust. Dick v. Albers, 90 N. E.

683, 685, 243 Ill. 231, 134 Am. St. Rep. 369; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54, 68, 26 L. Ed. 693.

A "fiduciary relation" exists when confidence is reposed on one side and there is resulting superiority and influence on the other, and the relation and duties involved in it need not be legal, but may be moral, social, domestic, or merely personal. Hensan v. Cooksey, 86 N. E. 1107, 1109, 237 Ill. 620, 127 Am. St. Rep. 345; Beach v. Wilton, 91 N. E. 492, 495, 244 Ill. 413 (quoting 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] § 956); Beare v. Wright, 103 N. W. 632, 636, 14 N. D. 26, 69 L. R. A. 409, 8 Ann. Cas. 1057.

A "fiduciary relation" arises wherever a trust, continuous or temporary, is specially reposed in the skill or integrity of another, or the property or pecuniary interest, in the whole or in part, or the bodily custody, of one person, is placed in the charge of another." McKinley v. Lynch, 51 S. E. 4, 9, 58 W. Va. 44 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bigelow, Frauds, p. 262).

"The phrases 'confidential relation' and 'fiduciary relation' seem to be used by the courts and law writers as convertible terms. It is a peculiar relation which undoubtedly exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legatees or distributees, appointor and appointee under powers to partners and part owners. In these and the like cases the law, in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence, affection, or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost good faith in all transactions between the parties." Hemenway v. Abbott (Cal.) 97 Pac. 190, 195 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 218).

The term "fiduciary or confidential relation," as used in the law relative to undue influence, is a very broad one. It has been said that it exists, and that relief is granted, in all cases in which influence has been acquired and abused—in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The origin of the confidence and the source of the influence are immaterial. The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in and relies upon another. Stahl v. Stahl, 73 N. E. 319-321, 214 Ill. 131, 68 L. R. A. 617, 105 Am. St. Rep. 101, 2 Ann. Cas. 774; Irwin v. Sample, 72 N. E. 687, 690, 213 Ill. 160 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 947, 956).

A "confidential relation," with which a "fiduciary relation," is ordinarily synonymous, and like it is founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another, and precludes the idea of profit or advantage to the person in whom confidence is reposed from dealings with the other, is any relation existing between parties to a transaction whereby one of them is in duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other. Bacon v. Soule, 126 P. 384, 385, 19 Cal. App. 428; Inge v. Stillwell, 127 Pac. 527, 528, 88 Kan. 33, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1093; Ewing v. Ewing, 126 Pac. 811, 815, 38 Okl. 414.

Merely reposing confidence in another does not of itself create a trust, nor make a trustee of one in whom confidence has been reposed. To create a "fiduciary relation" by contract it is necessary that the consent of the trustee to assume that relation be expressed in the contract or be derived therefrom by necessary implication. State v. State Journal Co., 106 N. W. 434, 437, 75 Neb. 275, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 18 Ann. Cas. 254.

The relation between a corporation and its president, acting as its general manager, is a "fiduciary relation," and he is not permitted to secure to himself any profit in the management of the company's affairs not known to the other stockholders. Tevis v. Hammersmith (Ind.) 81 N. E. 614, 616 (citing Port v. Russell, 86 Ind. 60, 10 Am. Rep. 5; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. [3d Ed.] §§ 157, 881, 964; Pratt v. Luther, 45 Ind. 250, 255; Wayne Pike Co. v. Hammons, 27 N. E. 487, 129 Ind. 368, 377; Drury v. Cross, 7 Wall. [74 U. S.] 299, 306, 19 L. Ed. 40).

Plaintiff and defendant purchased a flat building for resale, and not as an investment, agreeing to bear equally the expense of repairs and the conduct of the business of renting apartments until the building could be sold. Held, that a "fiduciary relation" existed between plaintiff and defendant, making it the duty of defendant on selling the property to truthfully state to plaintiff the amount of the consideration received. Calkins v. Worth, 74 N. E. 81-83, 215 Ill. 78.

"There is no stronger 'fiduciary relation' known to the law than that of a copartnership, where one man's property and property rights are subject to a large extent to the control and administration of another." A partner may not for his benefit deceive the copartner to his injury either by false representations or by concealment, and in effecting a firm settlement must disclose to the copartner the condition of the firm affairs. Salhinger v. Salhinger, 105 Pac. 236, 237, 56 Wash. 134 (citing Pars. Part. § 153, and note 2).

FIELD

See Common Fields.

The word "field," in Rev. Civ. St. 1911, arts. 6595-6598, requiring every railroad company whose road passes through a "field" to place and maintain cattle guards at the points of entry, etc., means land inclosed by a fence which will prevent the ingress of live stock, and a railroad company need not provide cattle guards unless its track passes through an undivided field inclosed by the owner, as distinguished from separate fields so inclosed. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lee (Tex.) 151 S. W. 331, 332.

FIELD NOTES

The term "field notes" in its ordinary sense means the notes made by the surveyor in the field while making a survey, describing by course and distance, and by natural or artificial marks found or made by him, where he ran the lines and made the corners. State v. Palacios (Tex.) 150 S. W. 229, 236.

FIELD STORAGE WAREHOUSING

"Field storage warehousing" is warehousing the owner's goods on the premises of the owner or of the former owner. American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co., 183 Fed. 96, 97, 105 C. C. A. 388.

FIFTEEN

Fifteen days' published notice

Rev. St. 1899, § 6276 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3136; Rev. St. 1909, § 9595) provides that not less than 15 days' previous notice shall be given by publication, in some newspaper published in such city or town, of an election to take the sense of the voters on the question of increasing the municipal debt. Held, that 15 days' published notice did not require publication in all the issues of the paper published during such period, and that a single published notice 15 days prior to the election was sufficient. Southworth v. City of Glasgow, 132 S. W. 1168, 1170, 232 Mo. 108, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1287.

FIGHT

See Provoking a Fight.

The meaning of "to fight," according to Webster, is "to strike, or contend for victory, in battle or in single combat; to attempt to defeat, subdue, or destroy an enemy, either by blows or weapons." Worcester gives practically the same definition. Sullivan v. State, 7 South. 275, 276, 67 Miss. 346.

FIGS

"Figs" preserved whole held not dutiable as "figs" in paragraph 264 of Tariff Act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171. United States v. Reiss & Brady, 136 Fed. 741, 69 C. C. A. 393.

FIGURES

See S. E. 4; S. E. Qr. 24.

The term "per 100" in a contract for the sale of "500 sax Bayo, at $3.50 per 100," meant that the sale was of 500 sacks of Bayou beans at $3.50 per 100 pounds. Gardiner v. McDonogh, 81 Pac. 964, 966, 147 Cal. 313.

It is a matter of common knowledge, when speaking of shingles, that "5x16" means 5 inches wide and 16 inches long, and of this the courts will take judicial notice, as they will of the meaning of all abbreviations in common use when employed in contracts. Birmingham & A. R. Co. v. Maddox & Adams, 46 South. 780, 781, 155 Ala. 292.

In a prosecution to restrain a liquor nuisance described as maintained at "83 and 85 Market street" in a certain city, such description would be construed to include premises designated as "83½ Market street" which was a stairway entrance to the second story of the building described, in which respondent and his family lived. State ex rel. Lyon v. Chicco, 63 S. E. 306, 307, 82 S. C. 122.

Under General Construction Law, § 21, providing that a folio is 100 words, counting as a word each figure, a "folio," in determining an allowance under Insanity Law, § 84, for taking and transcribing testimony, means words and figures, but not punctuation; the word "figure" being limited to numerals, which are letters or characters representing a number, and not including "punctuation," which is a pointing off or separating of one word from another by arbitrary marks. In re Murtaugh, 128 N. Y. Supp. 850, 851, 71 Misc. Rep. 513.

A negotiable note on which the maker indorsed after it was barred by limitations "on or before 1904 I promise to pay within note" was payable on or before "the year" 1904, it being a reasonable construction to add the last quoted words. Lovenberg v. Henry, 140 S. W. 1079, 1080, 104 Tex. 550.

FILAMENT

The word "filament" may mean a separate fiber or fibril of any vegetable or animal tissue or product, natural or artificial, or of a fibrous mineral such as a "filament" of silk, wool, cobweb, or asbestos, a cortical or muscular "filament." Haskell Golf Ball Co. v. Perfect Golf Ball Co., 143 Fed. 128, 130.

FILATURES

See Japanese Filatures.

FILCH

Under a statute making libelous any malicious defamation tending to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation of another, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury, and in view of the definitions of the word "filch" as "to steal privily," "to steal, especially in a small, sly way," "to take wrongfully from another," "to take from another in an underhand way, as by violation of trust or good faith," and the commonly accepted synonyms "steal," "thieve," "rob," "purlain," and "pilfer," a publication charging a county treasurer with having illegally "filched" large sums of money belonging to the county is libelous, whether the accusation amounts to a charge of crime or not, as the statute does not require that it should. People v. Fuller, 87 N. E. 336, 338, 238 Ill. 116.

FILE

See Judgment File; On File; Properly Filed; Regularly File.

See, also, Return Day.

"A paper or document is said to be 'filed' when it is delivered to the proper officer and lodged by him in his office. At common law a file meant a thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits of courts and officers were fastened or 'filed' for the more safe-keeping, and right turning of the same. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. O'Brien, 107 S. W. 25, 29, 128 Mo. App. 267 (quoting and adopting the definition in Dawson v. Cross, 88 Mo. App. 292).

The word "file" is derived from the Latin word filum, a thread; and its application is drawn from the ancient practice of placing papers on a thread or wire for ready reference. The words "to file" mean "receiving a paper into custody." Under a statute providing that claims against carriers shall be paid within 60 days after the filing of such claim with the agent of the carrier at the point of destination, and that failure to pay the claim within the period prescribed shall subject the carrier to a penalty, the claimant must present his demand in writing in order to recover the penalty, a verbal demand being insufficient. Thompson v. Southern Express Co., 61 S. E. 182, 183, 147 N. C. 343 (citing Beebe v. Morrell, 42 N. W. 1119, 76 Mich. 114, 15 Am. St. Rep. 288; State ex rel. Morgan v. Lamm, 69 N. W. 592, 9 S. D. 420; Lamson v. Falls, 6 Ind. 309; Black, Law Dict. 492; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2765).

A paper is "filed" when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file. King v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 68 S. E. 769, 770, 86 S. C. 510; Smith v. Geraty, 109 N. Y. Supp. 738, 739, 58 Misc. Rep. 556; MEEK v. State ex rel. Linville, 88 N. E. 299, 301, 172 Ind. 654; Yaltz v. State, 103 Pac. 1104, 1105, 3 Okl. Cr. 20; Falley v. Falley, 50 South. 894, 895, 163 Ala. 626.

A document is "filed" with an officer when it is placed in his custody and deposited by him in the place where his official records and papers are usually kept. O'Brien v. Schneider, 129 N. W. 1002, 1004, 88 Neb. 479 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2765).

In the sense of a statute requiring the "filing" of a paper, it is filed when delivered to and received by the proper officer to be kept on "file." The word carries with it the idea of permanent preservation of the thing so delivered and received that it may become a part of the public record. Spackman v. Gross, 126 N. W. 389, 393, 25 S. D. 244.

The delivery of the information and complaint to the clerk is a "filing" in law. Brogdon v. State, 140 S. W. 352, 353, 63 Tex. Cr. Rep. 475.

The presentation and delivery of proof of claim to the trustee in bankruptcy within a year after the adjudication is a sufficient "filing" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 57, when read in connection with general orders in bankruptcy No. 21, providing that proofs of debt received by any trustee shall be delivered to the referee to whom the cause is referred. J. B. Orcutt Co. v. Green, 27 Sup. Ct. 195, 197, 204 U. S. 96, 51 L. Ed. 390.

Leaving a paper with the clerk is not a filing with him under a code, providing that where service was made by publication, the summons, etc., must be filed with the clerk. Fink v. Wallach, 95 N. Y. Supp. 872, 874, 47 Misc. Rep. 247.

A translation of the shorthand notes of the evidence in a case, left with other papers in the clerk's office, and not accepted by him as a part of the record in the case, has not been filed in the clerk's office, as required by law. Fitzgerald v. Paisley (Iowa) 119 N. W. 166 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 2764, 2767, et seq.).

"There can be no 'filing' of a paper in a legal sense except by its delivery to an official whose duty it is to file papers and who is required to keep and maintain an office or other public place for their deposit, and the paper must either be delivered personally to such officer with the intent that the same shall be filed by him, or delivered at the place where the same should be filed." Corrupt Practices Act, § 213, requiring that the petition to the Supreme Court, or a justice thereof, for a summary inquest as to the failure of a person or committee to file a statement of election expenses and disbursements, or complaining that a statement filed is false or erroneous, shall be "filed" within 30 days after the election, is not complied with by presentation to a justice of the Supreme Court within that time, though the justice retain the same. In re Lance, 106 N. Y. Supp. 211, 214, 55 Misc. Rep. 13 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 2764; People v. Peck, 22 N. Y. Supp. 576, 579, 67 Hun, 560; Matter of Norton, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 34 App. Div. 79).

Under Act Feb. 20, 1900 (Laws 1909, p. 9), a petition for local option election is required to be filed with the county auditor; and when presented to him, with a request that it be filed and a tender of the legal fee, the petition in contemplation of law is filed. O'Connor v. Board of Com'rs of Bear Lake County, 105 Pac. 560, 561, 17 Idaho, 346.

An appeal will not be dismissed because the certificate of the clerk recited "that the above and foregoing transcript contains full, true, correct, and complete copies of all papers and entries in said cause filed in my office as such clerk, and recorded in the records of this office as required by the above præcipe" which called for a transcript of all of the papers, on the ground that technically the complaint only is filed in the clerk's office, so that the other papers were excluded by the language of the certificate, since the words "filed in my office," etc., were surplusage, and, even if considered in their broader sense, included filing in open court; "filing" meaning to deposit the papers with the clerk for official custody. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Morrey, 88 N. E. 932, 934, 172 Ind. 513.

The term "file in the circuit court" in a notice of election contest was substantially equivalent to "file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court," within Rev. St. 1899, § 7062, requiring the contestant's notice to state that the petition would be filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court; the two expressions being identical in meaning. State ex rel. Sale v. McElhinney, 97 S. W. 159, 161, 199 Mo. 67.

Where a letter remonstrating against the granting of a liquor license was received in due time and called to the attention of the board which ordered the court to preserve "in the files of this office said letter," it was "filed" within the meaning of that word in the requirement of the statute. Moores v. State ex rel. Macrae, 96 N. W. 225, 226, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 781.

Under Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 590) § 332, which allows costs to a prevailing party who appears by attorney and who files a verified pleading or a written notice of appearance, such costs are not allowable to such a party who entered no written appearance by attorney and whose pleadings were oral, as a memorandum containing the attorney's name and address, handed to the judge, but not becoming part of the record of the case was not a "filed" pleading, nor a "written notice of appearance"; rule 2, subd. "d," of the rules of the Municipal Courts, declaring that the indorsements of the same and address of an attorney on any paper in an action shall be an appearance within the meaning of such section, being merely an interpretation of the term "written notice of appearance," and not dispensing with the filing of such a notice as a prerequisite to the court's jurisdiction. Kaufman v. Cohn, 138 N. Y. Supp. 403, 404, 78 Misc. Rep. 368.

As deposit

The books of account of the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, showing the condition of the account of bail moneys received and paid out, are "filed or deposited" within Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, punishing the falsification of records "filed or deposited" in any public office; the quoted words being equivalent to the words "on file or on deposit." People v. Tomalty, 111 Pac. 513, 516, 14 Cal. App. 224.

The word "deposit," as used in Act May 23, 1896, abolishing the office of circuit court commissioner and requiring such commissioners to deposit official documents in their possession with the clerk of the circuit court by which they were appointed, is not synonymous with "filing," and a clerk of court is not entitled to any fee for filing the various papers surrendered. United States v. Van Duzee, 22 Sup. Ct. 648, 650, 185 U. S. 278, 46 L. Ed. 909.

As made

The word "filed," in Acts 1905, p. 611, c. 169, § 118, providing that public offenses may be prosecuted "by affidavit 'filed' in term time," when considered in connection with section 119, providing that such affidavit shall be approved by the prosecuting attorney, etc., is intended for "made," and the clause should read "by affidavit made in term time." Cole v. State, 82 N. E. 796, 797, 169 Ind. 393.

As notice

The words "file with the owner," in section 3, c. 75, Code 1906, requiring a laborer or person furnishing material to a contractor to be used in the construction of a building to file with the owner or his authorized agent an itemized account, etc., are equivalent to the words "give notice to the owner," or "serve notice upon the owner." Williams & Davisson Co. v. Bailey, 70 S. E. 696, 697, 68 W. Va. 681.

As perfecting mechanic's lien

In Laws 1901, c. 101, p. 129, entitled "An act regulating the filing and foreclosure of mechanic's liens upon lands held or occupied under a filing, under any of the land laws of the United States," the words "filing and foreclosure" mean the doing of everything necessary to perfecting the lien, and no lien can be filed or foreclosed that has not been, or is not, created by some provision of law, as there is nothing to file or foreclose. The broadest meaning that the words are susceptible of may be given them, and the law will not be declared invalid because the words are not well selected. The word 'filing' is commonly used as in reference to lien, indicating the doing of everything essential to perfecting a claim for a lien authorized by law, and not the mere leaving of the affidavit and account in the office of the clerk. The technical meaning of the words should not be taken as limiting the provisions of the law. The choice of the language is a matter of legislative discretion, and courts will not nullify the legislative will because the language is not well chosen, if upon any reasonable view the language expresses the subject. Powers Elevator Co. v. Pottner, 113 N. W. 703, 704, 16 N. D. 359.

Entering distinguished

"Entering" is the word ordinarily used for the commencement of a proceeding on the records of the superior court, while "filing" is more commonly used in reference to papers presented for action before the county commissioners. Cheney v. Inhabitants of Dover, 91 N. E. 1005, 1006, 205 Mass. 501.

Indorsement required

The "filing" of a paper is the delivery of it to the officer at his office, to be kept by him as a paper on file, and the file mark of the officer is evidence of "filing," but it is not the essential element of the act. Master-son v. Southern R. Co. (Ind. App.) 82 N. E. 1021, 1023; Bade v. Hibberd, 93 Pac. 364, 365, 50 Or. 501 (citing McDonald v. Crusen, 2 Or. 258; Conant's Estate, 73 Pac. 1018, 43 Or. 530); Goodwin v. Bickford, 93 Pac. 548, 551, 20 Okl. 91, 129 Am. St. Rep. 729 (citing Wescott v. Eccles, 2 Pac. 525, 3 Utah, 261; City of Pekin v. Dunkelburg, 40 Ill. App. 184); Todd v. Peterson, 81 Pac. 878, 880, 13 Wyo. 513; Day & Congleton Lumber Co. v. Mack, 68 S. W. 712, 714, 139 Ky. 587.

The act of leaving or depositing a paper with the clerk to be made a part of the record constituted "filing," and it was the duty of the clerk to mark it filed. The fact that he did not do so until long after did not invalidate the previous filing. A paper is "filed" when delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file. Eureka Stone Co. v. Knight, 100 S. W. 878, 881, 82 Ark. 164.

Delivery of a bill in a chancery suit to the clerk in his office is a filing of the bill, though no indorsement on it of filing is made. Darnell v. Flynn, 71 S. E. 16, 18, 69 W. Va. 146.

Delivery to the clerk of the board of supervisors of the affidavit of publication of the resolution ordering prohibition was a sufficient "filing with the clerk" under Comp. Laws, § 5425, relating to local option, and requiring such affidavit to be filed with the clerk, but not in express terms requiring him to indorse anything on it. People v. Fitch, 130 N. W. 341, 164 Mich. 680.

The "filing" of a paper required by law to be filed does not consist in the indorsement of the fact that it has been filed, made upon the paper by the officer with whom it is filed. If the paper is delivered by the person, whose duty it is to file the same, to the proper officer, and by him received and kept on file in the proper place, it constitutes a "filing" within the legal meaning of the word. A record reciting that instructions given "are now ordered filed and made a part of the record in this cause, and the same are in the words and figures following, to wit" (setting forth the instructions), sufficiently discloses that the instructions were properly filed and are part of the record on appeal. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric Ry. Co. v. Antonia, 83 N. E. 766, 769, 41 Ind. App. 335.

A notice of appeal from an order of the town supervisors laying out a highway was delivered to the town clerk, but not at his office, and by him, within the time allowed by statute for filing it, taken to his office and deposited among the official records in his custody, but no certificate of filing was indorsed thereon. Held, a sufficient "filing" within Rev. Laws 1905, § 1188. Burkleo v. Town Board of Baytown, 121 N. W. 874, 875, 106 Minn. 224.

Where a decree of the orphans' court on a claim against an insolvent estate was signed December 2d, which was not a regular court date and was marked as "filed" as of that date by "G. L., Late Surrogate," G. L. not then being surrogate, and on December 17th, the actual surrogate found it and marked it "filed" as of that date, the decree was "filed" on the date when the actual surrogate marked it. Young v. Young, 32 N. J. Eq. 275, 276.

Under a statute requiring a county surveyor to make a written report of a survey, and file it in his office, and allowing an appeal therefrom to be taken within 30 days from the time the report is filed, such report, as to any person having knowledge of the facts, is deemed to be filed from the time it is completed, dated, certified to be correct, and signed by the surveyor, and placed among the reports of a similar nature in his office, subject to public inspection, although at the request of the attorney for such person he omits at that time to indorse it as filed, and afterwards places an indorsement upon it indicating that it was filed a few days later. Anderson v. Roberts, 119 Pac. 354, 355, 86 Kan. 175.

Under a statute requiring the tax collector to file all conveyances of land to individuals in the chancery clerk's office, to remain there for two years from the sale unless the land be sooner redeemed, it is not essential that the clerk shall mark a deed "Filed" that it may remain a memorial by which it may be ascertained whether the time for redemption has expired, since the time for redemption is two years from the day of sale, and not from the day of filing; the purpose of the statutory requirement being merely to lodge the deed in proper custody. It is plain that the intent was that where the requirement is simply to lodge for record, or to deliver to the clerk, recording was designed, and it was not intended that there should be necessarily a marking of the paper "filed" by the clerk. Brannon v. Pringle, 47 South. 674, 94 Miss. 215.

The "file" in a cause includes original subpoenas issued for witnesses and all papers belonging to the cause. Jackson v. Mobley, 47 South. 590, 593, 157 Ala. 408.

Recording

A mortgage is "filed," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1284, when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received for the purpose of being recorded, and the neglect or mistake of the register of deeds in recording the instrument does not affect the mortgagee. Covington v. Fisher, 97 Pac. 615, 617, 22 Okl. 207.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 1367, requiring pleas in criminal cases to be oral and entered on the journal, where the transcript on appeal in a criminal case showed only that a plea of former jeopardy was "filed" and overruled, and did not show any order that the plea be recorded, it sufficiently appeared that the plea was not formally read to the court, and, for that reason, was not ordered to be recorded, and hence was not properly part of the record; the word "filed" importing only that the paper was placed in the official custody of the clerk who probably indorsed as filed with the date of reception, signing his name thereto, and retained it in his office for inspection by interested parties. State v. Holloway, 110 Pac. 397, 398, 57 Or. 162.

Retention by officer required

A referee's report which is presented to the clerk and marked "Filed" within the time allowed for its filing, and then withdrawn and retained until after the expiration of such time in order to have it bound, is "filed" in time. Poole v. Poindexter, 83 Pac. 126, 127, 72 Kan. 654.

That on the day next following the date of the certificate as to filing of the mortgage for record, as shown by uncontradicted evidence, the clerk permitted the mortgagee to take the mortgage out of the clerk's office to that of a notary public, and procure before such notary the affidavit of the subscribing witness proving the execution of the mortgage, and then return the affidavit and mortgage to the clerk's office for record, would not render the mortgage inadmissible in evidence. The return of the mortgage to the office of the clerk of the superior court under the circumstances just enumerated would, in effect, amount to "filing" for record. Albany Nat. Bank v. Georgia Banking Co., 74 S. E. 267, 137 Ga. 776.

Filing of particular instruments

Where a written building contract provides that the building shall be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications, referred to as attached or as kept in the office of an architect named therein, such plans, etc., are an essential part of the contract, and must be filed with it, in order to constitute a "filing of the contract," within Code Civ.

Proc. § 1183, which will protect the property from mechanics' liens. Burnett v. Glas, 97 Pac. 423, 425, 154 Cal. 249.

Act June 2, 1887 (P. L. 306), relating to proceedings for condemnation of a turnpike road, provides (section 6) that exceptions may be filed to the report of the jury of view within 30 days from filing of such report, and the court, after considering such exceptions, may refer the report back to the jury or may set it aside or confirm it, and if no exceptions are filed to any such report, unless appeal is taken as provided for in section 8 (and in such case the final confirmation of the proceedings shall await the result of the appeal from the assessment within 30 days from the filing thereof), then such report shall be confirmed or dismissed by the court. Section 8 provides that an appeal to the common pleas for the assessment of damages may be taken within 30 days after the approval of the report. Held, that exceptions may be filed within 30 days from the time the report is filed, and if the exceptions filed are withdrawn or dismissed and the report is not referred back to the jury or set aside, it is to be marked "Confirmed nisi," which is equivalent to the approval referred to in section 8, and another 30 days is then given to allow time for an appeal to the common pleas, and if no appeal is taken within such time the report is to be finally confirmed or disapproved at the end thereof, and if an appeal is taken the final confirmation cannot take place until 30 days after the result of the appeal is remitted from the common pleas and filed in the quarter sessions, and if no exceptions are filed or appeal taken to the common pleas within the times fixed by the act, the court may of its own motion confirm or dismiss the report; the phrase "filing thereof" within the parentheses in the sixth section referring to the filing in the quarter sessions of the result of the appeal from the assessment when it is remitted from the common pleas. Chestnut Hill & Spring House Turnpike Road Co. v. Montgomery County, 76 Atl. 726, 727, 228 Pa. 1.

FILING AWAY SUIT

"Filed away" is used by the courts with reference to suits, as synonymous with "discontinued" or "stricken" from the docket, so that an order that the case be "filed away" amounted to a final order of dismissal. Alkman v. South (Ky.) 97 S. W. 4, 5.

A recital in a divorce decree that a part of the judgment for alimony was paid by defendant, and, that the case was "filed away," was, in effect, keeping control of the case to be redocketed upon notice; the parties not having been dismissed. Sebastian v. Rose, 122 S. W. 120, 122, 135 Ky. 197.

"Filiation," which is the relation of parent and child, may be established by proof that the child has always borne the name of the father to whom he claims to belong, and that the father has treated him as his child. Lay v. Fuller (Ala.) 59 So. 609, 610.

FILL

See Duly Filled; Stop to Fill.
As structure, see Structure.

A "fill" in connection with the grading of streets is the deposit of dirt on the strip taken as a street. In re Sedgley Ave., 66 Atl. 546, 547, 217 Pa. 313.

FILLED STOPE

A "filled stope" is a room in a mine where the waste rock taken from the vein is left on the floor, so as to raise the floor as the work proceeds, in order to keep it at all times conveniently close to the roof, in order that the miner, while standing on the floor, may drill holes in the roof and blast out the material; the term "stope" being defined as the working above or below a level where the mass of the ore body is broken—also an excavation for the extraction of ore, as distinguished from a shaft, drift, airway, etc. Creede United Mines Co. v. Hawman, 127 Pac. 924, 926, 23 Colo. App. 125.

FILLER TOBACCO

Tobacco neither suitable for wrappers nor fillers, but which may be used as a filler in the manufacture of a small size of tobacco cigarettes, is not "leaf tobacco," within the paragraph of the Tariff Act defining "wrapper tobacco" as that quality of leaf tobacco suitable for cigar wrappers, and "filler tobacco" as all other leaf tobacco, and is properly dutiable as "all other tobacco not specially provided for." Dominguez Bros. v. United States, 122 Fed. 556, 557.

Under the paragraph of the Tariff Act imposing duties upon tobacco and defining "wrapper tobacco" as that quality of leaf tobacco which is suitable for cigar wrappers, and "filler tobacco" as all other leaf tobacco, the importer is limited to a choice between the terms "wrapper" and "filler" tobacco, and it was improper for the importer to describe his importation as mixed tobacco. United States v. Seventy-Five Bales of Tobacco, 147 Fed. 127, 132, 77 C. C. A. 353.

FILLING

The word "filling," in its ordinary sense, means something that fills. In weaving it is synonymous with weft, and relates to the threads that fill the interstices in the warp, and thus form the fabric. Such threads run from edge to edge or from selvage to selvage of the fabric. It is therefore appropriate to refer to Jacquard goods as having "two or more colors in the filling" as the figures in such goods are composed strictly of filling threads, running from one edge to the other, filling the wrap and constituting an essential part of the fabric, though serving the purpose of ornament as well. Wimpfheimer v. United States, 142 Fed. 849, 851.

FILTER

Filtering paper that has been cut into disks and made ready for use in filtering is not by this treatment removed from the provision in the Tariff Act for "papers commercially known as * * * 'filtering paper,' * * * made up in copying books, reams, or in any other form." Alexander Murphy & Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 336.

FINAL

See, also, Finally.

"Final" means last; conclusive; pertaining to the end. Saylor v. Duel, 86 N. E. 119, 121, 236 Ill. 429, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 377.

The word "final," as used in reference to judgments, may denote the essential character of the judgment and not the mere consequences thereof, and the word is so used in Acts 1907, p. 237, c. 148, relating to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and of the Appellate Court. Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Waddington, 82 N. E. 1030, 1032, 169 Ind. 448.

As conclusive

The word "final," in an agreement for arbitration which provided that the controversy between the parties under the arbitration agreement should be submitted to the circuit court, and that its decision should be final, necessarily implies that the decision of the circuit court shall not be reviewed by another court. Hoste v. Dalton, 100 N. W. 750, 751, 137 Mich. 522.

The word "final," in Laws 1894, c. 556, tit. 15, art. 1, §§ 4-7, providing that the decision of a county judge, in a proceeding by a school district trustee to compel reimbursement for expenses incurred by him in litigation affecting the interests of the district, allowing or disallowing the claim, shall be final, was merely intended to give the order the effect of a final order in a special proceeding, and, like other orders of that class, it is subject to review. Anderson v. School Dist. No. 15, of Town of Cortlandt, 85 N. Y. Supp. 943, 945, 89 App. Div. 231.

The word "final," in Laws 1907, p. 95, c. 5613 (dealing with primary elections), §§ 7, 8, making the decisions and rulings of the county, senatorial, and state committees final, is not to be construed as final in the sense that such decisions and rulings are absolute to the exclusion of judicial inquiry, so as to make such sections obnoxious to Const. art. 5, § 35, providing that no courts other than therein specified shall be established; but the word "final" may be understood to mean that such decisions and rulings when made are final as to the committee making them, so that there shall be no delay in the canvass of the vote. D'Alemberte v. State ex rel. Mays, 47 South. 489, 497, 56 Fla. 162.

In the provision of section 10 of the immigration act (32 Stat. 1216) making the decision of the board of special inquiry based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer final as to the rejection of aliens affected with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, the word "final" is not used in such broad sense as to deprive an alien so rejected of the right of appeal unqualifiedly given by section 25 of the act, or of the right to invoke the provisions of section 37, relating to the wife and children of a naturalized alien, in a case to which such section is applicable. Rodgers v. United States ex rel. Cachigan, 157 Fed. 881, 385, 85 C. C. A. 79.

In a statute providing that the hearing on petition to the district court for appointment of a person to distribute the waters of a partnership ditch may be before the court, the judge thereof, or a district court commissioner, and that the decision so rendered shall be final unless appeal is taken to the district court, the words "the decision so rendered shall be final" do not mean that the decision shall be final as distinguished from an interlocutory order, but final in the sense that there shall be no further appeal. Mau v. Stoner, 83 Pac. 218, 221, 14 Wyo. 183.

FINAL ACCOUNT

See Decision and Decree Allowing a Final Account.

FINAL AND CONCLUSIVE

According to the great weight of authority, the words "final and conclusive," when used in reference to the decisions of inferior courts, indicate a final and conclusive determination of the litigation and the further right of appeal; the term not defining the character of the judgment. Mau v. Stoner, 83 Pac. 218, 221, 14 Wyo. 183.

The intent of the Customs Administrative Act, providing that decisions by the Board of General Appraisers in reappraisal cases shall be "final and conclusive," is that such decisions shall not be open to judicial review, except to inquire whether the appraisers have exceeded the authority conferred upon them by law or have otherwise acted illegally or fraudulently; and where there is no charge that the board acted illegally in denying the importers a hearing and opportunity to produce testimony, and there is some evidence to support the board's conclusions as to value, its reappraisal is conclusive. Grubnau v. United States, 176 Fed. 904, 906, 100 C. C. A. 374.

The phrase "final and conclusive," as used in a statute declaring that the judgment of county court in proceedings to modify grades or streets on the second report of commissioners shall be final and conclusive, means that the judgment shall be final and conclusive for all purposes whatsoever, and shall not be subject to appeal, but shall end the litigation, and that it shall not be reviewed by the county court except by motion for a new trial. Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35, 55.

The words "final and conclusive," as used in a statute declaring orders of the county court made in special proceedings appealed from a decision of a town supervisor "final and conclusive," mean that there should be no appeal from the order. In re Village of Cedarhurst, 106 N. Y. Supp. 275, 276, 121 App. Div. 576 (citing In re Commissioners of Central Park, 50 N. Y. 493; New York Cent. R. Co. v. Marvin, 11 N. Y. 276; In re Canal Street, 12 N. Y. 406; King v. City of New York, 36 N. Y. 182, 187; Matter of Delaware & H. Canal Co., 69 N. Y. 209).

As subject to inquiry

The words "final and conclusive," as used in a benefit certificate providing that the decision of the supreme court of the order shall be "final and conclusive" as to the legal liability of the order, is intended only to mark the distinction between the effect of the decision of the supreme court of the order and that of its other courts and not to exclude the jurisdiction of the legal tribunals. Gilroy v. Supreme Court, 1 O. F., 67 Atl. 1037, 1039, 75 N. J. Law, 584, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632.

The provision in the landlord and tenant law that a judgment of the justices of the common pleas shall be "final and conclusive" will not preclude a writ of error from the Supreme Court. Clark v. Patterson (Pa.) 6 Bin. 128.

The term "final and conclusive," as used in a statute authorizing a hearing by the council of a city in case of an election contest, and providing that the council's decision shall be final and conclusive, means that the action and decision of the council shall not be reviewable so far as the merits are concerned, but not that it may not be reviewed to the extent of ascertaining whether the council acted in excess of its jurisdiction or exercised the same contrary to law, and does not preclude the exercise by the Superior Court of its constitutional right to review the proceedings by certiorari in matters jurisdictionable. Rash v. Allen (Del.) 76 Atl. 370, 376, 1 Boyce, 444.

FINAL CONFIRMATION

The final confirmation to which the act of Congress of 1851 refers is the final adjudication of the tribunals of the United States upon the validity of the title of the claimant under the Mexican grant. Until the survey which follows such adjudication is made and approved, the title is not definitely confirmed to any particular premises. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 46, 85 Am. Dec. 157 (citing Johnson v. Van Dyke, 20 Cal. 228; Richardson v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 289).

FINAL DECISION

See, also, Final Decree or Judgment; Final Order.

The term "final decision," as used in Judiciary Act, § 6, 28 Stat. 828, authorizing the review of a final decision on a writ of error, etc., is equivalent to the terms "final decree," or "final judgment," used in the statutes preceding the judiciary act. Cassatt v. Mitchell Coal & Coke Co., 150 Fed. 32, 34, 81 C. C. A. 80, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99; Same v. Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Co., 150 Fed. 48, 81 C. C. A. 97; Same v. Webster Coal & Coke Co., Id.

A decision of probate court denying an application for an order requiring an additional inventory of property claimed to belong to the estate, but omitted from the inventory filed, is a "final decision" of a matter arising under the jurisdiction of that court, and is appealable. Dobson v. Holmes, 112 Pac. 131, 132, 83 Kan. 476 (citing Weston v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Pet. [27 U. S.] 449, 464, 7 L. Ed. 481).

A decision of a circuit court of appeals which affirmed a ruling of the bankruptcy court, made in the course of the determination of an issue as to the alleged bankruptcy, upon a subordinate issue as to whether or not the petitioning creditors held "provable" claims, is not a final decision allowing or rejecting a claim within the meaning of the provisions of the bankrupt act governing appeals to the federal Supreme Court. J. W. Calnan Co. v. Doherty, 32 Sup. Ct. 460, 461, 224 U. S. 145, 56 L. Ed. 702.

The words "final decisions," as used in Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 6, cl. 1, 26 Stat. 828, which provides that the Circuit Courts of Appeal established by the act shall exercise appellate jurisdiction by appeal or by writ of error to review final decisions in the District Court and the existing Circuit Courts in all cases other than those provided by law, do not include an order denying the application of one not a party for leave to intervene, when discretionary with the court, nor an order refusing to entertain an appeal from the decision of receivers with reference to proof of a claim before them, where it was discretionary, and did not deprive the claimant of any substantial right. Land Ti- tle & Trust Co. v. Asphalt Co. of America, 127 Fed. 1, 20, 62 C. C. A. 23.

A decision which finally determines the rights of the parties to secure in that suit the relief they seek is a "final decision" within the act creating the Circuit Courts of Appeal, though it does not bar another action or proceeding for the same cause. It therefore includes an order of dismissal of a petition for an adjudication in bankruptcy. Stevens v. Nave-McCord Mercantile Co., 150 Fed. 71, 73, 80 C. C. A. 25.

An order of the district court dismissing an action appealed from a justice's court is a "final decision," disposing of the action within Rev. Codes, § 6784, providing that an order from which an appeal may be taken shall be deemed to have been excepted to without bill of exceptions. Mettler v. Adamson, 99 Pac. 441, 443, 38 Mont. 198.

In Civ. Code Prac. § 177, providing that a defendant, against whom an order of arrest has been obtained, may, at any time before judgment, etc., apply to vacate the order, or to reduce the amount of bail, with notice to the plaintiff, and, if satisfied that the bail is too large, or ought not to have been required, the court, or judge, may vacate the order of arrest, or reduce the amount of bail, and the decision of the motion shall be "final in the action," the words "the decision of the motion shall be final in the action," means final in the sense of ending the matter, instead of final in the sense of being an appealable order. Porter v. Griffin, 136 S. W. 130, 131, 143 Ky. 138.

Const. art. 7, § 6, provides that "the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction only to revise the final decisions of the circuit courts." B. & C. Comp. § 547, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 813, c. 162, § 6, provides that "a judgment or decree may be reviewed as prescribed in this chapter and not otherwise. An order affecting a substantial right and which in effect determines the action or suit so as to prevent a judgment or decree therein, * * * for the purpose of being reviewed, shall be deemed a judgment or decree." Section 548 provides that "any party to a judgment or decree other than by confession or for want of an answer, may appeal therefrom." One adjudged a spendthrift and placed under guardianship married in another state without the guardian's consent, returned, and was sued for divorce; the guardian being made a defendant so as to subject the ward's estate to the payment of suit money and alimony. The court ordered defendants to pay a certain amount as suit money and a specified sum monthly as temporary alimony pending the suit. Held, that as against the guardian, who has no personal interest in the divorce litigation and no right to appeal from the final decree in the suit, the order is a "final decision," so as to be appealable. Sturgis v. Sturgis, 93 Pac.

696, 698, 51 Or. 10, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, 131 Am. St. Rep. 724.

FINAL DECREE OR JUDGMENT

See, also, Final Order; Interlocutory Judgment.

A "final decree" which may be reviewed on appeal or writ of error is one settling all matters in litigation within the pleadings, so that an affirmance will end the suit and leave nothing for the trial court but the execution of the decree. Maas v. Lonstorf, 166 Fed. 41, 43, 91 C. C. A. 627; Macfarland v. Brown, 23 Sup. Ct. 105, 107, 187 U. S. 239, 47 L. Ed. 159 (quoting and adopting definition in Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 1 Sup. Ct. 15, 106 U. S. 3, 27 L. Ed. 73).

A decree is "final" when the whole controversy between the parties has been considered, all "equities reserved" have been disposed of, and nothing remains to be done but to carry it into execution. Crockett v. Crockett, 106 N. W. 944, 946, 132 Iowa, 388 (citing Fletcher, Equity Pl. & Pr. § 700).

Generally a judgment disposing of the entire controversy is "final." State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 655, 219 Mo. 667.

A judgment is not "final" unless it disposes of the cause both as to the subject-matter and the parties so far as the court before which it is pending has power to do so. Ragle v. Dedman, 91 N. E. 615, 616, 45 Ind. App. 693; Starkey v. Starkey, 76 N. E. 876, 877, 166 Ind. 140 (citing Keller v. Jordan, 46 N. E. 343, 147 Ind. 113, 115; Champ v. Kendrick, 30 N. E. 635, 130 Ind. 545, 546); Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Indianapolis & N. W. Traction Co., 78 N. E. 661, 662, 167 Ind. 193; Barnes v. Wagener, 82 N. E. 1037, 1038, 169 Ind. 511; State v. Derry, 85 N. E. 765, 769, 171 Ind. 18, 131 Am. St. Rep. 237; Mak-Saw-Ba Club v. Coffin, 82 N. E. 461, 462, 169 Ind. 204 (citing Elliott, App. Proc. § 83; Galentine v. Brubaker, 46 N. E. 903, 147 Ind. 458; Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 485); Wehmeler v. Mercantile Banking Co., 97 N. E. 558, 559, 49 Ind. App. 454.

The test in determining whether a judgment is "final" is whether it terminates a litigation between the parties on the merits. State ex rel. Smith v. Superior Court for Cowlitz County, 128 Pac. 648, 649, 71 Wash. 354.

As a general rule, a decree, to be final within the meaning of the statute authorizing appeals from final decrees in equity cases, must terminate the litigation on the merits, so that, in case of affirmance, the court below will have nothing to do but execute the decree already rendered. McAuslan v. McAuslan, 83 Atl. 837, 840, 34 R. I. 462.

A judgment or decree which fixes finally the rights of the parties in the action in which it is rendered, and leaves nothing further to be done before such rights are determined, is final. Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Colorado Eastern R. Co., 100 Pac. 607, 609, 45 Colo. 222, 16 Ann. Cas. 1002; County Court of City and County of Denver v. Eagle Rock Gold Mining & Reduction Co., 115 Pac. 706, 708, 50 Colo. 365 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2776).

A judgment is final when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case, and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce, by execution, what has been determined. Doudell v. Shoo, 114 Pac. 579, 581, 159 Cal. 448.

A "final judgment" from which an appeal may be taken is a determination of the rights of a litigant with respect to his suit; an adjudication which finally disposes of the case before the court. Appeal of Norton, 73 Atl. 587, 590, 84 Conn. 24.

A judgment is final, for the purpose of an appeal, when it determines the rights of the parties. Lemmons v. Huber, 77 Pac. 836, 837, 45 Or. 282.

Considered with reference to the right of appeal, a "final judgment" is one which decides "all the points in controversy between the parties," and which, disposing of all the issues not previously disposed of by interlocutory judgments, is the last judgment rendered in the case. Bossier's Heirs v. Hollingsworth & Jackson, 41 South. 553, 555, 117 La. 221.

If a judgment is not one that disposes of the whole case on its merits, it is not final. Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co., 129 Fed. 337, 340, 64 C. C. A. 15.

"Judgments" are generally defined to be 'final,' for the purpose of basing an action thereon, when the judgment is 'a definitive and personal judgment for the payment of money, final in its character, and not merely interlocutory, remaining unsatisfied, and capable of immediate enforcement.' Though an action on a decree for alimony or maintenance rendered in one state may be maintained in another state, if the amount payable is fixed and presently due, yet a decree for alimony or maintenance becoming due in the future and payable in installments is not a final decree enforceable in another state, within Const. U. S. requiring full faith and credit to be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state, until the court which rendered it fixes the specific amount due, either in some proper proceeding in the original action or by an independent action. Hunt v. Monroe, 91 Pac. 269, 271, 82 Utah, 428, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249 (quoting and adopting 23 Cyc. p. 1503).

There can be but one final judgment in a cause. Doudell v. Shoo, 114 Pac. 579, 582, 159 Cal. 448.

A final judgment, within Gen. St. 1906, § 1691, providing that writs of error shall lie only from final judgments, with a certain exception, is a judgment that adjudicates the merits of the cause or disposes of the action. Graves v. J. M. Harris & Bro., 54 South. 390, 61 Fla. 254.

A "final judgment," appealable under Ky. St. § 950, is a judgment which disposes of the merits of the case and settles the rights of the parties under the issues raised by the pleadings, or which disposes of the case and places the parties out of court. Trade Discount Co. v. J. R. Cox & Co., 136 S. W. 901, 143 Ky. 515.

A "final judgment" is one that puts an end to the action, by declaring either that plaintiff is or is not entitled to recover, and which by its own force grants the relief to which it finds the parties entitled. Thus a judgment in a suit by an administrator to settle the estate directing the administrator to assign to the widow all of certain personalty, after paying claims and expenses, one-third thereof absolutely, and two-thirds for life, remainder to persons named, and further ordering the widow to execute bond to the remainderman to account for such two-thirds interest, and reciting that the widow excepted to such orders, is not final so as to be appealable. Harding v. Harding, 140 S. W. 533, 535, 145 Ky. 315.

Under Code Civ. Proc. Mont. § 1000, a "judgment" is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding. There is no distinction between a "judgment" and a "final judgment." Forrester & MacGinniss v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 74 Pac. 1068, 1093, 29 Mont. 397.

"The term 'final judgment' is generally used as a synonym for an appealable order; that is, one which not only affects a substantial right, but one which in effect determines the action in the court pronouncing the judgment." But the term "final judgment" as used in the forcible entry and detainer act, providing that if judgment be rendered against defendant no appeal shall be taken by him until he shall give an undertaking for the payment of twice the rental value of the property from the rendition of the judgment until final judgment in the action, refers to the final judgment on appeal, either in the circuit or Supreme Court, and hence the undertaking given on appeal from a justice's judgment to the circuit court is effectual on further appeal to the Supreme Court and no further undertaking is necessary. Wolfer v. Hurst, 80 Pac. 419, 420, 47 Or. 156, 8 Ann. Cas. 725.

Rev. Laws, c. 128, § 36, relating to registration and confirmation of land titles, providing that "the applicant may withdraw his application at any time before 'final decree' upon terms to be determined by the court," when construed with other terms of the chapter, as set forth in sections 12, 13, 37-40, providing in brief that after a determination of adverse interests in the land court an appeal lies to the superior and supreme judicial courts, and that the decision on appeal will be certified to the land court, which will be entered as the final decree, on which the certificate of title issues, refers to the "final decree" after appeal, and not to the confirmation of the title by the land court in the first instance; and this is so especially since it was the evident intention of the Legislature to follow only so much of the Torrens act, as found in New Zealand, Western Australia, Victoria, and Tasmania, after which the Torrens act of Massachusetts was patterned, as made the withdrawal absolute at any time before the issuance of the certificate of title, which under the Massachusetts act is the final decree; the certificate issuing as matter of course. McQuesten v. Attorney General, 83 N. E. 1037, 1038, 198 Mass. 172.

A bill was brought against the beneficiaries of a decedent to impress a trust on the devised property. A final decree was rendered against one defendant charging her share with the entire amount, but the decree did not dismiss the bill against any of the defendants, nor was there any reference therein to the rights of the other defendants. Upon appeal by the one defendant alone, the charge placed upon her share was diminished, the decree reversed, and the lower court entered a decree on remittitur. Held, that the decree on remittitur was "final," as to the character and extent of the appealing defendant's liability. As to the defendants not parties to the appeal, the decree on remittitur was only interlocutory. The decree was not "final" in favor of the other defendants. Powell v. Yearance, 67 Atl. 892, 895, 73 N. J. Eq. 117.

An employers' liability policy provided that the insurer would, at its own cost, defend actions by employes, but that its liability for injury to any person should not exceed $5,000, and that no action should lie against it for any loss or expense, unless brought by the insured to reimburse him for loss sustained and paid in money under a final judgment. The insurer appealed from a judgment against the employer for less than $5,000. Held, that the judgment was a "final judgment," within the insurance policy; and on affirmation the insurer was liable for interest on the judgment, though the total amount thereof exceeded $5,000. Cannon Mfg. Co. v. Employers' Indemnity Co., 76 S. E. 536, 537, 161 N. O. 19.

As conclusive

"A judgment of a probate court finally settling and distributing an estate and discharging an executor is a 'final judgment,'" and as such cannot be collaterally attacked for fraud. State ex rel. Gray v. Carroll, 74

S. W. 468, 469, 101 Mo. App. 110 (quoting and adopting the definition in Smith v. Hanger, 51 S. W. 1052, 150 Mo. 437. Citing In re Judy's Estate, 65 S. W. 993, 166 Mo. 13; Green v. Tittman, 27 S. W. 391, 124 Mo. 372; Covington v. Chamblin, 57 S. W. 728, 156 Mo. 574; Patterson v. Booth, 15 S. W. 543, 103 Mo. 402; Nelson v. Barnett, 27 S. W. 520, 123 Mo. 564; Howell v. Jump, 41 S. W. 976, 140 Mo. 441; State ex rel. Pountain v. Gray, 17 S. W. 500, 106 Mo. 526; McClanahan v. West, 13 S. W. 674, 100 Mo. 309; Camden v. Plain, 4 S. W. 86, 91 Mo. 117; Miller v. Major, 67 Mo. 247; Sheetz v. Kirtley, 62 Mo. 417; Garnier v. Tucker, 61 Mo. 427; Woodworth v. Woodworth, 70 Mo. 601; State, to Use of Tourville, v. Roland, 23 Mo. 95).

The decree in a suit to construe a will, made after the decree construing it as giving the widow only a life estate subject to be terminated by her remarrying, giving the widow, as prayed for in her petition, a lien on the estate for money advanced by her to the executor, and providing that such lien may be enforced "in this cause whenever she may be advised so to do," and concluding, "all matters in this cause having been finally disposed of, except the said house and lot in which the widow has a life estate, all the rest of the estate and the money advanced by the widow to the executor having been used to pay the debts of the estate, it is ordered that the cause be stricken from the docket, with leave reserved to any party to reinstate it and seek any proper relief at the foot of this decree," is a "final decree," which, with the prior decree, became conclusive, in the absence of a timely appeal or proceedings to set it aside. Stout v. Stout, 51 S. E. 833, 834, 104 Va. 480.

Same—As to court rendering decision

A "final judgment" from which an appeal will lie is one that either terminates the action itself, or operates to divest some right in such a manner as to put it beyond the power of the court making the order to place the parties in their former condition after the expiration of the term. City of Batesville v. Ball, 140 S. W. 712, 714, 100 Ark. 496; McKinney v. Thomson (Ky.) 69 S. W. 707, 708 (citing Helm v. Short, 7 Bush [70 Ky.] 624; Turner v. Browder, 18 B. Mon. [57 Ky.] 826; Winn v. Carter Dry Goods Co., 43 S. W. 436, 102 Ky. 370).

A judgment against a receiver which disposes of all the parties and issues involved, and provides for its execution, is a "final judgment" which cannot be vacated at a subsequent term by motion or plea in intervention, though the suit in which it is rendered is retained upon the docket for the purpose of carrying the judgment into effect and winding up the receivership. Malone v. Johnson, 101 S. W. 503, 505, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

A final judgment cannot be set aside after the term has adjourned, except for errors appearing on the record, whether the adjournment be of the term finally or to a future day, pursuant to Code 1906, § 3623. A judgment rendered by a circuit court at a term at which all of the business has not been dispatched before the court, is, by an order entered on the record, adjourned to an "adjourned term" to begin on a day named in the order, is a final judgment upon such adjournment. Helms v. Greenbrier Valley Cold Storage Co., 63 S. E. 1089, 1091, 65 W. Va. 203.

"An 'appealable judgment' is one which concludes the parties as regards the subject matter in controversy in the tribunal pronouncing it." Under B. & C. Comp. § 547, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 313, c. 162, limiting appeals to orders affecting substantial rights and in effect determining suits, etc., an order, in a suit by a taxpayer against a former Secretary of State to require him to account for moneys received, denying defendant's motion to dismiss on demurrer being sustained to the complaint for plaintiff's incapacity to sue, and granting substitution of the state as plaintiff, was not appealable; the sustaining of the demurrer and the substitution under B. & C. Comp. § 101, providing that if a demurrer be sustained the court may allow an amendment, and section 102, authorizing the name of a party to be added or stricken before trial, not being final as to the suit. Sears v. Dunbar, 91 Pac. 145, 147, 50 Or. 36 (quoting and adopting the definition in Basche v. Pringle, 26 Pac. 863, 21 Or. 24).

As decision on matters at issue

Where the complaint described the structure that defendant was proposing to erect, and asked that he be enjoined from erecting the same and from maintaining a nuisance therein as described, and defendant was not proposing to erect any other kind of a structure, or to maintain a nuisance in any other way than that set forth in the pleadings and shown by the evidence, a decree enjoining defendant from erecting the building according to the plans shown by him and the testimony was a final decree on the issues presented, and was appealable. Cooper v. Whisen, 130 S. W. 703, 704, 95 Ark. 545.

As determination of particular action

"Final judgments" are such as finish the proceedings by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not entitled himself to the redress he sought and by ascertaining what amount he shall recover. Elliott v. Mayfield, 3 Ala. 223, 226 (2 Toml. Law Dict. 283; Bing. Judgm. 2; 3 Bl. Comm. 398).

In Gen. Laws R. I. 1909, c. 60, § 18, giving the right to redeem from a tax sale within one year after the sale or within six months after "final judgment" in any suit in which the validity of the sale is in question, provided the suit be commenced within one year after the sale, the term "final judgment" means a final disposition of the suit to test the validity of the sale, and is not to receive such strict interpretation as when used in statutes concerning appeals or writs of error, but covers all judgments, whether before or after hearing on the merits, which put an end to the suit whose pendency defers the vesting of an indefeasible title in the purchaser. Slade v. Rose, 188 Fed. 749, 751.

Decree as to part of parties

A judgment, which fails to dispose of all the parties to the controversy, is not a "final judgment," and no appeal will lie therefrom. Texas Co. v. Beddingfield, 114 S. W. 894, 895, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 10 (citing Mignon v. Brinson, 11 S. W. 903, 74 Tex. 18; Whitaker v. Gee, 61 Tex. 217).

To be appealable as being final, a judgment must dispose of all the parties, as well as the issues raised in the suit. McKneeley v. Armstrong (Tex.) 141 S. W. 1003, 1004.

A judgment which in no way disposes of a party made a defendant is not a "final judgment" and is not appealable. But where the petition complained of a corporation as a defendant and alleged that the individual defendants were the sole stockholders of the corporation, which had become defunct, and the judgment disposed of the individuals, the judgment was final as against the objection that it did not dispose of the corporation, and was appealable. Griffin v. Terry (Tex.) 124 S. W. 115, 116.

To be final and appealable a judgment must dispose of all the issues as to all the parties, and a judgment entered in favor of three of four plaintiffs, but in no wise disposing of the fourth plaintiff, is not final. A partnership not being a legal entity and being empowered to sue and be sued only in the names of its individual members, a judgment in a suit in which a partnership is a party to be final must either expressly, or by fair implication, dispose of all the members of the plaintiff or defendant firm. Benge v. Sledge (Tex.) 132 S. W. 873, 874.

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1283, 1337, providing for interlocutory judgments by default, and declaring that there shall be but one final judgment in a suit, a default judgment against a defendant duly cited, who fails to appear, and which does not dispose of the issue as to a codefendant appearing and obtaining a continuance, is not a "final judgment," and there is no warrant for abstracting it. Blankenship & Buchanan v. Herring (Tex.) 182 S. W. 882, 883.

Where a judgment in an action against a surety and the heirs of another surety did not in terms mention the heirs of the deceased surety, but provided that plaintiff take nothing by his suit, it was a "final judgment" for all the defendants within the statute allowing appeals. Carlton v. Krueger, 115 S. W. 619, 622, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 48.

Where several actions to enforce mechanics' liens against the same defendant are consolidated, a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint of one of the plaintiffs is a "final judgment" as to him. Orman v. Crystal, etc., Ry. Co., 39 Pac. 484, 435, 5 Colo. App. 493.

A judgment for plaintiff and against a defendant filing a cross-complaint against plaintiff and codefendants, rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the cross-complaint, but without adjudicating the rights of any of the codefendants who had never been defaulted, and who had never answered or pleaded to the cross-complaint is not a "final judgment" and appealable. Hopp v. Luken, 89 N. E. 916, 44 Ind. App. 568.

Where a suit was dismissed on demurrer on January 9, 1909, as to all the defendants save one, an appeal granted and the cause continued as to the remaining defendant, and was dismissed as to him on March 26, 1909, the case was still pending in the trial court up to the latter date; and hence an appeal filed within a year from that date was in time. Ragle v. Dedman, 91 N. E. 615, 616, 45 Ind. App. 693.

"The refusal of the court to render judgment by default against one of the defendants was not a 'final judgment' from which an appeal would lie." Carpenter v. Ingram, 91 S. W. 24, 25, 77 Ark. 299.

Decree as to part of questions

A decree dismissing a bill, in so far as relates to one branch only of the controversy between the parties, and that a subordinate one, leaving the principal issue in the case undetermined, is not a "final decree" and is not appealable. Memphis Keeley Institute v. Leslie E. Keeley Co., 144 Fed. 628, 631, 75 C. C. A. 430.

There may be two or more decrees in a suit, each of which is final for purposes of appeal. Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 233, 168 Ala. 469.

A judgment which found as to a cross-action by certain defendants that they should recover against another defendant a certain amount less a payment, the amount of which it failed to determine, was not a final judgment from which an appeal would lie, though it disposed of all the other issues. Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Ft. Worth v. First State Bank of Bangs (Tex.) 152 S. W. 499, 500.

A judgment which determines the issues involved in six of the seven causes of action is a final judgment and appealable under L. O. L. § 548. Taffe v. Smyth, 125 Pac. 308, 311, 62 Or. 227.

In a suit by a bank against the administrator of a deceased cashier for an accounting and to foreclose a lien on his stock and a deposit in the bank, a decree that complainant was entitled to the relief prayed, and referring to the register the ascertainment of the amount due, and a decree confirming his report and the former decree, and decreeing that complainant have and recover of respondent a specified sum and costs, and a lien on the cashier's deposit, as to which a further reference was ordered, to ascertain its amount and interest thereon, and whether dividends had been declared on his stock since his death, are both final so as to support an appeal. Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 233, 168 Ala. 469.

A decree finding certain conveyances absolute in form to be in trust, and referring the case to the master for an accounting, is "final" as to the title, so as to justify an appeal pending the accounting. Stahl v. Stahl, 77 N. E. 67, 68, 220 Ill. 188.

A "final decree" is one which so far terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits that, in case of affirmance, nothing would remain to be done but to execute the judgment or decree. Where a bill in a Circuit Court set up four distinct causes of action, one for infringement of a patent, one for infringement of a trade-mark, and two for unfair competition, a decree dismissing the bill as to the first three causes of action is a "final decree" thereon, in such sense as to be appealable, although as to the fourth cause of action the bill is sustained and an accounting is directed thereunder. Scriven v. North, 134 Fed. 366, 368, 67 C. C. A. 348.

Under Court and Practice Act 1905, § 328, providing that any party aggrieved by a "final decree" of the superior court in equity or proceeding following the course of equity, etc., may appeal to the Supreme Court, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 206, and the amendments thereto, a decree "that the petitioner had a legal claim against the property described in the petition at the time of the filing of the petition," etc., and that the cause be referred to a master in the usual form, is final as to the petitioner's right to a lien and appealable. Robert v. Rosseau, 67 Atl. 330, 331, 28 R. I. 335.

Where, in an action on an acceptance of a bill of exchange, brought by an assignee of the bill, defendant alleged that the acceptance was procured by fraud, and that plaintiff acquired it with knowledge thereof, after maturity, a verdict that the bill was not transferred until after maturity, but not disposing of the questions of fraud and misrepresentation, and a judgment that defendant recover his costs for the term, and continuing the case, is not final and appealable under Ky. St. § 950 (Russell's St. § 2784). Trade Discount Co. v. J. R. Cox & Co., 136 S. W. 901, 143 Ky. 515.

A judgment in justice's court for plaintiff without disposing of defendant's plea in reconvention is not a final judgment within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1668, authorizing appeals from final judgments in justice's court to the county court; a final judgment disposing of the entire matter in controversy. Sapp v. Anderson (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1068.

The mere entry upon the minutes by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the territory of a decision overruling exceptions taken under Rev. Laws Haw. 1905, § 1862, et seq., which did not bring up the whole case, and called upon the reviewing court merely to pass upon specific questions raised by the bill, does not make such decision a final judgment, so as to be subject to review in the federal Supreme Court. Cotton v. Territory of Hawaii, 29 Sup. Ct. 85, 88, 211 U. S. 162, 53 L. Ed. 131.

An attachment was sued out by a creditor against a firm of two members, levied upon sufficient property to make the amount of the debt sought to be collected, and a replevin bond was given, with defendants in attachment as principals and others as sureties. Subsequently an order was taken suggesting the death of one of the principals, and authorizing the case to proceed against the firm and the surviving partner and against the sureties on the replevin bond. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff against one of the principals as surviving partner and in his individual capacity, and against the sureties. A new trial was granted, and upon the second trial the sureties were allowed to intervene, setting up the defense that their risk had been increased, because plaintiff had dismissed one of the principal defendants, and the issue made by the intervention was tried independently of the main case and prior thereto; the main case standing on the docket for trial. Held, that plaintiff in attachment, upon determination by verdict of the issue made by the intervention after moving for a new trial, could sue out a direct bill of exceptions for review of the judgment overruling the motion for new trial, as well as the rulings made during the trial of the issue made by the intervention. Watts v. Langston, 68 S. E. 1115, 135 Ga. 161.

Effect of appeal

The term "final decree," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2936, providing for alimony to the wife in a suit for divorce until final decree, means a decree finally terminating the action, and not a decree of the district court from which an appeal has been perfected by supersedeas, and hence the wife is entitled to alimony pending such appeal. Williams v. Williams (Tex.) 125 S. W. 937, 1199.

The judgment obtained in the lower court is the "final judgment" in the suit, even though the case is pending in the Supreme Court, within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 64, §§ 8-10, providing that judgment will be rendered in favor of the defendant if the plaintiff, a woman, shall marry before final judgment and omit to join her husband in the action. Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23, 28.

Effect of reversal

A "judgment" upon which execution may be issued, as it is defined in the statute, means the final judgment which disposes of the action. If the judgment remains unreversed, it is a final judgment; but if for error of any kind inherent therein it is in due course set aside, vacated, or annulled, it then becomes absolutely void. A judgment so reversed has no existence. Gunnison v. Abbott, 64 Atl. 23, 25, 73 N. H. 590 (citing Allen v. Adams, 17 Conn. 67).

Entry and record

The words "final judgment" as employed in Code 1868, c. 125, § 53, providing that at any time before final judgment or decree a defendant may file a plea or answer, are to be construed as applying to "final judgment" as used in section 46, providing that every judgment entered in the office in a case wherein there is no order for an inquiry for damages becomes final, unless it be set aside by defendant appearing and pleading to issue, so that defendant's plea of the statute of limitations was properly disallowed after the verdict of the jury had been found. Ellott v. Hutchinson, 8 W. Va. 452, 459, 460.

Where no final judgment is entered in the minutes of the court, but a final judgment nunc pro tunc is put in form for record and signed by the judge at a subsequent date, a writ of error issued prior to such signing cannot be used to bring the judgment up for review. Pittsburg Steel Co. v. Streety, 53 South. 505, 60 Fla. 183.

Expiration of time for new trial

Although an appeal was taken from a judgment pending in term, and at a time when the court still had control thereof, and might have granted a new trial, or amended or changed the same, it was none the less a "final judgment," and the appeal was perfected by the ending of the term without a change therein or the granting of a new trial. Robbie v. Upson (Tex.) 151 S. W. 570.

Under Municipal Court Act, § 21, providing that every judgment final in its nature may be vacated to the same extent as judgments of the circuit court during the term at which the same was rendered, provided a motion to vacate be entered in the municipal court within 30 days after the entry of such judgment, a judgment does not become final until a motion to set the same aside and for a new trial is disposed of, and hence a bill of exceptions may be tendered at the time of the ruling on such motion. Grubb v. Milan, 94 N. E. 927, 930, 249 Ill. 456.

Formal requisites

An opinion of the Supreme Court is not a "final judgment or decree" necessary to support a plea of prior adjudication. Lambert v. Rice, 120 N. W. 96, 97, 143 Iowa, 70.

It is not a conclusive criterion whether a definitive judgment has been rendered that the entry employs or omits the usual form of "ideo consideratum est." Judgments are "final" and subject to review by writ of error as well when entered without that clause as with. Whitaker v. Bramson, 29 Fed. Cas. 947, 950, 2 Paine, 209.

An order for a decree in accordance with the findings of the judge in an equity suit is not a "final decree," and is not appealable. Kenworthy v. Equitable Trust Co., 67 Atl. 469, 470, 218 Pa. 286.

An order, "judgment is directed non obstante veredicto in favor of the garnishee," is not a "final judgment" and appealable. Keystone Brewing Co. v. Canavan, 67 Atl. 48, 218 Pa. 161.

A modified judgment, rendered in lieu of the original judgment, is the final judgment, and an exception to it is sufficient to authorize the Supreme Court to review it. Washington County v. Murray, 100 Pac. 588, 590, 45 Colo. 115.

A judgment that the plaintiff "have and recover of defendant the sum of $——, its costs in this behalf expended," is not a final judgment, and will not support a writ of error. Bell v. Niles, 53 South. 714, 60 Fla. 31.

A judgment merely that plaintiff be and is nonsuited is not a final judgment, unless it states that the action is dismissed, or defendant go hence without day, or that plaintiff take nothing, or other equivalent expressions adjudicating the action. Goldring v. Reid, 53 South. 503, 504, 60 Fla. 78.

A judgment which recites the verdict in full, and continues, "Therefore it is adjudged that the plaintiff * * * recover of the defendant * * * the possession of the real property described in the complaint," followed by the words "by the court" and the judge's signature, is a "final judgment," and not an order for judgment, and may be proved as such as a former adjudication of the issues in a subsequent case. Ottow v. Friese, 126 N. W. 503, 506, 20 N. D. 86.

Where the judgment recited that "the court, being fully advised, sustained defendants' motion for judgment in their favor on the ruling of the court sustaining defendants' demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint," and adjudged "that plaintiffs take nothing by their action and that defendants recovered of plaintiffs their costs," it was in form a "final judgment," from which an appeal would lie. Wehmeier v. Mercantile Banking Co., 97 N. E. 558, 559, 40 Ind. App. 454.

A judgment or order overruling a motion to set aside a verdict for defendant and refusing plaintiff a new trial is not a "final judgment" within the statute as to the time for making bills of exception. The judgment to be final in such a case must be a judgment nisi capiat. Barker v. Stephenson, 68 S. E. 113, 114, 67 W. Va. 490.

A judgment reciting that the court after hearing the evidence in the case rendered judgment for defendants is not appealable under Rev. St. 1909, § 2038, providing for appeals from final judgments, for a "final judgment" is the actual judgment as distinguished from a mere finding that one of the parties is entitled to judgment, and should be that the plaintiff take nothing, and that the defendant be discharged, and recover his costs. Freeman v. McCrite, 147 S. W. 1102, 1103, 165 Mo. App. 1.

A "final judgment" is one relieving the defendant of the necessity of further appearance, and allowing him to go without day with his costs. Tamblyn v. Chicago Lead & Zinc Co., 143 S. W. 1095, 1096, 161 Mo. App. 296.

The rescript of the Supreme Judicial Court in an equity case, "Bill dismissed," and a docket entry in pursuance thereof, are not a "final decree," precluding further action in the case, and hence the court thereafter has power to allow an amendment changing the suit to an action at law. Crossman v. Griggs, 74 N. E. 358, 359, 188 Mass. 156.

A final judgment is not disclosed by a journal entry reciting the submission of a cause to the court and concluding: "The court finds for the defendant and judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff excepts to findings and judgment." Fauber v. Keim, 120 N. W. 1019, 84 Neb. 167.

"The 'judgment' at common law is the final determination pronounced by the court upon the matters submitted to it." A judgment entered by a federal court in an action at law, which includes costs against the losing party, is none the less final because a blank is left for the insertion of the amount of such costs when taxed; such taxation and entry being made as of course under Rev. St. § 983, by the judge or clerk, and requiring no further judicial action, and the time for suing out a writ of error to review such judgment runs from such entry, and not from the time when the blank is filled. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. United States, 162 Fed. 679, 680, 89 C. C. A. 471 (citing and adopting 23 Cyc. p. 665).

Where the judgment in condemnation proceedings under the local improvement act was not entered on the recast rolls as required by section 26, it was not a "final judgment" as to all the parties within section 32, which provides that on the return of the verdict in condemnation, if a motion for a new trial is not made, or is overruled, petitioner shall, within 90 days after final judgment as to all defendants, both as to damages and compensation, elect whether to dismiss or enter judgment, and, if it elects to enter judgment, it shall become bound whether the assessment is collected or not, and the judgment shall not be conditional and petitioner cannot thereafter dismiss the proceedings without the consent of all landowners; the various sections of the act relating to condemnation by municipalities and payment by special assessments indicating that the legislative intention was not to make the judgment final until judgment had been obtained as to all defendants, and section 26 providing that no final judgment shall be entered until all the issues have been disposed of, including revised recast rolls, if any. Hence petitioner could dismiss the proceedings without the landowner's consent. City of Evanston v. Knox, 89 N. E. 670, 672, 241 Ill. 460.

An entry in the record of an action, that the plaintiff, after a ruling excluding the evidence offered by him, stated that on account thereof it was necessary for him to suffer a nonsuit, and requested that he be allowed to file a bill of exceptions, and that by order of the court the nonsuit was allowed, and plaintiff granted time to file his bill of exceptions, did not show a "final judgment" which would support proceedings in error, since it did not purport to declare the sentence of the law upon the entry of the nonsuit which is an essential element of a final judgment, but was at most a mere recitation that a nonsuit had been entered. Mizell Live Stock Co. v. J. J. McCaskill Co., 49 South. 501, 57 Fla. 118.

An appeal from an order granting a new trial made before a sentence will not lie, as the sentence is the "final judgment" essential to the maintenance of appeal. State v. Byars, 60 S. E. 448, 79 S. C. 174.

That a sentence in a criminal case was followed by a motion in arrest of judgment does not deprive it of its character as a "final judgment" so as to prevent a writ of error therefrom. State v. Rosenblatt, 83 S. W. 975, 976, 185 Mo. 114.

An entry of what appears to have been intended as a confessed judgment for a fine and costs following on a mere verdict of guilt, but with no judgment of guilt, is not a "final judgment" such as will support an appeal. Moss v. State, 37 South. 156, 140 Ala. 199.

Future judicial action

"Final judgments" are such as at once put an end to the action." A judgment upon a bond for the performance of collateral conditions for a penalty of $4,000 rendered subject to a subsequent inquiry as to the amount due in equity is not a final judgment. Towner v. Wells, 8 Ohio, 136, 141 (quoting 3 Bl. Comm. 398).

A judgment declaring certain parties to be stakeholders, requiring them to pay the fund into court, fixing the priority of liens for such sums as may afterwards be established, and continuing the cause as to all parties except such stakeholders, is not a "final judgment" from which an appeal will lie.

E. L. Wilson Hardware Co. v. Duff, 85 S. W. 786, 98 Tex. 467.

Where a decree in a suit to wind up the affairs of a joint stock association expressly pretermits any decision concerning the rights of the parties in the distribution of the assets of the association between the shareholders, reserving such matter for later disposition, the decree is not final. Randolph v. Nichol, 84 S. W. 1037, 1040, 74 Ark. 93.

In a suit to restrain a sale of property under a trust deed, a decree directing the clerk to pay the trustee's attorneys a fee out of certain funds belonging to the grantor on the motion to dissolve the injunction, and referring the case to the master to take an account showing what part of the expenses claimed by the trustee other than counsel fees should be allowed as a charge against the trust estate, was not a "final decree" from which an appeal would lie, under the rule that a final decree is one which disposes of the whole subject, giving all the relief that is competent, and leaves nothing to be done by the court. Stull v. Harvey, 72 S. E. 701, 702, 112 Va. 816.

The owner of an undivided interest in land instituted a suit for partition, and a judgment, entered in 1854, found that such owner should have an undivided one-fourth during her life, and after her death in fee simple to her heirs, and partition was decreed accordingly. Commissioners were appointed to carry out the order and report, and in 1855 the commissioners reported the land incapable of division in kind, and an order of sale was entered, which was executed in 1856, and on sheriff's return made in 1858 the court ordered distribution of the proceeds. Under the acts then in force (Rev. St. 1845, p. 784) it was the court's duty to order the sale of lands not susceptible of division in kind, and the sheriff was to pay out the proceeds to the parties as their interests appeared. Held, that the judgment in 1854, and not the order of distribution in 1858, was the "final judgment," and hence the proceedings were not void on the ground that an heir born after the judgment of 1854, and before the order of distribution in 1858, was not a party. Sparks v. Clay, 84 S. W. 40, 48, 185 Mo. 393.

A judgment of a federal Circuit Court entered upon a verdict directed in favor of the government on the issues raised by a special plea in bar, by which the accused claimed immunity from prosecution under Act Feb. 25, 1903, c. 755, 32 Stat. 904, as amended by Act June 30, 1906, c. 3920, 34 Stat. 798, because of his testimony before the grand jury, is not a final judgment, reviewable under Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 5, 26 Stat. 827, by a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where leave was given to plead over, and a plea of not guilty was entered, upon which no trial has been had. Helke v. Unit- ed States, 30 S. Ct. 539, 540, 217 U. S. 423, 54 L. Ed. 821.

Future stating of account or assessment of damages

A decree may be final, though it directs a reference. On a bill for accounting under a license to use a patent, a decree finding facts substantially as alleged in a bill and ordering a reference, and ordering that, in stating the account, the master make specific charges against defendant, and that defendant disclose specified facts within its knowledge, and reciting that the court retained jurisdiction to enter such further order and decree as the case might require, was appealable as a final decree. Fould De Grasse v. H. W. Gossard Co., 86 N. E. 176, 179, 236 Ill. 73.

A "final decree" is one which fully decides and finally disposes of the entire merits of the case. Some other order or decree of the court may be necessary to carry into effect the rights of the parties or some incidental matter may be reserved for consideration, which decision either one way or another cannot have the effect of altering the decree by which the rights of the parties have been declared. A decree is final even where, as a mere incident to the relief granted, it directs a reference to a master to state an account. Where accounts are to be settled between the parties and the decree contains an order of reference by which the accounts are to be stated according to certain principles fixed by the decree, such order of reference will not have the effect of rendering the decree "interlocutory"; but where the chancellor fails to fix the principles by which the accounts are to be stated, and judicial action on his part is contemplated and necessary, or where some equity other than that involved in the accounting remains for further adjudication, then such decree is interlocutory, unless the status of the account or other matter to be thereafter determined is apart from the equities involved. Gray v. Ames, 77 N. E. 219, 220, 220 Ill. 251, 5 Ann. Cas. 174 (citing Mills v. Hoag [N. Y.] 7 Paige, 18, 31 Am. Dec. 271; Myers v. Manny, 68 Ill. 211; Hunter v. Hunter, 100 Ill. 519; Allison v. Drake, 82 N. E. 537, 145 Ill. 500).

A decree adjudging deeds to be mortgages, and appointing a referee to take evidence as to the value of the improvements placed on the lands by defendant and the amount of the debt, was not final, and there could be not final decree until the report of the referee and the exceptions thereto had been passed on. State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 655, 219 Mo. 667.

A decree that complainants are entitled to be let in to redeem from mortgages on the ground that there has never been a sale under the power contained in the mortgages is such a "final decree" as will support an appeal, although it further orders a reference to state an account of what is due and directs how the account is to be stated. O. W. Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Pugh (Ala.) 39 South. 989.

A "final decree" is not necessarily the last order in the case, as orders sometimes follow merely for the purpose of carrying out or executing the matters which the decree has determined, but when it finally fixes the rights of the parties it is final and may be reviewed. Thus where the decree in a stockholders' suit against directors and officers for an accounting found defendants guilty of fraud in purchasing certain real estate, in receiving salaries, and doing other acts complained of, and appointed a receiver and referred the cause with directions to take an account, ordering that the account be taken in accordance with the findings in the decree, the proofs taken, and the instructions of the court, and specifically found defendants liable, and fixed the basis on which the account should be taken, it was held that the decree was final and appealable. Klein v. Independent Brewing Ass'n, 83 N. E. 434, 438, 231 Ill. 594 (quoting Allison v. Drake, 32 N. E. 537, 539, 145 Ill. 500, 510).

Grant of relief essential

A judgment, to be final, must not only decide that one of the parties is entitled to relief of a final character, but must give that relief by its own force, or be enforceable for that purpose without further action by the court or by process for contempt. Reed v. Reed (Ky.) 80 S. W. 520, 522 (citing Bondurant v. Apperson, 61 Ky. [4 Metc.] 30).

In a technical sense, the "final decree" of a court of chancery is the sentence of the court, finally and conclusively determining all the matters in controversy, disposing entirely of the cause, leaving nothing further for the court to do; but, under the statute relating to appeals, the test of finality to support an appeal is not whether the cause remains, in some respects, in the court of chancery awaiting further proceedings, necessary to entitle the parties to the full measure of the rights it has been declared they have, but whether the decree ascertains and declares these rights, and the decree is final and will support an appeal if they are ascertained and are adjudged. Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 233, 168 Ala. 469.

Interlocutory decree or judgment distinguished

No hard and fast rule can be laid down to distinguish a final from an interlocutory judgment, further than that "final judgments" are those which finally dispose of the subject-matter as to all parties as far as the court before which it is pending has power to dispose of it. In re Appleman, 94 N. E. 566, 570, 176 Ind. 253.

A decree is interlocutory, and not final, if the further action of the court in the cause, as distinguished from proceedings necessary to execute the decree, is necessary to give completely the relief contemplated by the court. Thus where the decree, in a suit by judgment creditors to subject to their liens defendants' interest in a trust estate, overruled a demurrer to the supplemental bill, amended and confirmed a commissioner's report of the liens and priorities of the creditors and of the judgment debtor's interest in the trust estate, determined what creditors were entitled to participate therein, found that partition could not be conveniently made, and that the rents would not satisfy the liens within five years, and that the other parties interested in the estate desired that one-eighth interest therein be allotted them upon paying its fair value, and decreed that they be permitted to do so by depositing the sum in a bank payable to the court, and appointed special commissioners to convey to such defendants such one-eighth interest in the trust estate, and required a report by the special commissioners as to how they had executed the decree, it was held that the decree was not final, so that defendant could file their answer, tendered at the following term of court, under Code 1904, § 3275, to the amended and supplemental bill of which one the original bill was made a part. Collier v. Seward, 74 S. E. 155, 156, 113 Va. 228.

A decree in a partition suit adjudging the property susceptible of partition in kind and appointing commissioners to make the same is "interlocutory" and not "final." Dangerfield v. Caldwell, 151 Fed. 554, 558, 8 C. C. A. 400.

A judgment in an action to reform a contract, for the amount due thereunder, for an accounting, and for the delivery of corporate stocks and bonds, which reforms the contract, directs a judgment for plaintiff for a specified sum, orders the transfer of stocks and bonds, requires defendant to account, and appoints a referee to take the account, and which recites that it is an interlocutory judgment, is an "interlocutory judgment," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that judgments are final or interlocutory, and defining a final judgment as the final determination of the rights of the parties. Potter v. Rossiter, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1036, 1037, 109 App. Div. 35.

An interlocutory decree is one made pending the cause and before the hearing on the merits. An order appointing a receiver of a corporation, entered at the same term, but subsequent to the rendition of a judgment against it, is not an interlocutory judgment, but is a "final judgment," and the order is, after affirmation by the Court of Civil Appeals, reviewable in the Supreme Court under the statute authorizing appeals.

from final judgments, etc. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State (Tex.) 106 S. W. 326, 329 (quoting Freem. Judgm. § 29).

Generally a judgment which at once disposes of the entire controversy, settling the rights of the parties, leaving nothing for further consideration, is "final," while a judgment which merely settles some preliminary point or reserves for future determination some detail essential to the complete adjustment of the litigation is not final but "interlocutory" only. In Black on Judgments, § 41, it is said: "The difficulty appears to arise in relation to those decrees which, while settling the general equities of the cause, leave something for future action or determination. And the true rule seems to be that, if that which remains to be done or decided will require the action or consideration of the court before the rights involved in the cause can be fully and finally disposed of, the decree is interlocutory; but it is none the less final if, after settling the equities, it leaves a necessity for some further action or direction of the court in execution of the decree as it stands." And in section 44 the same author says: "The most difficult cases in which to draw the line between final and interlocutory decrees are those in which the decree, after finding the general equities, orders reference to a master for some specific purpose. Yet there are not wanting principles upon which to base a reasonable and accurate distinction in these cases. As the condensed result of the numerous authorities on the subject, we may formulate the following specific rules: First, where a decree is made disposing of the general equities of the case, but ordering a reference to a master to ascertain damages, or to find certain facts, or to do anything else necessary to be done before a final adjustment of the rights of the parties can be had if the functions of the master are to be judicial and not merely ministerial and the provisions depending on his report are not already incorporated in the decree then the decree is interlocutory and not final. Second, where a decree ascertains and fixes all the rights of the parties, but a reference is ordered to a master to do or ascertain something that is necessary to carry the decree into effect, if the functions of the master are to be merely ministerial and not judicial, or if all the consequential directions depending on the result of the proceedings before him are given in the decree itself, then the decree is final and not interlocutory. To take a single illustration, the reference of a case to a master, to take an account upon evidence, and for the examination of the parties, and to make or refuse allowances affecting the rights of the parties and to report his results to the court, is not a final decree. For his report is subject to exceptions from either side, which must be brought to the notice of the court before it can be available. It can only be made so by the court's overruling the exceptions, or by an order confirming the report, with a final decree for its appropriation and payment." Again, discussing final and interlocutory decrees, 23 Cyc. p. 786, says: "Although there cannot be two final judgments in the same case, it is sometimes proper to enter an interlocutory judgment for the final disposition of the case. Generally speaking, the judgment is final if it at once disposes of the entire controversy settling the rights of the parties, and leaving nothing for further determination, but interlocutory if it merely settles some preliminary point or matter or reserves for future determination some detail essential to the complete adjustment of the subject of litigation. The judgment is ordinarily final when rendered in pursuance of a general verdict, or on submission for decision on the pleadings. But an interlocutory judgment may be entered where it is necessary to frame an issue on which the parties may properly go to trial, or on overruling a demurrer, where leave is given to amend the pleading or to plead over, or where the court has not before it all the papers necessary to settle the form of the final judgment, or reserves the decision of some point affecting the amount recoverable or the right to modify the judgment, or finds it necessary to appoint a master or referee to find issues in the case, unless where the action to be taken on the coming in of his report is definitely prescribed. So, also, a judgment is generally interlocutory if it embodies a condition, the performance of which is necessary to make it effective or a condition on the performance of which it may be released. And, in the action of account it is usual and proper to render a preliminary judgment that the parties do account. State ex rel. Potter v. Riley, 118 S. W. 647, 654, 655, 219 Mo. 667.

Judgments are interlocutory or final. Interlocutory judgments "are rendered in some intermediate stage of the cause, as, in account, quod computet; in abatement, respondet ouster; of which error is not predicable. "Final judgments" are rendered at the termination of a cause and make an end of it by awarding damages and costs to the plaintiff or costs to the defendant. These only are the foundation of a writ of error, hence the granting or refusal of a new trial on a petition for that purpose is a matter of discretion and not the subject of error. Magill v. Lyman, 6 Conn. 59, 61 (citing Bac. Abr. tit. Error, A. 2).

Under Ky. St. § 950, giving appellate jurisdiction over final judgments, an order sustaining a demurrer to specific demands in the petition and overruling it as to others, followed by an amendment to the petition and a trial of an issue, is interlocutory and is not appealable, and the mere fact that the court tried the issue does not enlarge the right of appeal from the order; a "final judgment" being one which puts an end to the action on the merits, and which settles the rights of the parties under the issues. Harrison v. Stroud, 150 S. W. 993, 994, 150 Ky. 797.

The Constitution authorizes appeals from final judgments of the district court. The general appeal statute authorizes an appeal within six months from the judgment or order appealed from. Comp. Laws 1907, §§ 1184, 1212, as amended by Sess. Laws 1909, c. 109, §§ 1, 2, require an entry of an interlocutory decree in a divorce suit when the court finds that a divorce should be granted, and provide that an interlocutory decree shall become absolute after six months from its entry, unless appealed from, etc. Section 3 makes it unlawful for either party to a divorce suit whose marriage is dissolved by final decree to marry any other person within the period allowed for an appeal from the final decree. Held, that such an interlocutory decree is a "final decree" in the sense of conferring a right of appeal therefrom, requiring that appeal be taken within six months from entry thereof. Parsons v. Parsons (Utah) 122 Pac. 907, 908.

A "final decree," within the acts of Congress giving an appellate court jurisdiction on appeal, must terminate the litigation on the merits. An order requiring a party to pay into the registry of the court money in its possession which is the subject of litigation is interlocutory and not final, and is not appealable. Norris Safe & Lock Co. v. Manganese Steel Safe Co., 150 Fed. 577, 578, 80 C. C. A. 563 (quoting and adopting definition in Grant v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 1 Sup. Ct. 414, 106 U. S. 429, 27 L. Ed. 237).

A bill was brought against the beneficiaries of a decedent to impress a trust on the devised property. A "final decree" was rendered against one defendant charging her share with the entire amount, but the decree did not dismiss the bill against any of the defendants, nor was there any reference therein to the rights of the other defendants. Upon appeal by the one defendant alone, the charge placed upon her share was diminished, the decree reversed, and the lower court entered a decree on remittitur. Held, that the decree on remittitur was final, as to the character and extent of the appealing defendant's liability. As to the defendants not parties to the appeal the decree on remittitur was only interlocutory. The decree was not final in favor of the other defendants. Powell v. Yearance, 67 Atl. 892, 895, 73 N. J. Eq. 117.

A decree in a suit to cancel a sale by a mortgagee in possession, and a sale by him as administrator of the purchaser, and for an accounting, which cancels the sale, orders an accounting, appoints a commissioner to take an accounting, and reserves other questions until the coming in of the report of the commissioner, is not a final decree, from which an appeal should have been taken within the time limited by law, so that a failure to appeal would bar a right to revive the action after the death of parties thereto, but was an interlocutory decree only; a "final decree" being one which disposes of the cause, either by sending it out of court before a hearing on the merits, or after a hearing on the merits, decreeing either in favor of or against the prayer of the bill, and an "interlocutory decree" being one made pending the cause, and before a final hearing on the merits. Comans v. Tapley, 57 South. 567, 571, 101 Miss. 203.

A "final judgment" is such a judgment as at once puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy for which he sues. A judgment which is not final is called interlocutory. "Interlocutory judgments" are such as are given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Any judgment leaving something to be done by the court before the rights of the parties are determined, and not putting an end to the action in which it is entered, is interlocutory. Under V. S. 1411, providing that the court may ascertain the sum due when judgment is rendered otherwise than on a verdict, a default judgment in an action by trustee process, with a declaration of debt on judgment, where the case was continued, and a commissioner appointed to assess the damage, was an interlocutory, and not a final, judgment, and the court had authority on report of the commissioner, to render final judgment with leave to take out execution. Leonard v. Sibley, 56 Atl. 1015, 76 Vt. 254 (citing Black, Judg. § 21; Bouv. Law Dict.).

An order of the probate court confirming the verdict of a jury adverse to the caveator, on an issue framed by that court to determine whether the caveator was lawfully married to the decedent, is an interlocutory order, and not appealable, where the caveator in her caveat claimed to be the lawful widow of the decedent, and also the beneficiary under a prior will. Richardson v. Reeves, 34 App. D. C. 9, 11.

A judgment "that the plaintiff pay the costs herein," following a general finding "for the defendants," is not a "final judgment" from which an appeal will lie. Miller v. McKean, 78 N. E. 1049, 38 Ind. App. 696.

Judgment or order for alimony

A judgment for alimony pendente lite is a "final" one, and appealable. Kessler v. Kessler, 83 Pac. 257, 259, 2 Cal. App. 509.

A decree awarding a wife certain weekly allowances as alimony pendente lite undi final order is not a "final judgment," on which an action could be maintained. Gelsler v. Gelsler, 98 S. W. 1023, 1024, 124 Ky. 292.

A decree for alimony granted to a wife on dissolution of the marriage, being merely for the enforcement of the husband's obligation to support his wife, is not a "final adjudication," but is a determination which is open to revision from time to time as the circumstances of the parties subsequently require. Wallace v. Wallace, 67 Atl. 580, 581, 74 N. H. 256, 13 Ann. Cas. 293 (citing Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 1885-1889; 2 Nels. Div. & Sep. § 933a).

An order refusing to set aside an order for alimony and to quash an execution to enforce it, though issued after the dismissal of the suit, is not a "final judgment," within Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1387, 1383, providing that only one final judgment may be rendered in any case, and limiting appeals to appeals from final judgments, and is not appealable. Dawson v. Dawson (Tex.) 140 S. W. 513, 514.

An order directing the issuance of an execution to enforce the collection of unpaid alimony is not a "final judgment," within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1883, authorizing appeals from final judgments. Williams v. Williams (Tex.) 125 S. W. 937, 1199.

Judgment or order allowing or dismissing appeal

An order of the circuit court dismissing an appeal in condemnation proceedings to take land for a highway, on the ground that the statute authorizing an appeal was unconstitutional, was a final judgment. Hartz v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 129 N. W. 25, 26, 164 Mich. 231.

The granting of a motion to dismiss or erase an appeal from an order of the railroad commissioners, approving the location of an electric railway, for want of jurisdiction, is a "final judgment," from which an appeal may be taken. Appeal of Norton, 78 Atl. 587, 590, 84 Conn. 24.

Order confirming report

"A 'final judgment' is one which leaves nothing to be judicially determined between the parties in the trial court. It must finally conclude all the necessary parties on the merits and finally dispose of the subject-matter of the controversy." An order confirming the report of a master in chancery is not a final disposition of the cause and is not appealable within statutes authorizing appeals from judgments or decrees which are final. Woods v. Woods, 82 S. W. 878, 881, 5 Ind. T. 475.

A decree confirming a master's report in partition proceedings is a final decree, from which an appeal will lie. Lincoln v. Africa, 77 Atl. 918, 920, 228 Pa. 546.

A decree of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, although involving a decision upon the merits of the case, is not final for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it contemplates and requires further proceedings not inconsistent with its opinion. A decree confirming the report of commissioners appointed in a partition suit is not final for the purpose of appeal, where the plan adopted was dependent upon a sale of a part of the property, which had not taken place, and which required the confirmation of the court. Clark v. Roller, 26 Sup. Ct. 141, 143, 199 U. S. 541, 50 L. Ed. 300.

The "final decree" in partition, within Const. art. 7, § 6, limiting the review by the Supreme Court of decisions of the circuit court to those that are final, is that entered on confirmation of the report of referees. Keeler v. Nice, 104 Pac. 2, 54 Or. 585.

Judgment for costs

A "final judgment" is one that at once disposes of all the issue as to all the parties to the full extent of the power of the court to dispose of the same, and puts an end to the particular case as to all of such parties and all of such issues. Where the judgment is for the defendant, either upon a ruling upon demurrer and refusal to plead further or upon the finding of a court or verdict of a jury, the judgment in order to be final should be "that the plaintiff take nothing by this suit, nil capiat per breve, and that the defendant go without day, eat inde sine die." While our modern forms of procedure may not require this exact form of words, it has not gone so far as to adjudge that to be a "final judgment" which does not show on its face by some proper words that the court pronounced the sentence of the law upon facts found as to the merits of the controversy, and the Code of Procedure requires that the court or jury trying the case shall find either generally or specially the facts for the plaintiff or defendant, and the court shall pronounce judgment in conformity therewith, Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 554, 560, 573. Since costs form no part of the matter in controversy in a suit and are mere incidents or necessary appendages in the litigation, a judgment merely for costs is an interlocutory judgment and not a "final judgment," and where a demurrer to a complaint was sustained, and plaintiff withdrew leave to amend, and judgment was awarded against him for costs, the record disclosing no adjudication of the controversy on its merits, the judgment was not appealable within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 644, 1337o, limiting appeals to "final judgments" with certain exceptions. Neyens v. Flesher, 79 N. E. 1087-1089, 39 Ind. App. 399 (citing Black, Judg. § 31; Bouv. Inst. § 3300, 3302; Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 1 Sup. Ct. 15, 106 U. S. 3, 27 L. Ed. 73; Grant v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 1 Sup. Ct. 414, 106 U. S. 429, 27 L. Ed. 237; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., 2 Sup. Ct. 6, 108 U. S. 24, 27 L. Ed. 638; Champ v. Kendrick, 30 N. E. 635, 130 Ind. 545; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Locke, 7 N. E. 579, 107 Ind. 9; Brannock v. Stocker, 76 Ind. 573; Needham v. Metz, 7 Tex. 178; Eastham v. Sallis, 60 Tex. 576; Higbee v. Bowers, 9 Mo. 354; Young v. Stonebreaker, 33 Mo. 117; Smarr v. McMaster, 34 Mo. 204; Bogges v. Cox, 48 Mo. 278; Preston v. Missouri & P. Lead Co., 48 Mo. 541; Zahnd v. Darling, 48 Mo. 557; Evans v. Russell, 61 Mo. 37; Adams v. Trigg, 85 Mo. 180; Martindale v. Brown, 18 Ind. 284; Wood v. Wood, 51 Ind. 141; Keller v. Jordan, 46 N. E. 343, 147 Ind. 113; Thomas v. Chicago & E. Ry. Co., 39 N. E. 44, 139 Ind. 462; Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 485; Ernest v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., 72 N. E. 1136, 34 Ind. App. 409; Foster v. Lindley, 50 N. E. 367, 20 Ind. App. 155).

A "final order" either terminates the action itself, decides some matter litigated by the parties, or operates to divest some right in such a manner as to put it out of the power of the court making the order, after the expiration of the term, to place the parties in their original condition. Thus where the court, in an action for personal injuries, instead of entering judgment upon the verdict containing the recital that by reason thereof the petition was dismissed and defendant allowed costs, entered judgment only for defendant's costs, but separate orders showed the giving of the peremptory instructions and return of the verdict in favor of the defendant, and that plaintiff's motion for a new trial was overruled, and an appeal prayed and granted, the judgment and the subsequent orders should be treated as a final judgment. Willis v. Maysville & B. S. Ry. Co., 92 S. W. 604, 606, 122 Ky. 658, 13 Ann. Cas. 74 (quoting and adopting Maysville & L. Ry. Co. v. Punnett, 15 B. Mon. [54 Ky.] 48).

A judgment merely awarding costs to defendant is not a "final judgment," but, to be final, it must state that he be dismissed without day, or that it is considered that plaintiff take nothing by the suit, or otherwise refer to the disposition of the subject-matter. De Armit v. Town of Whitmer, 60 S. E. 136, 137, 63 W. Va. 300.

The word "judgment" in Code, § 4100, giving the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction over all judgments except as otherwise provided by law, and section 3769, providing that every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment, means a final judgment. Thus a judgment for costs, which does not finally determine the rights of the parties, is not final and appealable; costs being merely incidental to the main action. Keller v. Harrison (Iowa) 129 N. W. 57, 58.

Order in contempt proceedings

A decree denying and dismissing a petition that defendant trustees be adjudged in contempt for not paying to complainant a specified sum in satisfaction of a decree previously entered determines the right of complainant, and is a "final decree," within Const. Amend. art. 12, § 1 (Laws 1903, p. 2, c. 1089), granting to the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction on all questions of law and equity. Jastram v. McAuslan, 71 Atl. 454, 456, 29 R. I. 390, 17 Ann. Cas. 320.

Judgment or order by default or on plea in abatement Judgment by default is a "final" one from which an appeal will lie. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. McCormick, 89 Pac. 186, 187, 46 Wash. 45.

Order relating to demurrer

"A judgment, to be 'final,' must put an end to the suit." A judgment of the superior court on demurrer to a cross-bill in answer to the original bill, adjudging it insufficient, with leave to amend, is not a final judgment on which a writ of error can be brought. Treadway v. Coe, 21 Conn. 283, 284.

An order overruling a general demurrer to a bill of complaint is a "final decree or order" within the law allowing appeals from any final decree or order in the nature of a decree. Darcey v. Bayne, 66 Atl. 434, 435, 105 Md. 365, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863; Mayor, etc., of Hyattsville v. Smith, 66 Atl. 44, 45, 105 Md. 318.

An order sustaining a demurrer to a petition, but not dismissing the petition, is interlocutory and therefore not appealable. Metzger v. Kelly, 34 App. D. C. 548, 549.

A judgment sustaining a general demurrer is a "final judgment," and is as conclusive as if rendered upon a hearing of the facts, and a judgment sustaining a general demurrer to a complaint is a bar to another action between the same parties on the same cause of action, though the judgment dismissed the action without giving plaintiff an opportunity to amend. Carpenter v. Landry, 101 S. W. 277, 278, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 506.

A judgment refusing to allow a general demurrer to a petition to be amended is not a "final judgment," nor would a judgment allowing the amendment have been a final disposition of the cause, so as to authorize a writ of error to the judgment first named while the case was pending in the trial court. Henderson v. State, 51 S. E. 385, 386, 123 Ga. 465.

Decree or judgment of dismissal or nonsuit

A judgment dismissing a suit without prejudice to plaintiff, on the ground that the account sued on was not itemized as the law directs, is not a "final adjudication" of the rights of the parties so as to sustain a plea of res adjudicata. Wilson & Gray v. May Pants Co. (Miss.) 37 South. 818.

An order refusing a nonsuit is not appealable until after final judgment, but an order granting a nonsuit is appealable at once. Bowen v. Johnson, 69 S. E. 294, 295, 87 S. C. 250.

Where both parties introduced their evidence, and plaintiff's evidence supported a judgment for him, and defendant made no motion for a judgment of dismissal, a judgment, though termed a dismissal, was a "final" decision, and deemed excepted to, within Code Civ. Proc. § 647, and not a judgment of "nonsuit," within section 581, authorizing a nonsuit, on motion of defendant, on plaintiff failing to prove a case. Saul v. Moscone, 118 Pac. 452, 454, 16 Cal. App. 506.

A judgment of nonsuit, though not res judicata of the merits of the controversy between the parties, is nevertheless a final judgment, reviewable on writ of error. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Manning, 177 Fed. 893, 894, 101 C. C. A. 107.

A decree sustaining demurrers to a cross-bill and dismissing the same is not a "final decree," within Code 1907, § 2837, authorizing appeals from final decrees. Aston v. Dodson, 49 South. 856, 857, 161 Ala. 518.

A judgment of compulsory nonsuit, entered by a federal court in Pennsylvania in conformity to the state practice is a "final judgment," and reviewable on writ of error. Fadley v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 153 Fed. 514, 517, 82 C. C. A. 464.

Where in a suit in chancery to compel an executor charged with fraud in the management of an estate, to account, the executor answered, denying that he had any assets and expressed a willingness to have an accounting, and subsequently filed in the probate court an accounting, an order denying a petition to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction was not a final order because it did not deprive him of any supposed right or fix on him any liability, and it was not appealable. Whether an order in a chancery case is final is determined by its effect on the rights of the parties, and the fact that by a petition of defendant to dismiss the suit the jurisdiction of the court is challenged does not determine the question whether the order denying the petition is a final and appealable order. Brooks v. Hargrave, 127 N. W. 689, 162 Mich. 599.

A judgment in favor of the defendants in justice court, dismissing an action of forcible entry and unlawful detainer and for costs, upon the withdrawal of the plaintiff from the trial of the case, is a "final judgment," and appealable by the plaintiff. Van Vlissingen v. Oliver, 113 N. W. 383, 384, 102 Minn. 237.

The order of a justice of the peace, dismissing an action and taxing costs against plaintiff, is a "final judgment," from which an appeal may be taken as authorized by Justices' Code, § 99. Jackson v. Berndt, 123 N. W. 76, 24 S. D. 14.

An order dismissing a remonstrance filed to a drainage petition, because not signed by a sufficient number of property owners, is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken, under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 671, authorizing appeals from final judgments, which contemplates a judgment making a final disposition of the subject-matter of the litigation as to all parties, and putting an end to all issues arising between them regarding such subject-matter, to the full extent of the power of the court to dispose of them. Crow v. Evans, 100 N. E. 8, 178 Ind. 661.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3367, provides for the trial of issues raised by the petition and answer in a condemnation proceeding by the court or referee. Section 3369 provides for judgment on the decision of the court or referee, and provides that, if in favor of the defendant, the petition shall be dismissed, with costs, but, if in favor of plaintiff, the judgment shall adjudge that condemnation is necessary, and the court shall thereupon appoint commissioners to ascertain the compensation, nothing being said as to costs being included in this judgment. Section 3371 provides that, upon confirmation of the commissioners' report, the final order shall be entered directing payment of the compensation, and that thereupon plaintiff shall be entitled to possession. Section 3372 provides for an offer by the plaintiff to purchase the property, and that if the offer is not accepted, and the compensation awarded by the commissioners does not exceed the offer no costs shall be allowed, but that if the compensation exceeds the offer, or if no offer is made, the court shall in the final order direct that the defendant recover the costs of the proceeding at the same rate as where the defendant is the prevailing party in an action. It also provides that if a trial has been had, and the issues determined in favor of plaintiff, costs of the trial caused by the interposition of the unsuccessful defendant shall be allowed plaintiff. Section 3373 provides that upon entry of the final order it shall be attached to the judgment roll, and the amount directed to be paid as compensation, or costs, or expenses, shall be docketed as a judgment. Held, that a judgment dismissing the petition, entered on a decision in favor of defendant, is a "final judgment"; but the judgment directing the appointment of commissioners, entered on a decision in favor of plaintiff, is interlocutory. Marshall v. Hatfield, 138 N. Y. Supp. 733, 735.

Decree in habeas corpus proceedings

Habeas corpus to determine the right to the custody of a child is a civil proceeding, and the judgment rendered therein, fixing the custody of the child, is a "final judgment" reviewable by the Supreme Court. Bleakly v. Smart, 87 Pac. 76, 79, 74 Kan. 476, 11 Ann. Cas. 125.

The test of finality for the purpose of an appeal is not necessarily whether the whole matter involved in the action is concluded, but whether the particular proceeding or action is terminated by the judgment. In a habeas corpus proceeding, the judgment of the court which either remands or discharges the petitioner is a "final judgment," notwithstanding the fact that another similar proceeding may be commenced by the petitioner if he elects to do so. Winnovich v. Emery, 93 Pac. 988, 991, 33 Utah, 345.

A decree in habeas corpus, refusing petitioner the custody of his minor child, and ordering that it be kept within the jurisdiction of the court, subject to further orders, the cause being continued on the docket, is a final decree, from which the petitioner may appeal. Hall v. Whipple (Tex.) 145 S. W. 308, 309.

Decree, judgment, or order in injunction proceedings

A "final judgment" is defined as one which puts an end to a suit, and is such as at once puts an end to the action by declaring that plaintiff has either entitled himself, or has not, to recover the remedy sued for. An "interlocutory judgment" is defined as one given in the course of the cause before final judgment, and is such as are given in the middle of the cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Hence a decree or order granting or dissolving an injunction which springs out of a suit or action pending, and is intended to operate only upon a final hearing, is an interlocutory order only and is not a final disposition of the cause, and under the statute the cause cannot be brought to the Supreme Court upon any bill of exceptions. Nacoochee Hydraulic Min. Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 309, 321 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; 3 Bl. Comm. pp. 396, 398).

In a suit for injunction and other relief, the court granted a temporary restraining order enjoining defendants. Subsequently, upon defendants' application and without notice to plaintiff, the court granted an order, modifying the restraining order previously granted, upon condition that defendants give a certain bond, and providing that, if plaintiff failed to give a bond required of him to indemnify defendants against damages from the suit, the restraining order should be dissolved, if defendants gave bond in a named sum to answer damages they might cause plaintiff by certain acts. Held, that the order modifying the temporary injunction, not being a final adjudication, cannot be reviewed on writ of error. Watterson v. Stubbs & Hodges, 69 S. E. 487, 135 Ga. 368.

Decree, judgment, or order as to intervention

A judgment or decree, in order to be "final" so as to be appealable, must terminate the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case, so that, if there should be an affirmance, the court would have nothing to do but to execute the judgment or decree it had already rendered. An order of the District Court in admiralty dismissing a petition filed by the claimant of a vessel libeled in a suit for salvage, and which had been sold in such proceedings, which petition asked that claimant's right to the fund in the registry of the court be summarily determined, and the claimant allowed to withdraw the same on substituting a bond, is not a final decision in the cause from which an appeal will lie. The Chief, 142 Fed. 349, 352, 73 C. C. A. 459.

Where land was sold in a suit for partition and a portion of the proceeds, belonging to a minor heir, was paid into the registry of the court, an order of the court denying a petition under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3498w, by one as next friend of such minor to be appointed guardian for such minor to receive the share of such minor in such proceedings was not a "final judgment" from which an appeal could be taken. Naylor v. Naylor (Tex.) 128 S. W. 475, 477.

Judgment of particular courts

A decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia on an appeal from the Commissioner of Patents, which affirms the latter's decision and directs the clerk of the court to "certify this opinion and proceedings in this court in the premises to the Commissioner of Patents, according to law," is not "final" within the meaning of Act Feb. 9, 1893 (27 Stat. 436, c. 74) § 8, defining the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court, since under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 4914, 4915, decisions on such appeals do not preclude any person interested from contesting the validity of the patent in court, and a remedy by bill in equity is given where a patent is refused. Frasch v. Moore, 29 Sup. Ct. 68, 211 U. S. 1, 53 L. Ed. 65.

A judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, affirming the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in an interference proceeding, and directing that its own decision be certified to the commissioner, as required by law, is not final for the purpose of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Johnson v. Mueser, 29 Sup. Ct. 390, 212 U. S. 283, 53 L. Ed. 514; E. C. Atkins & Co. v. Moore, 29 Sup. Ct. 390, 392, 212 U. S. 285, 53 L. Ed. 515.

An order rendered by a justice of the peace sustaining a motion to retax costs and retaxing the same is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken and a trial de novo had. Maggert v. Keele, 95 Pac. 466, 467, 20 Okl. 681.

Preliminary or special order or decree

An order removing a cause to the federal court is not a final judgment within Rev. St. 1909, § 2038, authorizing an appeal from a final judgment, and, since it is not one of the special orders mentioned therein from which an appeal is allowed, such an order is not appealable. State ex rel. Iba v. Mosman, 133 S. W. 38, 42, 231 Mo. 474.

Orders of a federal Circuit Court directing witnesses to answer the questions put to them, and produce written evidence in their possession, on their examination before a special examiner appointed in a suit brought by the United States to enjoin an alleged violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890 (26 U. S. St. 209, c. 647), lack the finality requisite to sustain an appeal to the Supreme Court. Alexander v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 356, 358, 201 U. S. 117, 50 L. Ed. 686.

An order entered in an action to recover damages from a carrier for violations of the interstate commerce act, requiring certain specified officers and employees who are not parties to produce relevant books and papers, is not, as to those persons, a "final decree" within the meaning of the provision of act March 3, 1891, § 6, governing writs of error from Circuit Courts of Appeals to the Circuit Courts, and hence will not sustain a writ of error sued out by them. Webster Coal & Coke Co. v. Cassatt, 28 Sup. Ct. 108, 110, 207 U. S. 181, 52 L. Ed. 160.

"A 'final judgment' is that by which the rights of the parties at issue on the merits of the suit are adjudicated upon and which may acquire the force of res adjudicata." Code Prac. art. 539; Cary v. Richardson, 35 La. Ann. 505. A judgment overruling the recusal of the regular judge of the court is final so as to be the subject of an appeal. State ex rel. Poché v. Judge, 7 South. 586, 587, 42 La. Ann. 317.

A citation to an executor to file an inventory, or an order of inquest in partition, is not a final appealable decree. In re Tressler's Estate, 77 Atl. 461, 228 Pa. 281.

Denial of a change of venue is a "final judgment" reviewable on certiorari. Carpenter v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 80 Atl. 657, 84 Vt. 538.

An order granting a motion to quash an alternative writ of mandamus, but allowing relator to amend as he may be advised, is not such a "final judgment" as will support a writ of error. State ex rel. Alexander v. Landis, 89 South. 15, 50 Fla. 283 (citing Gates v. Hayner, 22 Fla. 325).

Under a statute declaring that a "judgment" is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding, an order quashing the service of summons without dismissing the action was not a "final judgment" and was not appealable. Honerline Min. & Mill Co. v. Tailerday Steel Pipe & Tank Co., 85 Pac. 626, 627, 30 Utah, 449.

An order denying a motion to require plaintiff to make his complaint more definite and certain is not appealable until final judgment. Miles v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 69 S. E. 292, 293, 87 S. C. 254.

Decree, judgment, or order in probate proceedings

Though a decree of distribution of a decedent's estate made by a district court is, under Code Civ. Proc. § 445, a "final judgment," from which an appeal lies, and an order refusing to vacate the decree is therefore a special order after final judgment, the order is not appealable under subdivision 2 of section 1722, as amended by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 146, authorizing appeals from such orders, as that subdivision does not apply to orders in probate proceedings, except in so far as it is made applicable by other provisions, such as section 2921, providing for an appeal from an order granting or denying a motion for a new trial in such proceedings; the term "final judgment" being used in such subdivision 2 only with reference to such judgments at common law, and not applying to statutory determinations and orders termed "orders and judgments" in probate proceedings. In re Kelly's Estate, 79 Pac. 244, 31 Mont. 356.

Order relating to receivers

Where a final decree has been entered in a foreclosure suit awarding judgment and attorney's fees in favor of the judgment creditor, and subsequently the judgment is satisfied of record by the creditor as provided by statute, and the court on motion of the attorney who procured the judgment vacates the satisfaction thereof and enters an order adjudging the attorney to be the equitable assignee of the judgment in the amount of fees owing him and ordering execution to issue out of the original action in favor of the attorney, such judgment is a final judgment within Rev. Codes, § 4807, subd. 1, providing that an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court from a final judgment in an action or special proceeding. Dahlstrom v. Featherstone, 110 Pac. 243, 244, 18 Idaho, 179.

A "final decree" is one which disposes of the cause either by sending it out of the court before a hearing is had on the merits, or, after a hearing on the merits, decreeing either in favor of or against the prayer of the bill. An order appointing a receiver of a corporation, entered at the same term but subsequent to the rendition of a judgment against it, is a "final judgment," and the order is after affirmance by the Court of Civil Appeals reviewable in the Supreme Court under the statute authorizing appeals from final judgments, etc. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State (Tex.) 106 S. W. 326, 329 (quoting Freem. Judgm. § 29).

A decree granting an injunction and appointing a receiver for an insolvent corporation under Laws 1905, c. 79, §§ 72, 73, is a final decree within the organic act, relating to appeals and writs of error. Eagle Min. & Imp. Co. v. Lund, 113 Pac. 840, 841, 15 N. M. 696; Sacramento Valley Irr. Co. v. Lee, 113 Pac. 834, 836, 15 N. M. 587.

An order directing the sale of property by a receiver is final and appealable. Boothe v. Summit Coal Mining Co., 110 Pac. 536, 537, 59 Wash. 610.

Judgment or order of reversal and remand

A decree which reversed some of the findings and conclusions of law of the court below in an action for an accounting, and directed a new decree to be entered in accordance with the opinion of the court, is not a "final decree" for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Earle v. Myers, 28 Sup. Ct. 86, 87, 207 U. S. 244, 52 L. Ed. 191.

Where leave to issue stocks and bonds for corporate purposes was denied by the Public Service Commission, and a writ of certiorari was taken to the Appellate Division, its order annulling the ruling of the Public Service Commission, and referring the case back to it for further consideration, was not a "final order," within the Constitution and Code Civ. Proc. § 190, providing that appeals from actual determinations may be made from the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court to the Court of Appeals. People ex rel. Long Acre Electric Light & Power Co. v. Public Service Commission for First Dist. of State of New York, 92 N. E. 629, 199 N. Y. 254.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 806, authorizing appeals from any final judgment, an order of the Circuit Court remanding a cause transferred to it by a justice of the peace, entered under the authority of section 3951, authorizing the Circuit Court to remand to the justice a cause which has been transferred as involving title to land, where the court is of the opinion that the "statement" filed does not show that title is in issue, is not a "final judgment," and is not appealable. Walker v. Walker, 96 S. W. 418, 419, 119 Mo. App. 603.

Order in special proceedings

The highway act (Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123; Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7793) provides for a hearing de novo in the circuit court on appeal from decisions of the board of commissioners, and authorizes the Supreme Court to finally determine the cause or to refer it back to the county board. A judgment of the circuit court authorized the highway improvements petitioned for, made final disposition of all the questions involved in the appeal, and certified it back to the board of commissioners, with directions to proceed according to the law; and no motion was made to modify the judgment. Held, that the judgment was a "final judgment," and appealable to the Supreme Court under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 644 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 671), permitting an appeal to the Supreme Court from all final judgments, and Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1393 (Acts 1907, p. 137, c. 96) requiring appeals in proceedings to establish highways to be taken directly to the Supreme Court. Hall v. McDonald, 85 N. E. 707, 710, 171 Ind. 9.

Under 1 Mills' Ann. St. § 1727, relating to eminent domain, and providing that an appeal or writ of error lies only on final determination of the special proceeding in the trial court, the only final judgment in such proceeding is the judgment approving the award of the commissioners, or the verdict of a jury as to the damages, and an order determining that petitioner has the power to condemn is interlocutory merely, and no appeal therefrom or writ of error thereto lies. Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Colorado Eastern R. Co., 100 Pac. 607, 609, 45 Colo. 222, 18 Ann. Cas. 1002.

An order of the county court modifying and approving the report of the commissioners of a drainage district organized under the levee act, consisting of surveys, plans, and estimates of the cost of repair work to be done on the system, is not a "final judgment" and is not an appealable order, since section 25 of that act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 42) allows appeals only to review judgments confirming the assessment and ordering it spread upon the records. Drainage Com'rs of Union Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Milligan, 81 N. E. 382-384, 227 Ill. 303.

Commissioners of a drainage district filed a petition for an assessment, praying that the commissioners, in lieu of a jury, be ordered to make an assessment for benefits, etc. This prayer was granted. The commissioners made an assessment for benefits, and afterwards, on objection, they vacated all orders made since the filing of the petition. Held, that the order authorizing the commissioners to assess the benefits was not a "final judgment," and hence the order vacating it was not appealable under the statute providing for appeal from the order confirming the assessment. Lacey Levee & Drainage Dist. v. Langellier, 74 N. E. 148, 149, 215 Ill. 271.

On a complaint under the Maine bastardy statute, the adjudication and order of the presiding justice that the defendant is adjudged the father of the child, and that he stand charged with its maintenance and the assistance of the mother, constitutes the "final judgment"; and no surrender of the defendant in court on any day of the term thereafter will operate as a discharge of the sureties on his bond. Corson v. Dunlap, 14 Atl. 933, 934, 80 Me. 354; Brett v. Murphy, 14 Atl. 934, 935, 80 Me. 358.

Supplemental orders

The "final judgment" in Code Civ. Proc. § 1251, providing that plaintiff in condemnation proceedings must, within 30 days after final judgment, pay the sum assessed, etc., is the judgment fixing the amount of damages, and is not the final order of condemnation authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1253, providing that, where the sum assessed in a condemnation proceeding has been paid, the court may make a final order of condemnation. Lincoln Northern Ry. Co. v. Wiswell, 97 Pac. 536, 537, 8 Cal. App. 578; Same v. Clark, 97 Pac. 537, 8 Cal. App. xiii.

A judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals refusing to permit the filing of a transcript out of time on the ground that failure to file the same was inexcusable, is not a final judgment within Rev. St. 1895, art. 941, providing that all causes shall be carried to the Supreme Court on writs of error, upon final judgment, and hence such judgment is not reviewable in the Supreme Court on writ of error. Casey v. Bell, 137 S. W. 918, 919, 104 Tex. 338.

Order vacating judgment or granting new trial

An order vacating a default decree of divorce and allowing defendant to answer in accordance with L. O. L. § 59, is not an appealable order, within section 548, providing that appeals will lie from final judgment and decrees, in effect determining the action and orders setting aside the judgment and granting a new trial, for the order is not a final one determining the suit, and neither is it an order granting a new trial which is defined by section 173 as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after judgment, for this order only vacates a default, and there has been no trial which is defined by section 113 as the judicial examination of the issues between the parties. Taylor v. Taylor, 121 Pac. 431, 432, 61 Or. 257.

An order vacating a judgment for want of service on a defendant entitled notice of the proceedings as required by statute, is not final, so that an appeal will not lie therefrom. Molloy v. Union Transfer, Moving & Storage Co., 111 Pac. 160, 162, 60 Wash. 331.

FINAL DETERMINATION

Under Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 21, providing that, if complaint is made to the Commissioner of Labor that a contractor with a city for public work is failing to comply with the law as to paying the prevailing rate of wages, he shall, if he finds it well founded, present evidence thereof to the board having charge of the work, which shall take the proper proceedings to revoke the contract, the functions of the Commissioner are merely advisory; and his determination is not conclusive, within Code Civ. Proc. § 2122, providing that, except as otherwise expressly prescribed, certiorari cannot issue to review a determination not finally determining the rights of the parties. Keystone State Const. Co. v. Williams, 137 N. Y. Supp. 405, 407, 152 App. Div. 575.

FINAL DISPOSITION

The words "final disposition of the cause," in Bankr. Act July 26, 1876 (19 Stat. 102), which limits the time within which a bankrupt may apply for a discharge from his debts to a time "before the final disposition of the cause," mean the final disposition of the administration of the estate, and it is too late for him to apply for a discharge after his assignee has been discharged from all liability as assignee to any creditor. In re Brightman, 4 Fed. Cas. 136, 137, 14 Blatchf. 130.

The term "final disposition," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 3, subd. 3, c. 541, 30 Stat. 546, defining an act of bankruptcy, does not mean a gift of the property to some third person or a voluntary transfer to the creditors in satisfaction of a preferential judgment, but includes every other method than that specified of passing the control and dominion of the property, either absolutely or as security. In re Tupper, 163 Fed. 766, 770.

A judgment on a motion for nonsuit, sustaining or denying the same, is a "final disposition of the cause" within Civ. Code 1895, § 5526, providing that no cause shall be carried to the Supreme Court unless the judgment complained of, if it had been rendered as claimed by plaintiff in error, would have been a final disposition of the cause. Rice v. Ware & Harper, 60 S. E. 301, 303, 3 Ga. App. 573.

Where defendant in a penal action dies after judgment against him and before its reversal, the action is not dismissed nor finally disposed of in favor of or against a party within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3228, 3229, and neither party is entitled to costs on the entry of judgment of abatement. People v. Newcomb, 135 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 75 Misc. Rep. 258.

FINAL DISTRIBUTION

See On Final Distribution.

FINAL DIVISION

A decree in a divorce suit providing for the payment of a certain annual sum to the wife as alimony so long as she remained unmarried, in lieu of all other interest in her husband's estate, was not such a "final division and distribution" of the property as to preclude the court from afterwards entertaining a petition in relation to the wife's assignment of such alimony. Kempster v. Evans, 51 N. W. 327, 328, 81 Wis. 247, 15 L. R. A. 391.

FINAL HEARING OR TRIAL

"Final hearing" is sometimes used to describe the stage of the proceedings which relates to the determination of the suit on its merits, as distinguished from those of preliminary questions, which are termed "interlocutory." McArthur Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 83 N. E. 334, 335, 197 Mass. 137.

Since the hearing on a motion to set aside the service is not a "final hearing" of the cause, no statutory docket fee can be taxed therefor. Michigan Aluminum Foundry Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 190 Fed. 903, 904.

FINAL JUDGMENT

See Final Decree or Judgment.

FINAL JURISDICTION

The words "final jurisdiction," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1483, relating to prosecuting attorneys of criminal courts of common pleas filing informations for offenses occurring within the period within which such courts respectively have final jurisdiction, mean a jurisdiction to try the cause and upon conviction to impose the full penalty prescribed, as distinguished from a jurisdiction given in respect to offenses the punishment whereof may be greater or less than that which a justice court can impose. State v. Compagne, 57 Atl. 164, 76 Conn. 549.

The words "final jurisdiction," in Gen. St. 1902, § 1446, depriving inferior courts of final jurisdiction of offenses punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, refer to the power to sentence or acquit, as distinguished from the power to bind over. State v. Fox, 76 Atl. 302, 304, 83 Conn. 286, 19 Ann. Cas. 682.

FINAL LOCATION

The charter of a railroad authorized it to construct a road from a point at or near the southern boundary of a certain city to a certain other point, and commencing at the latter point the road condemned a right of way and constructed its line to a point about three miles distant from the municipal boundary in question, but neither by the adoption of a survey, by resolution of the directors, nor by the acquiring of a right of way was the remainder of the line located. Held, that the road had not been finally located, so as to preclude the fixing of the northern terminus at a point beyond that to which the road had been built, under Acts 1887, p. 112, c. 39, authorizing the directors of a railroad company to change the terminus at any time prior to "final location." The "final location" is the location upon which the officers of the road finally decide.

As soon as the location is reached it is final and irrevocable, and all discretion theretofore existing in the railroad company as to the location of the road is exhausted. Memphis & St. L. R. Co. v. Union Ry. Co., 98 S. W. 1019, 1025, 116 Tenn. 500.

Where a railroad company was given five years under their charter to construct a railroad by making and filing their location on or before a certain date, the "final location" within the meaning of the privilege was the last location which the company under the terms of the charter could make before the expiration of the period covered. After the company had made a survey and staked out a tract across plaintiff's land, it purchased a strip of his land, taking a deed in which it was described as "covered by the location of the said railroad or that may finally be covered by such location." The Legislature subsequently granted the company a further time to file their location, and they made a different one across the plaintiff's land and filed the same; but the court held that the company obtained no rights under such new location under the deed. Hall v. Pickering, 40 Me. 548, 555.

FINAL ORDER

See, also, Final Decision; Final Decree or Judgment.

A "final order" is one which disposes of the whole subject-matter of the action, gives all the relief contemplated, provides with reasonable completeness for giving effect to the sentence, and leaves nothing to be done in the cause save to superintend ministerially the execution of the order. White Oak Ry. Co. v. Gordon, 56 S. E. 837, 838, 61 W. Va. 518 (citing Ludlow v. City of Norfolk, 12 S. E. 612, 87 Va. 319; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 12 S. E. 613, 87 Va. 349; Burch v. Hardwicke, 23 Grat. [64 Va.] 51; Alexander v. Byrd, 8 S. E. 577, 85 Va. 690; Pack v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 5 W. Va. 118; Wheeling Bridge & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Wheeling Steel & Iron Co., 24 S. E. 651, 41 W. Va. 747).

"Final orders" in special proceedings are in the nature of judgments. Snively v. Bugby Co., 12 Pac. 522, 523, 36 Kan. 106.

"A 'final order' either terminates the action itself, decides some matter litigated by the parties, or operates to divest some right in such a manner as to put it out of the power of the court making the order after the expiration of the term to place the parties in their original condition." Thus an order directing a sale of mortgaged property in a suit to foreclose the lien, entered before the entry of a judgment of foreclosure, was a "final order" and appealable. Tipton v. Harris (Ky.) 87 S. W. 1074, 1075 (quoting Maysville & L. R. Co. v. Punnett, 15 B. Mon. [54 Ky.] 47). But an order refusing to transfer an action against a foreign corporation and residents to the federal court, on the ground that the petition does not state a cause of action against the residents, is not final and appealable, since during the trial, on it developing that plaintiff had no reasonable grounds on which to base the allegation that the residents were liable, the court must find for the residents, and transfer the case to the federal court. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Helton's Adm'r, 182 S. W. 1024, 1025, 141 Ky. 404.

An order confirming or refusing to confirm a foreclosure sale is a "final order" affecting a substantial right made on a summary application in an action after judgment, within St. 1898, § 3069, subd. 2, and is appealable. Griswold v. Bardon, 130 N. W. 952, 953, 146 Wis. 35. So is an order made after the expiration of the statutory period for serving a bill of exceptions, extending the time for service. Sly v. Village of Kilbourn City, 128 N. W. 872, 873, 144 Wis. 203. But an order setting aside a default judgment in an action on a benefit certificate by the devisee of the assured, and staying proceedings till distribution of the estate, is not a "final order" affecting a substantial right, and is not appealable. Such order is not final in any such sense as that it concludes or ends the controversy. It leaves everything open for future proceedings and investigation. Its effect upon the rights of the parties is a test whether it is a final order. Ledebuhr v. Grand Grove of Wisconsin of the Order of Druids, 72 N. W. 884, 885, 97 Wis. 341.

In Rev. St. 1899, § 4247, providing for review of a judgment or final order, and section 4249 declaring that an order affecting a substantial right, which in effect determines the action or prevents a judgment, and an order affecting a substantial right in a special proceeding, is a "final order" which may be reviewed in the Supreme Court, the term "special proceeding" as so used is not limited to a proceeding apart from an action, but includes a necessary proceeding to aid the ultimate relief sought in an action, and hence an order denying a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction before judgment is a final order, terminating a special proceeding, and reviewable on writ of error. Anderson v. Englehart, 105 P. 571, 572, 18 Wyo. 196, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 894. And an order dismissing an appeal from justice court for irregularity is also a "final order," as defined by said section 4247. Mayott v. Knott, 92 Pac. 240, 241, 16 Wyo. 108.

An order rendered by a justice of the peace sustaining a motion to retax costs and retaxing the same is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken and a trial de novo had, but it is a "final order," defined by the statute as one affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding, or upon a summary application in an action after judgment, and it may be reviewed on petition in error. Maggert v. Keele, 95 Pac. 466, 467, 20 Okl. 681.

An order denying a petition to vacate a judgment is a "final order," within Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6500, subd. 7 (Pierce's Code, § 1048), authorizing appeal from any final order made after judgment affecting a substantial right, if not a final judgment within subdivision 1 of the same section. Kath v. Histogenetic Medicine Co., 97 Pac. 464, 50 Wash. 454.

An order made by a District Court of Alaska setting aside a prior judgment of such court and granting a new trial is not appealable under Codes Alaska, pt. 4, c. 51, § 504, which gives the right of appeal from a "final judgment or order," but such order may be reviewed on appeal by the Circuit Court of Appeals for want of jurisdiction in the court to make it. Nelson v. Meehan, 155 Fed. 1, 3, 83 C. C. A. 597, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 374.

An order denying a motion to strike from a judgment a provision directing that execution issue against the person of the defendant after return of execution against his property unsatisfied was a final order within the meaning of Carter's Ann. Code Civ. Proc. Alaska, § 504, which permits a writ of error from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, to review a final order of a District Court of Alaska. Mitchell v. Porter, 194 Fed. 49, 54, 114 C. C. A. 69.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2058, authorizes an appeal "from an order refusing to grant a writ of habeas corpus * * * or from a final order, made upon the return of such a writ, to discharge or remand a prisoner or to dismiss the proceedings. * * * An appeal does not lie from an order of the court or judge before which or whom the writ is made returnable except" as thus prescribed. Held, that an order refusing to dismiss a writ of habeas corpus and continuing the proceeding in force was not a "final order," and was not appealable. People ex rel. Duryee v. Duryee, 81 N. E. 813, 814, 188 N. Y. 440.

On motion to punish a third party for contempt for failing to appear and submit to an examination pursuant to an order of a justice, an order requiring such party to appear and submit to an examination, otherwise the commitment to issue, was not a "final order," and no appeal therefrom would lie. Siegel v. Solomon, 92 N. Y. Supp. 238, 239.

Where the surrogate court on petition of attorney for contestant continued an administrator's accounting because he had made secret settlements and had procured the withdrawal of objections, and to allow the attorney who claimed a lien on such account to establish his lien, the order of the Appellate Division dismissing the attorney's petition and denying his right to establish such lien was a "final order" in a special proceeding and appealable. In re Fitzsimons, 66 N. E. 554, 556, 174 N. Y. 15.

Where an order on the settlement of accounts of trustees provided that the wives of certain bankrupt beneficiaries were not entitled to dower, authorized commissions to the trustees, and, after ruling on matters presented by other parties in interest, reserved a question for further consideration, and required the auditor to restate his account so as to conform to the terms of the order, it was not a final order, but was an "appealable order," within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 5, § 27, authorizing an appeal from an order determining a question of right between the parties, and directing an account to be stated on the principal of such determination; and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, it was reviewable on appeal from the final order as authorized by section 28. Slingluff v. Hubner, 61 Atl. 326, 328, 101 Md. 652.

As an order, overruling objections to an application for the appointment of commissioners to determine the necessity of a proposed highway and appointing commissioners, is not a final order within Code Civ. Proc. § 2550, defining a "final order" as the final determination of the rights of the parties, on appeal resulting in affirmance with costs of the appeal, the costs must be awarded in accordance with section 3239, providing for costs on appeal from an interlocutory order, and not in accordance with section 3240, providing for costs in a special proceeding, and the costs must be limited to $10 and disbursements, as provided by section 3251. In re Van Dusen, 116 N. Y. Supp. 915, 916, 132 App. Div. 592.

Where the Appellate Division, on appeal from a decree denying probate, decided that the Surrogate's Court erred in excluding certain evidence, and reversed and remanded the case without directions, its order was not a final order under Const. art. 6, § 9, and Code Civ. Proc. § 190, subd. 1, permitting appeals as matter of right to the Court of Appeals from an order finally determining a special proceeding, so that that court has no jurisdiction of an appeal from the order. In re Gibson's Will, 88 N. E. 1100, 1102, 195 N. Y. 466.

An order by the superior court of Cincinnati that a default judgment rendered by such court at a previous term be suspended and execution thereon stayed until the case should be tried on its merits, and granting leave to defendant to answer, is an order affecting a substantial right in a summary application after judgment, and is a final order within Rev. St. § 6707, providing that an order affecting a substantial right, made upon a summary application in an action after judgment, is a "final order," from which error may be prosecuted. Van Ingen v. Berger, 92 N. E. 433, 434, 82 Ohio St. 255, 19 Ann. Cas. 799.

An order of dismissal for want of prosecution and awarding costs is a final order within Rev. St. § 6707, reviewable on error to the common pleas in the circuit court. Lowellville Coal Mining Co. v. Zappio, 89 N. E. 97, 100, 80 Ohio St. 458.

An order dismissing, for want of sufficient evidence, without prejudice to a renewal thereof on further evidence, an application on affidavits to set aside a decree of divorce, claimed, as attempted to be shown in the affidavits to have been procured by fraud and duress of plaintiff's husband, is "final" and appealable, at least in the absence of a showing that the provision for leave to renew was inserted by request of and for the benefit of plaintiff. Lake v. Lake, 108 N. Y. Supp. 964, 965, 124 App. Div. 89.

An order sustaining a demurrer to a petition for certiorari, unaccompanied by any application for leave to amend, or final order denying the petition, or any final judgment, does not determine the case, and, under Civ. Code 1901, para. 441, 1214, 1493, permitting appeals from final judgments, no appeal lies from the order. Aiton v. Board of Medical Examiners, 108 Pac. 221, 222, 13 Ariz. 74.

The order appointing commissioners on drainage proceedings is not a "final order affecting substantial rights," from which an appeal will lie. In re Horicon Drainage Dist., 108 N. W. 198, 201, 129 Wis. 42.

"A final order in a special proceeding" to be appealable is one which determines and disposes finally of the proceeding, one which so long as it stands precludes any further steps therein. It bears the same relation to the proceeding in which it is entered as the final judgment bears to an action. Kingston v. Kingston, 102 N. W. 577, 578, 124 Wis. 263.

An order, in a proceeding to establish a drainage district, confirming the commissioners' report and finding the district duly established, is not a "final order" from which an appeal will lie; but the order which terminates the proceeding and constitutes a basis for review is the order of confirmation of the assessment roll. Damon v. Barker, 88 N. E. 278, 279, 239 Ill. 637.

An order made, vacating a judgment for the purpose of permitting a party against whom said judgment is rendered to prosecute or defend, is interlocutory, and not a "final order," from which an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court. Maddle v. Beavers, 104 Pac. 909, 24 Okl. 703.

"The action of a taxing board is, in its nature, a 'final order' which cannot be at-attached collaterally, and can only be reviewed on error or appeal." State ex rel. Union Pac. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization and Assessment, 115 N. W. 789, 791, 81 Neb. 139.

A ruling of the district court that a claim against an estate was equitable and not triable as a legal action, and that both the county and the district court were without jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy as a law action or special statutory proceeding, was not a "final order" disposing of the merits of the controversy, and from which error could be prosecuted. Huffman v. Rhodes, 100 N. W. 159, 160, 72 Neb. 57.

An order of the district court overruling a motion to dismiss an appeal to that court from a judgment of a justice of the peace is not a "final order" so as to be appealable. Raymond v. Raymond, 79 Pac. 1056, 1057, 32 Mont. 170.

An order striking the complaint from the files, on the ground that it contains several causes of action not separately stated, is not final, as plaintiff may file an amended complaint, and therefore is not appealable. Vaktaren Pub. Co. v. Pacific Tribune Pub. Co., 83 Pac. 426, 41 Wash. 355.

An order refusing to require a nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs is not a "final order" within the statute authorizing appeals from "final orders." Boggs v. Inter-American Mining & Smelting Co., 66 Atl. 259, 262, 105 Md. 371.

Complainant, having obtained an injunction against the maintenance of certain suits in a state court affecting its water rights, and right to cut off service in order to coerce payment of back debts, filed a bill, the object of which was to have defendants made parties to the original bills, and to obtain against them a perpetual injunction restraining further prosecution of certain suits which defendants had brought in a state court for the same purpose. Held, that an order modifying a temporary restraining order against defendants, so as to permit them to prosecute their suits in the state court with reference to questions not determined in the prior proceedings, but not determining the cause on the merits nor ordering that the bill or motion be dismissed, was not a "final order" from which an appeal could be taken. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. v. City of Vicksburg, 153 Fed. 116, 120, 82 C. C. A. 250.

An order of the city court of Salt Lake City, after final judgment in the original action, setting aside and releasing a garnishment, was "final" and appealable within the statute providing for an appeal in garnishment proceedings. Hewlett Bros. v. Mallett, 117 Pac. 68, 70, 39 Utah, 357.

Defendant telephone company having been temporarily enjoined from severing its connection with plaintiff telephone company, and from interfering in any way with the service between plaintiff's exchange and its own exchanges, upon its attempt to end an agreement for interchange of business with plaintiff, and establish such relations with another company, the cut lines were restored, but thereafter, while the patrons of plaintiff were given connection with subscribers of defendant, yet defendant gave such other company exclusive connection for all business originating on its lines refusing to send messages over plaintiff's lines. Defendant was thereupon adjudged to have violated the injunction, and ordered to restore the service existing before the wires were severed, giving the subscribers of each of the exchanges connections both ways. Held, that the order was not a "final order," and was not appealable. Rural Home Telephone Co. v. Kentucky & I. Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 847, 848.

The action of a court in granting or denying a motion for a new trial is not a "final order" from which an appeal lies. First Nat. Bank v. McCullough, 93 Pac. 366, 369, 50 Or. 508, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105, 128 Am. St. Rep. 758.

Where a motion by defendant to strike certain portions of plaintiff's petition is sustained, the order is not a final or appealable one, authorizing an appeal from such action. Grunawalt v. Grunawalt, 104 Pac. 905, 906, 24 Okl. 756.

An order vacating an order appointing a trustee under a will, on the ground that the Special Term was without jurisdiction to make the appointment, is a "final order" in a special proceeding, and is appealable to the Court of Appeals. In re Earnshaw, 89 N. E. 825, 826, 196 N. Y. 330.

An order directing the parties to a divorce suit to convey real property to a trustee for the benefit of their minor children was a final order, affecting a substantial right from which they could appeal. Lowe v. Lowe, 101 Pac. 704, 705, 53 Wash. 50.

An order of the court on appeal from the assessment of damages in a ditch proceeding, under Gen. Laws 1905, p. 303, c. 230, assessing appellant's damages and directing judgment to be entered, is not a final order and appealable within the terms of that statute. Prael v. Brown County, 116 N. W. 483, 104 Minn. 227; Adams v. Same, 116 N. W. 484, 104 Minn. 527.

Where the result of an election showed an apparent majority of two in favor of prohibition, but the result as certified by the board of canvassers was set aside by the contest board, which declared that it was unable to find from the evidence that a majority of the legal votes were cast either way, and therefore adjudged that the return of the board of canvassers be set aside, canceled, and held for naught, and further ordered and adjudged that there was no election and that neither party was entitled to have any fact certified concerning the election, the decision was a "final order or judgment," so that an appeal would lie from it to the Circuit Court under Ky. St. 1908, § 2587. Erwin v. Benton, 87 S. W. 291, 292, 120 Ky. 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 264.

FINAL PARTICIPATION

In Laws of Muskogee Nation 1880, p. 60, § 1, providing that all noncitizens, being married to citizens of this nation, shall enjoy all the privileges enjoyed by other citizens, except participation in annuities and "final participation" in the lands, it was not intended to exclude such a person from taking a child's part in the allotment of a deceased wife, but was intended to exclude him from the right to receive an allotment for himself. Sanders v. Sanders, 117 Pac. 888, 342, 28 Okl. 59.

FINAL PASSAGE

The "final passage of a bill" is, within the meaning of the constitutional provision providing that the vote must be taken by yeas and nays, the vote on which each house adopts the bill after it has passed its first and second readings and after it has been read again for the purpose of being put upon its passage. Johnson v. City of Great Falls, 99 Pac. 1059, 1060, 38 Mont. 369, 16 Ann. Cas. 974.

Los Angeles City Charter, § 39, provides that all ordinances finally adopted shall be published, and until such publication no ordinance shall be valid, but does not provide when it shall be published; and section 198b provides that no ordinance shall go into effect before 30 days from the time of its final passage and its approval by the mayor, and if during said 30 days a petition, signed by a certain number of electors, protesting against its passage, be presented to the council, the ordinance shall be suspended, and the council shall reconsider it, and, if it be not repealed, shall submit it to a vote of the electors. Held, that the 30-day period for filing the referendum petition commenced to run from the final passage of the ordinance by approval by the mayor, or its passage over his veto, and not from the date of its publication; the term "final passage" merely meaning favorable action on the ordinance by the council. Solomon v. Alexander, 118 Pac. 217, 219, 161 Cal. 810.

FINAL PORT OF DISCHARGE

Under shipping articles signed in New York for service on the vessel during a voyage to Port Arthur, Tex., "and back to final port of discharge, * * * with liberty to call at intermediate ports," where she loaded a cargo of oil at Port Arthur, in part for Philadelphia and in part for New York, the latter, as the port where she was completely discharged of her cargo, was the "final port of discharge," and the action of the seamen in leaving the vessel at Philadelphia after her partial discharge there, was in violation of the contract, and amounted to desertion which forfeited their right to wages. The Larimer, 174 Fed. 429, 430.

FINAL PROCEEDING

Where a judgment is recovered against executors in their representative capacity by the Supreme Court, an application to the surrogate to issue an execution on such judgment is a "final proceeding" de novo in the Surrogate's Court, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1825, 1826, to be commenced by the filing of a verified petition and an issue of citation, or an order to show cause, unless the issue and service of such citation or order is waived by the parties affected; service being had personally on each of the executors, in the absence of a showing that such service cannot be had with due diligence, in which case notice must be given in such manner as the surrogate directs. McGinn v. Lighthouse, 137 N. Y. Supp. 110, 111, 112.

FINAL SETTLEMENT

Where, in proceedings to surcharge the final settlement of a guardian with a larger charge on the item of the balance of the last annual settlement, the record did not show that any item of property of the ward had been omitted from the settlement, or that any credit was allowed except on items of credit specifically set out in the settlement, and the order of the probate court confirming the annual settlement became final for want of timely appeal, it was proper to refuse to surcharge the final settlement; the confirmation of the annual settlement being conclusive except against direct attack. France v. Shockey, 121 S. W. 1056, 1057, 92 Ark. 41.

Mills' Ann. St. § 4728, provides that a guardian may resign in writing to the county court having settlement of his accounts, and when such resignation is accepted, he shall be discharged, but shall not be exonerated from liability previous thereto, and that no resignation shall be accepted until the guardian has given notice of his intention, as in cases of final settlement, and shall have made a complete settlement of all matters up to the time of his resignation, and shall have delivered into court all evidences of title to property, papers, moneys, and choses in action in his hands. Held, that "final settlement" or "final accounting" implies an accounting or settlement after the severance of the relation between guardian and ward, including a settlement when the relation is severed by resignation, so that a settlement by a resigning guardian under such section, as well as a final settlement, as authorized by sections 2084 and 2093, when regularly made, is a judgment conclusive between the ward and the guardian and her sureties, unless impeached in the court in which it was rendered.

or fraud, or such other defects as would invalidate judgments generally. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore v. People, 104 Pac. 1, 83, 46 Colo. 394.

In administration of estates

"Final settlement" of an estate by an administrator comprehends a payment of the balance so as to leave nothing to be done to complete the trust. Mefford v. Lamkin, 76 N. E. 1024, 1025, 38 Ind. App. 33 (citing Dufour v. Dufour, 28 Ind. 421).

FINAL SUBMISSION

The term "final submission of the case to the jury" contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 30, providing that an action may be dismissed without prejudice to a future action, first, by the plaintiff before the "final submission of the case to the jury" or to the court where the trial is by the court, is the submission of an issue of fact on which the jury is at liberty to decide in favor of either party. Where a case has been submitted upon a demurrer to the evidence, plaintiff's absolute right to dismiss without prejudice is lost. The district court may, in the just exercise of discretionary power, permit plaintiff to dismiss his case after it has been finally submitted to the court or jury. But where the discretionary power of the court is not invoked, and the application to dismiss after final submission is made and allowed as a demandable right, the order of dismissal will not be upheld unless a denial of the application would amount to an abuse of discretion. See Bldg. Co. v. Dalton, 93 N. W. 930, 931, 68 Neb. 38, 4 Ann. Cas. 508.

Where the evidence is closed, the jury has returned their findings, and the case is ready for judgment, there is a "final submission" within the meaning of Gen. St. 1889, par. 4493, providing that an action may be dismissed without prejudice to a future action: First, by the plaintiff, before the "final submission" of the case to the jury, or to the court, where the trial is by the court. Dickman v. Crane, 57 Pac. 305, 306, 8 Kan. App. 95.

Rev. Codes, § 6714, subd. 6, provides that an action may be dismissed or a nonsuit entered by the court when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for more than six months. Held, that "final submission," as so used, meant a submission equivalent to the return of a verdict; and hence where relator was served with summons on February 20, 1894, but no entry of his default was made by the clerk until July 5, 1912, and on the same day judgment was entered on the default after hearing, there was no final submission until the entry of the default; and hence the action was not subject to dismissal under such section. State ex rel. Kohl v. District Court, 128 Pac. 32, 583, 46 Mont. 348.

Where plaintiff has rested and defendants have moved for directed verdict for failure of plaintiff to make a case, and the motion has been submitted and the conclusion of the court announced, there is a "final submission" under Rev. St. § 5314, and plaintiff cannot dismiss without prejudice to a future action. Turner v. Pope Motor Car Co., 86 N. E. 651, 655, 79 Ohio St. 153; Turner v. Pope Motor Car Co., 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 181, 184.

Within Code, § 3764, authorizing a dismissal by plaintiff before "final submission" of the case to the jury, until the jury proceeds or has been directed to proceed with the consideration of the case after the reading of the instructions, the cause is not "finally submitted" to the jury, nor to the court trying the case without a jury, until the cause is being considered or has been taken under advisement by the court. Inman Mfg. Co. v. American Cereal Co., 136 N. W. 932, 933, 155 Iowa, 651. But where on motion at the close of plaintiff's evidence the judge directed a verdict for defendant, and one of the jurors designated as foreman was in the act of signing a verdict by direction of the court, the case had been finally submitted, and an announcement of dismissal then made came too late. Duffy v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 141 Fed. 206, 207.

Within the statute requiring the jurors to be kept together after the case is "finally submitted," a cause is finally submitted at such time as the court directs the jury to enter upon its deliberations, and not necessarily at the conclusion of the charge. Thus where, at the conclusion of the reading of the court's charge, the jurors are permitted to separate for the purpose of the noon meal, being instructed that the cause has not then been finally submitted to them, and directed to return at 1 p. m. and retire to the jury room for deliberation, and being carefully admonished as to their conduct, and upon their return at the hour named the indictment, the court's written charge, and the blank verdicts are for the first time delivered to them, and they then retire to deliberate upon their verdict, the cause will be held to have been finally submitted at the hour of re-assembling and not at the time of such separation, and, in the absence of a showing that such separation has worked prejudice to the defendant, the fact of separation will not be ground for a new trial. State v. Ferrell, 69 N. E. 995, 996, 69 Ohio St. 521.

Code Civ. Proc. 1895, § 1004, subd. 6, provides that an action may be dismissed by the court, when after verdict or final submission the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand, and have it entered for more than six months. Held that, under the rule of noscitur a sociis, the words "final submission" mean a submission which is the equivalent of the return of a verdict, and refer to that state of the case when a judgment may rightfully be demanded as of course. State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court of Ninth Judicial Dist., 96 Pac. 337, 339, 37 Mont. 298.

FINAL TERMINATION

Under a stipulation that one suit should abide the result of another, and that the final termination of one should be the final termination of the other, there was no error in holding after a final judgment in the first case finding in favor of the plaintiff for the total amount of the insurance policy involved (allowing a small admitted credit for a premium returned) upon the trial of the suit on the policy involved in the second case (which was in all respects like the other policy save as to its amount), that a verdict and judgment should be entered for the full amount thereof, less the small deduction admitted to be proper on account of a return premium. Commercial Union Assur. Co. of London v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co., 60 S. E. 554, 555, 130 Ga. 191.

FINALLY

The word "finally" is defined to mean: "At the end or conclusion; ultimately; lastly." Bear v. Reese, 89 N. E. 522, 523, 44 Ind. App. 465.

"Final" and "finally" pertain to the conclusion and the end. "Finality" is as clear in meaning as "final." Both are derived from "finis," denoting the end; "precluding further controversy on the question passed upon, as the statute declaring that the decision of a specified court shall be final in that court" (Cent. Dict.). Also as indicating the end with respect to the suit (Bouvier; Black.). In relation to the writ of prohibition, and as used in Code Prac. La. art. 851, providing that "after the return of the judge ordered to make a return has answered, the superior court issuing the order shall pronounce 'finally and summarily' on the right of jurisdiction," the order of the court is final. State ex rel. Le Blanc v. Twenty-First Judicial District Democratic Committee, 47 South. 405, 407, 122 La. 83.

FINANCE

The word "finance" in an agreement by which one was to "finance" a corporation, meant that he was to loan to the corporation the money on which it was to do business and to take therefor the note of the corporation. Hobgood v. Ehlen, 53 S. E. 857, 859, 141 N. C. 344.

FINANCIAL

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENT

A person contracting to procure a purchaser of the corporate stock of two corporations or sufficient capital to develop their properties for a commission when the sale is made, or any financial arrangement is concluded with parties introduced by such person, and, when the consideration for the stock or funds to develop the properties received, is entitled to commissions only when he procures a purchaser of the stock or funds to develop the properties; the words "a financial arrangement" being construed with reference to the kind of financial arrangement which such person was employed to negotiate. Farjeon v. Indian Territory Illuminating Co. et al., 130 N. Y. Supp. 532, 534, 146 App. Div. 23.

FINANCIAL CORRESPONDENT

As managing agent, see Managing Agent.

FINANCIAL OFFICER

Where a municipality constructing a public building was a school district, and the board having charge of the work was the board of education, the "financial officer" within the meaning of a mechanic's lien law requiring notice of a claim to be filed with the "financial officer of the municipality," included both the district clerk, who was required to pay out, by orders drawn on the custodian of the school moneys, all school funds of the district, and the custodian, who is the officer intrusted with the finances of the district, and who receives and pays out its moneys. Hazard v. Board of Education of School Dist. of Borough of Swedesboro (N. J.) 75 Atl. 237, 239.

FINANCIAL STANDING OR CREDIT

As property, see Property.

FINANCIALLY SOLVENT

Where testator directed a trust fund be paid over to the beneficiary whenever it became "financially solvent" and able to pay all his just debts from other resources than the principal of the trust fund, the beneficiary, who was discharged from all debts at bankruptcy after testator's death, was entitled to receive the fund. In re Farmer Loan & Trust Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 1099, 11065 Misc. Rep. 418.

FIND—FOUND

The words "to the satisfaction of the jury," used in an instruction authorizing a verdict on proof to the satisfaction of the jury, etc., are equivalent to "find" or believe. Terre Haute Traction & Light Co. v. Payne, 89 N. E. 413, 417, 45 Ind. App. 132 (citing Callan v. Hanson, 53 N. W. 282, 86 Iowa, 426); Sams Automatic Car Coupler Co. v. League, 54 Pac. 642, 25 Colo. 129; Kenyon v. City of Mondovi, 73 N. W. 314, 98 Wis. 50; Torrey v. Burney, 21 South. 348, 113 Ala. 496).

Chinese persons were not "found unlawfully in the United States," so as to entitle them to a hearing as to their right to remain where, when they crossed the border into the United States at a point remote from the designated port of entry, they were within sight of inspectors, who, intending to prevent their unlawful entry, followed them closely until they had proceeded about one-fourth of a mile across the border, and until it was apparent that they intended to enter unlawfully, and, taking them into custody, conducted them immediately to the nearest port of entry for investigation of their right to enter; the term, "found unlawfully in the United States" referring to those Chinese persons who have entered, gone at large, and mixed with and become a part of the population. Hence such persons having been given opportunity to show their right to enter, and having remained mute, the inspector in charge had jurisdiction to exclude them. Ex parte Chok, 161 Fed. 627, 632.

A sheriff's return of service of notice of forfeiture of school land contracts, which states that "he found no one in possession" of the land, is not a finding or return that no one was in possession. True v. Brandt, 8 Pac. 826, 827, 72 Kan. 502.

In Rev. St. § 4965, prescribing a penalty for each copy of a copyrighted publication found in the possession of defendant, "found" means that there must be a time before the cause of action accrues at which they are found in the possession of defendant. Stern v. Jerome H. Remick & Co., 164 Fed. 781, 782 quoting and adopting definition in Thornton v. Schreiber, 8 Sup. Ct. 618, 622, 124 U. S. 13, 621, 81 L. Ed. 577.

As used in Rev. St. § 4965, prescribing a forfeiture and penalty against an infringer for every infringing copy of a copyrighted painting, etc., "found in his possession," the word "found" means that there must be a time before the cause of action accrues at which they are found in the possession of the defendant, that is, before a penalty can be recovered, they must be actually found in possession of defendant, and "found in his possession" refers to a finding for the purposes of forfeiture and condemnation in an action brought both to procure condemnation and a penalty and does not refer to a finding in a prior action declaring a forfeiture. Verckmeister v. American Tobacco Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 124, 126, 207 U. S. 375, 52 L. Ed. 54 (citing Thornton v. Schreiber, 8 Sup. Ct. 618, 124 U. S. 612, 31 L. Ed. 577; Bolles v. Cutting Co., 77 Fed. 966, 23 C. C. A. 594).

Code, § 2427, provides that "the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of one not legally authorized to sell or use the same," except in a private dwelling house not used in connection with a place of public resort, or "the finding" of the same in unusual quantities in a private dwelling, shall be presumptive evidence that such liquors are kept for illegal sale. Held, that it was not error to instruct that the presumption applied if liquor was "found or seen" or "is in any building which is a place of public resort;" it not being necessary that it be "found" by an officer under a search warrant to make the presumption apply. State v. Wilson, 132 N. W. 820, 152 Iowa, 529.

In a prosecution for larceny, an instruction as to defendant being found in the recent possession of stolen property is applicable, though the property is not found in defendant's possession, but in the possession of one to whom he had sold it, since the word "found," as used in such instructions, simply means "discovered," "traced to," or shown to have been in defendant's possession. State v. Minnick, 102 Pac. 605, 607, 54 Or. 86.

Indictment

An indictment is "found" when 12 grand jurors competent to vote upon such finding shall concur in finding such indictment. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 6738, provides that an indictment must be set aside when it is not found, presented, or filed as provided by statute. Held, that the phrase "when it is not found" means when not concurred in by at least nine grand jurors. Eubanks v. State, 114 Pac. 748, 751, 5 Okl. Cr. 325; Elder v. Same, 114 Pac. 752, 5 Okl. Cr. 693.

An indictment is "found" only when it is duly presented by a grand jury in open court and there received and filed. People v. Herrmana, 125 N. Y. Supp. 143, 146, 69 Misc. Rep. 303.

An indictment is "found" when it is presented by the grand jury in due form in open court and filed with the clerk. State v. Disbrow, 106 N. W. 263, 266, 130 Iowa, 19, 8 Ann. Cas. 190.

The phrase "when it is not found," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 5399, providing that an indictment must be set aside on the motion of defendant "when it is not found," etc., means when not concurred in by at least 12 grand jurors, and has no reference to the kind or character of evidence received by the grand jury, or to the other matters or proceedings prior to the vote of the grand jury on which the indictment is found. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 453, 16 Okl. 241.

As affecting service of process

A publishing corporation whose residence and headquarters are in New York City, and whose only business in the state of Minnesota is to circulate its periodicals by mail and to send its employees into the state for the purpose of soliciting advertisements, is not doing business within the state of Minnesota to the extent that it can be said to be "found in that state" for the purpose of service under the acts of Congress governing service of process upon foreign corporations.

Boardman v. S. S. McClure Co., 123 Fed. 614, 316.

L. O. L. § 54, providing that the summons shall be served by the sheriff of the county where the defendant is found, has no application to an action against a corporation; it not being a defendant which "may be found" within the statutory meaning. Davies v. Oregon Placer & Power Co., 123 Pac. 906, 908, 61 Or. 594.

As determining venue

The word "found," as used in section 730 and in act March 3, 1847 (9 Stat. 175, c. 51), providing for the conviction and punishment of persons guilty of piracy taken on the sea "before any Circuit Court of the United States for the district into which such persons may be brought or 'found,'" is used in the same sense that the word "apprehended" is used in the crimes act of April 30, 1790 (1 Stat. 113, c. 9), providing that "the trial of crimes committed on the high seas or elsewhere out of the jurisdiction of any particular state shall be in the district where the offender is apprehended or into which he may first be brought," and in the act of March 3, 1825 (4 Stat. 118, c. 65, § 14), providing that the trial of offenses "committed on the high seas, or elsewhere, out of the limits of any state or district, shall be in the district where the offender is apprehended or into which he may be first brought." Kerr v. Shine, 136 Fed. 61, 63, 69 C. C. A. 69.

A foreign corporation is "found" within a federal judicial district, within Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, 18 Stat. 470, providing that no civil suit shall be brought by original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof defendant is an inhabitant or in which he shall be "found" at the time of serving such process or commencing the suit, where process was served on an agent of such corporation within the district designated by the defendant for service of process under the state law. Elk Garden Co. v. T. W. Thayer Co., 179 Fed. 556, 559.

For the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on a Circuit Court of a suit for damages under Sherman Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 7, 26 Stat. 210, which authorizes a suit "in the district in which the defendant resides or is found," a foreign corporation is "found" in the state if it is doing business therein, but not otherwise. Michigan Aluminum Foundry Co. v. Aluminum Castings Co. 190 Fed. 879, 883.

In an action against a railroad company, the record showed that the president thereof was served while passing through the territory as a sojourner and not connected with any business of the company; that the railroad company, before the time of the attempted service, had disposed of all its franchises and property, except some lands acquired by foreclosure within the territory; that its directors held its meetings in New York; that its president had his office in Chicago and its land commissioner had his office in Topeka, Kan. Held, that the president was not found within the territory, within Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, providing for suit in the Circuit Court in the district in which the defendant resides or is found. Territory rel. Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker, 78 Pac. 624, 625, 12 N. M. 456.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1400, 110, § 2, providing that it shall not be lawful to sue a defendant out of the county where he resides or may be found, a defendant "found" within a county where he is served unless he was there by reason of some fraud or trick in order to obtain service on him. Willard v. Zehr, 74 N. E. 107, 108, 215 Ill. 148.

FINDING

See Decision (Of Court); General Finding; Special Finding.

Date of finding, see Date.

The word "finding," as used in the Kentucky revenue laws providing that the ascertainment of the amount of taxes unpaid on omitted property shall be made by the county court on application of the owner, that either the petitioner or the commonwealth may appeal to the circuit court, and that the "finding of the circuit court shall be conclusive and not subject to appeal," relates to the finding of the value of the property assessed, and to that extent only is the appellate jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals curtailed. Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corp. v. Commonwealth, 106 S. W. 260, 270, 127 Ky. 66.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1228, providing that where the whole issue is one of fact which was tried by a referee, the report stands as a decision of the court, and section 1229, providing that in an action to annul marriage, or for a divorce or separation judgment cannot be taken, of course, on referee's report as prescribed in section 1228, the terms "decision of the referee" and "findings of the referee" mean the referee's decision and findings to matters of fact, actually referred to him by the order of the court, and limit the subject of the report to the issues raised by the pleadings. To any other extent, his findings are not the findings of the referee within the statute, and the court will render a judgment agreeably to the actual determination of the facts upon which the referee was authorized to pass. Bowe v. Bowe, 106 N. Y. Supp. 608, 610, 55 Misc. Rep. 403.

FINDING OF FACT

If decision of an issue is made by a referee, or by the judge trying an issue without jury, the determination of the issue of fact is usually termed "the decision" or "findings of fact." Hamilton v. Murray, 74 Pac. 75, 6, 29 Mont. 80 (citing Froman v. Patterson, 4 Pac. 692, 10 Mont. 107).

A mere opinion of a judge in the Circuit Court in an equity case is not a "finding or statement of facts." Hendryx v. Perkins, 23 Fed. 268, 270, 59 C. C. A. 266 (citing Finley v. Guy, 23 Sup. Ct. 558, 189 U. S. 335, 47 L. Ed. 839).

Where, in proceedings involving unjust discriminations by railroads, the report of the commission stated that "after full investigation and mature consideration . . . we hold that where both modes of transportation are employed by the carrier and the use of one is not open to shippers, etc., . . . is unjust discrimination against a barrel shipper, . . . and that no circumstances and conditions have been disclosed by the evidence authorizing such discrimination by defendant carriers," all of the paragraph with the exception of the concluding negative allegation consisted of legal conclusions, and as a whole was argumentative and was not a "finding of fact." Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., Limited, of Oil City, Pa., 137 Fed. 343, 348, 70 C. C. A. 23.

The "findings" of a jury are always mere conclusions, and the jury cannot in any case find ultimate facts. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Laughlin, 87 Pac. 749, 751, 74 Kan. 167 (citing Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plunkett, 25 Kan. 197).

By "findings by responses to interrogatories," answers pertinent to, and perhaps controlling, although not necessarily fully covering, an issue framed, are given, always in connection with a general verdict. Freedman v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 71 Atl. 101, 905, 81 Conn. 601, 15 Ann. Cas. 464.

An employer is not guilty of violating St. 911, c. 584, providing that no employer shall impose a fine on an employé engaged at weaving for imperfections arising during the process of weaving, where the system adopted by the employer is authorized by St. 1900, c. 514, § 114, providing that the system of grading the work of a weaver shall not affect or lessen his wages, except for imperfections in his own work, that a weaver's wages shall not be affected by fines, or otherwise, unless the imperfections are first exhibited to him, and that fines shall not be imposed, unless the provisions of that section are first complied with and the amount of fines agreed upon; the word "fine" in the act of 1911 meaning an arbitrary imposition of a penalty for an imperfection, whether due to the fault of the weaver or not. Commonwealth v. Lancaster Mills, 98 N. E. 864, 212 Mass. 815.

The words "mulct," "punishment," and "fine," as used in the decisions of the Supreme Court of Alabama in referring to the statutory action for death, given by Code Ala. 1896, § 27, are not used in the sense that is ordinarily attached to such words in the domain of criminal law, and therefore such statute is not a penal one within the rule that one state will not enforce the penal laws of another state. Whitlow v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 84 S. W. 618, 620, 114 Tenn. 344, 68 L. R. A. 503 (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Bush, 26 South. 173, 174, 122 Ala. 488, 489).

Damages awarded on affirmance of a judgment for contempt are neither a "fine" nor forfeiture, within Const. § 77, authorizing the Governor to remit fines and forfeitures. Commonwealth v. French, 114 S. W. 255, 256, 130 Ky. 744, 17 Ann. Cas. 601.

The $2 on each $100 of premiums paid by foreign insurance companies doing business in the state, which is required to be paid into the state treasury, is no part of the 22 cents on each $100 valuation of property or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation for the school fund by Ky. St. 1903, § 4370, subd. 5, nor is it a "fine," "forfeiture," or "license" within subdivision 6, providing that a portion of such revenues be paid into the school fund. Fuqua v. Hager, 84 S. W. 325, 119 Ky. 407.

FINE (In Criminal Law)

"The words 'fine' and 'fined' in their primary sense import the punishment of a person convicted of crime." Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 830, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (dissenting opinion of Harlan, J.).

The word "fine" is a sum of money imposed by a criminal law. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

A "fine" is a pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of a crime or misdemeanor. Commonwealth v. French, 114 S. W. 255, 130 Ky. 744, 17 Ann. Cas. 601; United States v. Mitchell, 163 Fed. 1014, 1016.

A "fine" is a pecuniary punishment for a criminal offense, or a contempt, which is quasi criminal, imposed by the court upon conviction. It is true the word "fine" does not always mean a pecuniary punishment of an offense inflicted by a court in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction. It has other meanings, and may include a forfeiture, or a penalty recoverable by civil action. The true signification of the word, when used in a statute, must depend somewhat upon the context, and the meaning should be gathered from the intention, if it can fairly be ascertained from the language used. In ordinary legal phraseology, it is said the term "fine" means a sum of money exacted of a person guilty of a misdemeanor, or a crime, the amount of which may be fixed by law or left to the discretion of the court, while a penalty is a sum of money exacted by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or omitting to do something which is required to be done. Revisal 1905, § 259, provides that when the issue of paternity shall be found against the putative father, or when he admits the paternity, he shall be fined by the judge, etc. Held, that while the words "fine" and "penalty" were often used interchangeably to designate the same thing, it accorded more with the true intention of the Legislature to hold that in such statute the word "fine" was used in the sense of punishment for a criminal offense, and in bastardy proceedings the court could not impose a fine on defendant upon a finding of the issue of paternity against him; the issue being tried, according to the rules of procedure, applicable to a civil action. State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. C. 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 314 (citing Black's Dict. p. 494; State v. Burton, 18 S. E. 657, 113 N. C. 655; People v. Nedrow, 13 N. E. 533, 122 Ill. 363; Hanscombe v. Russell, 11 Gray [77 Mass.] 373; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Sanders, 22 Kan. 1; Village of Lancaster v. Richardson [N. Y.] 4 Lans. 136).

A "fine" imposed under Gen. Laws 1896, c. 118, § 6, declaring that no person shall deposit or permit to be deposited in the waters of Providence river any material used in connection with the manufacture of gas, and that every person violating the statute shall be fined a certain amount for each offense, was recoverable by indictment under chapter 288, § 1, etc., declaring that unless otherwise provided all fines upward of $20 shall be recovered by indictment. "The word 'fine' as used in the statute has its primary signification, to wit, pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal on a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor." "In ordinary legal language the term 'fine' means a sum of money, the payment of which is imposed by a court according to law as punishment for a crime or misdemeanor." State v. Providence Gas Co., 61 Atl. 44, 45, 27 R. I. 142 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Ed.] p. 786).

Costs included

Costs follow sentence, but are no part of the "fine actually imposed," within Const. art. 85, limiting the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court where a fine is actually imposed. State v. Price, 50 South. 794, 795, 124 La. 917, 134 Am. St. Rep. 523, 18 Am. Cas. 881.

The words "fines and forfeitures," contained in Const. art. 5, § 17, authorizing the Governor to remit such fines and forfeitures as may be prescribed by law, do not include costs in a criminal case. Ryan v. State, 95 N. E. 561, 176 Ind. 281.

A judgment for costs in a criminal prosecution is not a "fine" imposed as a punishment for an offense, and its discharge in bankruptcy is not contrary to public policy as an interference with the course of justice in the criminal prosecution. Olds v. Forrester, 102 N. W. 419-420, 126 Iowa, 456.

Criminal offense or proceeding imposed

An action under Rev. St. 1899, § 101, subjecting a corporation failing to make statutory reports to a "fine," providing that no suit shall be maintained for any offense unless brought within a specified time, and requiring proceedings in the name of the state, on relation of the county, to recover the fine, is an action for a penalty, and not a "criminal action" within section 2815, authorizing the parole of persons convicted of crime; the word "fine" meaning penalty. State ex rel. Howell County v. West Plains Telephone Co., 135 S. W. 20, 21, 232 Mo. 579.

As debt

See Debt.

Forfeitures and penalties included

In ordinary legal phraseology the term "fine" means a sum of money exacted of a person guilty of a misdemeanor, or a crime, the amount of which may be fixed by law or left in the discretion of the court, while "penalty" is a sum of money exacted by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or omitting to do something which is required to be done. State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. C. 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 314 (citing Village of Lancaster v. Richardson [N. Y.] 4 Lans. 136).

The words "fine" and "forfeiture," though sometimes used in a technical sense and with restricted signification, at other times overlap and run together in meaning. The "fines," "penalties," and "forfeitures" contemplated by Code Cr. Proc. § 332, providing that all fines and penalties imposed and all forfeitures incurred in any county shall be paid into the treasury to the support of common schools are all pecuniary; moneys which are paid into the treasury and placed in the school fund, and altogether they make a single class; moneys recovered by some sort of punishment and not as damages by way of compensation or reparation. State v. Rose, 97 Pac. 788, 789, 78 Kan. 600.

The word "fine," as used in St. 1898, c. 3294, authorizing a civil action for a forfeiture, and defining a forfeiture to include a penalty in money or goods other than ne," does not include those forfeitures, sometimes called fines, imposed by municipal corporations for violating their ordinances. State v. Hamley, 119 N. W. 114, 115, 137 Wis. 458.

Rev. St. 1898, c. 142, § 3294, provides that in all cases not otherwise specially provided for by law, where a forfeiture shall be incurred and the act or omission for which the same is imposed shall not also be a misdemeanor, such forfeiture may be sued for and recovered in a civil action; but when such act or omission is punishable by "fine" or imprisonment or by fine or imprisonment, or is specially declared by law to be a misdemeanor, it shall be deemed a misdemeanor within the chapter, and that the word "forfeiture" as used in the chapter shall include any penalty in money or goods other than a "fine." Const. art. 10, § 2, provides that the "clear proceeds of all fines collected in the several counties for any breach of the penal laws" shall be set apart as a separate fund to be called a "school fund." Held, that the word "fine" in section 3294 is used the same sense as the same word is used in Const. art. 10, § 2, and does not include those forfeitures sometimes called fines imposed by municipal corporations for violating their ordinances. Stoltman v. Town of Lake, 22 N. W. 920, 921, 124 Wis. 462.

"Penalties" have been held to be "fines" and capable of collection by indictment or presentment as well as by civil suit. United States v. Tsokas, 163 Fed. 129, 130 (citing United States v. Moore, 11 Fed. 248).

The word "fines," in Const. art. 1, § 18, declaring that excessive fines shall not be imposed, includes "penalties," so that the provision prohibits the imposition of excessive penalties for the failure of a taxpayer to pay taxes imposed. State v. Galveston, & S. A. Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 71, 78, 100 Tex. 153.

The term "fines" is synonymous with penalties. So the word "penalties," as used in a statute imposing penalties for failure of a railroad to erect water-closets at passenger stations, is synonymous with the word "fines," and a judgment rendered for the penalty imposed for a violation of such statute does not bear interest. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. State (Tex.) 97 S. W. 724, 725.

The word "fine" in its ordinary acceptance has the distinct meaning of a pecuniary penalty, and has that restricted meaning in Const. art. 85, limiting the jurisdiction of the supreme Court in cases where a fine is imposed, and hence the forfeiture of the right to conduct a barroom, pursuant to section 7 of the Gay-Shattuck law (Act No. 176, p. 239, 1906), imposed in addition to the fine prescribed by section 6 for its violation, forms part of such fine, the amount of which determines jurisdiction of an appeal in a prosecution thereunder. State v. Price, 50 So. 794, 795, 124 La. 917, 134 Am. St. Rep. 523, 18 Ann. Cas. 881.

As used in Immigration Act March 3, 1903, § 9, 32 Stat. 1215, making it unlawful to bring into the United States any alien afflicted with a loathesome or with a dangerous, contagious disease, and providing that if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought was afflicted with such disease at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such transportation company shall pay to the collector of customs $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such fine imposed upon it remains unpaid, the word "fine" means a penalty, and, if suable at all, recoverable in debt, and not through criminal proceedings, and therefore the statutory provision does not create a crime so as to render it unconstitutional because it does provide for a jury trial. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, 155 Fed. 428, 431.

The word "fine," as used in Rev. St. 1898, c. 150, providing for the punishment of civil contempt, is not confined to mere indemnity to the injured party. The provisions of this chapter clearly warrant the imposition of a fine or imprisonment or both, in cases where no actual loss or injury is shown and in case of actual loss or injury resulting from the alleged misconduct, instead of imposing a fine a sum is to be ordered paid to him to indemnify for such loss or injury, and when a fine is imposed it is in the nature of a penalty which is to be paid into the state treasury for the benefit of the school fund. Emerson v. Huss, 106 N. W. 518, 522, 127 Wis. 215.

As a judgment

A "fine" imposed for a contempt of court is a judgment in a criminal case. Ex parte Shull, 121 S. W. 10, 11, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496.

FINE AND IMPRISONMENT

Under Pub. Loc. Laws 1911, c. 184, authorizing "fine and imprisonment" for permitting a setter or pointer dog to run at large in Henderson county during the closed season for quail, either punishment or both may be imposed. State v. Blake, 72 S. E. 1080, 1082, 157 N. C. 608.

A verdict finding accused guilty, and imposing a "fine of $50 and 40 days in jail," shows that accused was fined $50 and that his imprisonment should be 40 days in jail. Ellis v. State, 130 S. W. 171, 174, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 630.

FINE OR IMPRISONMENT OTHERWISE THAN IN THE PENITENTIARY

Const. art. 2, § 8, provides that no person shall be held to answer, unless on indictment of a grand jury, except in cases in which the punishment is by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary, etc. Municipal Court Act 1905, § 2, par. 3, as amended, provides that the Chicago municipal court shall have jurisdiction of all criminal cases in which the punishment is by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary, and section 27 declares that all criminal cases in the municipal court in which the punishment is by fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary may be prosecuted by information. Held, that the words "fine or imprisonment otherwise than in the penitentiary" include every class of offense where the punishment is either by fine or jail sentence, or both, and hence it is only such offenses as are punishable either by fine or imprisonment in the penitentiary, or both by fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary, that must be prosecuted by indictment. People v. Glowacki, 86 N. E. 368, 369, 236 Ill. 612.

FININGS

"Finings" is an article consisting of "gelatin" containing a considerable proportion of sulphurous acid or sulphite as a preservative and is dutiable as "gelatin" under paragraph 23, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, and is not a manufacture of gelatin under paragraph 450, Schedule N, § 1, c. 11, of said act, 30 Stat. 193, or an unenumerated article under section 6, c. 11, of said act, 30 Stat. 205. Sonoma Wine & Brandy Co. v. United States, 123 Fed. 990, 1000.

FINISH

See Interior Finish; Machine Finish; Unfinished.

FINISH SOUND

Where plaintiff warranted certain metallic cylinders to "finish sound," such was an express warranty only that the shells should, when finished, be free from cracks and air holes, both obvious and hidden. H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co. v. Lamson & Goodnow Mfg. Co., 75 N. E. 624, 625, 189 Mass. 344.

FINISHED STEEL TUBES

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 152, 30 Stat. 163, for "steel tubes, finished," includes bottle-shaped vessels of steel, which are used in the transportation of gas and are about four feet long and eight inches in diameter, with one end permanently closed and the other tapered to a neck. United States v. Liquid Carbonic Co., 160 Fed. 455, 87 C. C. A. 671.

FIRE

See Greek Fire; Hostile Fire; Innocent Fire; Loss by Fire; Negligent or Unlawful Fire; On Fire; Set Fire To. Subject to fire, see Subject To.

"Fire" is "the evolution of light and heat in the combustion of bodies; combustion state of ignition." Sun Ins. Office of London v. Western Woolen Mill Co., 82 Pac. 513, 517, 72 Kan. 41 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict. Unab.; dissenting opinion by Porter, J.).

A "fire" may be both a burning by slow and a burning by rapid combustion, either of which is covered by a stipulation of indemnity for loss by fire, unless a distinction is made in the policy. Furbush v. Consolidated Patrons' & Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 118 N. W. 371, 373, 140 Iowa, 240.

The word "fire," as used in an insurance policy, in the absence of language showing contrary intention, is to be given its ordinary meaning, which includes the idea of visible heat or light. Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 139 Fed. 637, 639, 72 C. C. A. 1.

A "fire" in a furnace of material so highly inflammable in character as to cause such volumes of heat and smoke to escape through the registers into the rooms damaging the house and furniture, though without ignition outside of the furnace, is "fire" within a policy covering "direct loss or damage by fire." O'Connor v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 122 N. W. 1038, 1039, 140 Wis. 388, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1081, 17 Ann. Cas. 1118.

Explosion

The term "fire," as used in fire insurance policies, is an actual "fire" according to the ordinary and common use of the term. The blaze produced by lighting a match, gas jet or lamp is not in itself such a "fire" as is contemplated. Consequently the accidental ignition of escaping gas by such means resulting in an explosion is not a "fire" followed by explosion within the meaning of policy. German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 94 Pac. 27, 32, 42 Colo. 156, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77.

Plaintiff's house contained an acetylene gas plant. One of plaintiff's children went to the cellar to fill the generating machine with water and carbide. When the generator was filled, plaintiff's wife smelled gas, and one of the children struck a match, and as she did so, there was a flash of light all over the house, then a report, and almost immediately the plastering began to fall. Immediately after the explosion, some of the furniture, the studding, and rafters were found on fire. It was proved that the gas generated by carbide would not explode except when ignited. Such an explosion was fire, within a policy stipulating for indemnity from loss by fire and containing no exemption of explosions. Furbush v. Consolidated Patrons' & Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 18 N. W. 371, 372, 140 Iowa, 240.

The damage to plate glass from an explosion caused by heat from a fire, both at distance from the building containing the glass, is not within the provision of a plate glass insurance policy, excepting insurer from liability for damages resulting directly or indirectly from "fire," whether on the premises or not; such provision being intended to except only a loss which would be covered by a fire policy, and such a loss not being covered by a fire policy. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. of New York v. Berghelm, 22 Pac. 812, 813, 21 Colo. App. 527.

Fires negligently caused

In the civil law loss by "fire" is not considered a "fortuitous event," as it arises almost invariably from some act of man. At common law the carrier is considered as in the nature of an insurer against loss by fire unless it be caused by lightning. The civil law does not go to this extent, but it does require the carrier to prove the precise cause of the fire, that it was impossible for human prudence to foresee or prevent the loss, and that no act of imprudence or negligence is chargeable to the carrier. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgans' Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 88 South. 870, 876, 115 La. 1, 70 L. R. A. 32, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

As peril of the sea

See Perils of the Sea.

Spontaneous combustion

"Fire" is the visible heat or light evolved by the action of a high temperature on certain bodies which are in consequence styled inflammable or combustible. It is the evolution of light and heat in the combustion of bodies; but, while it is always caused by combustion, combustion does not always cause fire. The loss of wool submerged for several days during a flood, which caused spontaneous combustion, though with smoke and great heat, by which the wool was damaged and its fiber destroyed, was not a loss by "fire" within the meaning of a fire insurance policy, where there was at no time any visible light or heat. Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 139 Fed. 37, 639, 72 C. C. A. 1 (quoting and adopting definitions in Cent. Dict. and Webster Dict.).

FIRE BRICK

The phrase "fire brick," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 87, 30 Stat. 151, is a well-known commercial designation, which means brick made from fire clay, and therefore does not include magnesite brick. United States v. O. G. Hempstead & Son, 153 Fed. 483, 484.

The term "chamotte," as used in the arts and in the Panzl patent, No. 644,367, as an ingredient used in making an acid-resisting composition for lining pulp digesters, denotes a species of specially pure calcined clay, which must be silicate of alumina, and is not the equivalent of crushed "fire brick," used in prior preparations, which may or may not have the chemical composition and properties of chamotte. Panzl v. Battle Island Paper Co., 138 Fed. 48, 50, 70 C. C. A. 474.

The word "firemen" in the statute of 1902 (P. L. 1902, p. 793), for the purpose of providing and maintaining a fund to pension "firemen" and their families, is synonymous with "members of the fire department." A lineman, a watchman, and a veterinary surgeon, who are members of the Newark Paid Fire Department, are entitled to membership in the corporate association organized by the department under the provision of the statute of 1902 (P. L. 1902, p. 793), for the purpose of providing and maintaining a fund to pension "firemen" and their families. Lefingwell v. Kiersted, 65 Atl. 1029, 1030, 74 N. J. Law, 407.

FIREPROOF BUILDING

The term "fireproof" as used in an ordinance requiring fireproof roofs, when reasonably construed, means a roof that can be reasonably depended upon to resist the action of ordinary fires. Lane-Moore Lumber Co. v. City of Storm Lake, 130 N. W. 924, 928, 151 Iowa, 130.

FIREPROOF SAFE

A contract of sale of a safe designated as a "fireproof safe," merely represents that the safe is constructed of fireproof material, and does not warrant it as to the amount of heat or duration of exposure to heat which it will resist, and an implied warranty that the safe will protect its contents against any given exposure to fire is unauthorized. Richardson v. Carlis, 123 N. W. 168, 170, 26 S. D. 202, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 47.

FIREPROOFED LUMBER

Lumber which has been subjected to a fireproofing process that largely increases its value, but which can still be applied to the ordinary uses of sound lumber, is not dutiable as manufactures of wood not specially provided for under paragraph 208, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, 30 Stat. 168, but as "sawed lumber" under paragraph 195, 30 Stat. 167. Fireproofed lumber is an imported article and consists of oak and white pine sawed lumber which has been treated for the purpose of making it fireproof by a process by which it is chemicalized. The process involves softening the lumber and opening its pores, withdrawing the sap, injecting the chemicals into the fiber of the wood, and then treating the wood with heat until it is perfectly dry, thereby crystallizing the solution of the chemicals in the fiber of the wood. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 204, 205, 77 C. C. A. 430.

FIRM

"In arriving at a conclusion as to the ordinary and popular meaning of the word 'firm,' we naturally first consult the standard dictionaries. Webster defines it thus: The name, title, or style under which a company transacts business, hence a partnership or house, as the firm of Hope & Co. The Century dictionary defines a firm to be a partnership or association of two or more persons for carrying on a business, a commercial house, a concern, also the name or title under which associated persons transact business. Nuttall's Standard Dictionary thus defines the word 'firm': Partnership or commercial house, or the name or title under which a company transacts business." A testator gave a specified sum to each of the employees of the firm of G. & K., of which he was a member. At the time of the execution of the will the testator was a member of two firms of the name of G. & K., and at the time of his death he was a member of a firm and of a corporation of that name. Held, that the testator intended to reward employees of the firm and of the corporation.

FIRM DEBTS

FIRST ASSISTANT

One who entered into a contract with the board of education to render such services as teacher as would be required of him for a certain time was not a "first assistant," within Laws 1900, p. 1605, c. 751, and entitled to the compensation provided by the law. Wood v. Board of Education of City of New York, 112 N. Y. Supp. 578, 580, 5 Misc. Rep. 605.

FIRST BILL

Where a policy of credit insurance insured a dealer against loss which he might sustain on account of nonpayment of the first bill for goods sold to new customers, which was not to be in excess of $400, "first bill" meant the particular articles contracted for at one time, without regard to the time within which the bill therefor should be paid, and did not include all goods, not exceeding $400, which were sold and delivered between the first sale and the maturity of the bill therefor. Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Cannon & Byers Millinery Co., 118 S. W. 1004, 1006, 133 Ky. 745.

FIRST CAUSE

"First cause," "initial cause," "efficient cause," and "proximate cause" all mean the same thing in the law of negligence. They mean the cause acting first and immediately producing the injury, or setting other causes in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor; the final event in the chain immediately effecting the injury as a natural and probable result of the cause which first acted, and the person responsible for the first event having reasonable ground to expect at the moment of his act or default that a person injured to some person might probably result therefrom. There may be pre-existing conditions or events without which the final injury could not have happened, such as the momentary shying of a horse on a defective highway, the inadvertent and nonnegligent misstep of a traveler into a dangerous exction close to the sidewalk, or the nonnegligent misstep or slip upon the floor or passage; but none of these is to be deemed a use of the final injury any more than the mere presence of the injured person on the scene of the accident. They are not links, either initial or otherwise, in the legal chain of responsible causation, and should not be referred to as such, even though in ordinary illegal parlance they might broadly be termed causes. They are mere circumstances or conditions either existing, or to be expected in the natural order of things to occur at any time; and they do not enter into the chain of responsible causation. Winchel v. Bodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

FIRST-CLASS BOOK

What may be considered a "first-class" book to adorn the library of a literary man might not be first-class when it was to be used by a doctor in his everyday work. The term "first-class" is relative in its meaning, and depends upon the use to be made of the book, and upon the character of the persons who are to use it. Cleveland v. Martin, 75 E. 772, 778, 218 Ill. 73, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 9.

FIRST-CLASS FIRE PROTECTION

A contract of a waterworks company to furnish "first-class fire protection" obligates to furnish mains of the largest size mentioned in the contract if such protection cannot be given with less. Meridian Waterworks Co. v. Meridian, 37 South. 927, 928, 85 Miss. 5.

FIRST-CLASS ROAD

A "first-class road" is not less than 40 feet or more than 60 feet wide. Craighead v. State, 117 S. W. 128, 129, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 886.

FIRST DAY

In specifications of a patent of a bank account book to facilitate the transfer of depositors' accounts, that "the first balance column and 'transactions of the first day' may be placed before the name column without varying from the principle of our invention," the term "transactions of the first day" means the transactions for Monday, including the deposits, checks, and balance; those being the items included under the heading as shown in all the drawings of the patent. Time-Saver Co. v. Stamford Trust Co., 176 Fed. 358, 361, 99 C. C. A. 632.

FIRST DAY OF THE TERM

Where a district judge by written order of vacation adjourned the "October term" of the district court, which was set for October 1st, to the 11th day of November, which order was entered upon the journal, but no other proceedings had, the day to which the court was adjourned, being the day upon which the judge was present and the court ready to transact business, was "the first day of the term," as applicable to the lien of judgments rendered during the term. Parrott v. Wolcott, 106 N. W. 607, 608, 75 Neb. 530.

FIRST INSTANCE

See In the First Instance.

FIRST MEETING OF CREDITORS

The term "first meeting of creditors," used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 55b, 30 Stat. 559, providing that at the first meeting of creditors the judge or referee may allow or disallow claims then presented, means the first meeting after adjudication provided for in section 55a. In re Back Bay Automobile Co., 158 Fed. 679, 682.

FIRST NET PROFITS

Where the owner of a mining lease sold a two-thirds interest therein, to be paid for out of the "first net profits" of the mine, the "first net profits" comprised the first excess of current receipts for ore taken out of the ground over and above the current expenses for producing the ore, and the necessary charges for repairs and betterments, and the purchasers were not to be reimbursed for moneys expended in the development of the mine, sinking of shaft, erection of mill, purchase of machinery, etc., which constituted capital, before an account of the first net profits was estimated. Crocker v. Barteau, 110 S. W. 1062, 1066, 212 Mo. 359.

FIRST OFFENDER

Ky. St. § 2095, subsec. 19a, provides that any juvenile or first offender of the age of 21 years or under committing any crime whereby punishment in the state prison or reform school is contemplated shall be sentenced to the house of reform. Section 1127 provides that offenses are either felonies or misdemeanors, and such offenses as are punishable by confinement in the penitentiary or with death are felonies, and all others misdemeanors, and section 1308 makes shooting in a public highway a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. Held, that a boy 16 years of age was a "first offender" though he had theretofore been convicted of shooting at random in a public highway; the statute only contemplating felonies within the term "crime," so that upon convicting him of manslaughter he should have been committed to the reform school. Henson v. Commonwealth, 147 S. W. 399, 400, 148 Ky. 631.

FIRST PAYMENT

Earnest money synonymous, see Earnest.

FIRST REFUSAL

Where wheat is delivered to and received by a milling company in pursuance of a custom known to both parties and with reference to which they contract for the company to mix all wheat delivered to it with that belonging to it in one common mass, "first refusal" of the wheat being reserved by the company, the term "first refusal" is intended to give the company a preferred right to purchase at all times and to limit the right of the holder of its receipt to receive grain in return therefor, to cases in which the company does not care to purchase. Savage v. Salem Mills Co., 85 Pac. 69, 73, 48 Or. 1, 10 Ann. Cas. 1065.

FIRST REGULAR SESSION

Where a statute provides that, when a road is laid over lands not within any town or plantation required to raise money to make and repair highways the county commissioners shall, at their "first regular session" thereafter, assess thereon, and on adjoining townships benefited thereby, such an amount as they judge necessary for making and opening the road, the assessments are to be made at the same regular session at which the location of the road is filed; the object of the statute being to prevent their being made at an adjourned term of such regular session. Such regular session will be the "first" occurring after the road is laid over the lands. Mansur v. County Com'rs of Aroostook County, 22 Atl. 358, 359, 83 Me. 514.

FIRST TAKER

Where the owner of land transfers a life estate therein to one person and the remainder to another, the life tenant is called the "first taker" because he is the first to come into possession of the land. Archer v. Jacobs, 101 N. W. 195, 197, 125 Iowa, 467.

FIRST TEN YEARS

The phrase "the first ten years," as used in a franchise granted by a municipality to a waterworks company, providing that the privileges granted to the company shall continue for a term of 25 years from and after the passage of the ordinance, and the municipality agreeing to lease the company's fire hydrants for said term, and pay a rent per year, and the municipal taxes assessed on the property for the first 10 years, etc., points to the first period of 10 years in the period of 25 years, and, there being no period of 25 years except the one commencing with the life of the franchise, the 10-year period will commence at that time. Town of Washburn v. Washburn Waterworks Co., 98 N. W. 539, 541, 120 Wis. 575.

A contract bound plaintiff to deliver to defendant power as follows: "For the first five years, 5,000 horse powers free of charge; for the second five years, 5,000 horse powers at the annual rate of $2.50 per horse power; and thenceforth 5,000 horse powers at the annual rate of $5.00 per horse power, or so much thereof as [defendant] shall consume. It is understood that if [defendant] desires further power, and the same is not being used [plaintiff] will furnish it for the first ten years at the annual rate of $2.50 per horse power, and thereafter at the annual rate of $5.00 per horse power." Held, that the "first ten years" used in the stipulation for extra power ran concurrently with the five-year periods for which the power rate was fixed, and their commencement was not postponed until defendant should commence using extra power, but at the expiration of ten years from the date when power was first furnished under the contract defendant was bound to pay the $5 rate for all power used by it, whether in excess of 5,000 horse powers or not. Great Falls Water Power & Townsite Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 8 Pac. 392, 393, 83 Mont. 10.

FIRST TERM

The provision of Code 1899, c. 6, § 3, that notice of a contest of election to county office shall be presented to the "first term" of the county court after notice of contest is delivered to the contestee, means the first regular term, not a special term. Stafford v. Mingo County Court, 51 S. E. 2, 58 W. Va. 88.

FISCAL

"Fiscal" is defined, as a noun, by Webster as "treasurer," and as an adjective "financial, pertaining to finance"; so that the comptroller of a city, who is the sole treasurer of the board of education, is the only fiscal officer of the board. Eagan v. Board of Education, 115 N. Y. Supp. 167, 168.

FISCAL AFFAIRS

"Fiscal affairs," as used in Const. § 17, providing that the fiscal affairs of the county shall be transacted by a board of county commissioners, "are not limited to matters pertaining solely to public revenue as the doubtless are in some connections." State v. Lewis, 119 N. W. 1037, 1040, 18 N. D. 12 (quoting and adopting construction in Martin v. Tyler, 60 N. W. 392, 4 N. D. 278, 25 L. R. A. 838).

FISCAL COURT

The "fiscal court" is one of special and limited jurisdiction. It has no power to appropriate the money of the county except as authorized by law. Mitchell v. Henry County, 100 S. W. 220, 221, 124 Ky. 833.

FISCAL OFFICER

A city officer who collects or receives public money, though not holding it, is a "fiscal officer" within Const. § 160, making fiscal officers of cities of the second class ineligible to succeed themselves, and providing that the term "fiscal officer" shall not include one whose chief duty is not collecting or holding public moneys. Dorian v. Walters (Ky.) 11 S. W. 813, 314.

FISH IN PACKAGES

Certain fish which have been dried, packed in ice or otherwise prepared for preservation, and are imported in packages containing less than one-half barrel, are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 261, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule 30 Stat. 171, for "fish * * * dried, * * * packed in ice or otherwise prepared for preservation," and not under paragraph 258 of said act, 30 Stat. 171, as "fish in packages containing less than one-half barrel." Harvey v. United States, 137 Fed. 816.

Fish roe, or caviar, in tin packages, is, by virtue of the similitude clause in section 255, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 165, dutiable at the rate applicable to fish in tin packages, enumerated in paragraph 258 of said act, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, which article it resembles in quality, texture and use, especially use, within the meaning of said section. Manzel & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 918, 919.

Frozen fish imported in packages containing less than one-half barrel are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 258, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, for "fish in packages containing less than one-half barrel, and not specially provided for," rather than under that in paragraph 261 of said act, 30 Stat. 171 for fish, fresh, * * * frozen, packed in ice, or otherwise prepared for preservation, not specially provided for." Loggie v. United States, 137 Fed. 813, 70 C. C. A. 433.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 258, 30 Stat. 171, provides for anvovies, etc., in tins of various sizes, but not larger than 70 cubic inches, with a further provision for (1) such fish "in other packages," (2) "all other fish * * * in tin packages," and (3) "fish in packages containing less than one-half barrel." Held that anvovies in tins containing more than 70 cubic inches and less than half a barrel are subject to the provision for fish "in other packages." Strohmeyer & Arpe Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 295, 296.

Herring in tins, which have been pickled, salted, skinned, or boned, are dutiable as fish * * * in tin packages," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 258, 30 Stat. 171, rather than as "herrings, pickled or salted," or as "fish, skinned or boned," under paragraphs 260, 261, 30 Stat. 171. The fact of importation in tins controls over the other conditions set forth in the two latter paragraphs. Benson v. United States, 99 Fed. 118, 119, 86 C. C. A. 306.

FISH LEGALLY CAUGHT

The proviso in Pub. Acts 1899, p. 123, Act No. 88, § 2, makes it unlawful to market or have in possession specified kinds of fish of less than specified weight: "Provided that it shall be lawful to transport or sell any of said described kinds of 'fish legally caught' during any season of the year," affirmatively gives fishermen the right to transport and sell mature fish at any time when legally caught, but that it does not allow the taking and sale of immature fish caught in the open season in legal nets and found dead or injured when removed from the nets. People v. Coffey, 118 N. W. 732, 733, 155 Mich. 103.

FISH ROE

Dutiable as an article preserved for food, see Preservation—Preserved.

FISH SKINNED OR BONED

Cream of codfish, consisting of codfish skinned and boned, and subjected to the further process of cutting or shredding, is dutiable as "fish skinned or boned," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 261, 30 Stat. 171. H. B. Teed & Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 447, 448.

FISHERY

See American Fishery; Right of Fishery.

As personal property, see Personal Property.

As privilege, see Privileges and Immunities.

As real property, see Real Property.

As right, see Right.

Right of fishery as property, see Property.

What is ordinarily known as a "fishery" is the exclusive right of taking fish. By the ancient common or unwritten law prevailing within the locality now constituting the state of New Hampshire, exclusive rights of fishing in lakes and ponds did not vest the proprietor of the soil as such, but fishing, as well as fowling, was free or subject to public control. Percy Summer Club v. Astle, 145 Fed. 53, 55.

A "fishery" is a right to employ within a particular stretch of water lawful means for the taking of fish which may be found there. It is to be distinguished from a fishing place, or the right to use a particular shore or beach as a basis for carrying on the business. The latter is always vested in the shore owner, and is entirely distinct from the right to fish from the water. As a right of property, a "fishery" is real and not personal property. It is a part of the soil, and not an entity having an independent existence. So far as it is exercised upon another's land, it is a profit à prendre, and cannot therefore be claimed by way of easement. Where a mere right of fishery in public water has been conferred by the sovereign, it will not be regarded as exclusive, in the absence of anything to indicate an intention to make it exclusive, although the title to the soil is in the grantor. A navigable stream is a public highway, where all the people of common right may go, and prima facie have a common right to fish. Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1067, 1068, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 132.

FISHING

See Railway Fishplates.

FISSURE

The boundaries of a lode constitute a "fissure." Noyes v. Clifford, 94 Pac. 842, 847, 37 Mont. 138.

FISSURE VEIN

"Fissure veins" have many characteristics. They are the fillings of fissures or openings of the country rock, of all kinds of rocks of all ages, contain different kinds of material, in some respects corresponding with, in others differing from, the country rock; the most common material being quartz. The fissures have selvages and slickensides, and the gangue material is generally easily distinguished from the country rock. Fissure veins are simple or banded, according to structure as to minerals. Some continue in the same direction; others are irregular and change their courses. Some have continuity of ore, while others are barren in places, and still others are faulted." Grand Cent. Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 P. 648, 676, 29 Utah, 490.

FIT

See Reasonably Fit.

FIT AND COMPETENT

As used in the rule requiring a master to select fit and competent persons as collaborators for his employes, the words "fit and competent persons" mean something more than skillful and experienced persons; carefulness and faithfulness being also required. Furlong v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 78 Atl. 489, 492, 83 Conn. 568, 21 Ann. Cas. 937.

FIT ONLY

The words "fit only," as used in Tariff Act 1897, Free List, par. 568, admitting free grease and oils fit only for soap making, wire drawing, or stuffing or dressing leather, are to be strictly construed, so that, though a certain cod oil was commonly used for stuffing or leather dressing, it was not within the free list as "fit only" for that purpose, where it was fit, among other things, for the manufacture of blacking, etc. Swan & Finch Co. v. United States, 113 Fed. 243, 244, 5 C. C. A. 200.

Bones which have been submitted to process of crushing or grinding, producing an article known commercially as crushed or ground bone, which is fit for other than fertilizing purposes, was dutiable as "manures of bone" under paragraph 460 of the act of 1890, and was not free as "bones crushed or not burned, calcined, ground, steamed, or otherwise manufactured, * * * fit only for fertilizing purposes." Gardiner v. Wise, 84 Fed. 337, 338, 28 C. C. A. 148.

Old gunny cloth or cotton bagging, formerly used for covering cotton bales in ragged, dirty, and partly rotten pieces, to be used chiefly as paper stock for making Manila paper only, is no longer "fit only" for paper stock under paragraph 632 of the free list and is dutiable under paragraph 468, as waste, not specially provided for, at 10 per cent. ad valorem; it being shown that, besides being used for the making of paper, great quantities of it are used for patching cotton bales and for conversion into yarn or for making jute shoddy. Train v. United States, 107 Fed. 261.

FITFUL ACTS OF OWNERSHIP

Claim of ownership of land for a number of years, the payment of taxes thereon, the occasional cutting of timber, and the employment of agents to maintain a watch to prevent other persons from trespassing thereon, were only "fitful acts of ownership" and insufficient to establish adverse possession. Connerly v. Dickinson, 99 S. W. 82, 83, 81 Ark. 258 (citing Brown v. Bocquin, 20 S. W. 818, 57 Ark. 97; Driver v. Martin, 60 S. W. 651, 68 Ark. 551; Boynton v. Ashabranne, 88 S. W. 566, 75 Ark. 415; Henry Shoe Co. v. Williamson, 40 S. W. 703, 64 Ark. 100).

FITTED FOR USE

Where steel parts have been assembled and united into complete window sashes, they have been too far advanced in manufacture to permit their inclusion within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 125, 30 Stat. 159, relating to "structural shapes of iron or steel * * * fitted for use." Ackerson v. United States, 172 Fed. 303.

FIVE

FIVE AND ONE PER CENT.

Where defendants' grantors applied to a firm for a mortgage loan at "five and one er cent. per annum" from a specified date, and the firm made the loan from its own funds at 5 and 1 per cent., taking two notes and mortgages; one securing the amount of the loan at 5 per cent. interest, and the other securing a note for 1 per cent. of such amount, with interest at 8 per cent., the words "five and one per cent." should be construed to mean 6 per cent. interest, and not 5 per cent. interest and 1 per cent. commission, so that, on payment of the loan on an interest date as authorized by the mortgage, the holder of the second mortgage was not entitled to hold and enforce it for the amount of interest subsequently accruing. Citizens' State Bank of Perry v. Chambers, 105 N. W. 92, 324, 129 Iowa, 414.

FIVE DOLLAR BILL

The ordinary meaning of the term "five dollar bill" is a bank bill for the payment of five dollars, and an indictment charging a person with stealing "one hundred and twenty dollars in paper money, to wit, two twenty-dollar bills, five ten-dollar bills, and six five-dollar bills," is not subject to demurrer on the ground that it does not disclose what kind of money was stolen. Johnson v. State, 5 S. E. 960, 962, 119 Ga. 257 (citing Allen v. State, 12 S. E. 651, 86 Ga. 400).

FIVE PER CENT. GRADE

A "five per cent. grade" is a rise of five feet in 100 feet. Alexandria v. Morgan's Louisiana & A. T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 5, 69, 109 La. 50.

FIX

In a sentence reciting that accused is sentenced "for a term of not less than six years, and the court recommends that the maximum term be not more than seven years," etc., the language as to the maximum period, although in the form of a recommendation, amounts to a "fixing" of the maximum period of imprisonment, and hence the sentence cannot be treated as a nullity so as to justify a resentencing. In re Richards, 114 N. W. 348, 349, 150 Mich. 421.

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 878), § 455, authorizing the commissioner of bridges, when thereto authorized by the board of estimate and apportionment and board of aldermen, to employ a consulting engineer skilled in bridge construction, and Laws 1897, c. 665, providing for the establishment of a public drive and parkway as an extension of Riverside Drive, did not authorize the commissioner of highways to contract with an engineer to furnish plans and specifications for the drive and superintend part of the work for compensation based upon a percentage of the cost, until such plans and specifications were approved by the board of estimate and apportionment, and such contract was not the fixing of the salary of a consulting engineer, within section 456. Hildreth v. City of New York, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1053, 138 App. Div. 103.

Finality implied

"Fix" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as "to decide definitely, make sure, settle, determine as, 'His fate will be fixed to-night,'" and in this sense it is used in the provision of the tax law that the assessors shall after a hearing "fix" the value of the property, and hence, the provision for the re-assessing of land unlawfully assessed and for an assessment at the valuation for the previous year having provided for a notice and hearing before the fixing of the value, it is not unconstitutional as providing for an assessment without notice. Ft. Miller Pulp & Paper Co. v. Bratt, 104 N. Y. Supp. 350, 356, 119 App. Div. 685.

Under Laws 1903, p. 64, § 9, requiring a public improvement ordinance to fix the time the work shall be completed, and providing that the council shall not consent to more than two extensions, an ordinance, requiring the work to be completed within a specified time provided the days' work lost because of injunction, court proceedings, bad weather, strikes, etc., shall be added to the days specified, is invalid, because it fails to fix the time for the completion of the work, the word "fix" meaning immovable or definite; to determine or settle definitely. Rackliff v. Peters, 115 S. W. 503, 504, 126 Mo. App. 168.

Under Laws 1903, p. 64, § 9, providing that ordinances for public improvements shall fix the time within which the work shall be completed after the contract shall be awarded, and that the council may give its consent for an extension of the time only on the contractor requesting it and consenting to a reduction of the price, an ordinance declaring that the work shall be completed within a specified time after the award of the contract provided that days' work lost through injunction, bad weather, general strikes, etc., shall be added to the number of days above specified, is not invalid for failing to fix the time for the completion of the work, the word "fix" merely meaning a rule by which the time is to be determined. Gist v. Rackliffe-Gibson Const. Co., 123 S. W. 921, 926, 224 Mo. 369.

As prescribe

To "fix a compensation" within B. & O. Comp. §§ 2636, 2638, requiring the county court to "fix a compensation" for publishing its proceedings, is to prescribe a rule or rate by which it is to be determined (citing And. Law Dict.). It is something more than the mere examination and allowance of a claim against the county; it not only involves the determination of the amount to be allowed, but makes the result final and conclusive upon the parties by a decision or order. Flagg v. Columbia County, 94 Pac. 184, 186, 51 Or. 172.

FIXED

The word "fixed," as ordinarily used, means securely placed, fastened, settled, immovable, unalterable. National Candy Co. v. Miller, 160 Fed. 51, 56, 87 C. C. A. 207.

A letter written by the father of one of the makers of a note directed to the indorsee, reciting, "I have sworn off going on notes, but want to help my son, and, if he should not pay the $3,000 note, I will see that it is fixed and told the banker that I would," signed, etc., constituted a guaranty of payment of the note, according to its tenor and legal effect; the word "fixed" in such letter being used in the sense of "pay." McCauley v. Cross (Tex.) 111 S. W. 790, 791.

A receipt for one month's rent of described premises, "five years' lease to be fixed later," should be construed as meaning that a five-year lease of the premises at the rate of rental specified in the receipt would be given later; the word "fixed" having the meaning of "given," and, as so construed, would constitute a sufficiently definite agreement to give a lease. Schirmer v. Rehill, 109 N. Y. Supp. 745, 746, 57 Misc. Rep. 439.

The word "fixed," as it relates to the compensation of a teacher in Laws 1899, c. 417, amending Greater New York Charter, authorizing each school board to adopt by-laws fixing the salaries of principals, etc., is used in the sense of regulated, pursuant to a continuous discretionary power to reduce salaries to the minimum limit. Buckbee v. Board of Education, 100 N. Y. Supp. 943, 947, 115 App. Div. 366.

FIXED AND LIMITED TERM

A provision in a city charter authorizing the mayor and council to lease for a "fixed and limited term" any city property not needed for public use does not prevent the leasing of such property to be used for public entertainments; such leasing is "renting for a fixed and limited term." Gottlieb-Knabe v. Macklin, 71 Atl. 949, 951, 109 Md. 429, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, 16 Ann. Cas. 1092.

FIXED BY LAW

See Now Fixed By Law.

FIXED BY ORDINANCE

"Fixed by ordinance," as used in a statute authorizing the construction and maintenance of waterworks at such rates as may be fixed by ordinance, etc., may be construed to mean by ordinance from time to time as might be deemed necessary. Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 155 Fed. 554, 563 (quoting and applying definitions in Freeport Water Co. v. City of Freeport, 21 Sup. Ct. 493, 180 U. S. 599, 45 L. Ed. 679).

FIXED CHARGES

By the term "fixed charges" is meant the general running expenses which are attached to every business and composing an essential element in the cost of a manufactured article. Worrell & Williams v. Kinneair Mfg. Co., 49 S. E. 988, 990, 103 Va. 71, 2 Ann. Cas. 997.

In a policy of strike insurance providing for an indemnity not exceeding \$50,000 against all direct damage from suspension of operations at plaintiff's factory caused by strike, and that, if a strike entirely suspended the production of goods, defendant insurer should be liable for loss of net profits and for fixed charges, to an amount not exceeding \$166 $\frac{2}{3}$ per day for each working day of such entire suspension, and that, in case strike prevented the making of a full day's average production of goods, defendant should be liable for that proportion of the net profits and fixed charges which the production so prevented from being made "bears to the average daily product," not exceeding the amount insured, and further that the average daily product should be determined from the amount of goods last produced during a period of 12 months' full work prior to the strike, and that losses should be computed from the day of the strike to such time as plaintiff should be able to produce at former daily average, etc., the term "fixed charges" meant those expenses necessarily incurred in maintaining the organization in such state of emergency as would enable it to resume normal production without substantial delay after the strike was ended, or as might be broken by a gradual return of employees, and was not limited to interest, tax, rent, maintenance, employees under contract, and such as could not be stopped without detriment to the property, exclusive of salaries, office force, or wages of mechanics. Buffalo Forge Co. v. Mutual Security Co., Atl. 995, 999, 83 Conn. 393.

FIXED LIABILITY

The consideration for rent is the use of the land, and a covenant to pay rent creates no debt until the time stipulated for the payment arrives, and therefore rent accruing under a lease after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the lessee is not provable against his estate as "a fixed liability." * * * absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition," within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a (30 Stat. 562; both its existence and amount being at that time contingent upon uncertain events. A provision in a lease that in case the lessees should be declared bankrupt the lease should terminate, and the lessor should have the right to re-enter, and that in such case the lessees should indemnify the lessor for any loss of rents during the remainder of the term, paying the same monthly as upon rent days, does not create "a fixed liability."

* * absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition" against the lessees, within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a (1), 30 Stat. 562, which can be proved as a claim against their estate; but the liability is altogether contingent, because of the uncertainty as to whether the lessor will re-enter and terminate the lease, and, if he does, whether there will be any loss, and its amount; nor is such claim provable as "a debt founded upon an express contract," under section 63a (4), which must be paid in connection with, and as limited by, subdivision 1, and cannot be construed as admitting the proof of claims which are contingent both as to liability and amount at the time of the filing of the petition. In re Booth & Appel, 181 Fed. 667, 669, 104 C. C. A. 9, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 270.

Where tenant under a lease for a year is adjudicated a bankrupt, and is granted his discharge before the expiration of the lease, claim for rent accruing after filing of petition is not a "fixed liability" within the Bankruptcy Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541), and provable against the estate, or released by his discharge. Scott v. Demarest, 135 N. Y. App. 264, 266, 75 Misc. Rep. 289.

A provision in a lease that, in case the lessee shall be petitioned into bankruptcy or declared a bankrupt, the lessor may re-enter and terminate the lease, and that in such case the lessee shall pay to the lessor "as damages a sum which at the time of such termination * * * represents the difference between the rental value of the premises and the rent * * * herein named for the residue of the term," does not create a liability which can be proved as a claim against the estate. Slocum v. Sollday, 188 Fed. 410, 2, 106 C. C. A. 58.

Where a lease provided that on default of the payment of any rent the rent for the entire term should at once become due and payable, on the bankruptcy of the lessee liable so in default the rent for the term, so far as definitely fixed by the lease, is a "fixed liability absolutely owing," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a (1), 30 Stat. 562, and provable in bankruptcy against the lessee's estate; but taxes and insurance premiums which the bankrupt tenant was obligated to pay as a part of the rent, but which at the time of the bankruptcy were not due, nor the amount then capable of ascertainment, are not so proven. In re Kittling Drug Co., 164 Fed. 482, 488.

Where the holders of notes given by a bankrupt, containing warrants of attorney and stipulations for the payment of attorney's fees for services rendered in the premises and collecting the same, took judgments on the notes, which were not due, a few days before the bankruptcy, after which they proved the notes in bankruptcy, together with claims for attorney's fees, it is held, that under the law of Pennsylvania, by which such stipulations for attorney's fees are held not to create a "fixed liability" on the part of the debtor, but only a liability for reasonable fees for services rendered, not exceeding the amount stipulated, the creditors were not entitled to the allowance of the fees claimed; there being no proof of any collection service rendered which entitled them to indemnification. McCabe v. Patton, 174 Fed. 217, 218, 96 C. C. A. 225.

An attorney's fee provided for in a note, payable on condition that "default is made in the payment of this note at maturity, and it is placed in the hands of an attorney for collection or suit is brought on the same," is not a "fixed liability" owing at the time of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the maker, provable against his estate, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a, cl. 1, 30 Stat. 562, where the petition was filed before the note matured, and it is immaterial that the note had been placed in the hands of an attorney. In re T. H. Thompson Milling Co., 144 Fed. 314, 315.

FIXED OPINION

By "fixed opinion" disqualifying for jury service is meant opinion of such a firm and fixed nature that it engenders in the mind that "pride of opinion" which causes one, involuntarily and innocently, it may be, to combat and doubt testimony tending to cast discredit on the opinion already fixed. Gammons v. State, 87 South. 609, 618, 85 Miss. 103.

Where a juror, at the trial for murder in the first degree, stated, on his examination, that a nephew of the deceased, who was not a witness of the homicide, had told him about the case, but that all that was said was hearsay, and also stated that he had formed a "fixed" opinion in his mind as to the guilt or innocence of accused, but that he could disregard that opinion and try the case according to the law and the evidence, and that he had no bias or prejudice for or against the defendant; and another juror, who had heard substantially the same account on rumor, also stated that he had no bias or prejudice against the accused, and that his opinion would not control him in the face of the evidence, it was held, that the word "fixed" was merely a relative term, not necessarily implying fixed bias; and that such opinions if based merely upon rumor, did not of themselves disqualify the jurors. Jackson v. State, 145 S. W. 559, 560, 103 Ark. 21.

FIXED STANDARDS

"There are standards of conduct in plenty, variation from which is permitted and even contemplated; but they cannot properly be called 'fixed standards' in the sense of being settled, firm, immovable. * * * A standard of freight rates from which transportation companies should be permitted to depart at will, generally or specially, openly or secretly, could hardly be regarded as a real or true standard in any sense." Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Anderson, 101 N. W. 1019, 1020, 72 Neb. 856.

FIXED UP

The term "fixed up," as used by a witness in referring to the acts of certain persons relative to an insurance application and note, merely denotes that they filled in the blanks and wrote out the note. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 8, 36 Mont. 592.

FIXTURE

See Domestic Fixtures; Ornamental Fixtures; Permanent Fixtures; Stock, Fixtures, and Accounts; Trade Fixtures.

Other permanent fixtures, see Other.

A "fixture," as defined by Civ. Code, § 600, is a thing attached to land by roots, as in the case of trees, or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls, or permanently resting upon it as in the case of buildings, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Las Animas & San Joaquin Land Co. v. Fatjo, 99 Pac. 393, 394, 9 Cal. App. 318.

The rules for ascertaining whether an article is a "chattel" or an irremovable "fixture" are as follows: "(1) Real or constructive annexation of the article in question to the realty. (2) Appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected. (3) The intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold; this intention being inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, and the policy of the law in relation thereto, the structure and mode of the annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made." Ozark v. Adams, 83 S. W. 920, 921, 73 Ark. 227 (quoting and adopting definition in Choate v. Kimball, 19 S. W. 108, 56 Ark. 55, and citing Bemis v. Bank, 40 S. W. 127, 63 Ark. 625; Monticello Bank v. Sweet, 43 S. W. 500, 64 Ark. 502; Markle v. Stackhouse, 44 S. W. 808, 65 Ark. 23; Tenniswood v. Smith [Ark.] 82 S. W. 834).

"There is a wilderness of authority on this question of fixtures and a hopeless conflict of decision. The true criterion of a 'fixture' is the united application of these requisites: (1) Actual annexation to the realty or something appurtenant thereto; (2) application to the use or purpose to change that part of the realty with which it is connected is appropriated; (3) the intention of the party making the annexation to make a permanent accession to the freehold." A heating plant, money drawer, ticket box, opera chair, curtains and scenery, gas pipes, plumbing, electric switch boards, and lights contained in a mortgaged theater building are "fixtures" passing to the purchaser at foreclosure sale. Filley v. Christopher, 80 Pac. 884, 885, 39 Wash. 22, 109 Am. St. Rep. 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Philadelphia Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Mille, 56 Pac. 382, 20 Wash. 607, 44 L. R. A. 559, 72 Am. St. Rep. 138).

A "fixture" is an article which was once a chattel, but has become a part of the realty by physical annexation thereto; the requisite being actual annexation to the realty or something appurtenant thereto, application to the purpose to which that part of the realty is appropriated, and intention to permanently annex it. In an action for the conversion of property which defendant claimed as a fixture to realty placed thereon by the purchaser of mining claims, whether the property was a fixture must be decided with reference to the law of the province of British Columbia, where the property is situated, that law is shown by competent proof. Gassway v. Thomas, 105 Pac. 168, 170, 56 Wash. 77, 20 Ann. Cas. 1387.

"Real property" is land and generally whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed to the land, but there are many articles known as "fixtures," which, though originally wholly movable and personal in their nature, have acquired, by having been affixed to real estate or applied to use in connection with it, the character of realty. State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 740, 6 Pennewill, 322.

The essentials which will change the character of property from personalty to realty are physical annexation of one to the other, adaptation of the improvements to the use for which the realty is devoted, and an intention to make a permanent improvement. One who does the plumbing work in a building makes it part of the realty, so that he cannot claim it as against a subsequent mortgagee, though the contract under which he does the work provides that all material furnished shall remain his till he is paid, of which contract the mortgagee had no notice, and which contract was not recorded. McMillan v. Leeman, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1055, 1056, 101 App. Div. 436.

Where land was conveyed with reversion to the grantor, and the grantor intended that if the grantee ceased to operate a tannery thereon, a building erected by the grantee for a tannery, built on a rock foundation for permanent use, was a "fixture" and part of the realty. Mosca Town Co. v. Wellington, 89 Pac. 783, 784, 39 Colo. 326, 121 Am. St. Rep. 175 (citing Roseville Alta Min. Co. v. Iowa Gulch Min. Co., 24 Pac. 920, 15 Colo. 29, 22 Am. St. Rep. 373; Cary Hardware Co. v. McCarty, 50 Pac. 744, 10 Colo. App. 200).

A house or similar structure, when placed on the land by another, even by mistake as to the boundary, becomes a "fixture"

Illinger v. McMinn, 104 S. W. 1079, 1080, Tex. Civ. App. 89.

Where a lease of city lots provided that improvements by the lessee should belong him and might be removed during the last days of the lease, a five-story building erected by the lessee remained personal property during the lease, but, if not removed, became a part of the realty, as a "fixture." Hughes v. Kerahow, 93 Pac. 1116, 1117, 42 Mo. 210, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723.

Agreement by parties as to character

A ginhouse and machinery therein, such engines and boilers, permanently annexed to the soil, are real estate, under the rule that whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to the soil, and this applies where one who erects fixtures has a permanent estate in the land, qualified only by the rule that the annexation must be of a permanent character; and personality, when permanently affixed to realty, becomes a part of the realty, unaffected by the fact that a right of removal may exist by virtue of an agreement. Ginners' Mut. Underwriters of San Angelo, Tex., v. Wiley & House (Tex.) 147 S. W. 629, 632.

Where a sprinkler system installed in a knitting mill consisted of a 50,000-gallon tank erected on a concrete foundation, and pipes running underground into the plant, bolted to the beams of the buildings, it was a fixture, notwithstanding, a provision in the conditional contract for the installation and sale thereof that it should retain its character as personal property, and that the title should remain in the seller until paid for. re Williamsburg Knitting Mill, 190 Fed. 1, 874.

Where plaintiffs sold a gasoline engine to defendant under an express agreement that the title thereto should remain in plaintiffs until the purchase price was paid in full, and that on default plaintiffs were authorized to remove the engine without process of law, such agreement operated as a matter of law to preserve the character of the engine as personal property, though it was substantially affixed to real estate purchased by L. from defendant, not only as against L., but also as against defendant on her electing to resume possession of the real estate for L.'s default in paying the installments of the price. Davis v. Bliss, 90 N. E. 851, 852, 187 N. Y. 77, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458 (citing Tift v. Horton, 53 N. Y. 77, 13 Am. Rep. 537; Kerby v. Clapp, 44 N. Y. Supp. 116, 15 App. Div. 37; Godard v. Gould [N. Y.] 14 Barb. 662; Ford v. Cobb, 90 N. Y. 344; Sisson v. Hibbard, 75 N. Y. 122).

Annexation

A chattel is not merged in realty, so as to become a fixture, unless it is annexed with the intent of the person making the annexation to make it a permanent accession to the realty. The most important element to be established tending to prove that a chattel has been merged into a fixture is the intent with which the party provided its use, and such intent is the intent which the law deduces from all the circumstances of the annexation. Roderick v. Sanborn, 76 Atl. 263, 264, 106 Me. 159, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 26 Ann. Cas. 469.

There must be an actual annexation of the chattel to the realty, with an intention of making a permanent accession to the freehold, and the application of the chattel to the use for which the realty in connection with which it is used is appropriated; and, in determining the question of annexation, more weight is to be given to the intention of the owner than to the method adopted in making the annexation. Security Trust Co. v. Temple Co., 58 Atl. 865, 866, 67 N. J. Eq. 514.

"The definition of a 'fixture' usually given is: 'An article which was a chattel, and which, being physically annexed or affixed to the realty, becomes accessory to it, and a part and parcel of it.' It thus appears that annexation is the controlling element in the very definition of a 'fixture,' and we find on examination that the overwhelming weight of authority in this country is that the physical annexation of a chattel to the realty is necessary in order to render it part of the realty;" and commercial finishing material not specially made for a building, and available for use in any building, purchased by the grantor of a deed of trust, and stored in the building covered by such deed, but in no manner attached thereto, and not mentioned in any conveyance of the property, does not constitute "fixtures" so as to pass to a purchaser of the property on foreclosure. Blue v. Gunn, 87 S. W. 408, 409, 114 Tenn. 414, 69 L. R. A. 892, 108 Am. St. Rep. 912, 4 Ann. Cas. 1157.

"A chattel that is fit to be annexed to the freehold, and has been brought upon it with an intention on the part of the possessor to annex it, does not become a 'fixture' unless actually annexed or placed in a position in which it is intended to be used, and in which it is adapted for use." Longino v. Wester (Tex.) 88 S. W. 445 (quoting and adopting definition in Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282).

Articles not otherwise attached to realty than by their own weight are prima facie personality, while articles affixed to the land in fact, though but slightly, are prima facie realty, and the burden of proof is on the one contending that the former is realty, or that the latter is personality. To constitute a "fixture" there must be actual annexation to the realty or something appurtenant thereto; appropriation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected; and the intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold. The commissioners' court of B. county purchased a safe and placed the same in the courthouse. Because of its great weight the commissioners had a foundation of stone and cement built from the ground to the floor level to support the safe, and when the foundation was finished the safe was rolled on and supported by the foundation, but was not attached to it in any manner. The door of the room in which the safe was placed being too small to admit it, it was necessary to take out a part of the wall of the room, and it could only be removed in a similar manner. On a sale of the courthouse the commissioners reserved the safe. Held, that the safe was not so attached to the realty as to be a "fixture." Parker v. Blount County, 41 South. 923, 924, 148 Ala. 275 (citing 19 Cyc. pp. 1037, 1136; Bank of Opelika v. Kiser, 24 South. 11, 119 Ala. 201; Powers v. Harris, 68 Ala. 410).

Where a bank safe was not attached to the building by bolts or screws, irons, or nails, it was not a fixture, as such term includes only articles attached in some manner to the building. Mecca Fire Ins. Co. (Mut.) of Waco v. First State Bank of Hamlin (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1083 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2832).

In the absence of a contract of conditional sale, or other evidence of an intention that gas ranges, affixed to the kitchens in an apartment house designed to rent, should remain personal property, they became "fixtures." Central Union Gas. Co. v. Browning, 131 N. Y. Supp. 464, 467, 146 App. Div. 783.

Ordinary kitchen ranges, placed in an apartment house under a contract of conditional sale, and not attached to the building otherwise than by stove pipes and water pipes leading to a detachable hot water reservoir, do not constitute a part of the realty, so as to pass to the mortgagee under a mortgage of the building. Jennings v. Vahey, 66 N. E. 598, 599, 183 Mass. 47, 97 Am. St. Rep. 409.

Engines, boilers, hoisting works, mills, pumps, and the like annexed to the soil for mining are fixtures. Arnold v. Goldfield Third Chance Min. Co., 109 Pac. 718, 719, 32 Nev. 447.

As associated directly with building

Steel tanks installed in a brewery constitute fixtures where they are essential to operation of the plant, are eight feet in diameter more than twelve feet high, possess sufficient gravity to hold themselves in place without fastenings, and are removable from the building only on partial removal of a brick wall. Detroit Steel Cooperage Co. v. Sistersville Brewing Co., 195 Fed. 447, 450, 115 C. C. A. 349.

Detriment to freehold by removal

The tests for determining whether articles attached to a freehold are "fixtures" are: (1) Actual annexation to the freehold; (2) application to the uses for which the real estate was appropriated; and (3) erection or annexation with the intention of making a permanent accession to the freehold, by the use for an indefinite period in connection with the building. Pumps especially adapted and continuously used as a part of a manufacturing plant are fixtures included in mortgage on the property, although they are removable without injury. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Guild (N. J.) 64 Atl. 694, 695.

Refrigerating machinery, boilers built into a building, electric wiring, pipes, etc., to conduct electricity and gas from one part of the building to another, were a part of the realty after installation, and not "fixtures," as between landlord and tenant, although they could have been pulled out on termination of the lease without materially injuring the building. In re City of New York, 92 N. Y. Supp. 8, 10, 101 App. Div. 527.

Enhancement of value of realty

Whenever chattels have been placed in and annexed to a building by their owner as a part of the means by which to carry out the purposes for which the building was erected or to which it has been adapted, and with the intention of permanently increasing its value for the use to which it is devoted, they become, as between the owner and his mortgagee, "fixtures," and as much a part of the realty as the building itself; and this is true, notwithstanding that such chattels may be severed from and taken out of the building in which they are located, without doing any injury either to them or to it, and advantageously used elsewhere, and notwithstanding that the building itself may thereafter readily be devoted to a use entirely different from that which was contemplated when the annexation was made. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Penn Cordage Co., 5 Atl. 409, 410, 66 N. J. Eq. 305, 105 Am. St. Rep. 640.

Different relationship of parties

"What constitutes a 'fixture' depends largely on the particular circumstances of each case. In controversies between landlord and tenant there is the most liberal indulgence toward the claim of the tenant" (quoting Davis v. Mugan, 56 Mo. App. 311). * * * The common-law rule has been relaxed as to the question between landlord and tenant, and what would be a fixture as between vendor and vendee, or mortgagee and mortgagee, does not apply to landlord and tenant." So where defendants leased plaintiff's property, in which was a steam boiler connected with pipes and with the building in such a manner that it could be unscrewed from the pipes and then removed by sections from the pit in which it stood, and on finding the boiler insufficient, put in another similar boiler not attached to the wall in any way that would not permit its removal without injury to the building with the intention of removing the new boiler and replacing the old one when the term expired

The new boiler was not a "fixture," and defendants could remove it. McLain Inv. Co. v. Cunningham, 87 S. W. 605, 606, 113 Mo. App. 519.

As to what are "fixtures," substantially the same rules prevail between grantor and grantee as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but different rules apply in relation to landlord and tenant from considerations of public policy and because of the temporary nature of the tenure. Young v. Chandler, 3 Atl. 539, 541, 102 Me. 251.

Design or intention

The purpose and intent of the party annexing personalty is a controlling circumstance in determining whether it has become a fixture. Gasaway v. Thomas, 105 Pac. 38, 170, 56 Wash. 77, 20 Ann. Cas. 1337.

The principal criterion for determining whether an article became a fixture is the owner's intention in putting the material in on the land or building—whether his purpose was to make it permanently a part thereof. In case of machinery and other articles furnished to a factory, an important circumstance in ascertaining the intention of the proprietor to make it permanently a part of the building is the adaptability of the article or machine to the work or business of the place, and if the thing furnished was necessary thereto, or to the purpose for which the building was designed and used, it was a convenient accessory or commonly employed, in connection with such business, his intention to annex it permanently may be inferred. If the owner of the land or building purposed in putting an article in on the same to make it permanently a part thereof, it will usually be treated as a fixture and lienable, though it is fastened only slightly, and may be displaced without injuring the freehold. Banner Iron Works v. Etna Iron Works, 122 S. W. 762, 764, 143 Mo. App. 1.

Mining houses and machinery attached to the soil with the intent that they should remain and become part of the freehold are fixtures." Hoye Coal Co. v. Colvin, 104 S. W. 207, 208, 83 Ark. 528.

The lease required the lessee of rooms in an office building to surrender the premises in as good condition as reasonable use permitted, and provided that all alterations, additions, or improvements made by either party, except movable office furniture put in by the lessee, should be surrendered to the lessor as a part of the premises. The lessee removed some of the permanent partitions with the lessor's consent, agreeing to restore them at the termination of the lease, and constructed temporary partitions, which did not extend to the ceiling, and were lightly nailed to the floor and walls, and at the termination of the lease the permanent partitions were restored. Held, that the reasonable intention of the parties was the test of whether or fixtures were annexed to the realty, and the word "improvements" alone, though of wider meaning than "fixtures," did not include the temporary partitions; and, construing the word in connection with the exceptions in the lease, and in view of the intention shown thereby that such partitions should not be permanently annexed, they were not "improvements," but were "movable office furniture," within the meaning of the lease, and removable by the lessee. United Booking Offices v. Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 216, 217, 65 Misc. Rep. 31.

Whether a structure is a "fixture" as between landlord and tenant depends on the intention to annex to the freehold. In re Beeg, 184 Fed. 522, 524.

In determining whether property attached to realty is a "fixture," the inquiry is as to the relation of the parties, and what they intended when the property was attached, and, when there is no special agreement, all the facts must be examined to arrive at the unexpressed intent, and the relationship of the parties considered. Where the owner of land embracing a factory for manufacturing fertilizer placed an engine therein for use in the process of manufacture, resting it upon a foundation of concrete four and a half feet thick sunk in the ground, and connecting it therewith by six three-quarter inch bolts four feet six inches long with metal bars laid on the bottom of the concrete, the concrete covering the bottom flange of the engine base, and set up a derrick in the earth supported by five metal guys, the lower end of each being anchored to a beam buried in the ground, the engine and derrick constituted "fixtures" and a part of the realty, for which the owner was entitled to compensation, where the lands were taken by the state for canal purposes through eminent domain. Phipps v. State, 127 N. Y. Supp. 260, 264, 69 Misc. Rep. 295.

Defendant owned an unfinished building. He bought finishing lumber, doors, and transoms, and placed them in the building for the purpose of completing it, but before finishing the building he sold it, with the land on which it stood, to plaintiff. The finishing material, etc., was still in the building, but annexed thereto only by its location and weight. Held, in replevin, that the finishing material, etc., passed with the conveyance, for the actual intent is the controlling question, and is that which the law deduces from all the circumstances of the annexation and not from secret intention in making it. Rahm v. Domayer, 114 N. W. 546, 547, 137 Iowa, 18, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727.

Essential to use and permanent

A structure affixed to premises of another by a temporary occupant thereof or by a licensee is deemed temporary in its purpose and not part of the realty. Young v. Chandler, 66 Atl. 539, 541, 102 Me. 251.

A chattel is not merged in realty, so as to become a "fixture," unless it is adapted to and usable with that part of the realty to which it is annexed. A chattel need not be absolutely necessary to the completeness of a dwelling in order to become a fixture, if obviously adapted and intended to be used with it; and where a person who procured storm windows and doors, and with his wife took possession of the premises, intending to make it their home, lived there over four years, using the windows and doors as they were designed to be used during that period, and the doors and windows were made for the house and specially fitted to it, each window frame being fitted to a particular window casing on the building, the window casings being numbered consecutively, and the frames having been procured to make the place more comfortable for use, the doors and windows were fixtures. Roderick v. Sanborn, 76 Atl. 263, 264, 106 Me. 159, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189, 20 Ann. Cas. 469.

Showcases, racks, and hangers, purchased and specially adapted for use in connection with the business of manufacturing and selling harness, and attached by the purchaser to his own building, and used for many years in his conduct of the business, are fixtures, and pass as real estate on a sale on partition. Owings v. Estes, 100 N. E. 205, 206, 256 Ill. 553, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

Heating boiler

Ky. St. § 2463, provides that a person who furnishes materials in the erection or repairing of a house, or for any fixture or machinery therein, or for the improvement of real estate by contract with, or by the written consent of, the owner, contractor, subcontractor, or authorized agent shall have a lien thereon, etc. Held, that a heating boiler purchased by a contractor and installed in defendant's residence constituted a "fixture" and "machinery," within the statute, and also an improvement of the property, within the section, so as to entitle the seller to a materialman's lien therefor. Menne v. American Radiator Co., 150 S. W. 24, 25, 150 Ky. 151.

Light fixtures

Gas appliances, such as pendants, chandeliers, brackets, and globes, are not "fixtures" nor lienable articles, within the statute giving liens for material furnished and labor done on buildings, in the absence of evidence of an intention on the part of the owner when he has them put in to make them permanent parts of the building, and such intention is not shown by the mere fact that they are put in by the original owner of the building, and remain in the same after it is sold by him to another. Frank Adams Elec. Co. v. Gottleb, 86 S. W. 901, 903, 11 Mo. App. 228.

Loose material

"Unless the right to the timber cut passed to the respondent by his patent, he had none, and it could only pass as a 'fixture' on an appurtenance to the realty; but timber felled by the act of man, or wood cut, is personal property." Longino v. Wester (Tex.), 88 S. W. 445 (quoting and adopting definition in Peck v. Brown, 5 Nev. 81).

Machinery

In regard to machinery, there are well defined rules to determine the character of the annexation. "Where the chattel, as attached to the realty, is useful and necessary to its enjoyment, and adds value thereto, and when detached loses its character and usefulness, the chattel becomes a 'fixture' and passes with the freehold." The ponderous character of the machinery, its special construction for the purpose for which the lease was given, the difficulty of detachment, and the necessity for reconstructing and readaptation, when refitted to another mill, are all indicia of the intention to become permanent. Ozark v. Adams, 88 S. W. 920, 922, 73 Ark. 227 (quoting and adopting definition in Wiltale, Mort. Fore. § 428).

Whether machinery is or is not "fixtures" must be determined by the following tests: First, by determining whether the machinery has been actually annexed to the realty, or something appurtenant thereto; second, whether the machinery is applicable to the use or purpose to which that part of the realty with which it is connected is appropriated; third, the intention of the party making the annexation to make a permanent annexation to the freehold. Machinery adapted to and suitable for a gristmill, attached to the real estate by nalla, screws, bolts, and cleats, and used for carrying out the general purpose of the mill, is a "fixture." Great Western Mfg. Co. v. Bathgate, 79 Pac. 903, 905, 15 Okl. 87.

Where, under a lease of mining land with option to purchase, the lessee places machinery on the land, the machinery is personalty, and can be sold and mortgaged by the lessee. Where machinery is placed on mining lands by the lessee thereof and does not become a fixture, an engine house of little value built around the machinery, and which has no use disconnected with the machinery, and is temporary in its character, is a chattel and not a fixture. Mining machinery placed on leased land does not become a fixture after the termination of the lease, where the tenant is a tenant at will in the absence of a notice to quit as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 4110 (Ann. St. 1900).

More physical attachment is not the test as to whether personality annexed to realty is a "fixture," the legal criterion being the intent to annex; and where machinery was sold under an agreement that title should not pass until the price had been fully paid, and the machinery was held in place by bolts and could be easily removed without injury to the building, and in correspondence between the seller and buyer it was referred to as the property of the seller, the purchaser at a receiver's sale of the property, with notice of the conditional sale of the machinery, or a holder of bonds secured by a mortgage given before the machinery was sold, has no higher right to the machinery than the buyer. Wickes Bros. v. Island Park Ass'n, 78 Atl. 4, 935, 229 Pa. 400.

A bankrupt, engaged in manufacturing steel and iron, purchased a "squeezer" and a steam pump for use in his steel mill. The squeezer was a heavy piece of machinery, weighing, with the pump, 37,500 pounds. It was erected on a brick base, to which it was fastened with bolts. To provide proper space therefor, the roof of the building was carried up some six feet, and a skylight built in top. The pump was to be put on a similar base, but none of the parts of the machine were connected with the wall of the building. Between the bankrupt and the seller, such machinery was a "fixture," and within Rev. Ohio 1892, § 8184, providing for a mechanic's lien for the furnishing of machinery for a mill, etc., on the mill or manufactory, and on the interest, leasehold, or otherwise, the owner in the lot or land on which the same may stand. Pfueger v. Lewis Foundry & Machine Co., 134 Fed. 28, 29, 87 C. C. 102.

In Pennsylvania, between a mortgagee and assignee for benefit of creditors, machinery in a factory which is a necessary part thereof, and without which it could not be fully equipped establishment, is a "fixture," to be regarded as a part of the freehold subject to the lien of a real estate mortgagee or judgment against the owner. In re Beeg, 4 Fed. 522, 524.

Under the mining law, mining machinery, fixtures, and appurtenances placed on the property by the lessee are not regarded as fixtures that pass with the soil and lease appurtenances, but as personal property of the lessee that may be removed by him in the absence of an express stipulation in the lease to the contrary. National Bank of Wichita v. Spot Cash Coal Co., 136 S. W. 3, 957, 98 Ark. 597.

Under Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 18) § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, 1589, c. 712, defining the terms "land," "real estate," and "real property," as used in the tax law, machinery designed for the production and distribution of electricity placed in a building in the city of New York, erected and planned for the same purpose upon specially prepared foundations, and which was being used for that purpose, is taxable as real estate, although the title to the machinery was not vested in the owner of the building because a part of the purchase price remained unpaid; greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 390, c. 466) § 894, making the assessment of real estate to the wrong owner valid. People ex rel. New York Edison Co. v. Wells, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1057, 1058, 135 App. Div. 644.

The former rule that, to constitute a fixture as between vendor and vendee, or mortgagor and mortgagee, it was necessary that there should be such annexation to the freehold that the chattel could not be removed therefrom without injury either to the freehold or to itself is no longer followed in the case of machinery and appliances of a manufacturing plant. In such case machinery set upon the freehold by the owner and "fixtures" erected or fastened thereto for a permanent purpose, or as an improvement to the property, enhancing its value, will be considered a fixture, especially if the adaptation of the means to the end is shown to be appropriate as being indicative of a design to incorporate the machinery with the freehold and make it a part of it. When chattels are attached to the freehold for a permanent purpose, and are adapted to the employment or business to which the real estate is devoted, and the circumstances indicate a design on the part of the owner of the freehold to make the machinery a part of it, the chattels then become part and parcel of the freehold, and the owner of the land himself cannot detach or remove them, and change their character back into personalty, to the prejudice of a mortgage creditor. The rule as to "fixtures," as applied to machinery moved by the power of steam or water, has been greatly extended in modern times, both in England and America; but it still remains the settled law that machinery and implements in a cotton or woolen mill, although necessary for its use and enjoyment as such, and although of a character adapted only to the particular business there carried on, if not actually attached in some manner to the building, or to fixed machinery, by belting or otherwise, do not pass with the freehold. In cotton and woolen mills all machinery actually affixed to the freehold, although only by screws or bolts, or connected with it by belts or bands, passes with the realty. With the corpus of fixed machinery passes all that properly belongs to and forms an integral part of it, although capable of being detached and used elsewhere. In case a given article, from its nature or use, is part of a fixture, so are also all duplicates and different patterns of the same, used for the same purpose, although one only may be used in the same ma-especially one divided into rooms and fitted for the occupancy of a single family; apartment." The purposes of a restrictive covenant in deeds of lots and abutting on a street prohibiting the erection of "flats" or tenement houses is to prevent a house from being used by more than one family, each living by itself on different floors fitted up separately for housekeeping, and a construction of the covenant which will permit two-story dwelling arranged for the use of two families, each keeping house by means of fixed conveniences on each floor, and each using a common front entrance, and each having separate entrances in the rear, will defeat the object thereto. Godfrey v. Hampton, 127 S. W. 626, 628, 148 Mo. App. 157.

A "flat," etymologically, is a floor in a building. Later the use of the word became restricted to a floor completely equipped for housekeeping purposes. A building containing such floors so equipped, each of which is called a "flat," is itself termed a "flat," but, more properly speaking, should be termed a "flat house." Any building consisting of more than one story, in which building there are one or more suites of rooms on each floor equipped for separate housekeeping purposes, is a "flat," within the meaning of a restriction in a deed that the grantee shall not permit to be erected on the premises any building which shall be used or occupied as a flat. If what is known as a "flat" becomes an "apartment house" when higher rental is charged, the payment of a rental of from $35 to $40 per month does not turn what is otherwise a "flat" into an "apartment," so as to take it out of a building restriction binding the grantee not to erect a flat on the premises. Lignot v. Jaekle, 65 A. 221-224, 72 N. J. Eq. 233.

A "garage and store room" is not included within the term "flat building," and hence its erection is not a violation of a restriction in a deed against the erection of such structures. Jones v. Williams, 106 Pac. 166, 168, 56 Wash. 588.

FLAT RATE

A "flat rate," as used in city ordinances fixing rates to be charged consumers by water company, is a rate based on the number of fixtures used and the business for which the supply is intended. Wilson v. Tallahassee, 36 South. 63, 64, 47 Fla. 351.

Where a tax is imposed upon all merchants without regard to the volume of their business, it is termed a "flat rate." Salt Lake City v. Christensen Co., 95 Pac. 523, 526, 34 Utah, 38, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

FLAT STONES

In an action to confirm a special assessment evidence held to show that the term "flat stones," as used in an ordinance in describing the material for bedding the curb-stones, was understood by contractors to mean limestone blocks about six inches thick and 12 to 16 inches square, as nearly uniform as can be obtained. Beckett v. City Chicago, 75 N. E. 747, 749, 218 Ill. 97.

FLATS

The word "flats" is of doubtful meaning when used as a boundary, as it means in one case the sea side and in another case the land side of the "flats." The meaning to be attached to the word, when used in a deed, must depend upon the instrument in which it occurs, taken as a whole, and upon surrounding circumstances. It does not include the space between high and low water marks if the word is used in its technical sense. Haskell v. Friend, 81 N. E. 962, 963, 137 Mass. 198 (citing Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155).

A mussel bed, over which the water flows at every tide, cannot properly be called an island, but constitutes what are called "flats." Fowler v. Wood, 85 Pac. 763, 776, 73 Kan. 511, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534 (citing King v. Young, 76 Me. 76, 49 Am. Rep. 596).

FLAVOR

An information charging that defendant sold in interstate commerce a liquid labeled "Flavor of Vanilla," which did not contain any extract of vanilla, does not state a cause of adulteration or misbranding of vanilla extract in violation of Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 2, 34 Stat. 768; the words "extract" and "flavor" not being synonymous terms. United States v. St. Louis Coffee & Spice Mills, 189 Fed. 191, 193.

FLAVORING EXTRACT

As liquor, see Liquor.

FLAX

Fabrics in chief value of flax, but in part of wool, are dutiable under the Tariff Act as goods "the component material of which is flax" in which is "flax," and not as cloth "in part of wool." United States v. Charles A. Johnson & Co., 154 Fed. 754 (citing Myers v. United States, 110 Fed. 940; United States v. Altman, 107 Fed. 15, 46 C. C. 116; Converse v. United States, 113 Fed. 817; Hartranft v. Meyer, 10 Sup. Ct. 71, 135 U. S. 237, 34 L. Ed. 110).

FLAX NOILS

"Flax noils" held dutiable as "waste" under the Tariff Act of 1897, and not "tow of flax," by similitude. G. B. Ritchie & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 664.

FLEE FROM JUSTICE

See, also, Fugitive from Justice.

The term "fleeing from justice," as used in the United States Statutes, has been defined as to leave one's home or residence or known place of abode within the district or to conceal one's self therein with intent in either case to avoid detection or punishment for some public offense against the United States. State v. Lem Woon, 107 Pac. 974, 979, 57 Or. 482.

An instruction in a criminal prosecution that the jury must find, to justify a conviction, that, after the commission of the offense, accused had concealed himself to avoid arrest and punishment was a sufficient definition of the term "flee from justice," as used in connection with statutory limitations of criminal prosecutions. State v. Miller, 87 S. W. 484, 487, 188 Mo. 370.

Where a person charged with crime against the United States in the courts of one federal district, when found elsewhere, resists removal to such district, with intent to avoid the jurisdiction and process of the court therein, such action constitutes a "fleeing from justice," which, under Rev. St. § 1045, takes away from him the privilege of pleading the statute of limitations, and, until he submits himself to such jurisdiction, the statute does not run in his favor as against prosecution for any offense charged to have been previously committed in said district. Although, under the extradition treaty of 1890 between Great Britain and the United States and the laws of Canada, a person whose extradition is sought by the United States from the Dominion of Canada has the right to oppose his extradition by legal proceedings, he is nevertheless, during the pendency of such proceedings, a person "fleeing from justice," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1045. United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 889.

To constitute one a "person fleeing from justice" so as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations against a prosecution for a criminal offense against the United States under Rev. St. § 1045, it is not necessary that he should have left the United States, but it is sufficient that he had left the district in which the offense was committed when it was sought to apprehend him therefor, and was found in another district in which he did not reside under circumstances indicating a purpose to evade the authority of the court having jurisdiction. Greene v. United States, 154 Fed. 401, 402, 411, 85 O. C. A. 251.

In construing a statutory provision excepting from the limitation of time for prosecuting crimes "any person fleeing from justice," for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of an indictment to support proceedings for extradition, the exception should be held to apply to any person who, being within the state at the time the alleged offense was committed, failed for any reason to remain therein until the bar of the statute was complete, and it is immaterial that he did not leave for the purpose of avoiding prosecution. Bruce v. Bryan, 136 Fed. 1022, 69 O. C. A. 342.

It would seem by the language "who shall flee from justice," in the constitutional provision relative to the extradition of any person who has escaped to another state, that it meant a flight from a punishment, penalty, or condition which would follow capture and conviction, rather than a flight from a place or from the territorial limits of the outraged commonwealth. Ex parte Moyer, 85 Pac. 897, 902, 12 Idaho, 250, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 118 Am. St. Rep. 214.

FLIGHT

FLITTERS

Where ingots of composition metal are put through rollers, and further thinned down under a hammer until they become thin sheets, which are the composition metal of trade, and the shearings left after the sheets are cut into desired sizes are cut into smaller pieces with the shears or a machine, and then placed in a steel box, and by a stamp reduced in size almost to a powder, the product which is used to sprinkle over the face of surfaces where it is desired to produce a glittering metallic effect is known to the trade as "flitters," and is not free of duty as "composition metal," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 533, 30 Stat. 197, but is dutiable as manufactures of metal under paragraph 193, § 1, Schedule C, of the act (30 Stat. 167). United States v. George Meier & Co., 136 Fed. 764, 765, 69 O. C. A. 421.

FLOAT

As land grant

"Float" is a term applied to a grant of land by the government, land not having been specifically selected; that is, a general grant of a certain amount of lands to be selected in the future by the grantee. Corvalis & E. R. Co. v. Benson, 121 Pac. 418, 425, 61 Or. 359 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2850).

FLOATABLE STREAM

See, also, Navigable.

A "floatable stream" includes one which is capable of public use when increased by precipitation at seasons recurring periodically with reasonable certainty, so that the water is sufficient to be substantially useful for the transportation of products of the fields and forests, but does not include one which in its normal condition will not profitably or practically wash logs down its channel, except at irregular intervals, when it overflows and runs away so quickly as to leave the logs along the banks in the channel and on riparian land before they can be successfully floated to the mills. Hot Springs Lum- ber & Mfg. Co. v. Revercomb, 65 S. E. 557, 558, 110 Va. 240; Id., 55 S. E. 580, 106 Va. 176, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

Where a fresh-water stream in a settled country, when not swollen by freshets or depleted by droughts, is without artificial aid periodically capable of floating mining and forest products, etc., and has been and will likely continue to be so used, it is a "floatable stream," subject to public user. Blackman v. Maudlin, 51 South. 23, 25, 164 Ala. 337, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 670.

A river which in its natural condition, unaided by artificial means, is susceptible to public use to float vessels, rafts, or logs, is a navigable or floatable stream according to the law of Maine, though not a navigable river in the technical sense of the common law. Charles C. Willson & Son v. Harrisburg, 77 Atl. 787, 789, 107 Me. 207.

Where lumbering is a principal industry in a locality, a fresh water stream, which is capable of being used for the purpose of floating down logs to the mills or market, although it may be too small to admit of navigation, is navigable (or rather "floatable"), and, being such, it is a public highway. Johnson v. Johnson, 95 Pac. 499, 507, 14 Idaho, 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240.

A "floatable stream" is one of sufficient capacity to float sawlogs during some portion of the year. Village of Bloomer v. Town of Bloomer, 107 N. W. 974, 979, 128 Wis. 297.

A stream is a navigable or "floatable stream," as affecting a boom company's right to condemn water rights where during freshets recurring in fall, winter, and spring it is floatable for sawlogs for periods varying from one day to several days each, and is used to float shingle bolts. State ex rel. United Tanners Timber Co. v. Superior Court for Lewis County, 110 Pac. 1017, 1018, 60 Wash. 193.

FLOATER

The term "floater," as applied to an insurance policy, means a policy that floated around with the goods, and insured them wherever they were to the extent that the parties agreed that they should be insured. Grossbaum Ceramic Art Syndicate v. German Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 1107, 1108, 213 Pa. 506.

FLOATING

The "floating" of timber is not the same as "pulling timber." Floating timber is to float it from the stump to the mill, while to pull timber is to draw it from where it is felled to the water by which it is to be floated. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 335, 117 Ga. 1.

FLOATING ENTRY

An entry of lands in the office of the entry taker of a county, made in the following form: "A. L. Adams enters and locates 300 acres of land in said county and state in district ten, on waters of Little Santee creek beginning on a chestnut tree and runs various courses for complements"—is a "floating entry," being vague and indefinite. Lovin v. Carver, 64 S. E. 775, 776, 150 N. C. 710.

FLOATING INTENTION

"An indeterminate or floating intention" to return to a residence from which one moves does not include a case of intention to return upon the occurrence of some event which may be reasonably anticipated, as when the health of a relative has been restored. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1028, 1033, 135 Mo. App. 276.

FLOATING KIDNEY

The condition described as a "floating kidney" is that condition where for any cause the fat or tissues holding the kidneys in place are obstructed or in any way become stretched, causing the organ to float forward. It may be caused by blows direct or indirect and is said to be due to the connection of the organ with the nervous system and reflex areas known as the "sympathetic nervous system." Mackey v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 439, 440, 115 App. Div. 467.

FLOATING POLICY

An insurance policy intended to supplement the specific insurance on goods and attaching only when it ceased to cover the risk is a "floating policy." Cutting v. Atlas Mut. Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 174, 175, 199 Mass. 390 (citing Peabody v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 50 N. E. 526, 171 Mass. 114).

Under "floating policies," or "shifting risks," "the property insured is the property of a class and kind described, in the place described, which the insured may have on hand at the time of the fire, whether it is or is not identical, in items with that which he had on hand at the time the insurance was written." Bloch v. American Ins. Co., 112 N. W. 45, 48, 132 Wis. 150.

FLOGGING

FLOGGING HAMMER

A "flogging hammer" is a small sledge hammer used for striking a large cold-chisel in chipping castings. Williams v. Garbut Lumber Co., 64 S. E. 65, 70, 132 Ga. 221.

FLOOD

See Extraordinary Floods; Ordinary Floods.

FLOOD CHANNEL

The "flood channel" of a stream is that occupied by it when, swollen by rains and melting snows, it extends and flows over the bottom along its course. Cole v. Missouri K. & O. R. Co., 94 Pac. 540, 541, 20 Okl. 227, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

A stream may have what is termed a "flood channel" to retain surplus waters until they can be discharged by the natural flow. Price v. Oregon R. Co., 83 Pac. 843, 46, 47 Or. 350.

FLOOD WATER

An irrigation district, which owned a canal of limited capacity, used the term "flood water" to designate water which would be in excess of the carrying capacity of the canal, if all the users were using water. Gerber v. Nampa & Meridian Irr. Dist., 100 Pac. 90, 87, 16 Idaho, 1.

While an appropriator may divert for use to any point beyond the watershed any portion of the waters of a stream which can serve no useful purpose, either to the riparian owner or in supplying an underground stratum, or which are in excess of the quantity necessary for that purpose, waters of a stream are not necessarily "flood or storm" waters because the flow is increased by unusual rains beyond normal, so long as the water is confined to the general channel of the stream, nor so long as the waters perform an indispensable service in pressing into the gravel beds or trough the waters which go to supply the various artesian strata, from which the overlying landowners obtain water by means of wells. Miller v. Bay Cities Water Co., 107 Pac. 115, 126, 157 Cal. 256, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772.

FLOOR

See Ground Floor.

FLOOR BROKER

A broker, who bought and sold cotton on the floor of the Exchange, and, instead of making contracts in his own name, would "give up" to the person with whom he dealt the name of another broker, who would sign the contract, acted as "floor broker" for his principal, so that the principal must look to the broker whose name was "given up," and is liable to that broker for commissions. Rait v. Carpenter, 138 N. Y. Supp. 460, 461, 78 Misc. Rep. 385.

FLOSS CANDY

"Floss candy" is candy consisting of thread-like or silk-like filaments formed from melted sugar or candy. Electric Candy Mach. Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 973.

FLOTSAM

"Flotsam," as distinguished from "wreck," is when a ship is sunk or otherwise perishes and the goods float upon the sea, while "wreck" is confined to such goods as, shipwrecked at sea, are by the sea cast upon the land. Lacaze v. State, to use of Lenoix (Pa.) Add, 59, 62.

FLOUR

See Blended Flour.

The word "flour," as used in Const. 1898, art. 230, exempting from taxation the capital machinery and other property employed in the manufacture of "flour" for a period of ten years, is used in a restricted or special sense as the ground and bolted substance of wheat manufactured for human consumption. Atlas Feed Products Co. v. City of New Orleans, 37 South. 531, 533, 113 La. 611.

FLOWING LANDS

As taking property under eminent domain, see Taking (In Eminent Domain).

A dam across a navigable stream, which sets back the water of the stream without overflowing any lands outside its banks, but merely raising the water within the banks, so as to lower the available water power of the dam of an upper proprietor owning the lot on the side of the stream on which the dam rests, causes a "flowing of lands," within St. 1898, § 4221, subd. 3, limiting the time for an action for damages for the flowing of lands caused by the maintenance of a mill-dam. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co. v. Telulah Paper Co., 122 N. W. 1062, 1065, 140 Wis. 417.

FLOWING WATER

"In the absence of statutory regulations or private agreements, all waters are, in contemplation of law, regarded as either 'flowing' or 'percolating.' The former consists of those bodies, such as lakes, ponds, and streams, which are upon or beneath the surface of the earth, and whose boundaries and course are well defined and reasonably ascertainable, and whose existence is not of a temporary or ephemeral character. As to these the owner of land has no title. His right to use or divert is measured by its reasonableness and limited to the premises along, through, or over which the waters flow. The reason for this rule is found in the fact that all such riparian owners have rights therein, and one may not unreasonably interfere with another. All waters, not within the above description of 'flowing waters,' are deemed 'percolating.' They are so regarded because practically they constitute themselves parts of the substances in which they exist or through which they pass. When found in land, they may not be distinguished in law from the land. They are a part of the same, and the owner of the land is the absolute owner. He may use them where and in such manner as he chooses or dispose of them to others for like use. He is subject only to the general limitation, which has application to all ownership of property, that in its acquisition and enjoyment he may not unreasonably injure or interfere with the rights of others." Hathorn v. Dr. Strong's Saratoga Springs Sanitarium, 106 N. Y. Supp. 553, 554, 55 Misc. Rep. 445.

FLOWERS

See Artificial Flowers; Natural Flowers.

FLUE

See Boiler Tubes or Flues.

So-called arched Purves furnaces, consisting simply of corrugated steel cylinders or tubes, which are not furnaces in fact, but intended to be used in the manufacture of furnaces, are dutiable under the provision of the Tariff Act of 1897, for boiler tubes or "flues." Thomas v. F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 162 Fed. 645, 647, 89 C. C. A. 437.

FLUME

A "flume" is a mere means of conveying water, and hence the abandonment of an old or dilapidated flume is entirely different from abandoning the right to divert and use water conveyed through such flume. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 81 Pac. 512, 514, 147 Cal. 228.

L. O. L. § 5136, provides that the owner of a "ditch or mining flume, or water right appurtenant thereto," who fails to operate or exercise ownership over such property for a period of five years shall lose the title, claim, and interest therein, etc. Held that, as a "ditch" is an "aqueduct," which is a water carrier or leader, and "flumes" are usually portions of ditches, a reservoir is not included within the statutory provisions; and nonuser thereof for the period named would forfeit no right. Moore v. United Elkhorn Mines, 127 Pac. 964, 966, 64 Or. 342.

FLYER POLICY

"Flyer policies" are insurance policies issued, at a very low rate, by agents about the close of the year, in order to increase the amount of insurance written by them. Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Goddard (Ky.) 76 S. W. 832, 833.

FLYING DRILL

A "flying drill" is accomplished by uncoupling a car from a locomotive from which it has acquired its momentum and turning the switch after the locomotive has passed over it, but before the car has reached it, thereby diverting the car alone onto the switch track. Cranbuck v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 65 Atl. 1031, 74 N. J. Law, 473.

FLYING SWITCH

A "flying switch" is a method of railway switching whereby a car may be moved onto a side track by its own momentum after being detached from a moving locomotive or train. Carman's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 92 S. W. 954, 955.

A "flying switch" is made on a railroad by a locomotive, while under good headway, slackening up, and then pulling the pin which couples cars, the engine then on a signal going ahead from the switch with increased speed, and a switchman throwing a switch after the engine passes, thus sending the car following onto another track. Carr v. St. Clair Tunnel Co., 92 N. W. 110, 111, 13 Mich. 592.

In reply to the contention that "kicking" cars was negligence per se, it was said that the word "kicking" seems to be used in railroad parlance as synonymous with making a "flying switch." Allen v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 58 S. E. 1081, 1082, 145 N. C. 214 (citing Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 55 S. E. 257, 142 N. C. 333).

"A 'running' or 'flying switch' is performed by attaching the cars to be thrown upon the other track to the engine. The train is then put in motion, running toward the switch, and before it is reached, and when sufficient momentum to answer the purpose has been acquired, the engine is detached, passes on the main track, and, after passing, the switch is changed, and the cars thus detached, by the momentum thus acquired are carried along the side track to the point intended." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bachman, 55 Ill. 379, 383, 384.

Where cars were moving in the same direction as the trains on the other road by their own momentum having been uncoupled from a train while in motion and left quietly to run along the track without any person upon them to check their motion or to give an alarm, the mode of switching is not what is technically called a "flying switch," though it possess substantially the same elements of danger. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dignan, 56 Ill. 487, 490.

The method of switching known as making a "running" or "flying" switch, which embraces "kicking cars," consists in detaching the portion of the train to be switched off while the cars are in motion, the forepart of the train advancing with increased speed while the rear portion, proceeding more slowly, is, at the proper time, switched off upon the desired track; or the engine may push forward a car or part of a train with considerable speed, and then, giving it a strong propulsion, send it off alone on the desired switch. This practice in many courts is condemned as negligent, even towards trespassers, and when the cars are suffered to run over a crossing, after being detached from the train, in making a flying switch, whereby travelers are injured, it is held negligence of an aggravated nature, and the practice is not infrequently sharply denounced by the courts. Lacey v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 152 Fed. 134, 137, 81 C. C. A. 352 (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. [3d Ed.] § 217).

In making "flying switches," a train is separated for a greater or less distance, a portion being carried on by its momentum or the effect of the grade, and between the passage of the different parts a switch is thrown so that the following cars are deflected onto a different track. Lord v. Boston & M. R. Co., 65 Atl. 111, 114, 74 N. H. 39.

FOAL-GETTER

"The warranty of a stallion as a 'foal-getter' means something more than that the stallion is able to get foals, and implies that he can render reasonable service as a foal-getter being sold exclusively for such use." A representation that a jack "was as sure a foal-getter as ordinary jacks in this climate and country" warrants the ability of the animal to render reasonable service as a foal-getter. Wingate v. Johnson, 101 N. W. 751, 126 Iowa, 154 (citing McCorkell v. Karhoff, 58 N. W. 913, 90 Iowa, 545).

FOAM

As Liquor, see Liquor.

FOLIO

Under General Construction Law, providing that a folio is 100 words, counting as a word each figure, a "folio," in determining an allowance under Insanity Law, for taking and transcribing testimony, means words and figures, but not punctuation; the word "figure" being limited to numerals, which are letters or characters representing a number, and not including "punctuation," which is a pointing off or separating of one word from another by arbitrary marks. In re Murtaugh, 128 N. Y. Supp. 850, 851, 71 Misc. Rep. 513.

FOLLOW—FOLLOWING

A restraining order prohibiting strikers from "following" employes to their homes or on the streets does not prevent a striker from walking on the streets in the same direction that an employe is going. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Reuf, 120 Fed. 102, 121.

Following occupation

As used in the by-laws of a fraternal beneficial order, providing that, whenever a member became disabled from "following any occupation," he was entitled to certain benefits, the words "following any occupation" mean something more than the doing of one or more acts pertaining thereto. They involve the idea of continuity, and involve also the doing of all those things which are an essential part of the work or business in which a party is engaged. It was not necessary that a member should be disabled to the extent that he has not sufficient physical power to follow an easy occupation, and to perform some slight service, although under great disadvantage and while suffering great bodily pain. Monahan v. Supreme Lodge of the Order of Columbian Knights, 92 N. W. 972-974, 88 Minn. 224.

FOND

The first condition for the creation of an immovable by destination is that it must be placed by the owner, and no other, upon realty. This realty may be either land or a building erected upon land. This realty is called by the French commentators "fonds," from the Latin "fundus." Morton Trust Co. v. American Salt Co., 149 Fed. 540, 542.

FOOD

See Necessary Food; Nerve Food.

The word "food" is a general term, and applies to all that is eaten for the nourishment of the body, and includes anything which is eaten or drunk for nourishment, any substance that is taken in the body which serves, through organic action, to build up normal structure or supply the waste of tissue, and includes confectionery. Commonwealth v. Pfau, 84 Atl. 842, 843, 236 Pa. 294.

New York City Sanitary Code, § 63, providing that no person shall have, sell, or offer for sale any food which is adulterated or misbranded, expressly defines the word "food" to include every article of food and every beverage used by men, and all confectionery. People v. Greenberg, 119 N. Y. Supp. 825, 826, 134 App. Div. 599.

Public Health Law (Laws 1893, p. 1510, c. 661, art. 3) § 40, provides that "the term 'food,' when used herein, shall include every article of food and every beverage used by man, and all confectionery." State Board of Pharmacy v. Gasau, 107 N. Y. Supp. 409, 122 App. Div. 803.

The words "food" and "drink," in common usage and understanding, are complementary and associate terms, denoting the two prime necessities of life, but they import a plain and fundamental distinction, as universal as language and as old as the human race. No tongue is so primitive that it lacks different words to indicate them and different words to express the sensations of want of them, as hunger and thirst. Act June 26, 1895 (P. L. 317), entitled "An act to provide against the adulterating of food and providing for the enforcement thereof," which defines in section 2 the term "food" to include "all articles used as food or drink by man, whether simple, mixed, or compound," is unconstitutional, as applied to drink, in not stating the subject of the act in the title, as required by Const. art. 3, § 3. Commonwealth v. Kebort, 61 Atl. 896, 896, 212 Pa. 289.

The term "food," as used in Laws 1905, p. 163, c. 114, § 11, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale any article of prepared foods, unless the true name of the manufacturer and the location of the factory where such article of food is prepared is plainly printed or stenciled on the package, box, can, etc., includes "all articles used for food, drink, flavoring, confectionery, or condiment, by man or domestic animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound." Jewett Bros. & Jewett v. Small, 105 N. W. 738, 741, 20 S. D. 232.

The fact that a "food" may also be a medicine or possess medicinal properties does not exempt it from the operation of a state statute regulating the sale of foods. A "condiment" is a "food" and not a "medicine." The "International Stock Food" is a "food or condiment," within the meaning of the Kentucky pure food law (Laws Ky. 1906, p. 282, c. 48), and its sale is subject to regulation thereunder. Savage v. Scovell, 171 Fed. 566.

Under Pure Food Law, § 2, defining the term "food" to include all articles used for food or drink, or intended to be eaten or drunk by man, whether simple, mixed, or compound, and section 3 defining adulteration, and declaring that the act shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food if each package sold or offered for sale is distinctly labeled to show that it is a mixture or compound, and is not an imitation, and contains no injurious or poisonous substance injurious to health, it is held that, where sausage made by mixing pork meat with spices, cereals, and water was imported into the state, and sold to retail dealers in boxes so labeled as to disclose that the sausage was a mixture containing cereals, it could not be resold to consumers at retail, except in the original packages unless the retail packages were also labeled to show that it was "sausage with cereal." Armour & Co. v. State Dairy and Food Com'r, 123 N. W. 580, 584, 159 Mich. 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 616.

Comp. Laws, § 5007, declaring it unlawful to manufacture and sell any maple syrup that is in any wise adulterated with any foreign substance, without labeling the package containing it with the true name of such article, and the percentage in which the foreign substance enters into its composition, is a complete act in itself, intended to prohibit the manufacture and sale, under any name, of maple syrup, containing a foreign substance, without such label; so that the manufacture and sale of a syrup under the name "Pierre Vlaus Pure Canadian Maple Syrup and Cane Syrup," the maple syrup therein exceeding the cane syrup, but the percentage of the ingredients not being given in the label, is governed by such act, and not by the pure food law (Pub. Acts 1895, p. 358, No. 193), which by section 1 prohibits the sale of food adulterated within the meaning of the act, by section 2 defines "food" to include all articles used for food or drink, and by section 3 states what articles shall be deemed to be adulterated, concluding with the proviso that the provisions of the act shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food, if the package bears the name and address of the manufacturer, and be distinctly labeled under its own distinctive name, and in a manner so as to plainly and correctly show that it is a mixture or compound, and is not in violation of definitions 4 and 7 of such sections. Pierre Vlaus Maple Co. v. Dairy and Food Com'r, 117 N. W. 553, 554, 154 Mich. 73.

The term "food," within the federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906, is expressly defined as including "all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound." Savage v. Jones, 82 Sup. Ct. 715, 724, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1182; United States v. Frank, 189 Fed. 195, 199; United States v. One Car Load of Corno Horse and Mule Feed, 188 Fed. 453, 455.

The terms "drug" and "food," as used in section 6 of the act of 1906 (34 Stat. 769), providing that the term "drug," as used in this act, shall include all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease of either man or other animals, and that the term "food," as used herein, shall include all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound, are merely terms of description, and, if the Pharmacopœia says a medicine is a drug, it is a drug, under the meaning of the act, or, if it comes under the other description of what a drug is, it is a drug. United States v. Frank, 189 Fed. 195, 199.

FOOL

See Natural Fool.

Where in a prosecution for unlawfully having carnal knowledge with an idiot, the court instructed that an idiot was "a natural fool; a fool from birth; a human being in but destitute of reason from birth and the ordinary intellectual power of man," the word "fool" is defined by Webster to "one destitute of reason or of the common powers of understanding; an idiot; a natural person deficient in intellect; one who acts absurdly or pursues a course contrary to the dictates of wisdom, one without judgment; a simpleton; a dolt"—it was held that, while the words "a natural fool," "a fool from birth," might well have been omitted, they did not prejudice accused, and the inclusion as a whole clearly defined the term "fool," though it might be more aptly defined as one who has been from birth or infancy deficient in mental capacity, and destitute of the ordinary intellectual powers. Defur v. Commonwealth, 137 S. W. 504, 143 Ky. 635.

FOOT LOCK

A "foot lock" is a support for a scaffold in order to prevent the tipping of the planks, and consists of a short joist, one end of which is inserted into the wall along which the scaffold is to be used and an upright post fixed under the other end of the joist to sustain it in a horizontal position. This sort of a safety appliance is employed in situations where a four-legged trestle cannot be brought sufficiently near the end of the scaffold to prevent the ends from tipping. United States Smelting Co. v. Parry, 166 Fed. 409, 92 C. C. A. 159.

FOOT OF HILL

In determining the boundary of land lying for a line by and along the foot of a hill, the "foot of the hill" would be construed to mean the beginning of an abrupt rise, and not to include the bottom land, though sloping gradually upward from a stream. Kerr v. Duvall, 125 Pac. 830, 832, 62 Or. 470.

FOOT PASSENGER

The term "foot passengers," used in resolutions fixing the rates of ferriage for the transportation of foot passengers between Weehawken and New York, might mean those traveling at Weehawken by rail from points on the side of the state of New Jersey and entering the ferry from the railroad station, as well as those entering without having been passengers on the railroads, and was not limited to the latter class, and, giving them this meaning, the resolutions were invalid as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 65 Atl. 860, 861, 74 N. J. Law, 367.

FOOTBALL SEASON

The court will take judicial notice that the football season proper, in American institutions of learning, begins in the fall and ends Thanksgiving day. Sieberts v. Spangler, 118 N. W. 292, 293, 140 Iowa, 286.

FOOTING STONE

The terms "footing stone" and "dimension stone" are synonymous, but neither term is a synonym of "rubble stone." Nugent v. Armour Packing Co. (Mo.) 81 S. W. 506, 507.

FOR

See Specify For.

As applied to

Under Comp. Laws 1909, §§ 7713, 7714, imposing an inheritance tax, fixing the primary rate for class 1 at 1 per centum, and providing that, upon all in excess of \$5,000 in class 1, the primary rate "shall be increased one one hundred-twenty-fifth of 1 per centum for every \$100 increase in valuation of such excess," the rate for the entire sum in excess of \$5,000 is $1\frac{1}{125}$ per cent.; the word "for" meaning "to be applied to." McGannon v. State ex rel. Trapp, 124 Pac. 1063, 1067, 83 Okl. 145.

As on account of

The word "for," used in its ordinary signification, means "on account of," "because of," or "growing out of." The word "for," in the statute limiting the time for the commencement of actions of tort "for injuries to the person," is used in its ordinary signification, and an action by a husband for the loss of services of his wife resulting from injuries received through the alleged negligence of defendant is an action "for injuries to the person," within the statute. Mulvey v. City of Boston, 83 N. E. 402, 403, 197 Mass. 178, 14 Ann. Cas. 349.

As used in Code 1853, § 2772, providing that all civil actions for injury to the person shall be commenced within one year after the cause of action accrued, the word "for" means "on account of," or "because of." Blackwell v. Memphis St. Ry. Co., 137 S. W. 486, 487, 124 Tenn. 516.

In Gen. St. 1902, § 1119, as amended, providing that no action to recover damages for injury to the person, etc., caused by negligence, shall be brought but within one year from date of the injury or neglect complained of, the word "for" is used in its common meaning as a synonym for "by reason of," "because of," "on account of," so that the proper interpretation of the statute is that "no action to recover damages by reason of injury to the person," etc., and an action by husband and wife for injury to the wife's person not brought within a year is barred as to the husband as well as to the wife. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 952, 83 Conn. 508.

As during or for the period of

The word "for," as used in the statute requiring that notice be given for at least a specified number of days prior to the meeting of the city council as a board of equalization, means "during." Shannon v. City of Omaha, 100 N. W. 298, 299, 72 Neb. 281 (citing Leavitt v. Bell, 75 N. W. 524, 55 Neb. 57).

The preposition "for" means of itself duration, when it is put in connection with time, and, as it is so used in everyday conversation, it will be presumed that the Legislature, using it in statute, meant to use it in the same way. Two publications in each of four consecutive periods of seven days from the date of an order of publication satisfies the requirement of the act of Congress of June 8, 1898 (30 Stat. 434, c. 394, § 6), requiring such publication in the District of Columbia at least twice a week for a period of not less than four weeks, although there was but one publication in the last calendar week of such period. Leach v. Burr, 23 Sup. Ct. 393, 188 U. S. 510, 47 L. Ed. 567 (citing Early v. Homans, 16 How. [57 U. S.] 610, 14 L. Ed. 1079).

Under a village ordinance calling an election at a given date as to the issuance of bonds for the extension of waterworks, and providing for publication of notice in a certain paper for five weeks before such election, a publication in each issue of the paper thereafter till the election, being five weekly publications, is sufficient notice, although the first one was only 32 days before the election, though it must be conceded that under the decisions of this court upon various statutes, couched in similar terms, the words "for five weeks" must be construed as meaning during five weeks, which would be 35 days. State ex rel. Village of Genoa v. Weston, 93 N. W. 728, 67 Neb. 385.

In Laws 1907, p. 474, c. 153, § 5, requiring the county clerk to publish a notice of election once each week "for" three weeks, a publication in three successive issues of a weekly paper is sufficient, though the first issue was not three weeks prior to the election. In such provision the time mentioned indicates only the number of times the notice is required to be published. Where the provision is that a notice shall be given for three weeks by publication, it fixes the period of time during which the publication must be made, and the first publication must be at least three weeks prior to the event noticed. State ex rel. Harris v. Hanson, 115 N. W. 294, 299, 80 Neb. 724.

In Rev. St. 1899, § 3029, providing that the notice of a local option election shall be published in a newspaper in the county "for four consecutive weeks" and the last insertion shall be within ten days before the election, the term "for four consecutive weeks" was used in the sense of 28 days, and a notice put in a newspaper for four consecutive weekly issues merely was not sufficient, but the publication must be continued for the full period of 28 days. State v. Dobbins, 8 S. W. 136, 187, 116 Mo. App. 29.

St. 1901, p. 28, authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by municipalities, provided by section 3 that the ordinance calling election shall be published once a day for at least seven days in some newspaper published at least six days a week in such municipality, or once a week for two weeks in some newspaper published less than six days a week in such municipality, and that one insertion each week "for two succeeding weeks" shall be sufficient, and that in municipalities where no daily or weekly is published the ordinance shall be posted in three public places therein for two succeeding weeks; and in municipality where there was no daily newspaper the ordinance was published for two succeeding weeks in a weekly newspaper, the first publication being only twelve days from the election. Held that, while the publication by posting "for two succeeding weeks" required a posting for two full weeks, where publication was by weekly newspaper and the second publication was completed seven days before the election, it was sufficient. City of Lindsay v. Mack, 117 Pac. 924, 926, 160 Cal. 647.

As in

Under Laws 1897, p. 526, c. 418, § 30, granting a lien for material furnished, etc., "for towards" the building, etc., of a vessel, a finding in a proceeding to enforce a lien that material was used "in or toward" the construction of a vessel is not objectionable as being equivocal; both phrases being tautologous. In re Froment, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1074, 125 App. Div. 647.

As suitable for

Under a sale of all the pine timber "for sawmill purposes" on described lands, timber suitable at the time of sale for sawmill purposes passes, to that extent the phrase "for sawmill purposes" being identical with "suitable for sawmill purposes," but vendee does not, as when the broader phrase "suitable for sawmill purposes" is used, obtain the right to use such timber as may be within the description for any other than sawmill purposes. Mills & Williams v. Ivey, 60 S. E. 230, 300, 3 Ga. App. 557.

FOR ACCOUNT OF

In an action for goods sold, plaintiff introduced written orders from defendants containing the following words: "Please ship for our account"—followed by shipping directions and a description of the goods desired, but containing no price or terms of payment. Defendants testified that, wh-orders were given, it was agreed that the goods were to be shipped "gratis," and that defendants were to pay for them only if they should succeed in selling them at a certain place to which they were sent. Held, under the rule that, where a writing is manifestly incomplete, parol evidence is competent to complete it, that the testimony was properly admitted; it not being contradictory to the words, "for our account," such words not necessarily meaning an absolute purchase, but being equally applicable to such a transaction as testified to by defendants. Book v. Fidanque, 110 N. Y. Supp. 198, 199, Misc. Rep. 178.

FOR ALL PURPOSES

The words, "for all purposes," in the appurtenant grant of the right of "ingress and egress to and from said right of way for all purposes," did not enlarge the grant with respect to the maintenance of the telegraph or telephone lines, so as to make it independent of the grant of the right to maintain the pipe lines. Northeastern Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hepburn, 69 A. 249, 250, 73 J. Eq. 657.

FOR AND IN THE ERECTION

Where a materialman's stop notice declared that certain materials were furnished the contractor "for and in the erection of building," such words were sufficient to indicate that the materials were actually used in the building. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 101 Atl. 705, 707, 68 N. J. Eq. 740.

FOR ANY REASON

See If for Any Reason.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

Where the grantor by a deed, with a clause specifying that the grantee assumed the mortgage, conveyed land upon which there was a mortgage debt for which she was not personally liable, the grantee, in the absence of other evidence, was not primarily liable for a deficiency arising on foreclosure sale; such clause and its acceptance being a mere agreement to indemnify the grantor and not for the benefit of the holder of the mortgage to whom the grantor owed an obligation, and it not appearing to have been inserted in the deed "expressly for the benefit of a third party" within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1193, authorizing enforcement of such a contract. Fry v. Ausman, 135 N. W. 708, 29 S. D. 30, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150.

A testator, who left his wife and 11 children living on his farm, which was not fully paid for, and whose will provided that the wife should have all the property during her life, or as long as she should remain a widow, to receive all the rents and profits thereof "for the benefit of my family," and that at her decease it should be divided among the children, and the wife and one of the sons were appointed executrix and executor, intended that the wife should use the income from the property, as her discretion directed, for the benefit of all the children as long as they continued members of the household, and the will did not create a trust, with the wife and children as equal beneficiaries, each taking a one-twelfth part. Dee v. Dee, 72 N. E. 429, 432, 212 Ill. 338.

The phrase "for my son's benefit," in a will whereby testator gave his residuary estate to his son to be held in trust by his executors, and managed and cared for by them, "for my son's benefit," until he arrived at a certain age, etc., means that the profits derived from the estate belong to the use of the son. Higgins v. Downs, 91 N. Y. Supp. 937, 938, 101 App. Div. 119.

FOR BEVERAGE PURPOSES

A complaint charging that defendant unlawfully sold a quart of beer "for beverage purposes," in violation of an ordinance making it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor, but providing that it should not be construed to prohibit the sale of alcoholic stimulants as medicine, nor the sale of alcoholic liquors by one registered pharmacist to another, sufficiently negatived a lawful sale as medicine or by one pharmacist to another by the phrase "for beverage purposes." Gue v. City of Eugene, 100 Pac. 254, 256, 53 Or. 282.

FOR BONDS

A bond issue election is not invalidated by the use of ballots containing the words "for bonds" instead of the words "for the bonds," as required by the order authorizing the election. State ex rel. Johnston v. Metzger, 26 Kan. 395, 396.

FOR CAUSE

A challenge to a juror "for cause," without stating whether it was for principal cause or to the favor, and without setting out the facts on which it rests, is not sufficient as a challenge "for cause." Drake v. State, 20 Atl. 747, 751, 53 N. J. Law, 23.

Pen. Code 1895, § 813, amended, providing for appointment of jury commissioners by the judge of the superior court, giving him the right to remove the commissioner at any time in his discretion "for cause," the addition of the words "for cause" were admonitory that this discretion should not be arbitrarily or capriciously exercised. The legislative intent is clear that the power of removal was lodged with the judge as an act of discretion. Edge v. Holcomb, 70 S. E. 644, 645, 135 Ga. 765.

FOR COLLECTION AND CREDIT

Where a draft was forwarded to a bank "for collection and credit," the bank became a mere agent of the forwarder for its collection, with authority only to present the draft for acceptance, collect the same when due, and credit the amount thereof to the corwarder; and it could not claim any rights in the draft higher than those possessed by the forwarder. Bank of America v. Waydell, 92 N. Y. Supp. 666, 668, 103 App. Div. 25.

The term "for collection," indorsed on a draft, is a restrictive indorsement, and is notice to a bank, to whom it is finally sent for collection, of the qualified title of an intermediate collecting bank. First Nat. Bank of Circleville v. Bank of Monroe, 33 Fed. 408, 410.

Where a note is sent to a bank "for collection," and the bank sends it to a second bank, which collects from the maker and becomes insolvent before transmitting the proceeds, the second bank will be considered as the agent of the first bank, and the first bank will be responsible for the proceeds to the payee. First Nat. Bank of Girard v. Craig, 42 Pac. 830, 832, 3 Kan. App. 166.

"The words 'for collection,' appended to the indorsement of a check, limit the effect which the indorsement would otherwise have and warn subsequent takers that the purpose of the indorsement, although in blank, is not to transfer the ownership of the paper or its proceeds. Such an indorsement is intended not to give currency or circulation to the paper but to have an effect precisely the reverse; to prevent further circulation and limit the authority of the holder to the act of collection for the benefit of the indorser." Hoffman v. First Nat. Bank of Jersey City, 46 N. J. Law, 604-606.

FOR THE COMPLETION OF

The precise meaning of the words "for the completion of," when used in statutes appropriating money for public work, is sometimes uncertain and indefinite, and the idea intended to be conveyed by them may depend upon the connection in which they are used and the object to which they refer. Jobe v. Caldwell & Drake, 125 S. W. 423, 427, 93 Ark. 503.

FOR CREDIT

Where defendant's merchandise account with plaintiff included not only an original indebtedness for goods sold, which was partly secured by mortgage, but also charges representing subsequent sales, remittances made by plaintiff "for credit" did not constitute a direction that the remittances be applied in payment of the subsequent charges, as distinguished from the items secured. Frutiger v. Trafton, 83 Pac. 70, 71, 2 Cal. App. 47.

FOR HER OWN USE

Where testator devised to his wife all his property, to have and to hold, sell, lease, and otherwise dispose of for her own use during her life, with power to dispose of the household fixtures and personal property by will, and all property remaining at her death to be distributed in a specified manner, and the decree of distribution distributed the property to the widow for the term of her natural life, with power to sell and convey the same in fee as she might see fit "for her own use" with remainder over, it was held that the widow was only entitled by the words "for her own use" to sell the property for her personal use, and maintenance during life, and she only acquired a life estate subject to a valid limitation over. Luscomb v. Fintzelberg, 123 Pac. 247, 251, 162 Cal. 433.

FOR HERSELF AND CHILDREN

A will devising unto testator's wife, "for herself and all her children," all testator's real estate, the wife does not take all the property with power to sell and convey free of any interest of her children, but she and they take as tenants in common. Kyte v. Kyte, 67 Atl. 933, 73 N. J. Eq. 220 (citing Gordon v. Jackson, 43 Atl. 98, 58 N. J. Eq. 166, 169).

FOR HIRE

See Depositary for Hire.

FOR HIS OWN USE AND BENEFIT

The provision in Pol. Code, § 3495, that an applicant for the purchase of school lands must state in his affidavit that he desires to purchase the same "for his own use and benefit," and for the use and benefit of no other person," and that he shall have made no contract or agreement to sell the same, does not mean that the applicant must go into possession and occupy the land and personally devote it to the uses of which it is capable. It simply means that, when one makes application to purchase, he does so with the intention and purpose of deriving whatever profit or advantage may accrue through such purchase for himself alone, as contradistinguished from a purchase for the profit and advantage of some other person. As an element entering into that benefit, he may properly have in contemplation a sale of the land at a profit, some time after he has obtained the certificate of purchase, and when the law expressly authorizes such a sale. Henshall v. Marsh, 90 Pac. 895, 693, 151 Cal. 289.

FOR HIS SERVICES

In a statute declaring that the county treasurer shall receive as compensation "for his services" an annual salary, the words "for his services" mean for all his services, for the entire and complete performance of his official duties. People ex rel. Conline v. Steuben County, 75 N. E. 1108, 1110, 183 N. Y. 114.

FOR INJURY DONE

When it is said that damages are given as compensation "for the injury done," the injury done to the plaintiff and not to some other person is meant. Bass v. Postal-Telegraph Cable Co., 56 S. E. 465, 467, 127 Ga. 423, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459.

FOR LIFE

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 2342, providing that, unless a different purpose appeared by the express words or necessary inference, every estate created by will, without words of inheritance, shall be deemed a fee simple, a will whereby testator gave to his wife all his estate "for her lifetime, to manage and dispose of as she may see cause," without making any gift over or mentioning any other person, gives to the wife an estate in fee, though, if the will ended with the words "her lifetime," she would take only a life estate. Alsip v. Morgan (Ky.) 109 S. W. 312.

A deed conveying land to one "for and only for her natural life," and to the heirs of her body begotten, in fee simple, indicates clearly a purpose to confine the estate granted to the first taker to a life use. Ault v. Hillyard, 115 N. W. 1030, 1031, 138 Iowa, 239.

FOR OTHER PURPOSES

See Other Purposes.

FOR OUR OWN BENEFIT

Where a corporation was organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a library at a health resort, and the Constitution presented with the petition for the organization recited that "we whose names are annexed, desiring to form an association to organize a * * * library for own benefit, and that of * * * people who visit" the resort, it was held that the corporation was a charitable trust; the phrase "for our own benefit" not being understood as confined to the persons who signed the petition for a charter, but intended to embrace all persons who should thereafter contribute to the support of the library. Fordyce & McKee v. Woman's Christian Nat. Library Ass'n, 96 S. W. 155, 157, 79 Ark. 550, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485.

FOR THE PRESENT

Where one interested in a corporation agreed with an advertising agent that advertising for the corporation might be charged to him "for the present," it meant so long as there was no termination of the contract by notice, for a period of an indefinite length, with an implied condition that it should not be unreasonably long. Lewis v. Worrell, 71 N. E. 73, 185 Mass. 572.

FOR THE PURPOSE OF

An admission made at a former trial "for the purposes of the suit" that defendant was a city of the fourth class was an admission of that fact throughout all the stages of the suit, and was binding on defendant at a retrial in another jurisdiction. York v. City of Everton, 116 S. W. 490, 491, 135 Mo. App. 607.

FOR SALE

Intrusted for sale, see Intrust.

The employment of a broker to sell lands—that is, to procure purchasers—does not of itself or prima facie confer authority to bind the owner to sell by a contract in writing, and such authority is not usually to be inferred from the use by the principal and agent in that connection of the terms "for sale" or "to sell" and the like; such words in that connection usually meaning no more than to negotiate a sale by finding a purchaser upon satisfactory terms. Stengel v. Sergeant, 68 Atl. 1106, 1110, 74 N. J. Eq. 20.

FOR STATED TIME

In statutes relating to the publication of notices where a continuous publication is intended, this is indicated by the requirement that it shall be made "for a stated time." A requirement that at least three days' notice in the official city paper shall be given of the meeting of the appraisers in condemnation proceedings is satisfied by the publication of a notice in one issue of such paper nine days before the time set. Harrison v. Newman, 80 Pac. 599, 600, 71 Kan. 324.

FOR SUCCESSIVE ISSUES

Where the notice required by section 726, Comp. Laws 1909, fixing the time for hearing objections to the report of appraisers, was published in a daily newspaper of general circulation in the city on the 19th, 21st, 22d, 23d, and 24th of June, 1909, the 20th being Sunday, on which date the paper was not published, held, that the notice was sufficient; the same being published in "five successive issues," as required by law. Weaver v. City of Chickasha, 128 Pac. 305, 308, 36 Okl. 228.

FOR THAT

A statement "for that" A. B. did a particular thing is considered to be a direct and positive averment. Bennett v. Benson, 25 N. J. Law, 166, 170 (citing 1 Chit. Pl. [11th Am. Ed.] 387; 2 Id. [Am. Ed.] 846, 847; Collier v. Moulton [N. Y.] 7 Johns. 109; Coffin v. Coffin, 2 Mass. 358).

FOR THAT WHEREAS

A statement commencing "for that whereas" is not a positive averment, but a statement by way of recital. Bennett v. Benson, 25 N. J. Law, 166, 170 (citing 1 Chit. Pl. [11th Am. Ed.] 387; 2 Id. [Am. Ed.] 846, 847; Collier v. Moulton [N. Y.] 7 Johns. 109; Coffin v. Coffin, 2 Mass. 358).

FOR THE TIME—FOR THE TIME BEING

The expressions "for the time" and "for the time being" are equivalent to "temporarily." Each constitutes a good definition of that word. Acts 1900, p. 67, No. 95, relating to the licensing of auctioneers, provides that the statute shall not apply to sales made by one in the county where he resides. A complaint, under the statute, for sales at the city of B., alleged defendant as temporarily of the city of B. Held, that the complaint was insufficient, since the word "temporarily" did not show defendant not a resident. State v. Cunningham, 55 Atl. 654, 75 Vt. 332.

In a prosecution under Rev. Codes, § 8385, making it unlawful for any owner, licensee, manager, clerk, agent, bartender, or other employe, having "for the time being charge or control of any saloon, * * * to suffer or permit any female person to be or remain in such saloon * * * for the purpose of being there supplied with any kind of liquor whatever," an information, charging defendant with "then and there" having charge and control of a certain saloon, sufficiently charges him with being in control "for the time being," as under Rev. Codes, § 9155, words used in a statute to define a public offense need not be strictly pursued in the information, but other words conveying the same meaning may be used. State v. Conway, 98 Pac. 654, 38 Mont. 42.

Between the adoption of Const. art. 20, an amendment disincorporating the former city of D. and several other municipal corporations, and merging them into the new city and county of D., and the adoption by the new municipality of a charter and ordinances, it possessed not merely the ordinary general governmental powers of a city necessary to its preservation and perpetuity, but special powers, so that it could create sidewalk districts, and assess the cost of building sidewalks; the new corporation, by Const. art. 20, § 1, succeeding to all the rights of the former city, section 3 making certain existing officers and boards of the former city, officers and boards of the new corporation, to hold till their successors were elected and qualified, and section 4 providing that the charter and ordinances of the old city, as they shall exist when such amendment of the Constitution takes effect, shall, for the time being only, and as far as applicable, be the charter and ordinances of the new corporation, "for the time being" meaning the aforesaid interim, and "so far as applicable" having reference to said article 20, and meaning so far it does not make said charter and ordinances inapplicable. Hallett v. City and County of Denver, 104 Pac. 1038, 1039, 46 Colo. 487.

FOR THE USE

See Held for the Use.

A trust, the object of which is to yield to the settlor monthly installments for his support during his life out of the entire corpus of the estate, and to effect a disposition of any residue at his death as he may appoint by will, and, failing such appointment, then on the further trust to pay to settlor's wife monthly installments, and on the death both to pay the balance to their children, if there be none, then to pay the balance to the next of kin, so far as it transfers personality is a conveyance "for the use of the person making the same," notwithstanding that after the making of the trust settlor cannot immediately subject the entire estate to use, within 2 Gen. St. p. 1604, § 11, declaring conveyances of personality for the use of person making the same void as against creditors. Ward v. Marie, 68 Atl. 1084, 1088, N. J. Eq. 510.

FOR USE AS EVIDENCE

Under Election Law, § 114, authorizing a re-examination of ballots "for use as evidence," ballots may not be re-examined merely to find out whether the ballot boxes contain evidence to substantiate petitioner's claim; but the term contemplates the opening of boxes in court, to offer the actual ballots in evidence if necessary. FOR A YEAR

"For a year" should be understood implied in St. 1898, c. 577, § 1, prohibiting the making of loans secured by mortgage pledge, at a rate of interest greater than ten per cent., without a license, but failing to designate the period of time for which charge over 12 per cent. is made unlawful. Commonwealth v. Morris, 56 N. E. 896, 176 Mass. 19.

FORBEAR

"A suspension of an existing demand frequently of the utmost importance to debtor, and it constitutes one of the old titles of the law under the head of 'forbearance,' and has always been considered a sufficient and valid consideration." Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343, 370, 15 L. Ed. 934.

Payment of a commission of more than 6 per cent. for a loan of government bonds which are subject to market fluctuations and are bought and sold on the market as other securities was not in violation of the New York usury law, prohibiting the payment of more than 6 per cent. interest for the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or other things in action, and did not render loan usurious, since the terms "interest" and "forbearance," as used in the usury law (Consol. Laws, c. 20, § 373), are applicable to a loan of money. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Klein, 178 Fed. 689, 691, 102 C. C. A. 9, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620.

FORCE

See Be in Force; Constructive Force; Continuance Force; Distinct Force; In Force; Irresistible Force; Police Force; Superior Force; Unit of Force.

Any force, see Any.

As element in trespass, see Trespass.

As violence, see Violence.

Element of robbery, see Robbery.

In burglary

The "force" required to constitute burglary under Pen. Code, art. 842, may be by jiggling the latch of a closed door, by raising a window, by entry at a chimney, or other unusual place, the introduction of a hand or any instrument to draw out the property through the opening made by the burglar for that purpose. Winkler v. State, 126 S. W. 34, 1138, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 564.

The "forcible bursting or breaking" of an outer shutter or window, or shutter of a window, as an ingredient of burglary, means something more than merely the removing of a wire screen of an outer window of a dwelling house. State v. Wilson, 125 S. W. 479, 3, 225 Mo. 503 (citing State v. Tutt, 63 Mo. 5).

In forced marriage

"Force," as applied to a forced marriage, implies physical constraint of the will. Avakian v. Avakian, 60 Atl. 521, 529, 69 N. J. Eq. (citing 1 Bish. Marriage, Divorce & Separation, § 514).

In forcible entry and detainer

The mere opening of a gate on entering premises is not such force as will constitute "forcible entry." The definition of "forcible entry and detainer," given in Code 1896, § 2128, requires more than a mere opening of a door to constitute the offense, and under section 2149 the distinction was drawn between a peaceable entry and an entry by force. The word "force" carries with it necessarily the idea of violence exercised, and may include a putting in fear by threats, but it cannot include a mere entry by the ordinary means of entrance without any breaking and without any threat of violence to the person.—Fowler v. Prichard, 41 South. 7, 670, 148 Ala. 261.

Fraud distinguished

See Fraud.

In rape

"The definition of 'force,' as applicable to assault and battery, applies also to the crime of rape, and it must have been such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties, and the circumstances of the case." Cotton v. State, 105 S. W. 185, 187, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 634, which declares that the degree of force applicable to the crime of rape must be such as would reasonably be supposed to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, defendant in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape cannot complain of a charge as to that element of the offense which substantially follows this definition of force. An instruction that, to constitute an assault with intent to commit rape, there must be an assault, and which defines assault and battery and assault, and charges that the injury intended might be either bodily pain, constraint, or a sense of shame or other disagreeable emotions, is not objectionable as authorizing a conviction where the injury intended is merely constraint or a sense of shame. An instruction in a prosecution for an assault with intent to rape that the force to be proven was such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, without stating that the force intended "must be," etc., is a sufficient compliance with Pen. Code 1895, art. 634, which defines the degree of force applicable to an assault with intent to commit rape. An instruction in a prosecution for an assault with intent to rape that it must be shown that defendant assaulted prosecutrix and then and there had a specific intent by actual force to have carnal knowledge of her without her consent, is not objectionable by the omission of the word "will." Conger v. State, 140 S. W. 1112, 1125, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 312.

Force is not a necessary element in rape on a female under the age of consent, but it is a necessary element where the female is above that age. The "force" to constitute rape, where force is a necessary element, is that by which the dissenting woman is subjected to and put under the power of the assailant so that he is able notwithstanding her opposition to have intercourse with her. Pen. Code 1895, art. 634, defining force in rape, does not apply to the part of article 633 which relates to rape on a female under the age of consent, since, to constitute rape on a female under that age, her consent and the absence of force are immaterial. Cro means v. State, 129 S. W. 1129, 1131, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 611.

It is the law that, if the rapist coerces the female into yielding through fear caused by what he threatens or does, her will is as completely subdued by "force" as if he violently took hold of her and held her against her will. The use of the word "force" has reference solely to the will of the female. Though force was used, if she does not object, being conscious of the act and purpose, or finally consent without coercion, it is not criminal. Darrell v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 88 S. W. 1060, 1061.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 640, providing that if it appears, on a trial for rape, that the offense, though not committed, was attempted by the use of any of the means stated in articles 634, 635, and 636, but not so as to make it an assault to commit rape, the jury may find accused guilty of an attempt to commit rape, and article 634, making the definition of "force" in assault and battery applicable to the crime of rape, in which case it must be sufficient to overcome resistance, considering the relative strength of the parties, etc., in order to constitute an "attempt to commit rape," there must have been an intent to use such force as would constitute rape or an assault to commit rape, but the attempt to apply the force must have failed, so that it did not amount to rape or an assault to commit rape. Holloway v. State, 113 S. W. 928, 933, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 465.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 633, providing that "rape is constituted by the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats or fraud," and article 634 providing that the "force" "must have been such as might reasonably be supposed sufficient to overcome resistance, taking into consideration the relative strength of the parties and other circumstances of the case," where prosecutrix was a passenger in a sleeping car occupied by 18 white people, and during the night had arisen and was sitting in her berth, awaiting transfer to another car, acts of the porter of the car in catching hold of a watch pinned on her breast and laying his hand on her wrist and asking her to follow him to the ladies' dressing room would not constitute force sufficient to authorize conviction of assault with intent to commit rape. Collins v. State, 107 S. W. 852, 853, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 455.

In robbery

The "force" necessary to constitute a robbery implies actual personal violence, a struggle, and a personal outrage. Moran v. State, 53 S. E. 806, 125 Ga. 33 (quoting and adopting definition in Long v. State, 12 Ga. 329).

The word "force," in the statutory definition of robbery, is the same as the word "violence" in the common-law definition. Johnson v. State, 57 S. E. 1056, 1 Ga. App. 729.

Where prosecuting witness was knocked down by two men and the money squeezed from his hand, the money was forced from him, within Pen. Code, § 211, defining robbery to be the taking of personal property from the person of another accomplished by "force" or fear. People v. Ortega, 94 Pac. 869, 870, 7 Cal. App. 480.

Pen. Code 1911, art. 1327, defines robbery as an assault, or violence, or putting in fear of life or bodily injury, by which one fraudulently takes from another any property with intent, etc., and permits capital punishment where a firearm or other deadly weapon is used. Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 460, declares that the words "with force and arms" are necessary to the validity of an indictment, and that an indictment which charges the offense in ordinary and concise language as to enable a person of common understanding to understand it is sufficient. An indictment under section 1327 alleged that accused "with force and arms" by unlawfully using a firearm, fraudulently took personal property from the owner without his consent and with intent to appropriate the same to his own use. Held, that "violence" was a general term including all sorts of force, synonymous with physical "force," and used interchangeably in relation to assault; that "violently" meant by or with "force"; that "violent" meant impelled with "force"; and hence that the term "with force and arms" sufficiently alleged that the robbery was effected by "violence" as used in the statute. Robinson v. State (Tex.) 149 S. W. 186, 188.

FORCE ACCOUNT

Where the assignee of a construction contract was not paid in accordance with the contract price, but hired men and teams to do the work by the day and was paid on the basis of the time they were employed, it was a "force account." Hottel v. Poudre Valley Reservoir Co., 92 Pac. 918, 920, 41 Colo. 370.

FORCE AND ARMS

The use of the words with "force and arms," in an indictment, clearly would not make the offense robbery by a person who was not armed. Such use would not necessarily indicate that the indictment was drawn under or attempted to describe the offense defined by Rev. St. c. 164, §§ 34-37, relating to offenses by persons armed, but could easily be under other provisions referred to in chapter 165, § 15, relating to offenses of larceny by stealing from the person of another. Schanz v. State, 17 Wis. 251, 252.

FORCE AND VIOLENCE

An information alleging a robbery to have been committed "forcibly and by violence" sufficiently describes the offense characterized by St. 1898, § 4378, requiring the assault to be "by force and violence"; the two phrases being substantially the same. Ghillotti v. State, 116 N. W. 252, 253, 135 Wis. 634.

FORCE FEED LUBRICATOR

A "force feed lubricator" is a pumping device for supplying oil to an engine, where pressure is required, in order to positively force the oil from the source of supply to the parts to be lubricated. The operating piston of the lubricating pump is operatively connected with some moving part of the engine. Greene v. Buckley, 135 Fed. 520, 522, 68 C. C. A. 70.

FORCED HEIR

Although a husband is estopped from denying that property purchased during marriage belongs to the wife when the title was taken in her name, and he declared in the authentic act in which it was purchased that it was bought with her paraphernal funds, his children, being in law his "forced heirs," are relieved entirely from the estoppel by the provisions of Act No. 5, p. 12, of 1884, and admitted to show the actual facts of the case by parol evidence. Westmore v. Harz, 35 Outh. 578, 581, 111 La. 306.

FORCED SALE

Under Const. 1866, art. 7, § 22, which provided that a homestead should not be subject to forced sale for any debt, and that married man owning a homestead could not alienate it without the consent of his wife, it was permissible to mortgage the homestead; and a power of sale, given in a mortgage duly executed by the husband and wife, was enforceable, since such a sale was not a "forced sale." Wiener v. Zwieb, 141 S. W. 1, 777, 105 Tex. 262.

The sale of a homestead in partition under Statute of Descents and Distributions, § 3 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2508), providing for a division of the homestead under certain conditions, between the widow and children, is not a "forced sale," within the meaning of the term as used in Const. art. 15, § 9, providing that a homestead shall be exempt from any forced sale under any process of law. Towle v. Towle, 107 Pac. 228, 232, 81 Kan. 675, 27 L. R. (N. S.) 550.

FORCIBLE AND VIOLENT ENTRANCE

Defendant by its policy of insurance agreed to indemnify plaintiffs for direct loss by burglary by any person who has made forcible and violent entrance upon the premises or exit therefrom, of which force and violence there shall be visible evidence. The policy further provided that the company shall not be liable unless there are visible marks upon the premises of the actual force and violence used. After plaintiffs' store had been opened by their clerks, and the door to the loft unlocked, two persons entered the store by opening the unlocked door, assaulted the plaintiffs' clerks, and robbed the store of a quantity of merchandise, and left the premises in the same manner as they entered. Held, that the goods were "feloniously abstracted" by a "forcible and violent entrance" upon the premises, and defendant would be liable on its policy, although there were no visible marks upon the premises of the actual force and violence used in making entry or exit. Rosenthal v. American Bonding Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 905, 906.

FORCIBLE DEFILEMENT

Under Code, § 4757, providing that if any person take a woman unlawfully and against her will and by force, etc., compel her to marry him or be defiled, he shall be fined, etc., the gist of the offense is the taking of the woman unlawfully and against her will and defiling her by means of force, menace, or duress thus exercised, and it differs from "rape," which involves only a violation of her person by force, and all the acts of defilement during the continuance of the duress following the unlawful taking are elements of one continuous criminal transaction, and may be proven under one indictment; and the state need not elect on which of several acts of intercourse it relies on to sustain a conviction. State v. Dean, 126 N. W. 692, 694, 148 Iowa, 506.

FORCIBLE DETAINER

See Forcible Entry and Detainer.
See, also, Unlawful Detainer.

A "forcible detainer" implies the use of force or threats of violence by words or conduct inspiring fear of bodily harm or terror to some degree, and to make out a forcible detainer the guilty person must be wrongfully on the premises or wrongfully in temporary possession thereof. In re Munro, 195 Fed. 817, 819.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 452, declaring that a "forcible detainer" is the refusal of a tenant to give possession to his landlord after expiration of his term, or of a tenant at will or by sufferance to give possession to the landlord after the determination of his will, it is necessary, to maintain the writ, that the relation of landlord and tenant exist in some form, but it is not important in what form this relation exists, nor is it required that the tenant in possession shall have entered or hold the premises under a direct contract with the landlord. One who takes possession of premises under a tenant, whose lease for five years contains an agreement that there should be no sublease or assignment of the term, on failure to pay rent, may be dispossessed by an action of forcible detainer. Haase v. Schickner (Ky.) 92 S. W. 949, 950.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 452, subsec. 4, providing refusal of one who has made forcible entry on possession of a tenant for a term to deliver possession to the landlord, on demand, after the term expires, is a "forcible detainer," one entering with or without the tenant's consent and refusing to vacate on the landlord's demand after the term expires is guilty. Johnson v. Gordon (Ky.) 118 S. W. 372, 373.

Where defendant went into possession under an agreement with the lessee in a lease, which by its provisions could not be assigned without the consent of the landlord, and no such consent was obtained, and subsequently plaintiff obtained a lease from the landlord, and thereafter defendant paid rent to plaintiff, plaintiff might maintain unlawful detainer under Laws 1891, p. 179, c. 96, as amended, providing that any person is guilty of "forcible entry" or "forcible detainer" who, without the permission of the owner and without having any color of title thereto, enters upon the land of another and fails or refuses to remove therefrom after three days' notice in writing. Stahl Brewing & Malting Co. v. Van Buren, 88 Pac. 837, 838, 45 Wash. 451.

Where a third person forcibly takes possession of a part of leased premises without the consent of the lessee, the lessor at the expiration of the term may maintain forcible entry proceedings under Civ. Code Prac. § 452, subsec. 4, defining a "forcible detainer" as the refusal of a person who has made a forcible entry on the possession of a tenant for a term to deliver possession to the landlord, on demand, after the term expired. Willis v. Whayne, 134 S. W. 150, 151, 142 Ky. 194.

A person who took possession under a contract to purchase was not a tenant at will or at sufferance, so as to authorize the vendor to maintain "forcible detainer," under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2519, providing that, where such a tenant withholds possession after termination of the landlord's will and after demand in writing, he shall be guilty of "forcible detainer." Francis v. Holmes, 118 S. W. 881, 883, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 608.

FORCIBLE ENTRY

See Forcible Entry and Detainer.
See, also, Peaceable Entry.

A "forcible entry" is an entry without the consent of the person having the actual possession, and an entry accomplished by threatened violence was forcible, though no blows were struck. Clark v. Langenbach, 130 Fed. 755, 759, 65 C. C. A. 181 (quoting and adopting definition in Civ. Code Prac. Ky. 1900, § 452).

When one person in the nighttime comes upon a lot occupied by the building of another person, breaks into the building, destroys it, and removes it from the premises, such an entry is a forcible entry within the meaning of section 3347 of Mansfield's Digest, in force in the Indian Territory prior to statehood, and, when the evidence of these facts is undisputed, it is not error for the court to instruct a verdict. Turner v. Moore, 127 Pac. 487, 84 Okl. 1.

"Forcible entry" is defined by Civ. Code Prac. § 452, as the refusal of a tenant to give possession to his landlord after the expiration of his term. To maintain the writ of forcible detainer, the relation of landlord and tenant must exist. The reservation of rent in some form and allegiance to the title are the distinguishing characteristics of a contract by which the relation of landlord and tenant exist. Alexander v. Gardner, 96 S. W. 818, 819, 123 Ky. 552, 124 Am. St. Rep. 378.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 452, subsec. 1, defining a "forcible entry" as an entry without the consent of the person having the actual possession, to entitle one to maintain an action for forcible entry he must show that at the time of the entry he was in the actual and peaceable possession of the premises in question. Where a tenant leaves the property, consenting that the legal owner either in person or by his tenant should take possession of the property, the landlord, by doing so, does not become guilty of a forcible entry. Robinson v. Marshall (Ky.) 78 S. W. 904, 905.

Civ. Code Prac. § 452, defines a "forcible entry" as an entry without consent of the persons having actual possession; and section 469 provides that no inquisition of "forcible entry" shall be taken after two years from the "forcible entry" complained of. Before 1892, plaintiffs' father, since deceased, claimed that a division fence between him and C. was not on the true line, and it was then agreed that the fence should there remain, provided C. should keep it in repair. After C.'s death the land passed to defendants, who, in 1892, built a dwelling house thereon, and have since resided there continuously. In 1903, plaintiffs reasserting their claim of their father, arbitrators were appointed, who made an award that defendants should keep the land, but should pay $35 therefor, which they refused to do. Held, that defendants' refusal to abide by the award was not a new "forcible entry," changing defendants' possession which occurred in 1892, and that plaintiffs' right to maintain such action was barred by limitations. Hord v. Sartain (Ky.) 86 S. W. 693, 693.

Where plaintiffs and defendant had deed for a vacant lot, and plaintiffs took possession and fenced it, and defendant took possession forcibly, though plaintiffs' agent in charge forbade him so to do, defendant was guilty of "forcible entry," under Civ. Code Prac. § 452, subsec. 1, defining a "forcible entry" of land to be an entry without the consent of the person having actual possession. Check v. Reiter (Ky.) 102 S. W. 289, 289.

"A 'forcible entry' is not proved by evidence of a mere trespass. There must be proof of such force, or at least such show of force, as is calculated to prevent any resistance." There is no such force or violence used as is necessary to make one guilty of forcible entry and detainer where defendant in the absence of prosecutrix, merely unlocked and took off the lock she had put on, and then put his own lock on, without breaking anything or doing any violence, and committed no violence on the return of the prosecutrix. State v. Leary (N. C.) 48 S. E. 571, 186 N. C. 578 (quoting 2 Bish. Cr. Law 509).

The mere opening of a gate on entering premises is not such force as will constitute "forcible entry." The definition of "forcible entry and detainer," given in Code 1896, § 2126, requires more than a mere opening of door to constitute the offense, and under section 2149 the distinction was drawn between a peaceable entry and an entry by force. The word "force" carries with it necessarily the idea of violence exercised, and may include a putting in fear by threats, but it cannot include a mere entry by the ordinary means of entrance without any breaking and without any threat of violence against the person. Fowler v. Prichard, 41 South. 7, 670, 148 Ala. 261.

Where in ejectment defendant claimed title to the land in controversy, the fact that defendant entered into possession by taking down a fence without plaintiff's permission is not a "forcible entry" within B. & O. Comp. Laws, § 5745, creating a right of action for forcible entry and detainer, defendant's possession being unlawful only in case it was without right or title. Sommer v. Hampton, 96 Pac. 124, 128, 52 Or. 173.

To constitute "forcible entry," within Comp. Laws, § 11,153, providing that, in cases where entry is given by law, a person shall not enter with force, but only in a peaceable manner, it is not necessary that the actual violation of the premises should be attended by circumstances requisite to give it the character of a forcible entry; but where an entry is obtained by stealth, or without real violence, and the party entering evinces a purpose to expel the party in possession, followed by actual expulsion by means of personal threats, or violence, or superior force, there is a forcible entry. McIntyre v. Murphy, 116 N. W. 1003, 1004, 153 Mich. 342, 15 N. Cas. 802.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 19, making one guilty of forcible entry who makes entry into any lands except where entry is given by law, or makes such entry by force, and article 2520, defining a forcible entry or an entry not given by law as one without the consent of the person having actual possession, one who was in the actual possession of premises and was forcibly ejected therefrom, under an execution which did not include the premises taken, by another who entered and held possession, was entitled to maintain forcible entry and detainer to recover possession. Granberry v. Storey (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1122, 1123.

"Forcible entry" is the violently taking possession of lands and tenements with menaces, force and arms, and without authority of law." Pen. Code Ga. 1896, § 3. To constitute forcible entry, there need be only such a number of persons or show of force as is calculated to deter the person in possession from undertaking to remove them away or retain his possession. It is not necessary that the party in possession should offer such resistance that the entry was accomplished by actual violence. The object of the statute is to prevent a breach of the peace, and it is sufficient if the circumstances are such as to show a terror tending to a breach of the peace. Williams v. State, 48 S. E. 149, 150, 120 Ga. 488 (citing Chambers v. Collier, 4 Ga. 196; Lissner v. State, 11 S. E. 500, 84 Ga. 669, 20 Am. St. Rep. 389; Lewis v. State, 26 S. E. 496, 99 Ga. 692, 59 Am. St. Rep. 255; Blackwell v. State, 74 Ga. 816).

An action for "forcible entry" cannot be maintained where defendants were in possession at the time plaintiff's alleged possession began. Barnewell v. Stephens, 88 South. 662, 663, 142 Ala. 609.

While the action of "forcible entry" requires that an ouster shall be forcible, no great degree of force or of personal violence is required to be used or threatened to constitute a "forcible entry." Wilson v. Campbell, 88 Pac. 548, 549, 75 Kan. 159, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426, 121 Am. St. Rep. 366, 12 Ann. Cas. 766.

Where defendant went into possession under an agreement with the lessee in a lease, which by its provisions could not be assigned without the consent of the landlord, and no such consent was obtained, and subsequently plaintiff obtained a lease from the landlord, and thereafter defendant paid rent to plaintiff, plaintiff might maintain unlawful detainer under Laws 1891, p. 179, c. 96, as amended, providing that any person is guilty of "forcible entry" or "forcible detainer" who, without the permission of the owner and without having any color of title thereto, enters upon the land of another and fails or refuses to remove therefrom after three days' notice in writing. Stahl Brewing & Malting Co. v. Van Buren, 88 Pac. 837, 838, 45 Wash. 451.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff was in possession of certain described lands, engaged in cultivating them as a homestead settlement, and that defendant forcibly and without right entered and ejected plaintiff, states a cause of action for a forcible entry, under the statute, declaring that every person who enters on real property by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror is guilty of a "forcible entry." Spellman v. Rhode, 81 Pac. 395, 396, 83 Mont. 21.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER

See, also, Force.

Code 1896, § 2126, defines a forcible entry and detainer as when, among other things, one enters peaceably on land, but by unlawful refusal keeps the party out of possession. Held, that where it appeared that plaintiff rented the premises for a certain year and subrented them, and that after the expiration of the year, when the subtenant moved out, defendant moved in, it was a good defense that defendant moved in under a lease from the owner. Sprouse v. Story, 42 South. 23, 24, 144 Ala. 542.

Under Code 1896, § 2126, defining forcible entry and detainer as entering peaceably, and then by unlawful refusal, or by force or threats, turning or keeping the party out of possession, where one took peaceable possession of a building and refused to deliver possession on demand, he is liable in an action of forcible entry and detainer. Lorah v. Emmerson, 45 South. 228, 154 Ala. 145.

Under Code 1907, § 4262, defining "forcible entry and detainer" as an entering peaceably and then, by unlawful refusal, turning or keeping out of possession, there can be no recovery against one who goes into possession under and by virtue of a contract with his landlord, then in possession as plaintiff's tenant, because the defendant has not intruded, peaceably or otherwise, upon any prior actual possession. Victor Realty Co. v. Argumanian, 55 South. 621, 622, 172 Ala. 108.

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 1970, providing that if any person shall enter on lands with force or strong hand, or multitude of people, or by threats of violence to the party in possession, or by such words as naturally tend to excite fear, shall gain possession of lands and hold the same, he shall be deemed guilty of "forcible entry and detainer," it is unnecessary, to make out a cause of action of forcible entry, to show that force or appearances tending to inspire a just apprehension of violence were used in obtaining possession; and it is not sufficient to show an entry against the will of the possessor by employees of defendant, unarmed, and without force or threats, either in taking or retaining possession, who merely engage in seeding the land, and do not enter plaintiff's residence, or disturb his possession thereof. Goad v. Heckler, 76 Pac. 542, 19 Colo. App. 479.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 3629, which provides that any person entering on any land and retaining it without right or claim of title, or who shall enter with such words and actions as tend to excite fear or apprehension of danger, or by entering peaceably and then turning out by force, shall be guilty of a "forcible entry and detainer," the gist of the action is force, the remedy being given to protect actual possession, whether rightful or wrongful, and it must be shown that defendant entered without the consent of the possessor, and subsequently held with force, implied force, as where defendant enters peaceably, though unlawfully, being insufficient. Miller v. Plummer (Ark.) 152 S. W. 288, 290.

Unlawful detainer distinguished

A complaint alleging "forcible entry and detainer" cannot be amended so as to allege unlawful detainer. "Unlawful detainer" is a remedy provided by statute for the benefit of landlords against tenants who held over after the expiration of their term. It is founded on the breach of a contract implied by law, if not expressed, that the tenant shall restore a permissive possession to the hands from which it was received. But a "forcible entry and detainer" is a tort pure and simple. Force is the gist of the action. It is a remedy designed to protect the actual possession, whether rightful or wrongful. Crawford v. Alexander, 82 S. W. 707, 708, 5 Ind. T. 161 (quoting and adopting definition given in Johnson v. West, 41 Ark. 536).

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (Action of)

As civil case, see Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc.

The action of forcible entry and detainer is a summary proceeding to recover possession of premises forcibly or unlawfully detained. The inquiry in such cases is confined to the actual, peaceable possession of the plaintiff and the unlawful or forcible ouster or detention by defendant; the object of the law being to prevent the disturbance of the public peace by the forcible assertion of a private right. Gore v. Altice, 74 Pac. 556, 557, 33 Wash. 335 (citing McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500).

Proceedings in "forcible entry and detainer" are not "civil cases," within the purview of section 17, art. 6, of the Constitution, which provides that "appeals to the district courts from the judgments of county courts shall be allowed in all criminal cases, on application of the defendant; and in all civil cases, on application of either party, and in such other cases as may be provided by law." The statutory summary proceeding in forcible entry and detainer comes rather under the "other cases" referred to in the section quoted than under the head of "civil cases," as the latter phrase is used therein. It is true the proceeding is a civil one, in the sense that it is not criminal, although to some extent criminal in form. Proceedings in forcible entry and detainer are intended to provide a speedy and more or less summary remedy, and belong in a class apart with other special and summary proceedings. Adkins v. Andrews, 96 N. W. 288, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 810.

"Forcible entry and detainer" is a proceeding at law, and the right to possession is the sole question involved, and evidences of title are only material in so far as they tend to show right of possession, and no equities of parties can be determined. Vansellous v. Huene, 108 Pac. 1102, 26 Okl. 243.

"Forcible entry and detainer" was originally a criminal proceeding. The earlier statutes giving a civil remedy were directed against those who made unlawful and forcible entry into lands and tenements and detained them. Under Code Civ. Proc., §§ 1019-1032, the remedy extends to tenants holding over their terms, to defendants in judgments upon which judicial sales are had, and to all cases where the defendant is a settler or occupier of lands or tenements without color of title to which the complainant has the right of possession. In cases where the gravamen of the action is force in entry or detention, the occupying claimants' act does not apply; but, where a claimant would otherwise be entitled to relief under that act, the fact that he was ejected in proceedings under the forcible entry and detainer act do not deprive him of the right. Wells v. Cox, 120 N. W. 433, 434, 435, 84 Neb. 26.

The statutory provisions relating to proceedings in "forcible entry and detainer" are to be construed to include proceedings in unlawful detainer. Proceedings in unlawful detainer, in which the rules of evidence relating to forcible entry and detainer are made applicable, are limited to those cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, and in which such defenses only can be recognized as are available to the tenant against the landlord. To sustain an action for unlawful detainer, proof of a mere quasi tenancy is not sufficient, but there must be either an express letting or proof showing, by implication, defendant's occupancy of the land as plaintiff's tenant. Richmond v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 98 Pac. 57, 58, 9 Cal. App. 62.

"An action of 'forcible entry and detainer' is strictly possessory in its nature, and, unless otherwise expressly provided by the statute, a person who has never been in possession of land cannot maintain the action to obtain possession. If he has any interest in the land, he must seek to establish it in some other form of action. Generally speaking, plaintiff, in order to maintain this form of action, must allege and prove that he was in peaceful and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy, and that he has been forcibly ousted, or that possession was peaceably obtained and forcibly withheld by defendant. Chezum v. Campbell, 85 Pac. 48, 50, 42 Wash. 560, 7 Ann. Cas. 921 (quoting and adopting definition in 19 Cyc. 1128).

At common law "forcible entry" and "forcible detainer" were distinct actions, criminal, and not civil. The statute providing for their trial as civil actions confined them to two conditions of fact; the one when a tenant wrongfully held over after the expiration of his term and refused to surrender after demand, and the other where a stranger by force and violence wrongfully and unlawfully gained possession. The question of title is not involved in the action, and it is immaterial, except so far as tending to show plaintiff's right of possession. The complaint in the action must show that either the relation of landlord and tenant exists between plaintiff and defendant, or that defendant by force and arms ousted plaintiff from possession. Folsom v. Hunter, 98 S. W. 156, 158, 6 Ind. T. 453.

"Forcible entry and unlawful detainer" is an action to protect the actual possession, not involving the question of title to the land in question. Watson v. Scarbrough, 40 South. 672, 673, 147 Ala. 689.

FORCIBLE MANNER

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1669, which provides that a person put out of real property "in a forcible manner" may recover treble damages of the wrongdoer, the term "in a forcible manner" means force of an unusual kind which tends to bring about a breach of the peace, such as an injury with a strong hand, or a multitude of people, or in a riotous manner, or with personal violence, or with threat and menace to life and limb, or under circumstances which would naturally inspire fear and lead one to apprehend danger of personal injury if he stood up in defense of his possession, and hence an entry upon premises held by a sublessee under a warrant valid only against the lessee is free from the imputation of willful and reckless conduct, and, where made after the officer's statement that he had come to put them out, is not an entry in a forcible manner. Fults v. Munro, 95 N. E. 23, 25, 202 N. Y. 34, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 600, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 870.

FORCIBLE TRESPASS

"Forcible trespass" is the invasion of another's actual possession, done in his presence and under such circumstances as endangers the public peace, being an offense against possession and not against title, so that the question of whether title is in prosecutor or defendant is immaterial. "Forcible trespass" is the entering upon land in another's actual possession with such force or violence as is calculated to intimidate or alarm the possessor or tending to breach the peace; the amount of force necessary being such as to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the possessor that he must give way to avoid a breach of the peace. State v. Davenport, 72 S. E. 7, 10, 156 N. C. 596.

The gist of the offense of "forcible trespass" is the violence and intimidation, and no assault need appear. Such violence, threats, and cursing towards a woman as to cause her against her will to sign a cancellation of a mortgage held by her against defendant is terror and violence constituting a "forcible trespass." Whenever a man, either by his behavior, or speech, gives those who are in possession cause to feel that he will do them some bodily harm if they will not give way to him, he is guilty of forcible trespass. State v. Tuttle, 59 S. E. 542, 543, 145 N. C. 487 (quoting and adopting Arch. Cr. Prac. p. 1183).

FORCIBLY

The word "forcibly" in an indictment for rape is not used as an equivalent or synonym for "against her will." Only such force as is incident to the physical character of the act of coition will meet the requirements of this term where the woman does not consent. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

FORCIBLY RAVISHING

By the term "forcibly ravish" is meant the carnal knowledge of a woman by a man forcibly and against her will. State v. Miller, 90 S. W. 767, 770, 191 Mo. 587.

FORECLOSE

To "foreclose" means to shut out, to bar. Squire v. Robertson, 191 Fed. 733, 737.

FORECLOSURE

Expiration of time for redemption

A mortgage "foreclosure" is not complete so as to operate as a sale until the time allowed by statute for redemption has expired, and until then the title does not pass. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 460, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

Law day synonyms

"Foreclosure" and "law day" are synonymous in the sense that it is the time when the mortgagor declares a default and submits his case to a court of competent jurisdiction. The word "foreclosure," as used with reference to the rule under which a mortgage is discharged by a tender before foreclosure, must be taken in the meaning which is commonly and generally accepted by the laity, as well as by the bar; that is, the institution of a suit, or the "law day," as contradistinguished from the "law day" of the common law. Murray v. O'Brien, 105 Pac. 840, 844, 56 Wash. 361, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998.

See In Rem.

Sale

A "foreclosure" of a mortgage is not completed until the sale is confirmed. Gerhardt v. Ellis, 114 N. W. 495, 496, 134 Wis. 191.

Sale under power of sale

Where a mortgage provided for "foreclosure" by sale under power, a decree providing that, in case complainants failed to pay the amount found due within a specified time, the holder of the mortgage should be at liberty to foreclose, authorized a foreclosure by sale, and did not limit the holders' right to foreclosure by suit in equity. Silverman v. Shattuck, 80 Atl. 184, 186, 33 R. I. 67.

FORECLOSURE SALE

As judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

A "foreclosure sale" under power in mortgage which conveys the title of the mortgagor is, in a legal sense, the complete foreclosure proceedings beginning with the advertisement of sale and terminating with the execution of the deed after expiration of the period for redemption and includes all the proceedings for the foreclosure of the right of redemption by sale and deed. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 455, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

FOREGOING

Pen. Code 1895, § 1114, provides that a subpoena for a nonresident witness for the state shall be issued, unless signed by the clerk of the court and the solicitor general of the circuit. Section 1118 declares that the "foregoing provisions" shall apply to defendant's witnesses, when in the discretion of the presiding judge the end of justice may demand it. Held, that the words "foregoing provisions," found in section 1118, applied only to the three sections immediately preceding relating to fees of witnesses, and not to section 1114, and that a subpoena for defendant's nonresident witnesses is not required to be countersigned, either by the presiding judge or the solicitor general, and hence a denial of a continuance on the ground that such a subpoena was not so countersigned was unwarranted. Ivey v. State, 62 S. E. 585, 586, 4 Ga. App. 828.

FOREIGN

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT

"Foreign attachment" originated in the Custom of London, and did not exist at common law, or in this state until established by statutes in derogation of the common law. Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 603, Boyce, 113.

FOREIGN BANK

Under Sess. Laws 1907, p. 519, c. 225, § 7, mentioning the term "branch bank" three separate times in the following manner, "any corporation, branch bank or foreign bank which shall receive money on deposit . . . every such corporation, branch bank or foreign bank receiving deposits . . . existing banks, branch banks and foreign banks . . ."

living deposits," and section 14 (page 523), referring to branch banks in substantially the same manner, the term "branch bank" refers to branches of domestic banking corporations only, and not to branches of foreign banking corporations, and the term "foreign banks" refers to branches in this state of foreign banking corporations. State ex l. Flumerfelt v. Engle, 96 Pac. 1045, 1046, Wash. 207.

FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE

A draft addressed by a firm doing business in New York to a firm doing business in Austria, requiring the drawee to pay on demand a specified sum to the order of the payee and charge the same to a cargo shipped to the foreign firm by a specified steamship, is a "foreign bill of exchange" within the definition in Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, pp. 745, 746, c. 612, § 210, amended by Laws 1898, p. 977, c. 336, § 25, and section 213. Amsinck v. Rogers, 82 N. Y. 134, 139, 189 N. Y. 252, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5, 121 Am. St. Rep. 858, 12 Ann. Cas. 450.

A draft drawn on a company without the state is a "foreign bill of exchange" under the Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1905, p. 8) § 129 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463—129), providing that any bill except one which is or on its face purports to be both drawn and payable within the state is a foreign bill. Bank of Addonia v. Bright-Coy Commission Co., 120 W. 648, 653, 139 Mo. App. 110.

FOREIGN BUILT

A yacht is "foreign built" within the meaning of Tariff Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 37, Stat. 112, imposing a tonnage tax on the use of such yachts owned by citizens of the United States, if it was originally built in a foreign country, so long as it retains its identity, so that if a registered vessel of the United States, it could not be renamed, under Rev. St. § 4179, without the consent of the Commissioner of Navigation; and short of such complete change of identity no amount expended thereon in this country for alterations, betterments, or even rebuilding, will convert it into a home-built vessel. United States v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372, 374.

FOREIGN CAR

As applied to the operation of a particular railroad, what is known as a "foreign car" is one not owned by such road. Gulf, & S. F. R. Co. v. Sliger (Tex.) 100 S. W. 7, 958.

FOREIGN CITIZEN OR SUBJECT

Defendant, a citizen of Missouri, having left that state to study music abroad, with an intention of thereafter residing abroad and not returning to the United States, finally took up her permanent residence in London, from whence she came to the United States while under a singing contract with complainant to deliver a concert in Kansas City. Held that, since citizenship of the United States does not involve residence, but is the antithesis of alienage, defendant's mere residence abroad, even with an intention never to return, without any act of naturalization or step in that direction, did not constitute an act of expatriation, so as to terminate her citizenship of the United States, and render her a foreign citizen or subject, within Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1091, § 24, conferring jurisdiction on federal courts of suits between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects. Hammerstein v. Lyne, 200 Fed. 165, 171.

FOREIGN COMMERCE

Where plaintiff sought to establish his banana business in Central America, and expended considerable money in his plant, it was engaged in "foreign commerce" when it began to move men, material, and supplies to and from the United States and Central American ports in furtherance of its business, and was therefore entitled to compel defendant to furnish transportation facilities on the same terms that defendant furnished such facilities to others. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 160 Fed. 184, 187.

FOREIGN CORPORATION

As corporation, see Corporation.

As merchant, see Merchant.

As resident, see Resident.

A corporation existing under the laws of another state is a "foreign corporation" in Florida within the statute providing conditions for doing business in the state. Ulmer v. First Nat. Bank, 55 South. 405, 408, 61 Fla. 460.

Where a Massachusetts railroad corporation and a Connecticut railroad corporation consolidated into a single corporation which was the creature of both states, and the single corporation operated a railroad extending into both states, and had the same capital stock to cover the property in both states and elected its officers and managed its business as a single corporation, the single corporation was a domestic corporation in each state and was not a "foreign corporation" in either. Attorney General v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 84 N. E. 737, 738, 198 Mass. 413.

Incorporations by United States

"Foreign," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, cl. 25, authorizing foreign corporations to be sued in any county where they may have an agency, representative, or principal place of business, does not embrace every corporation not created directly by domestic state authority and does not include a railroad corporation incorporated by act of Congress. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Weatherby, 92 S. W. 58, 60, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 409.

FOREIGN COUNTRY

though signed December 10, 1898, and last ratified on March 18, 1899, did not become effective for the purpose of the tariff laws until the exchange of ratifications April 11, 1899, and, until that date Porto Rico was a "foreign country," and it was legal for the collector at the port of New York to impose duties on all merchandise brought into that port before midnight April 11, 1899, and on all importations of merchandise arriving from Porto Rico. Armstrong v. Bidwell, 124 Fed. 690, 693.

The definition given by Chief Justice Marshall that a "foreign country" was one exclusively within the sovereignty of a foreign nation and without the sovereignty of the United States has been reaffirmed; and the same doctrine, in a general way, has been announced in a large number of cases. The phrase "foreign country," as used in these decisions, and the phrase "other countries," as used in article 8 of the Cuban Treaty, prescribing on importations from Cuba treatment preferential in respect to like imports from "other countries," is not different. "Other countries" means countries other than the United States. To be a country other than the United States, that country must be a country foreign to the United States; that is, a country "exclusively without the sovereignty of the United States." The Philippine Archipelago is no more another country than Alaska, Hawaii, or Porto Rico. None of them are states of the American Union; but the government under which the people of each live is prescribed by the American Congress, and all are within the sovereignty of the United States. Faber v. United States, 157 Fed. 140, 141.

The Isle of Pines must be regarded as at least de facto under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Cuba, and hence, as a "foreign country" within the meaning of Dingley Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 151, since the United States has never taken possession of such island as included in the territory ceded by Spain to the United States in the treaty of peace, but, instead, through its legislative and executive departments, has recognized the Cuban government as rightfully exercising sovereignty over the Isle of Pines as a de facto government until the de jure status shall be determined. Pearcy v. Stranahan, 27 Sup. Ct. 545-549, 205 U. S. 257, 51 L. Ed. 793.

FOREIGN COURT

The federal courts are not "foreign courts," and as such hostile to the interest of the people of the states. They belong to the people of the states as well as the state courts, and were created for the express purpose of affording citizens of the various states facilities by which they might have their controversies speedily and satisfactorily determined. Parker v. Vanderbilt, 1 Fed. 246, 251.

FOREIGN GUARDIAN

As guardian, see Guardian.

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY

The words "foreign insurance company," as used in Rev. St. Me. c. 49, § 92, which declares that any person having a claim against any foreign insurance company may bring an appropriate suit thereon in the courts of the state, and that process may be served on the insurance commissioner, or on any duly appointed agent of the company within the state, apply only to foreign insurance companies which have complied with sections 80, 84, and have obtained a license to do business in the state. Greenleaf v. National Ass'n of Ry. Postal Clerks, 130 Fed. 209, 210.

FOREIGN OFFICIAL DOCUMENT

A certified foreign death record, kept in accordance with the laws of the country in which the decedent died, is a "foreign official document" within B. & C. Comp. § 755, sub. 8, providing that documents other than those previously referred to of a foreign country may be proved by the original, or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, together with a certificate under the great seal of the country or sovereign thereof that the document is a valid and subsisting document of such country, and that the copy is duly certified by the officer having legal custody of the original; it being sufficient that the copy is certified to be a true copy of the entry of the death of the person named in the record of the officer. State v. McDonald, 104 P. 967, 976, 55 Or. 419.

FOREIGN PORT OR PLACE

See Passenger from a Foreign Port.

A foreign-built vessel, owned entirely by a citizen of the United States, and entered as a port of the United States from Manila, I., does not enter from a "foreign port or place," and is therefore not subject to tonnage duty under Rev. St. § 4219, as amended by Act June 26, 1884, c. 121, 23 Stat. 57, and Act June 19, 1886, c. 421, 24 Stat. 81, nor is she subject to such duty under Act March 3, 1902, c. 140, 32 Stat. 54, extending such duty to "foreign" vessels entering from the Philippine Archipelago, since, while not, "a vessel of the United States," because not entitled to registry, she is an American, and not a foreign vessel, by virtue of the citizenship of her owner. The Alta, 136 Fed. 513, 516, C. C. A. 289.

FOREIGN STATE

As state, see State.

FOREIGN VESSEL

An open clinker-built gasoline launch about 18½ feet long, arriving at Seattle from a port in British Columbia, and not shown be a foreign vessel or to contain merchandise, is not a "foreign vessel" within Rev. St. 2774, requiring vessels from foreign ports generally to report to the customs officer of the port, or section 3109, which requires foreign vessels "laden or in ballast" to report; but it is within Rev. St. § 3097, relating to commerce with contiguous countries which require only vessels containing dutiable merchandise, arriving at ports on the northern and northwestern frontier adjacent to foreign territory, to report. United States v. Gasoline Launch, 133 Fed. 42, 43, 66 C. A. 148.

FOREIGN WILL

"A 'foreign will' is a will executed in another state by a testator residing there, admitted to probate in such state after the death of the testator, and subsequently offered for ancillary probate in this state." State rel. Ruef v. District Court of Twelfth Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 866, 867, 34 Mont. 96, 6 R. A. (N. S.) 617, 115 Am. St. Rep. 510, 9 Minn. Cas. 418.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1294, requiring wills to be proved in the county of which the decedent was a resident at the time of his death, regardless of where he died, the words "all wills," used in section 1322, declaring that all wills duly proved in any other state or county may be allowed and recorded in any county where testator shall have left any estate, should be construed to mean "all foreign wills," and to include all wills, other than domestic wills, "duly approved and allowed in any of the United States or in any foreign country or state." In re Clark's Estate, 82 Pac. 760, 761, 148 Cal. 108, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 996, 113 Am. St. Rep. 197, 7 Ann. Cas. 306.

FOREMAN

See, also, Vice Principal.

Acts 1905, p. 538, provides that the wages of a railroad employé shall continue after his discharge, where such employé requests a foreman or timekeeper to send his wages to any designated station and request is not complied with within seven days from the time it is made. Plaintiff, a station agent, after discharge, made demand for his wages from his successor. He did not designate the station at which the wages were to be sent. Held, that the division agent who appointed him was plaintiff's "foreman" or the "keeper of his time" within the statute, and since his request did not comply with the statute, he was not entitled to wages after discharge. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. McClerkin, 181 S. W. 240, 241, 88 Ark. 277.

While the words "superintendent," "foreman," "overseer," and the like do not necessarily import that the employé bearing such title was the vice principal of the master, as a fact, in connection with the character of the work and the character of the order given in reference to the operation of dangerous machinery, may be sufficient to raise a question for the jury as to whether such servant was, on the occasion in question, the vice principal of the master, or only a fellow servant of the plaintiff. Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 56 S. E. 839, 840, 845, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772.

The term "foreman" does not imply, ex vi termini, that it was the duty of the person so designated, or within his power simply as foreman of a gang of laborers, to employ laborers over whom he acted as foreman. Langston v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 65 S. E. 1094, 1095, 6 Ga. App. 833 (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2892).

FORESEEN

A wrongdoer is liable for such injuries as might reasonably have been anticipated to result from his wrongful act, it being inaccurate to say that he is only liable for such damages as he could have foreseen, the primary meaning of "foreseen" being to see or know beforehand, though it may also be sometimes used in the sense of "anticipate" or "expect." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Alexander (Tex.) 141 S. W. 135, 136.

In an action for injury to an employé while working at a machine, where the jury have found that the machine was not reasonably safe, and that the injury was the natural and probable result of its unsafe condition, the finding in the affirmative, in answer to the question, also evidently framed to cover the question of proximate cause, whether "such injury" ought to have been "foreseen" by a person of ordinary care and prudence, will be construed as meaning that "such an injury," or an injury of like nature, ought to have been "apprehended" or considered probable. Coolidge v. Hallauer, 105 N. W. 568-570, 126 Wis. 244.

FORESIGHT

By foresight is meant not foreknowledge absolute, nor that exactly such an accident as has happened was expected or apprehended, but rather that the characteristics of the accident are such that it can be classified among events that, without due care, are likely to occur, and that due care would prevent. Rivers v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 83 Atl. 883, 884, 83 N. J. Law, 513.

The use of the word "foresight" in instructions as to a carrier's duty to safeguard passengers has been condemned as conveying the meaning that the carrier is bound to act as if it possessed foreknowledge that an accident would happen unless certain precautions were taken. Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 814, 818, 102 Mo. App. 573.

FOREST

The word "forest," as used in Forest, Fish, and Game Law, § 228, providing that a railroad shall twice a year cut and remove all inflammable material from its right of way passing through forest lands or lands subject to fires, has a large and significant, not an insignificant, meaning, and does not embrace land only partly woodland. Higgins v. Long Island R. Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 262, 264, 129 App. Div. 415.

Forest, Fish, and Game Law, § 228, providing that every railroad company shall "on such part of its road as passes through forest lands or lands subject to fires from any cause" remove from its right of way inflammable materials, etc., when considered in connection with the other provisions of the act providing for the appointment of a forest, fish and game commissioner, who shall have the supervision of the forest preserve, and make rules for the care thereof and for the prevention of forest fires, etc., is applicable to forest lands whether within the forest preserve or not; a forest, being a tract of land covered with trees, a wood usually of considerable extent, a tract of woodland with or without inclosed intervals of open and uncultivated ground. People v. Long Island R. Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 512, 513, 126 App. Div. 477.

FOREST LAND

See Wild and Forest Lands.

FOREST MATERIAL

Laws 1911, p. 629, § 8, provides that no one shall burn any forest material within any county in the state in which there is a fire warden or ranger between June and September, inclusive, of each year, without first obtaining permission in writing from the forester, warden, or ranger, etc., and section 1 defines "forest material" to mean "forest slashing, chopping, woodland or brush land." Held that, where logs and stumps were located in defendant's dooryard, such yard was located in a forest slashing, or woodland, and became forest material, which defendant had no right to burn without a permit from the forester, warden, or ranger, as provided in section 8. State v. Hendricks, 123 Pac. 1070, 1078, 68 Wash. 670.

FORESTALLING

"Forestalling" consists of buying victuals on their way to market before they reach it, with intent to sell again at a higher price. Dutton v. City of Knoxville, 113 S. W. 383, 121 Tenn. 25, 130 Am. St. Rep. 749, Ann. Cas. 1028.

A declaration, which alleged a combination to exact and maintain a maximum schedule of prices for drugs and druggists' supplies existed between defendants and others in restraint of trade, stated the offense "forestalling the market," which is defined to be every practice or device by act, conspiracy, words, or news to enhance the price of victuals and other merchandise. Klingels' Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 A. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 213, 7 U. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 118.

FOREVER

See Children Forever; Heirs Forever; Release, Remise, and Forever Discharge.

The use of the word "forever" in the habendum of a deed to the grantees, "their heirs, assigns, and assigns forever," did not prevent the grant being of an estate for life. Johnson v. Beeden, 83 Atl. 721, 723, 86 Vt. 19.

The word "forever," as used in a will which, after making some specific bequest to relatives, bequeathed "all the residue of my estate, both real and personal, or of any other description, to my wife, forever, in charge this residue which I give my wife with the following bequests," adds but little if anything to the strength of the bequest. If the words following the word "forever" had been omitted and the testator had used no words showing his intention to limit the estate given his wife, she would have taken a fee therein, even though the word "forever" had been omitted. McClelland's Estate v. McClelland, 116 S. W. 730, 732, 132 Ky. 284.

A deed of land, habendum "with all the privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging excepting all the wood and trees on a certain island I reserve to the grantor his heirs and assigns forever," and concluding, "It is to be understood that the wood above mentioned is reserved to the grantor and his heirs forever," reserves to the grantor an estate of inheritance in the wood and trees only then growing, with a right in the soil for their growth and nourishment and the privilege of entering to take them away. Utnam v. Tuttle (Mass.) 10 Gray, 48, 49.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 735, providing that conveyance which by common law would create an estate tail in fee shall instead pass to the grantee an estate for his life only and the remainder in fee to the person to whom the estate tail would first pass according to the common law, the word "forever" used in conveyance to the daughter of the creditor, and unto her bodily heirs and assigns forever," relates to the grantee and not to the estate granted, and is presumed to have been used in its legal sense, and hence the words "and assigns forever," used in the deed did not operate to enlarge the life estate into a fee-simple. Watson v. Wolff-Goldman Realty Co., 128 S. W. 581, 582, 95 Ark. 18, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 540.

The words "forever barred and foreclosed," as used in a mortgage foreclosure decree, mean shut out and excluded from all right, claim, title, or interest in the mortgaged premises. Hope v. Seaman, 119 N. S. Supp. 713, 716.

FOREVER IN FEE SIMPLE

A deed from husband to wife conveyed the land described to the wife for the use of herself and the children she then had and those she might thereafter have by the grantor, and recited that the deed was meant to convey to the wife and her children by the grantor, to have and to hold the land unto the wife and her children, "to her during her life and to her children by her present husband forever in fee simple." Held, that the words "forever in fee simple" referred to the estate of the children, and was not equivalent to the words "to them and their heirs," and that the deed did not convey the fee. McMillan v. Hughes, 70 S. E. 804, 805, 3 S. C. 296.

FORFEIT—FORFEITURE

See Liable to Forfeiture; Nonforfeitable; Suit for Penalty or Forfeiture; Tax Forfeitures.

Forfeiture or otherwise, see Otherwise.

A "forfeiture" is where a person loses some right, property, privilege, or benefit in consequence of having done, or omitted to do, a certain act. Meyers v. State, 105 S. W. 3, 50, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 836.

"Forfeiture" usually signifies loss of property by way of compensation for injury to the person to whom the property is forfeited, as well as punishment. Whitney v. Pewey, 158 Fed. 385, 390, 86 C. C. A. 21.

A "forfeiture" is a penalty for doing or omitting to do a certain required act. Agoe v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 96 S. W. 598, 99, 123 Ky. 510.

A "forfeiture" is a penalty imposed for misconduct or breach of duty, and in criminal practice arises most frequently in proceedings upon bail bonds and recognizances, the terms of which have been violated. Commonwealth v. French, 114 S. W. 255, 256, 130 Ky. 744, 17 Ann. Cas. 601.

"The word 'forfeit' has a well-established meaning in the law. 'To forfeit' is 'to divest or to suffer divestiture of property without compensation in consequence of a default or offense; also to pay money as a mulct, or for a default or wrong.' And. Law Dict. 'Forfeiture has been defined as an involuntary transfer of a sum of money or property imposed by way of punishment for the commission of an offense against the law.' Anglea v. Com. (Va.) 10 Grat. 696. The term is also used synonymously with 'penalty.' 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1074. The primary use of the word 'forfeit' is to lose, and this is also its legal meaning. To forfeit a sum of money means to lose the right to it in favor of another party. Eakin v. Scott, 7 S. W. 777, 70 Tex. 445. 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 54, treats forfeitures, fines, and penalties under a common head, saying it is deemed proper to so treat them as they are all included under the general head 'penalty.'" Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 423, 116 Mo. App. 235.

As defined by the Standard Dictionary, the term "forfeit" in law means "to lose and surrender to an individual or the state (something that belongs to one) for misconduct, or breach of duty; lose title to as a penalty." Where a testator devised all his real estate to his sons equally, and provided that none of the property should be sold until 10 years after his death, and that if any of his sons contracted habits of vice before the division he thereby forfeited his share, and if any of the sons died before division his share should go to the remaining heirs unless he left children, the devise vested in the sons the fee subject to divestiture or termination on any son's contracting habits of vice before division, which is a condition subsequent, defined by Civ. Code, § 1349. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 973, 156 Cal. 657.

The word "forfeit" means to lose, and this is its legal meaning in Rev. Code 1899, § 4797, requiring the holder of a mechanic's lien to commence suit to foreclose within a certain time, and providing that the lien shall be forfeited in case of failure to do so. Sheets v. Prosser, 112 N. W. 72, 73, 16 N. D. 180.

The words "escheat" and "forfeiture" have a distinct and definite legal meaning, and can never be construed to mean "sale" and "purchase." Woodrough v. Douglas County, 98 N. W. 1092, 1094, 71 Neb. 354.

The phrase "forfeiture of the entire interest," in Rev. St. U. S. § 5198, providing that the taking or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by law, when knowingly done, shall be deemed "a forfeiture of the entire interest," etc., means that interest shall not be allowed. Wagoner Nat. Bank v. Welch, 104 S. W. 610, 613, 7 Ind. T. 259.

Allen Chinese persons not of the exempt classes having no right to be or to remain in the United States, a deportation proceeding is a civil proceeding, not involving punishment for a crime, the imposition of a fine, or the enforcement of a "penalty" or "forfeiture"; and hence the defendant may not refuse to become a witness against himself. United States v. Tom Wah, 160 Fed. 207, 211.

The $2 on each $100 of premiums paid by foreign insurance companies doing business in the state, which is required to be paid into the state treasury, is no part of the 22 cents on each $100 valuation of property or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation for the school fund by Ky. St. 1903, § 4370, subd. 5, nor is it a "fine" "forfeiture" or "license" within subdivision 6, providing that a portion of such revenues be paid into the school fund. Fuqua v. Hager, 84 S. W. 325, 119 Ky. 407.

Abandonment distinguished

There is a distinction between "abandonment" and "forfeiture," as applied to oil and gas leases; abandonment resting on the intention of the lessee to relinquish the premises, which is a question of fact for the jury, while forfeiture is based on an enforced release. Garrett v. South Penn Oil Co., 66 S. E. 741, 745, 66 W. Va. 587.

As costs

Costs as, see Costs.

Deprivation of office

"At common law a willful refusal to perform the duties of an office was required in order to work a forfeiture." Pol. Code, § 996, subd. 7, providing that an office becomes vacant by the ceasing of the incumbent to discharge its duties for three consecutive months, contemplates a voluntary abandonment or nonuser of the office, so that an involuntary failure to perform the duties of the office, caused by the incumbent's incarceration for a felony during the statutory period, did not operate as an abandonment of the office. Bergerow v. Parker, 87 Pac. 248, 249, 250, 4 Cal. App. 169 (citing People v. Hartwell, 67 Cal. 11, 6 Pac. 873).

Costs included

The words "fines and forfeitures," as contained in Const. art. 5, § 17, authorizing the Governor to remit such fines and forfeitures as may be prescribed by law, do not include costs in a criminal case. Ryan v. State, 95 N. E. 561, 176 Ind. 281.

As equivalent to fine

The words "fine" and "forfeiture," though sometimes used in a technical sense and with restricted signification, at other times overlap and run together in meaning. State v. Rose, 97 Pac. 788, 789, 78 Kan. 600.

A fine may include a "forfeiture." State v. Addington, 57 S. E. 398, 399, 143 N. C. 683, 11 Ann. Cas. 314.

The word "fine," as used in St. 1898, § 3294, authorizing a civil action for a forfeiture, and defining a forfeiture to include any penalty in money or goods other than a "fine," does not include those forfeitures, sometimes called fines, imposed by municipal corporations for violating their ordinances. State v. Hamley, 119 N. W. 114, 115, 137 Wis. 458.

As penalty or liquidated damages

Liquidated damages distinguished from penalty or forfeiture, see Liquidated Damages.

The words "penalty" and "forfeiture" are generally used synonymously, and a statute is penal when it inflicts a forfeiture by way of penalty for breach of its provisions. Southern Ry. Co. v. Inman, Akers & Inman, 75 S. E. 908, 910, 11 Ga. App. 564 (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5272, 5273).

"Forfeiture" and "penalty" are sometimes used as synonymous and interchangeable terms. Pennington & Evans v. Douglas, A. & G. B. Co., 60 S. E. 485, 489, 8 Ga. App. 665; Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 423, 116 Mo. App. 235.

Provision in a contract that one party shall "forfeit" a certain amount if he breaches the contract does not necessarily imply that the sum specified is intended to be a penalty. Ross v. Loescher, 116 N. W. 193, 194, 152 Mich. 386, 125 Am. St. Rep. 418 (citing Western Gas Const. Co. v. Dowagiac Gas & Fuel Co., 109 N. W. 29, 146 Mich. 119, 10 Ann. Cas. 224).

An action against a carrier to recover an overcharge, brought under a statute which fixes maximum freight rates and provides that for a violation of the act the company should "forfeit" to the person injured five times the charges illegally taken, is one to recover a statutory penalty, the essential idea of "forfeiture" being a loss of property inflicted by way of punishment. Herriman v. B., C. R. & N. R. Co., 9 N. W. 378, 10 N. W. 340, 57 Iowa, 187.

With reference to penal actions the word "penalty" means the "forfeiture" inflicted by a penal statute. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

A contract for the improvement of a city street provided for completion before October 1st, and for a failure to complete the contractor agreed to "pay and forfeit" to the city as "liquidated damages" the sum of $25 per day after October 1st. Held that, though the word "forfeit" ordinarily means "penalty," in view of the fact that it was necessary to complete such improvement in the summer months, and damages might reasonably flow from a failure to complete within the time limited, the damages will be considered liquidated damages, regardless of whether the city actually suffered damages by the delay. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. City of Wabash, 43 Ind. App. 167, 86 N. E. 1034, 1036.

The term "forfeiture" in a contract does not necessarily exclude a purpose to make the sum named a penalty merely to which the parties may resort for the recovery of the actual damages resulting from breach of the contract. McMillan v. First Nat. Bank of Bowie, 119 S. W. 709, 710, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 45.

As punishment

"Forfeiture" of a corporate franchise for nonuser is taking from the corporation its property, its corporate rights which are a part of its property. Forfeiture is not only the taking of property, but its further punishment by putting to death the corporation itself. State ex inf. Hadley v. Delmar Jockey Club, 98 S. W. 539, 543, 200 Mo. 84.

"A 'forfeiture' is to be regarded as a punishment inflicted for a violation of some duty enjoined," and under Gen. St. 1902, § 324, imposing a penalty on an administrator for his unexcused failure to file an inventory for 12 months prior to the bringing of the action to recover such penalty, no penalty or forfeiture could be incurred by any delinquency before suit was in fact instituted to recover such penalty. Atwood v. Buckingham, 62 Atl. 616, 618, 78 Conn. 423 (quoting and adopting definition in Maryland ex rel. Washington County v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 3 How. [44 U. S.] 534, 552, 11 L. Ed. 714).

The "fines," "penalties," and "forfeitures" contemplated by Code Cr. Proc. § 332, providing that all fines and penalties imposed and all forfeitures incurred in any county shall be paid into the treasury to the support of common schools are all pecuniary; moneys which are paid into the treasury and placed in the school fund and altogether they make a single class; moneys recovered by some sort of punishment, and not as damages by way of compensation or reparation. State v. Rose, 97 Pac. 788, 789, 78 Kan. 600.

Recovering on forfeited bail bond

A claim of the United States on a forfeited recognizance for bail in a criminal case is a "penalty" or a "forfeiture," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 571, 30 Stat. 560, which provides that debts due the United States as a penalty or forfeiture shall not be allowed in bankruptcy, except as to the pecuniary loss actually sustained. In re Caponigri, 193 Fed. 291, 292.

Revocation of license

A proceeding, authorized by Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, §§ 9a, 9b, 9c, 9f, 9g, for the revocation by the Comptroller of Public Accounts of liquor licenses for violations of the law by liquor dealers is not a suit by the state for a "forfeiture" or "penalty," within Const. art. 5, § 8, conferring on the district court exclusive jurisdiction of such suits; for, though an official act may be judicial as involving the exercise of discretion and judgment, yet, when discretion is conferred on an executive officer in the discharge of administrative or executive duties, the acts of the officer are not judicial. Baldacchi v. Goodlet (Tex.) 145 S. W. 325, 328.

The striking of the names of delinquent corporations and the notation by the Secretary of State that they were dissolved for failure to pay license fees under an act of 1907 (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715) and an act of 1909, extra session (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715a), as amended by Acts 1911, c. 41, and section 3715d, is not a "forfeiture of a franchise or charter," within Const. art. 12, § 3, which prohibits the Legislature from remitting the forfeiture of any corporate franchise or charter. State ex rel. Preston Mill Co. v. Howell, 121 Pac. 861, 863, 67 Wash. 377.

As self-executory

Where the statutes use the word "forfeit" or "forfeiture," they have usually been constructed to mean cause of forfeiture; and some proceeding or action must be had to effect it. Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632, 636.

Under a statute making it an offense to carry concealed weapons, and providing that all concealed weapons taken from persons violating the statute shall be "forfeited" to the county, a concealed weapon taken from a person is forfeited by the taking, and without conviction of the offense of carrying a concealed weapon. McConathy v. Deck, 83 Pac. 135, 136, 34 Colo. 461.

FORFEITED RECOGNIZANCE

Claim on as penalty, see Penalty.

FORGE

So-called machined forgings, being such as in addition to the forging process have been subjected to a machining process wholly or partly complete, are not within the provision in the Tariff Act for "forgings * * * of whatever degree or stage of manufacture." Thomas Prosser & Son v. United States, 154 Fed. 721, 723. See, also, Saltonstall v. Wiebusch Hilger, 15 Sup. Ct. 476, 477, 156 U. S. 601, 39 L. Ed. 549.

FORGE (In Criminal Law)

The words "forged" and "counterfeited," as used in the statute creating the offense of passing "forged, counterfeited or falsely altered" instruments, are synonymous, and the indictment may describe the instruments as "forged and counterfeited." Hobbs v. State, 9 Mo. 855.

FORGERY

Raising a check as, see Raise.
See, also, False Entry.

Forgery was a common-law misdemeanor, and was defined as the fraudulent making or altering of a writing to another's prejudice. State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1098, 1 Boyce, 135; Smith v. Markland, 72 Atl. 1047, 1049, 223 Pa. 605, 132 Am. St. Rep. 747.

"Forgery" is "a false making; a making malò animo, of any written instrument for the purpose of fraud and deceit." Biddeford Nat. Bank v. Hill, 66 Atl. 721, 722, 723, 102 Me. 346, 120 Am. St. Rep. 499 (citing State v. Shurtliff, 18 Me. 368; Commonwealth v. Foster, 114 Mass. 320, 19 Am. Rep. 353).

"Forgery" at common law was but a common-law cheat, or attempt to cheat, set off from the rest and called by a separate name because of its special heinousness. Williams v. Territory, 108 Pac. 243, 244, 13 Ariz. 27, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032 (quoting 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 148).

The essential ingredients of forgery are the making of some instrument, a fraudulent intent, and liability to injure another if the writing is genuine. People v. Collins, 99 Pac. 1109, 9 Cal. App. 622; People v. McPherson, 91 Pac. 1098, 1099, 6 Cal. App. 266; People v. Johnson, 93 Pac. 1042, 7 Cal. App. 127 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Munroe, 35 Pac. 326, 100 Cal. 664, 24 L. R. A. 33, 38 Am. St. Rep. 323).

To constitute "forgery" there must be a false writing or alteration of an instrument, the instrument as made must be apparently capable of defrauding, and there must be an intent to defraud. Goodman v. People, 81 N. E. 830, 831, 228 Ill. 154. Cr. Code, § 105 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 38), adopting in substance this definition of forgery, extends the offense to instruments unknown to the common law and abolishes the distinction between making an instrument with intent to prejudice and uttering and passing the same as true, and makes one who is guilty either of forging or uttering, or passing a forged instrument, guilty of forgery. One falsely representing to the maker of a note the loss thereof, and inducing him to execute a new note bearing the date of the original, and then passing the new note as the original, with intent to defraud, is not guilty of forgery. People v. Pfeiffer, 90 N. E. 680, 682, 243 Ill. 200, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138, 17 Ann. Cas. 703.

To constitute a forgery, there must be a false making or other alteration of a written instrument; the intent must be fraudulent, and the instrument such as can effect a fraud. State v. Sturgeon, 53 South. 703, 705, 127 La. 459.

To constitute forgery, the instrument must be uttered or published as true or genuine, accused must know that the instrument is forged or counterfeited, and he must entertain the intent to defraud the person to whom it is uttered. State v. Webster, 70 S. E. 422, 423, 88 S. C. 56, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

To be the subject of forgery at common law, a writing must be false, and in such form as to be the means of defrauding another, and which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another's liability. Pen. Code, § 514, subd. 3, providing that any person who shall utter a writing purporting to have been written or signed by another, which writing the person uttering it knows to be false, forged, or counterfeited, and by the uttering of which the opinion, conduct, interests, or rights of the person purporting to have signed it shall be misrepresented or injuriously affected, shall be guilty of "forgery," makes three component parts of the crime of "forgery": (1) The uttering of a forged or false writing, (2) the knowledge of its falsity, and (3) the misrepresentation by the false writing of the sentiments, opinions, conduct, or rights of another person. An indictment which alleged that defendant feloniously uttered a false and forged letter purporting to have been written by an officer of a corporation introducing defendant as a friend of the management of the corporation, and stating that favors shown him would be duly appreciated by it and the writer, and that defendant knew said letter was false, did not charge forgery at common law, but was valid under the statute, though the indictment did not allege that the person whose name was forged had been injured, or that defendant was guilty of an intent to defraud. People v. Abeel, 91 N. Y. Supp. 699, 700, 703, 45 Misc. Rep. 86.

Under the statute (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2442) declaring that one who sells, exchanges, or delivers for any consideration any forged note, etc., knowing the same to be forged, with intent to have the same uttered or passed, or who offers any such note for sale, exchange, or delivery for any consideration, with the like knowledge and intent, or who receives any such note on a sale, exchange, or delivery for any consideration, with the like knowledge and intent, is guilty of "forgery," the crime may be consummated: First, by a person actually selling, exchanging, or delivering for a consideration a forged instrument; second, by offering any such note or other instrument for sale, exchange, or delivery for a consideration; third, by receiving any such note or other instrument on a sale, exchange, or delivery for a consideration. The gist of the offense is the sale, exchange, or delivery of the instrument with the knowledge that it is a forged instrument, and with the intent to cheat and defraud. Connella v. Territory, 86 Pac. 72, 73, 18 Okl. 365.

Pen. Code, § 470, makes any person guilty of "forgery" who, with intent to defraud, signs another's name to a lease, etc., knowing he has no authority to do so, or utters, the knowledge that it is a forged instrument, as true with intent to injure another, and section 115 makes every person guilty of felony who knowingly procures or offers any forged instrument to be recorded. An information alleged that accused willfully, fraudulently, etc., made and forged a lease, which was set out, and afterwards, knowing the instrument to be forged, and with intent to defraud, willfully and fraudulently uttered, published, and passed such instrument as true by offering it for record by the county recorder and having it recorded. Held, that the information only charged an offense under section 470, and not under section 115, the allegations as to the manner in which the lease was published being of evidential facts which may be disregarded as surplusage. People v. Driggs, 108 Pac. 62, 63, 12 Cal. App. 240.

An indictment which charges the defendant with having feloniously and falsely made and forged and uttered a certain affidavit purporting to be the affidavit of a person named, a pretended settler on unsurveyed public lands, and which sets out the affidavit, in which it is stated that affiant is such settler, has made improvements, etc., and then charges that it was so made by defendant with intent to file the same in the office of a Surveyor General of the United States to be used as a basis for letting a contract for surveying said lands described therein, and with the further intent that it should be transmitted to the General Land Office for the purpose of obtaining the approval of and payment for said survey, charges an offense of forging a writing for the purpose of obtaining, or enabling others to obtain, money from the United States. Meldrum v. United States, 151 Fed. 177, 179, 80 C. C. A. 545, 10 Ann. Cas. 324.

An information alleging that accused forged, counterfeited, and falsely made a note purporting to be the act of a third person named, by which a pecuniary obligation for the payment of a specified sum by the third person to accused or order was purported to be created, which forged, counterfeited, and falsely made instrument was of the tenor following, followed by a promissory note with intent to defraud, charges forgery of a pecuniary obligation of another, punishable by Rev. St. 1899, § 2009 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1341]. State v. Paul, 102 S. W. 657, 203 Mo. 681.

Pen. Code, § 509, provides that a person is guilty of forgery in the first degree who, with intent to defraud, forges a deed or other instrument purporting to be the act of another, by which any right or interest in property is or purports to be transferred, conveyed, or in any way charged or effected. Where an indictment charged the forgery of a deed, it was not demurrable for failure to allege the particular manner in which the forgery was committed, whether by pen, pencil, or printing or by falsely making or counterfeiting any of the various signatures, or altering, erasing, or piecing together parts of genuine instruments. People v. Hoyt, 130 N. Y. Supp. 505, 508, 145 App. Div. 695.

Alteration, erasure, or addition

"Forgery" is the false and fraudulent making or altering of an instrument which would, if genuine, apparently impose a legal liability on another or change his legal liability to his prejudice." The figures in a check following the words denoting the sum called for are not a material part of the instrument; the words being controlling in determining its legal effect. State v. Lotono, 58 S. E. 621, 622, 62 W. Va. 310.

Any material alteration in an instrument evidencing a pecuniary liability is a "forgery," which the maker is not bound to anticipate and guard against by making such alteration difficult or impossible. Lanier v. Clarke (Tex.) 133 S. W. 1093, 1094.

Changing a writing from a nonnegotiable instrument into a negotiable note is such a material alteration as constitutes forgery, where done with a criminal intent. State v. Mitton, 96 Pac. 926, 929, 37 Mont. 366, 127 Am. St. Rep. 732.

Making an alteration or erasure in any material part of a true instrument whereby another may be defrauded is a "forgery" within Ky. St. 1903, § 1185, and it is not required that the whole instrument shall be false or fictitious. Commonwealth v. Walls (Ky.) 86 S. W. 684, 685.

Under Code Cr. Proc. 1911, art. 925, which denounces as forgery the alteration, without lawful authority, and with intent to injure or defraud, of an instrument in writing, etc., the raising of the figures on a voucher check would increase the pecuniary liability of its maker, and the person who raised such figures would be guilty of forgery, though he did not sign the receipt on the reverse side of the check. Horn v. State, 150 S. W. 948, 949.

Capability of affecting fraud

The crime of forgery is committed by making an instrument which may be capable of defrauding, although in and of itself it may be innocent, but in conjunction with other facts and circumstances may constitute forgery. Lingafelter v. State, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 800, 807.

Under Pen. Code, § 470, making guilty of forgery one who, with intent to defraud, counterfeits or forges the seal or handwriting of another, the document forged or counterfeited must not only be false and forged, but it must also be of such a character as to be available in law to work the intended injury or fraud. People v. Di Ryana, 96 Pac. 919, 920, 8 Cal. App. 333.

Under Code, § 1106, providing that every person who with intent to injure or defraud shall falsely make any writing purporting to be the act of another, by which any person may be affected or in any way injured in his person or property, shall be guilty of "forgery," an instrument purporting to be signed by a landlord stating that his tenant did not owe him anything, was all right, and had a good crop, was the subject of forgery, since it was one affecting the landlord's right in the crop. France v. State, 35 South. 313, 314, 83 Miss. 281.

A false indorsement of the name of the payee on the back of a warrant on the treasurer of a county made payable to the payee or bearer is a forgery, since after the indorsement the holder may look both to the county and the payee for payment of the warrant. Saucier v. State (Miss.) 59 South. 858, 859.

As crime

See Crime.

False making

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 1168, defining "forgery" as the false making, altering, or counterfeiting of any public record, certificate, return, or attestation, etc., it is the false making of an affidavit which constitutes the offense and not the making of a false affidavit. Territory v. Gutierrez, 84 Pac. 525, 527, 13 N. M. 312, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375.

False statements with genuine signature

Under Pen. Code, arts. 530, 539, 550, making it forgery to make a false instrument in writing without lawful authority in such manner that it would, if true, have created any pecuniary obligation, or transferred any property, or to make a written instrument by filling up over a genuine signature, or to make, alter, forge, or counterfeit any instrument in writing in relation to or affecting lands, a written instrument filled in over the genuine signature of the purported maker, agreeing to give defendant a sum of money for his equity in land for which the signer had sued, and agreeing not to dispossess defendant until the amount named is paid, is an instrument subject to forgery. Wheeler v. State, 137 S. W. 124, 125, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 370.

Fraudulent intent

Under Rev. St. 1870, § 833, defining "forgery" as the false making of certain instruments "with intent to defraud any person," it suffices if the forged instrument does or may prejudice the rights of another. The intent of the forger to profit by the act is not a necessary element of the offense. State v. Laborde, 45 South. 38, 40, 120 La. 136 (citing State v. Anderson, 30 La. Ann. 557; State v. Boasso, 38 La. Ann. 202).

To constitute "forgery" within a statute making every person who, with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, etc., the indictment or information must allege that the alleged wrongful act was done with intent to defraud another. State v. Swensen, 81 Pac. 379, 380, 13 Idaho, 1.

To constitute forgery, a false instrument must be made with intent to injure or defraud, and the injury must be such as affects one pecuniarily, or in relation to his property; but it is not necessary that the accused intended to injure or defraud any particular person, or that any particular person was injured or defrauded by the forgery. Ashmore v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 196, 197.

Imitation of genuine

Filling in a receipt, the signature not being in writing, or made to resemble manuscript, but being printed in bold type, is not "forgery," under White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 533, providing that in order to come within the definition of "forgery" the signature when made otherwise than by writing, must be made to resemble manuscript. Heath v. State, 89 S. W. 1063, 1064, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 49, 122 Am. St. Rep. 783.

Instruments signed under false representations

The procuring of the execution of a document by misrepresentation of its contents, or by misstatement of facts, is not "forgery." State v. Mitten, 92 Pac. 970, 971, 36 Mont. 376.

Where a person did not intend to sign a promissory note, but by fraud and deceit has been tricked into signing an instrument which afterwards proves to be a promissory note, such instrument was a "forgery," although the signature affixed thereto was genuine. Biddeford Nat. Bank v. Hill, 66 Atl. 721, 722, 102 Me. 346, 120 Am. St. Rep. 499.

Kind of instrument

A false entry made in a public record with intent to deceive and defraud is a "forgery." State v. Zimmerman, 60 S. E. 680, 682, 79 S. C. 289.

A bill of lading, purporting to be issued by the agent of a railroad company and to evidence a consignment of goods, is the subject of "forgery" within Pen. Code 1895, art. 530, making one guilty of forgery who, without lawful authority and with intent to injure or defraud, makes a false instrument in writing, purporting to be the act of another, in such manner that the false instrument, if true, would have created, increased, diminished, etc., any pecuniary obligation or trans-red or affected property. Fischl v. State, 11 S. W. 410, 411, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes a "writing obligatory" or "instrument in writing" within the meaning of Turns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining "forgery." State v. Hazzard, 80 N. E. 149, 150, 38 Ind. 163.

Legal efficacy of instrument

"Forgery" is the false making or material alteration of any writing which, if genuine, is of legal efficacy, or the foundation of legal liability, and, if the writing is manifestly void, it is not the subject of forgery. State v. Floyd, 81 N. E. 1153, 1154, 169 Ind. 36 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 523; 19 Cyc. 370).

"Legal forgery cannot be made out by imputing a possible, or even actual, ignorance of the law to the person intended to be defrauded. However dark may be the moral hue of a transaction, courts of justice can only act upon a legal crime, upon criminal reaches of perfect legal operation." Pearson v. Commonwealth, 78 S. W. 1128, 1129, 17 Ky. 731 (quoting People v. Shall [N. Y.] Cow. 778).

To constitute "forgery," under the English or common-law definition, the instrument must be such that, if genuine, it would be apparently of some legal efficacy. Huckley v. State, 78 S. W. 942, 944, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 77, 108 Am. St. Rep. 975. Thus under a statute providing that a person who with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits a county order or request for the payment of money, is guilty of forgery, it is not forgery to issue false "errors" certificates which are of no apparent legal validity because lacking the court seal required by law. Ex parte Farrell, 92 Pac. 35, 788, 36 Mont. 254. But it is no defense to a prosecution for forgery that the note forged does not bear a revenue stamp, and it is no defense that the one whose signature was forged was a married woman, where the note does not show that fact. King v. State, 57 S. W. 840, 842, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 108, 96 Am. St. Rep. 792 (citing 2 Bish. Cr. Law, p. 523).

To be the subject of "forgery," the instrument on its face must, if it were genuine, be of some apparent legal efficacy for injury to another, and, if on its face it is entirely valueless and of no binding force or effect for any purpose of harm, liability, or injury to any one, it cannot be the subject of forgery. An instrument alleged to have been forged was described as a lease, but no length of time was fixed for it to run, and no consideration therefor was expressed. It recited that it was for "—— months," and provided that "on leaving the order for said goods —— dollars on the delivery of the same —— dollars, and every week thereafter the sum of —— dollars," etc. It purported to be for the rent of household goods and jewelry, which were nowhere set forth or included in the covenants or agreements contained in the instrument. It was also silent as to any mortgage debt, and while it referred to household furniture, wearing apparel, carpets, etc., there was nothing to identify the same. The instrument was void on its face either as a lease, chattel mortgage, or assignment, and was not the subject of "forgery." State v. Cordray, 98 S. W. 1, 2, 200 Mo. 29, 9 Ann. Cas. 1110.

Delivery of the instrument is unnecessary; the elements of the offense being false making or alteration of a written instrument, apparently valid, with fraudulent intent to use it to another's injury, and so it is immaterial to guilt of forging a bond to stay judgment that it was not filed with the clerk, as required by statute. Holloway v. State, 118 S. W. 256, 257, 90 Ark. 123.

Under Code, § 4853, making it forgery to falsely make "any instrument in writing being or purporting to be the act of another by which any pecuniary demand or obligation * * * is or purports to be created," it is not necessary that there should have been a resolution by school officers directing the issuance of a school order to render the making of a false order forgery. State v. Blodgett, 121 N. W. 685, 687, 148 Iowa, 578, 21 Ann. Cas. 231.

Purport to be act of another

A "forgery" is "the false making of an instrument which purports to be that which it is not." A mortgage satisfaction which purports to be executed and acknowledged as the personal act of the person holding the mortgage, but which is executed and acknowledged by another person, is a "forgery." People v. Shanley, 117 N. Y. Supp. 845, 852, 182 App. Div. 821 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Filkin, 82 N. Y. Supp. 15, 88 App. Div. 589).

Signing fictitious name

By the express provisions of Pen. Code, § 470, "forgery" may be committed by signing the name of a fictitious, as well as of a real, person to the instruments therein enumerated. People v. Jones, 106 Pac. 724, 725, 12 Cal. App. 129.

The essential elements of the crime of "forgery" are: First, a false making of some instrument in writing; second, a fraudulent intent; third, an instrument capable apparently of effecting a fraud. Thus where for the purpose of evading the law, application for purchase of state school lands is made in the name of R., a fictitious person, and a certificate of sale is issued, under B. & C.

Comp. § 3306, which by section 3309 may be assigned by an instrument executed in the same manner as a deed, an instrument signed in the name of R., reciting issuance of the certificate of the sale and assigning and transferring to K. all the rights, title, and interest of R. in and to the land and authorizing the state land board to execute to K. a deed of the land, is a deed within section 1858, declaring a penalty if any person shall with intent to defraud another forge any deed. State v. Kelliher, 88 Pac. 867, 869, 49 Or. 77.

Similarity of names

To constitute "forgery" the name signed must be that of some other person than he who executed the instrument, though it may be a person of the same name, if, by signing that name, he intends to defraud. It is not forgery to sign one's own name. Murphy v. State, 93 S. W. 543, 544, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 488.

Where there are two persons of the same name and one of them signs that name to a note with the intent that the note may be used in trade as the note of the other, the act is "forgery." One who signs his name to an instrument, though it be identical with the name of another, is guilty of "forgery," if the intent be to have it received as the instrument of such other person, and the instrument may be of legal efficacy. Edwards v. State, 108 S. W. 673, 674, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 50, 126 Am. St. Rep. 767 (citing Barfield v. State, 29 Ga. 127, 74 Am. Dec. 49).

Where a draft intended for one person wrongfully comes into the hands of another person of the same name, who indorses his name thereon and receives the proceeds from an innocent third party, such an indorsement is a forgery. Thomas v. First Nat. Bank of Gulfport, 58 South. 478, 480, 101 Miss. 500, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 355.

Uttering forged papers

The offense defined in Crimes Act, § 133 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2126), providing that every person who shall sell, exchange, or deliver, or offer to sell, exchange, or deliver, for any consideration, any falsely altered or forged writing, knowing it to be forged, with the intention to have it uttered or passed, shall be guilty of forgery, is not the uttering or passing of forged paper, but is rather the procuring of another to pass a forged paper in the manner and for the purpose indicated. An information which charges the accused with the transfer and delivery of a forged promissory note to a bank, knowing it to be false and forged, with the intent to defraud the bank, and that it was transferred and delivered with the intention to have it uttered and passed to the bank, is sufficient, under Crimes Act, § 134 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2127), providing that every person who with intent to defraud shall utter or publish any forged writing, knowing it to be forged, shall be adjudged guilty of forgery. State v. Calhoun, 88 Pac. 1079, 1080, 75 Kan. 259.

To constitute forgery of a check, it is sufficient that the accused cashes the check knowing it to be forged, and not essential that the forgery on the check be his handiwork. Moulton v. State (Ark.) 152 S. W. 133, 133.

In a criminal prosecution on two counts for forgery and uttering a forged deed, where the deed was proved to be a forgery, and the uttering by defendant was conceded, under Pen. Code, § 521, the uttering constitutes forgery in the same degree as though forged by defendant, and it is immaterial under which count defendant was convicted. People v. Browne, 108 N. Y. Supp. 903, 905, 118 App. Div. 793.

The offenses of "forgery" and that of "uttering a forged instrument" are distinct offenses. State v. Blodgett, 121 N. W. 688, 686, 143 Iowa, 578, 21 Ann. Cas. 231.

FORGERY IN THE FIRST DEGREE

Where a warrant issued by a school district drawn on the county treasurer, directing the payment of a certain sum of money out of the teacher's fund for services rendered as teacher, was altered by inserting a figure therein, the offense came within Rev. St. 1899, § 1995 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1336], providing that every person who shall falsely make, alter, forge, etc., any warrant, order, bill, etc., issued or purporting to have been issued under the authority of a state, or of any county, township, school district, or municipal corporation therein, by virtue of any law of the state by which payment of any money absolutely or upon a contingency shall be promised, with intent to defraud the state, county, township, city, school district, or other municipal corporation, or any public officer, or other person, shall be adjudged guilty of forgery in the first degree; section 978 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 4491], making it the duty of a school district to draw a warrant on the county treasurer in favor of any party to whom the district has become legally indebted as teacher to be paid out of any money in the appropriated funds in the hands of the county treasurer. State v. Tyree, 100 S. W. 645, 647, 201 Mo. 574.

FORGERY IN THE SECOND DEGREE

Under Cr. Code 1896, § 4720, providing that a person who, with intent to injure or defraud, falsely makes, alters, forges, counterfeits, etc., any receipt for the payment of money or any instrument of writing bearing or purporting to be the act of another, shall be guilty of "forgery in the second degree," a receipt for the payment of taxes is a proper subject of forgery. Sims v. State, 46 South. 493, 494, 155 Ala. 96.

The expression "forge" is defined in Pen. Code, § 520, as the false making or counterfeiting of the signature of a party or witness or the placing or connecting together, with intent to defraud, different parts of several genuine instruments. One who, knowing that the name of the payee of a check appearing on the back thereof had been forged, deposited the same in his bank for collection and had the proceeds credited to his private account, is guilty of "forgery" in the second degree, under Pen. Code, §§ 511, 520, 521, declaring that a person who utters a forged instrument by which an obligation has been transferred, etc., shall be guilty of forgery in the second degree, etc. People v. Mingey, 103 N. Y. Supp. 627, 629, 118 App. Div. 652.

FORGERY IN THE THIRD DEGREE

The essential element of the crime of forgery under Pen. Code, § 515, providing that a person who, with intent to defraud or conceal any misappropriation of money or property, either (1) alters or destroys an account, etc., belonging to the business of a corporation or partnership, or (2) makes a false entry in any such account, or (3) willfully omits to make true entry therein, is guilty of "forgery in the third degree," is the intent to defraud or conceal a larceny or misappropriation of money or property. People v. Brown, 126 N. Y. Supp. 322, 323, 141 App. Div. 638; People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 113 N. Y. Supp. 513, 514, 129 App. Div. 75. The two essentials of this offense are the making of the false entries and the intent in so doing to defraud. The making of false entries in corporate books, through mistake or with a purpose to accomplish by appropriate fictitious entries a proper book-keeping result, or to deceive some one with no purpose of profit either contemplated or possible, is not forgery; but the making of false entries in corporate books with a view to conceal the evidence of a crime already committed or to render its detection impossible or more difficult, or to facilitate the commission of a future crime, or to defraud creditors, present or prospective, stockholders, or any other persons, is a "forgery in the third degree." People v. Hegeman, 107 N. Y. Supp. 261, 266, 57 Misc. Rep. 295. Where it appears that defendant made an entry for the purpose of concealing the wrongful taking of money, it is not necessary for the state to show that he himself took it. People v. Curtiss, 103 N. Y. Supp. 395, 396, 118 App. Div. 259. The omission of a merchant to enter in his account books a sale of merchandise, though in failing circumstances and shortly before being adjudicated a bankrupt in involuntary proceedings, and though the sale was for less than the goods cost him, does not constitute forgery in the third degree, within Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 889, making it such crime for one, with intent to defraud or conceal any larceny or misappropriation, willfully to omit to make true entry of any material particular in any book of accounts kept by him or under his direction; it being essential that such person be burdened with the duty of keeping such book of accounts, or be one under whose direction it shall be done, and merchants not being required by law to keep books of account. People ex rel. Isaacson v. Fallon, 127 N. Y. Supp. 710, 711, 69 Misc. Rep. 550; Id., 96 N. E. 93, 97, 202 N. Y. 458.

Under Pen. Code, § 515, declaring guilty of "forgery in the third degree" one who, with intent to defraud, alters or makes a false entry in an account appertaining to the business of a corporation, it is not necessary that by the entry a pecuniary demand or obligation be or purport to be created, increased, discharged, or affected. People v. Herzog, 93 N. Y. Supp. 357, 360, 47 Misc. Rep. 50.

FORGERY IN THE FOURTH DEGREE

One who borrows money at a bank by giving, as security therefor, a note signed by himself, and on which he forged the names of several comakers, does not commit "forgery in the fourth degree" under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2013 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1342), providing that every person who shall sell, exchange, deliver, for any consideration, any falsely altered, forged, or counterfeited instrument in writing knowing the same to be forged, with intent to have the same uttered or passed, shall be guilty, etc. State v. Standifer, 108 S. W. 17, 19, 209 Mo. 264.

FORGIVENESS

"Forgiveness" does not fully express the meaning of "condonation" in the law of divorce. A party may forgive in the sense of not meaning to bear ill will or not seeking to punish without at all meaning to restore to the original position. "Condonation" restores equality before the law. Where a wife condones the adultery of her husband, he can be divorced from her for a similar offense subsequently committed by her. Talley v. Talley, 64 Atl. 523, 524, 215 Pa. 281.

FORGOTTEN

The word "forgotten," within the rule relating to "forgotten" inventions, means something more than simply out of mind; i. e., not consciously present in the mind at all times. Buser v. Novelty Tufting Mach. Co., 151 Fed. 478, 496, 81 C. C. A. 18.

FORM

See Due Form; Matters of Form; Same Form; Short Form; Usual Form.

The word "compactness" means the state or quality of being compact; firmness; close union of parts. While the word "form" refers to the external shape or configuration of a body; the figure as defined by lines and surfaces. In re Sherill, 81 N. E. 124, 139, 188

N. Y. 185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 841 (citing Cent. Dict).

Substance distinguished

The word "form" is used, in referring to laws and legal proceedings, as the antithesis of "substance," and Civ. Code, art. 3543, in proscribing against "informalities" in public sales, refers to irregularities and illegalities which do not reach matters that are of the essence of those contracts, or prejudicially affect the substantial rights of parties who may be interested therein. Thibodeaux v. Thibodeaux, 36 South. 800, 802, 112 La. 906.

FORM OF THE STATUTE

See Contrary to the Form of the Statute.

FORMAL DEFECT

The use of the name of a person and a name under which he is commonly known in an indictment may be amended as a "formal defect," although the defect was not "apparent on the face of the indictment" as expressed in Acts 1870, No. 5, § 1. State v. Arnold, 50 Vt. 731, 733.

FORMAL PARTIES

In a suit by a stockholder of a corporation on behalf of himself and all other stockholders to recover secret profits made by the promoters, the corporation is a "formal defendant." Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 61 Atl. 1061, 1064, 70 N. J. Eq. 616.

FORMALITY

See Informality.

FORMATION

Gen. St. 1901, §§ 1251, 1252, entitled "An act providing for the formation of telephone companies," is not a violation of Const. art. 2, § 16, requiring the subject of an act to be expressed in the title; the word "formation" contemplating not only the right to incorporate, but all rights extending to a corporation so incorporated to engage in the telephone business. City of Wichita v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 78 Pac. 886, 887, 70 Kan. 441.

FORMED

In Const. art. 11, § 3, providing that no new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population less than 4,000, nor shall a new county be "formed" containing a population of less than 2,000, the word "formed" means finally formed. State ex rel. Chehalis County v. Superior Court, Pacific County, 92 Pac. 345, 347, 47 Wash. 453.

In section 2330, Rev. Codes 1905, relating to the division of counties, the word "upon" means after, or following, and the section makes the qualifying of the commissioners a condition precedent to clothing the new county with legal existence. The word "formed" means and relates only to the area of the county and has no reference to county equipped with means of government and therefore the voters are legal voters at primary held before the appointment of the commissioners. Murray v. Davis, 128 N. W. 305, 306, 21 N. D. 64; Willis v. Weatherwa, 128 N. W. 307, 21 N. D. 69.

The words "created" and "formed," as used in Sess. Laws 1909, c. 19, by which a new county of a designated name was created and formed out of described territory forming part of an existing county, and which provided that after the county should have organized it should constitute a portion of a judicial district and be attached to the existing county for the purposes of legislative representation, are limited in their meaning by the other provisions of the act, and do not effect an immediate division of the existing county, but the act is in the nature of an enabling act under which a new county may be constitutionally formed. Board of Com'rs of Big Horn County v. Woods, 10 Pac. 923, 926, 18 Wyo. 316.

FORMALDEHYDE

"Formaldehyde" is an organic compound, product of alcohol. An ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk containing a preservative is within the power to pass ordinances necessary or reasonably appearing to be necessary for the public health, though a preservative like formaldehyde, not injurious to the health, may be used. City of St. Louis v. Schuler, 89 S. W. 621, 624, 190 Mo. 524, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 928.

FORMER

The words "former wife," in Pen. Code 1895, art. 344, providing that any person having a "former wife" living who shall marry another shall be punished, etc., are used in contradistinction to the person then being taken to wife, and a man having a wife living, who marries another woman, violates the statute. Burton v. State, 101 S. W. 224, 227, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 196.

FORMER ACQUITTAL

See, also, Autrefois Acquit.

A plea of "former acquittal" or former conviction must be upon a prosecution for the identical act or crime. Unless the first indictment was such as the prisoner might have been convicted upon by proof of the facts contained in the second indictment, an acquittal on the first can be no bar to the second. Thus where one has been convicted of assault and battery with intent to kill, and his victim thereafter dies, and he is indicted for murder, he cannot plead former jeopardy as a defense. Commonwealth v. Ramunno, 68 Atl. 184, 219 Pa. 204, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209, 123 Am. St. Rep. 653, 12 Ann. Cas. 818.

The test of whether a plea of "former acquittal" is a good bar depends upon whether the evidence to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to secure a conviction on the first. Commonwealth v. Shoener, 64 Atl. 890, 892, 216 Pa. 71.

FORMER ADJUDICATION

See, also, Res Adjudicata.

For a judgment to constitute a former adjudication, it must appear that the matter now in dispute was in that case put in issue and tried. Squaw Creek Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Turney, 138 S. W. 12, 17, 235 Mo. 80.

FORMER CONVICTION

The term "former conviction," as used in criminal law, has reference to a conviction in a court having jurisdiction to try the offender for the particular offense and does not include the conviction, by a court-martial of a commissioned officer in the national guard of the state, of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and prejudicial to military discipline, under which he was sentenced to dismissal from the service, so as to bar a subsequent indictment for grand larceny founded on the same transactions. People v. Wendel, 112 N. Y. Supp. 301, 302, 99 Misc. Rep. 354.

An information for opening a theater on Sunday alleging that accused theretofore had on designated dates been tried and convicted of offenses of like character, charges "former convictions," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 1014, authorizing increased punishment on a second and third conviction for the "same offense"; the words "same offense" not meaning the identical offense, but one of like character. Muckenfuss v. State, 117 S. W. 553, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 216.

FORMER JEOPARDY

See Autrefois Acquit; Jeopardy (In Criminal Law).

FORMER OWNER

The term "former owner," in the statute as to the redemption of land sold for taxes, is the owner in whose name the land had been returned delinquent. Harvey v. Hoffman, 62 S. E. 371, 372, 108 Va. 626.

FORMER SPOUSE

A woman, whose husband had secured a divorce from her, was not granted by such decree a right to marry; but she did so while such divorced husband was living, he also having married again. Held, that such divorced husband was the "former spouse" of the woman, within the meaning of a statute making it a felony for one to marry while having a former spouse living. Barfield v. Barfield, 35 South. 884, 885, 139 Ala. 290.

FORMERLY

In an action for injuries to land by the obstruction of a water course by a fill provided with insufficient openings, the court charged that if the jury believed that defendant, when it built its railroad over the lands, constructed its roadbed so as to dam and hold the water back, and without sufficient openings to allow the water flowing on the land to pass off in times of ordinary rainfall to the extent "it formerly did," to the injury of the land, and by reason thereof the market value of the land had diminished to plaintiff's damage, the jury should find for plaintiff, and in another instruction charged that, if they believed from the evidence that plaintiff had suffered no injury and damage except such as was necessarily incident to the proper construction of the railroad, they should find for defendant. Held, that the word "formerly" in the first instruction when read in connection with the second should be construed as meaning before the defendant built its road, and therefore the instruction was not erroneous since the second instruction excluded all injuries except those which occurred from the improper construction of the railroad. Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Wiar, 138 S. W. 255, 257, 144 Ky. 206.

FORNICATION

See Did Commit Fornication.

"Fornication" at common law was unlawful sexual intercourse between a man, either married or single, and an unmarried woman, and was not punishable unless accompanied by such circumstances as per se constituted a misdemeanor. Richey v. State, 87 N. E. 1032, 1033, 172 Ind. 134, 139 Am. St. Rep. 362, 19 Ann. Cas. 654.

"Fornication" alone is not a criminal offense in this state." State v. Clemenson, 99 N. W. 139, 140, 123 Iowa, 524.

"Fornication" is sexual intercourse between a man, married or single, and an unmarried woman. Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2090, declaring any female frequenting houses of ill fame, or associating with unchaste women, or committing fornication for hire, a prostitute, and authorizing punishment, an indictment charging a female, among other acts, with committing fornication for hire, defines an offense, though it does not set out the particular acts constituting the offense. Stanton v. State, 60 N. E. 999, 1000, 27 Ind. App. 105.

"The word 'fornication' is a word of long settled meaning and implies an act with an unmarried woman; so, where the statute simply makes 'fornication' a misdemeanor, the use of the word as descriptive of the act would seem to be sufficient." State v. Sharp, 66 Atl. 926, 927, 75 N. J. Law, 201.

A single act of sexual intercourse between a man and an unmarried woman does not constitute the crime of "fornication" within the meaning of Gen. St. 1894, § 6557, which provides that if "any man and single woman cohabit together they shall be both guilty of fornication"; the word "cohabit" meaning to live and dwell together. State v. Williams, 102 N. W. 722, 94 Minn. 319.

The word "fornication" implies and expresses the act of sexual intercourse, and in a criminal prosecution "unlawful intercourse" must be held equivalent thereto, though neither the word "sexual" nor the word "carnal" is used. United States v. Griego, 72 Pac. 20, 21, 11 N. M. 392.

The uniform construction put upon Rev. 1905, § 3350, making the "fornication and adultery" of the husband ground for divorce, is that to constitute the offense the misconduct must be habitual. Prendergast v. Prendergast, 59 S. E. 692, 146 N. C. 225.

Under Cr. Code 1902, §§ 290, 292, defining "fornication" as intercourse with "each other," and providing that any person guilty of it shall be liable to indictment, does not prevent indictment of either party to the crime separately. State v. Sauls, 50 S. E. 17, 18, 70 S. C. 393.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 357, defining "fornication" as "the living together and carnal intercourse with each other, or habitual carnal intercourse with each other without living together, of a man and woman, both being unmarried," an information should follow the statutory definition, and one merely charging habitual carnal intercourse was insufficient. Cannedy v. State, 125 S. W. 31, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 184.

Other sexual offenses distinguished

In all cases where one of the parties to the act of criminal intercourse is married and the other is not it is "adultery" in the married party and "fornication" in the unmarried party. State v. Chafin, 103 Pac. 143, 144, 80 Kan. 653.

The crime of "fornication" necessarily involves the idea of consent of both parties; and, while the female's consent in some instances may be procured by force to a certain degree, where force was used in the inception of the offense, it must at least be shown that consent was finally induced thereby. Nephew v. State, 63 S. E. 930, 931, 5 Ga. App. 841.

"Rape" is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished forcibly, and without the consent of the female. If it be with her consent, though some coercion is used to procure consent, and the intercourse is illegal, the crime is "adultery" or "fornication," as the case may be. The law recognizes no intermediate degree of force in the accomplishment of an illegal act of sexual intercourse which is sufficient to accomplish the act contrary to the consent of the female, and yet not constitute the crime of rape. Whidby v. State, 49 S. E. 811, 121 Ga. 588 (citing Mathews v.

State, 29 S. E. 424, 101 Ga. 547; Taylor v. State, 35 S. E. 161 [6], 110 Ga. 150).

FORTH

See Set Forth.

FORTHCOMING BOND

A supersedeas bond, given by a defendant to obtain possession of property seized for sale in a mortgage foreclosure conditioned that he would hold the property "subject to the proper order and decree that may be entered finally in said cause," was a "forthcoming bond," and the obligors were liable thereon for the value of the property; it having been destroyed by fire pending the appeal which resulted in an affirmance of the foreclosure decree. Perry v. Tacoma Mill Co., 152 Fed. 115, 119, 120, 81 C. C. A. 333 (citing Omaha Hotel Co. v. Kountze, 2 Sup. Ct. 911, 107 U. S. 378, 27 L. Ed. 609; Dexter, Horton & Co. v. Sayward, 79 Fed. 237; Mahlman v. Williams, 12 S. W. 335, 89 Ky. 282; Hinkle v. Holmes, 85 Ind. 405).

FORTHWITH

See At Once.

"Forthwith," when used in reference to time, is generally construed to mean without delay. Bottle Min. & Mill Co. v. Kern, 99 Pac. 994, 996, 9 Cal. App. 527.

There is no precise definition, so far as time is concerned, of the words "forthwith" and "immediately"; but the meaning depends on the circumstances of the case and the act to be performed. Lewis v. Curry, 103 Pac. 493, 496, 156 Cal. 93.

Jury Law (Acts 1909, p. 319) § 32, which requires service of a copy of the indictment and jury list in capital felonies "forthwith," is mandatory, and failure to make such service before February 21st, the day accused's case was set for trial, was fatal where the jury was drawn the 19th and the order for service was made that day; "forthwith," a relative term, meaning promptly, with all convenient dispatch, without delay. Halsten v. State, 59 South. 361, 362, 5 Ala. App. 56.

As reasonable time

"Forthwith" does not mean instantaneously, but requires action to be taken within a reasonable time. Lucas v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 109 N. W. 191, 193, 131 Iowa, 689, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1016; Rountt v. Dils, 90 Pac. 67, 69, 40 Colo. 50; Everson v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Limited, of Perth, Scotland, 88 N. E. 653, 660, 202 Mass. 169.

The term "forthwith" does not in all cases mean instantaneously, but may and often does have a relative meaning and may mean all reasonable celerity, or all reasonable dispatch; with reasonable and proper diligence. Thus under Detroit City Charter providing that the tax roll shall be delivered July 1st, and that "forthwith" six days' notice by publication shall be given which shall be a demand for payment, a publication on each of the first seven days of the month, except July 4th, is sufficient. Walker v. City of Detroit, 101 N. W. 809, 810, 138 Mich. 538.

The terms "forthwith," "immediately," etc., as used in contracts, are to be liberally construed, and they do not mean the absolute exclusion of any interval of time, but only that no unreasonable length of time shall intervene before performance. Claus-Shear Co. v. E. Lee Hardware House, 53 S. E. 433, 434, 140 N. C. 552, 6 Ann. Cas. 243.

As used in the unloading clause of a bill of lading, the word "forthwith" has been held to mean no more than without unreasonable delay. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 88, 89.

In insurance

One agreeing to procure "forthwith" insurance on the building of another is entitled, before becoming liable for a breach, to a reasonable time within which to procure insurance. And where one agreed to procure "forthwith" insurance on the building of another, and the building on the morning of the second day thereafter was destroyed by fire, and no insurance had been procured, the question whether the delay in procuring the insurance was reasonable or not was for the jury. Rainer v. Schulte, 118 N. W. 396, 397, 133 Wis. 130.

"The phrases 'immediate notice,' 'notice forthwith,' 'as soon as possible,' 'as soon as practicable,' used in policies of guaranty insurance providing that notice of loss shall be given to the insurer by the insured within a certain designated time, have practically the same meaning, to wit, that the insurer shall, with all promptitude considering the probable amount of the loss, and the probability of the 'risks' endeavoring to escape, give notice to the insurer of the occurrence of the loss." Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of New York v. Western Bank (Ky.) 94 S. W. 3, 5 (quoting and adopting definition in Frost, Guaranty Ins. § 104).

In reference to official duties

The construction generally given by the courts to the word, "forthwith" and "immediately," whether occurring in contracts or statutes, is that the act referred to should be performed within such convenient time as is reasonably requisite, and what is a reasonable time is to be determined by the facts of the particular case in hand. As used in a statute requiring a magistrate before whom one is charged with an offense to proceed "forthwith" to an examination or trial, it means reasonable time, determined by the facts of the case, and a prisoner brought before a magistrate and detained about an hour is not unreasonably restrained, where during that time she refused to submit to the magistrate's custody and by her conduct contributed to the delay by obstructing him in taking proper action. Meyers v. Dunn, 104 S. W. 352, 354, 126 Ky. 548, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881.

"There is no precise definition, so far as time is concerned, of the words 'forthwith' and 'immediately.' In every case the meaning depends upon the circumstances of the case and the act to be performed." St. 1906, p. 23, c. 19, § 3, requiring the Governor "forthwith," on the filing on or before September 15th of the list of corporations delinquent in payment of their license tax, to issue a proclamation that the charters of such domestic corporations and the right of such foreign corporations will be forfeited unless the tax be paid on or before November 30th, and section 4, requiring that the proclamation shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State immediately and the secretary shall cause it to be immediately published in two daily newspapers of the state, is satisfied as to dispatch by the proclamation being issued September 18th and published September 21st. Lewis v. Curry, 103 Pac. 493, 496, 156 Cal. 93.

The requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 3152, that the papers shall "forthwith" be sent to the justice to whom the transfer is made, and the plaintiff shall "forthwith" appear before him, indicate a purpose to have the order made at a time when, in the orderly course of the proceedings, the parties, or the plaintiff, at least, would be supposed to be before the justice, so that both parties would have notice that it was made, and so that on the receipt of the order by the justice to whom the action is transferred, it will be in a condition to be at once tried or further postponed as such latter justice shall determine. De Zur v. Provost, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1018, 99 App. Div. 14.

In service of writs or orders

A mittimus, directing the commitment of a girl to the state industrial school "forthwith," meant that she should be committed "as soon as may be," so that the fact that she was not committed because of a legal quarantine existing at the school when she was taken there by the officer would not require that she be released from custody. In re Edison 82 Atl. 664, 666, 85 Vt. 366.

Under Insolvency Act (St. 1880, p. 83, c. 87) § 7, providing that a copy of the order adjudicating one insolvent and appointing a time and place for a meeting of creditors shall be served "forthwith" by mail on all creditors, proof that the order was mailed four days after its making, but prior to the first publication thereof in a newspaper, and more than 30 days before the time fixed for the creditors' meeting, shows a compliance with the statute; the term "forthwith," like the term "immediate," not being construed as a time immediately succeeding, without an interval. Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 105 Pac. 971, 976, 156 Cal. 657.

As to payment at tax sales

Where bids at a tax sale were made on November 15th, just before the close of the day, and the full consideration was paid on the next day, there was a compliance with Rev. Laws 1905, § 937, that the payment be "immediately" and "forthwith." Minnesota Debenture Co. v. Scott, 119 N. W. 391, 394, 106 Minn. 32.

FORTUITOUS

A "fortuitous event," as defined in Code of 1825, is that which happens by a cause or force which we cannot resist. Lehman, Stern & Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co., 38 South. 873, 874, 115 Ga. 1, 70 L. R. A. 562, 112 Am. St. Rep. 259, 5 Ann. Cas. 818.

A "fortuitous event" is an inevitable accident or a cause beyond human control, irresistible force, which means such an interposition of human agency as from its nature and power is absolutely uncontrollable. Cook & Laurie Contracting Co. v. Denis, 49 South. 1014, 1015, 124 La. 161 (citing Bouvier "Casualty").

FORTUNE TELLER

As disorderly person, see Disorderly Person.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2688, which defines one who practices "fortune telling" to be a vagrant, is constitutional, and extends to the vocation of professing to tell future events in one's life by casting horoscopes, etc., though the principles of astrology be followed. State v. Neitzel, 125 Pac. 939, 69 Wash. 567, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203.

FORWARD

See Regularly Forward.

"To forward," as used in a contract for the shipping of freight with a common carrier, the carrier agreeing "to forward" the freight from the point of shipment to destination, signifies to carry forward rather than to deliver to others for carriage. Fatman v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. (Ohio) 2 Disn. 248, 250 (citing Blossom v. Griffin, 13 N. Y. 569, 571, 67 Am. Dec. 75).

FORWARD MOVEMENT

In ordinary speech the "forward movement" of a car implies that the car was in a state of repose when the movement began. Peterson v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 111 S. W. 37, 42, 211 Mo. 498 (citing Flaherty v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 18, 21, 207 Mo. 318).

FORWARDER

A "forwarding merchant" or "forwarder" is one who ships or sends forward goods for others to their destination by the instrumentality of third persons without himself incurring the liability of a carrier to deliver them, and neither includes a consignor or shipping goods nor a carrier engaged in transporting them. In re Emerson, Marlow & Co., 199 Fed. 95, 98, 117 C. C. A. 635.

FORWARDING AGENT

As person, see Person.

FORWARDING CARRIER

In a bill of lading stipulating that the liability of a forwarding carrier for loss shall cease on delivery to the connecting carrier, and that of a delivering carrier on delivery at the station of delivery, the term "forwarding carrier" applies to all carriers who transport goods to the delivering carrier, and the term "delivering carrier" to the carrier who actually delivers the goods at their destination. Brunk v. Ohio & K. Ry. Co., 105 S. W. 443, 444, 127 Ky. 304.

FORWARDING MERCHANT

A "forwarding merchant" or "forwarder" is one who ships or sends forward goods for others to their destination by the instrumentality of third persons without himself incurring the liability of a carrier to deliver them, and neither includes a consignor shipping goods nor a carrier engaged in transporting them. In re Emerson, Marlow & Co., 199 Fed. 95, 98, 117 C. C. A. 635.

FOUND WITH THE WILL

Where a will makes reference to a sealed letter "found with the will," any sealed letter, or any number of them, setting forth the purposes of the trust, made by anybody at any time after the will was executed and "found with the will," would each fully and accurately answer the reference. Appeal of Bryan, 58 Atl. 748, 749, 77 Conn. 240, 68 L. R. A. 353, 107 Am. St. Rep. 34, 1 Ann. Cas. 393.

FOUNDATION OF ACTION

That petitioner for a writ of partition attaches as an exhibit to the petition a copy of the deed under which he claims title to an undivided interest in the land sought to be partitioned does not make such deed the foundation of an action, within Civ. Code 1895, § 5066, providing that a party in his plea or answer cannot deny a deed which is the foundation of the action, unless he makes affidavit of the truth of such plea or answer at the time of filing it. Webb v. Till, 67 S. E. 1034, 1035, 134 Ga. 383.

FOUNDED ON CONSTITUTION

A seller of a traction engine for use by the buyer in the performance of his contract with the government under the reclamation act (Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093, 32 Stat. 388), who as mortgagee for the price remained the owner with right to possession for the failure of the buyer to pay at maturity the first note for the price, could, on the government taking possession, as authorized by section 7 of the act, of the contractor's machinery and completing the work, sue the government for the value of the use of the engine either on an implied contract to pay therefor, or on its constitutional obligation within the Tucker act (Act March 3, 1887, c. 859, 24 Stat. 505), authorizing actions on claims founded on the Constitution or on contracts, express or implied. United States v. Buffalo Pitts Co., 193 Fed. 905, 908, 114 C. C. A. 119.

FOUNDED UPON A CONTRACT

A claim for damages for breach of contract is one "founded upon a contract," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a, 30 Stat. 562, and is provable in bankruptcy. In re Frederick L. Grant Shoe Co., 130 Fed. 881, 882, 66 C. C. A. 78.

A claim arising out of the conversion by stockbrokers of shares purchased and held by them on a customer's account, charging him with commission and interest, and crediting him with amounts received as margins, is provable under Bankr. Act. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a, as a debt "founded upon an open account, or upon a contract, express or implied." Crawford v. Burke, 25 S. Ct. 9-13, 195 U. S. 178, 49 L. Ed. 147.

FOUNDLING

Under Civ. Code, art. 213, providing that "the foundling whom persons from charity have received and brought up cannot be claimed by its father and mother," a "foundling" must be considered as a child without parents and as standing on the same footing as a child whose parents are dead. Succession of Dupre, 41 South. 324, 325, 116 Ga. 1090.

FOUR

Four successive weeks, see, also, Successive.

Notice to nonresidents, inserted in a weekly newspaper September 14, 21, 28, and October 6, 1899, was published "four consecutive weeks," within the meaning of section 79 of the Code, providing that "the publication must be made four consecutive weeks in some newspaper." Burr v. Finch, 136 N. W. 72, 73, 91 Neb. 417.

2 Wds. & P. 2d Ser.—40

Rev. Codes, § 6521, requiring summons by publication to be published once a week for four successive weeks, and making the service complete on the day of the fourth publication, does not require the publication to cover four full weeks; four publications being sufficient. Smith v. Collis, 112 Pac. 1070, 1071, 42 Mont. 350, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1158.

Gen. St. 1901, § 6346, in force prior to 1909, providing that the county treasurer should offer school land for sale after giving "four weeks' notice thereof" in a newspaper, required that a publication should be made 28 days before the day of sale. Jackson v. Guss, 120 Pac. 353, 354, 86 Kan. 280.

FOURTH

Quarter synonymous, see Quarter.

FOWL

Any useful fowl, see Any.

As animals, see Animals.

All lexicographers give the primary definition of "fowl" as "any bird." "The word 'fowl' and 'bird' have been used interchangeably for all generations." State v. Davis, 61 Atl. 2, 3, 72 N. J. Law, 345.

FRACTION

In a deed describing the property as "all that fraction of land lying east of lot eight (8) and south of the alley in B.'s subdivision in block one (1) of A.'s second addition to the town of E. as platted and recorded in the clerk's office of B. county, and extending east to the street now known as T. street," the word "fraction" does not limit the description to block one (1) where the grantor at the time owned a tract 34 feet and 8 inches wide and 131 feet long, so as to exclude from the conveyance a strip outside of the block of a wedge-shape, 11 feet at one end and 34 feet wide at the other. Lamson v. Village of Elm Creek, 114 N. W. 277, 278, 80 Neb. 369.

FRACTIONAL

Two lots on a plat were "fractional lots," where the irregular south boundary of the plat cuts the end line and the side line of one of the lots, leaving it roughly triangular in shape, and cuts off the corner of the other lot, leaving it in the shape of a parallelogram with one corner lopped off. Miller v. Lavelle, 110 N. W. 421, 422, 130 Wis. 500.

The purpose of the statutory provision that in all cases of addition to or deduction from assessments by the board of equalization, the rate of per cent. of addition or deduction shall be "even and not fractional," is to facilitate the labor of computing the decrease or increase, and hence an increase of 12½ per cent. is authorized. Clark v. Lawrence County, 111 N. W. 558, 21 S. D. 254.

The process by which kapak was manufactured from crude elaterite ore was called "fractional distillation." Elaterite Paint & Mfg. Co. v. S. E. Frost Co., 117 N. W. 388, 390, 105 Minn. 239.

FRACTURE

See Colles' Fracture; Pott's Fracture. Greenstick fracture, see Greenstick Break or Fracture.

"Fracture," as applied to a bone, means a break. Standen v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 63 Atl. 467, 469, 214 Pa. 189, 6 Ann. Cas. 408.

FRAME

Miniature frames not dutiable as articles commonly known as jewelry, see Articles Within Tariff Act.

"Frame," as applied to a building, means wooden. A "frame building" is one constructed with a timber frame covered with boards or shingles, and does not include a wooden building covered with corrugated iron. Olmstead v. People, for Use of Town of Littleton, 91 Pac. 1113, 41 Colo. 32 (quoting and adopting the definition in 19 Cyc. p. 1450).

The word "frame," as used in San Francisco Ordinance No. 31, § 3, prohibiting the erection of "frame buildings" within fire limits, means wooden. Morton v. Wessinger, 113 Pac. 7, 8, 58 Or. 80 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2929).

A contract of sale of "window frames set with glass" embraces the sashes in which the glass is set, and also the frames. Way v. Ryther, 42 N. E. 1128, 165 Mass. 226.

FRAMEWORK

In the act abolishing grade crossings (St. 1906, c. 463), which provides that, where a public way crosses a railroad by an overhead bridge, the framework of the bridge shall be maintained by the railroad and the surface of the bridge by the town, the word "surface" is not employed in its geometrical sense, as signifying a plane, but includes some degree of thickness. It is used in contradistinction to "framework," and is tantamount to the flooring of the bridge considered as a whole. The word "framework," as applied to things built or constructed, means that which furnishes form or strength, or both, and is the antithesis of "surface"; and, in the division of the whole structure of the bridge into these two parts, the word "framework" has some tendency to point out that which constitutes the carrying strength of the bridge, while "surface" relates more nearly to that which in the limits of the carrying strength supports the immediate burden of travel. The word "surface" includes both layers of the flooring, for the repair of which the town is liable. Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. R., 96 N. E. 347, 348, 210 Mass. 229.

Use of franchise, see Use—Used.

A "franchise," according to the definition given by Blackstone, is a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of the subject, and, being derived from the crown, must arise from the king's grant. Corporate franchises in the American states emanate from the government or sovereign power, owe their existence to a grant, or, as at common law, to prescription, which presupposes a grant, and are vested in individuals or a body politic. City of Chicago v. Rothschild & Co., 72 N. E. 698, 699, 212 Ill. 590 (quoting and adopting definition in Chicago City R. Co. v. People ex rel. Story, 73 Ill. 541, 547).

A "franchise" is a special privilege conferred by the government on individuals. Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 406, 160 Ala. 396; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Gaston, 49 South. 412, 160 Ala. 671.

"A 'franchise' is simply a special privilege granted by the state directly or through one of its mandatories." Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 111, 149 Cal. 575.

A "franchise" is a grant or special privilege conferred by the sovereign power of the state. People ex rel. Fitzhenry v. Union Gas & Electric Co., 98 N. E. 768, 771, 254 Ill. 395.

"A 'franchise' is a special privilege emanating from the government by a legislative grant and vested in an individual person or in a body politic or corporate." Leatherwood v. Hill, 89 Pac. 521, 523, 10 Ariz. 243.

"A 'franchise' is a right, privilege, or power of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their will and pleasure, but should be reserved for public control and administration, either by the government directly or by public agents acting under such conditions and regulations as the government may impose in the public interest." Norfolk & P. Belt Line R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 39, 40, 103 Va. 289 [quoting and adopting definition in California v. Cent. P. R. Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. Ed. 150].

A franchise is a grant of right by public authority, the main element of which is, in general, "permission" to do something which otherwise the grantee would not have the ht to do. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Wright, 185 Fed. 250, 253, 107 C. C. A. 356.

In common usage, the term "franchise" refers to any special privilege or right conferred by legislative power on corporations or persons. The corporate right to exist is even called a franchise. State v. Farmers' Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, 10 N. W. 445, 447, 114 Minn. 95.

A "franchise" is a special privilege conferred by the government on individuals which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. City of New York v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 157, 160, 53 Misc. Rep. 1 (quoting and adopting Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [38 U. S.] 579, 10 L. Ed. 339); Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 1, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 42, 36 Am. Dec. 374 (citing 2 Wash. Real Prop. 303).

A "franchise" is a right or privilege granted by the sovereignty to one or more parties to do some act or acts, which they could not do without this grant from the sovereign power. South McAlester-Eufaula Telephone Co. v. State ex rel. Baker-Reidt Mercantile Co., 106 Pac. 962, 968, 25 Okl. 524. Similar illustrations are the right to be incorporated, to hold property, to sue and be sued as such, the right to build a bridge, to operate a ferry over a public stream and to collect tolls therefor, the right to construct and operate on and in the streets of a city a street railway, waterworks, gasworks, electric light works to supply the city and its inhabitants with transportation, water, gas, and electric lights, respectively, and to take tolls therefor. In this country the right of every lawful franchise is deranged from the nation or the state, and the city of Denver had no power to grant any franchise which the Constitution and the laws of the state of Colorado had not authorized it to do. It is not, however, every privilege or permission granted by state or city to occupy or use public rivers, highways, or streets which rises to the dignity of a franchise. A privilege granted by a city to a private party to occupy or use a portion of a public street temporarily for the construction of a building upon an abutting lot, for a cab stand, an automobile stand, or for any similar commercial purpose, is a license and not a franchise. The exact line of demarcation between franchises and licenses may not be clearly drawn, but their general characters and limits are well known and so clearly established that it is not difficult to assign many rights granted to the class to which they belong. A right or privilege which is essential to the performance of the general function or purpose of the grantee, and which is and can be granted by the sovereignty alone, such as the right or privilege of a corporation to operate an ordinary or commercial railroad, a street railroad, city waterworks, or gasworks, and to collect tolls therefor, is a "franchise." A right or privilege not essential to the general function or purpose of the grantee, and of such a nature that a private party might grant a like right or privilege upon his property, such as a temporary or revocable permission to occupy or use a portion of some public ground, highway, or street, is a license and not a franchise. A privilege of the latter character, such as a permission to lay and operate a railroad across or for a short distance upon a public street, is a grant of an easement or right of way. An easement or right of way is not necessarily a creation of or a grant by the sovereignty. A private citizen may confer it over his own land, and the permission by a city to exercise such a privilege on one of its streets is of even less efficacy than such a private grant, because it is subject to the rights of the abutting owners, while the private owner's grant confers the perfect right of way over his property. The word "franchise" does not include within its true significance a revocable permission granted by a city to a company incorporated and empowered to perform its corporate functions by a state, to use for its purposes certain streets or parts of streets in the municipality. McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 153 Fed. 5, 10-13, 15, 20, 87 C. C. A. 619 (citing Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [38 U. S.] 595, 10 L. Ed. 274; Denver & S. Ry. Co. v. Denver City Ry. Co., 2 Colo. 673, 682; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Manufacturing Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 115 U. S. 650, 659, 29 L. Ed. 516; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 77, 172 U. S. 1, 9, 43 L. Ed. 341; City of Denver v. Denver City Cable Ry. Co., 45 Pac. 439, 22 Colo. 565; Donahue v. Morgan, 50 Pac. 1038, 24 Colo. 389, 390, 400; Thomas v. City of Grand Junction, 56 Pac. 665, 13 Colo. App. 80, 81; City of Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 91 Pac. 918, 919, 41 Colo. 77).

It is a "franchise" to be empowered to build a bridge or keep a ferry over a public stream, with a right to demand tolls or to build a mill upon a public river. Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584 (citing Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co., 11 Leigh [Va.] 42, 36 Am. Dec. 374).

As commodity

See Commodity.

As contract or property right

A "franchise" is a contract between a city and the party to whom it is granted which cannot be revoked or annulled as an ordinary ordinance may be. Shugars v. Hamilton, 92 S. W. 564, 566, 122 Ky. 606.

What is commonly termed the "granting" of a franchise by a city for a public utility, such as a telephone franchise, is in the nature of a contract by the city with the grantee for the performance of a public service, and the primary object is not the revenue to be obtained for the city, but the securing of efficient service upon such terms as will promote the greatest good. Louisville Home Tel. Co. v. City of Louisville, 113 S. W. 855, 859, 130 Ky. 611.

Under Rev. St. Mo. 1889, § 1589, authorizing cities of the fourth class to grant an exclusive franchise to furnish electric light to the city and its inhabitants for a term not exceeding 20 years, an ordinance granting such right, duly passed, signed by the mayor and accepted by the grantee, constitutes a contract binding on the city. Monett Electric Light, Power & Ice Co. v. Incorporated City of Monett, Mo., 186 Fed. 360, 364.

A franchise is property which may survive the corporation that received and exercised it. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Tarrytown, W. P. & M. Ry. Co., 123 N. Y. S. 954, 956, 139 App. Div. 305.

A "franchise" is property, and like other property may be taken for public use. State v. Suffield & Thompsonville Bridge Co., 70 Atl. 55, 57, 81 Conn. 56 (citing Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716).

A "franchise" to construct waterworks in a city and use the streets for that purpose is "property." Adams v. Bullock, 47 South. 527, 530, 94 Miss. 27, 19 Ann. Cas. 165.

An ad valorem tax laid on franchises of public service corporations is a property tax; their "franchises" being deemed "property." Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Electric Light Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 870, 872.

The "franchise" of a water company to collect rates for water is "property," and its value, as well as whatever value attaches to its business as a going concern, is to be considered in determining the value of its property for rate-fixing purposes, but the burden of proving such values rests upon the company. Spring Valley Water Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 165 Fed. 667, 676.

The corporate "franchise," the right to be a corporation, created by the laws of the state and to conduct its corporate business in the state, whatever value might attach to such right and its exercise, are "property" of the corporation frequently possessing great value. Marion Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Burton, 90 S. W. 944, 947, 121 Ky. 876, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

A gas "franchise" is property, a vested right protected by the Constitution, while a "license" is a mere personal privilege, and revocable, except in rare instances and under peculiar conditions. Elizabeth City v. Banks, 64 S. E. 189, 191, 150 N. C. 407, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

A "franchise" to one and to such persons as he might associate with him to construct and maintain a turnpike road and to collect tolls thereon, subject to supervision by city officers, granting a right of way, and allowing a time for the completion of the road is "property," within Civ. Code, § 1044, providing that "property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided in this article," and as such is transferable by assignment or in any other authorized mode of transferring real property. People ex rel. Spiers v. Lawley, 119 Pac. 1089, 1017 Cal. App. 331.

The tax law (Laws 1881, c. 293), defining the terms "land," "real estate," and "real property" as including "all surface, underground, or elevated railroads," and the value of all "franchises" to construct or operate railroads in, under, above, or through streets, is not limited to street surface railroads only, but includes long distance surface steam railroads; and hence a "franchise" granted by the state to a steam surface railroad for its road in, under, above, through streets is "property," and a special franchise, and taxable. People ex rel. N. York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 1 N. Y. Supp. 135, 139, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 131.

A corporate "franchise," the right to exist and exist as a corporation, may constitute a valuable property of the corporation within the meaning of the term "property," as used in Const. art. 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, but the tax imposed on corporations by Laws of March 20, 1905, as amended, imposing a license tax on all domestic corporations with certain exceptions, and all foreign corporations doing business in the state, forfeited the charter or right to do business in the state on failure to pay, is not a tax upon "property," within that section, being a license fee for the privilege of existing as a corporation in case of domestic corporations, and for the privilege of doing business within the state in case of a foreign corporation. Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. 341, 346, 155 Cal. 638.

Laws 1907, p. 126, c. 107, imposing on each domestic and foreign corporation a progressive annual license tax based on its authorized capital, imposes a license tax on the privilege of existing as a corporation, and does not impose a license tax on the "franchise" to carry on a particular business, and is not in conflict with Const. art. 13, §§ 2, 3, providing that all property, including "franchises," shall be taxed in proportion to value, etc., since corporate franchises may be property, or may not be deemed as property; the intention of the statute being that it should not be treated as property in such case. Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Timney, 98 Pac. 180, 182, 34 Utah, 369, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 131 Am. St. Rep. 850.

A street railway company's unexercised right to construct tracks was a franchise, which is not property of substantial value for direct taxation. United Ry. & Electric Co. v. City of Baltimore, 73 Atl. 633, 634, 11 Md. 284.

"Under the statutes of this state, 'franchises' must be classed as property subject to taxation. The franchises so assessable may be classified as creative and special. The creation of a corporation, the grant of power to exist and act as such, is in itself a franchise, and it has been distinctly decided that such franchise is assessable as property. This creative franchise is inseparable from the being or personality of the corporate body, and hence it must have its situs wherever the corporate entity has its domicile or residence, and this, in law, is the place where its principal place of business is situated." This being true, it follows under the express mandate of the statutes that such franchise must be assessed and taxed in the county where its principal place of business is located. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Merced County, 4 Pac. 235, 236, 2 Cal. App. 593.

The grant by a municipality of a franchise to use its streets is the exercise by delegation of a power which resides in the state, and which is by its nature governmental; hence, if grounds for forfeiture arise, the state may alone enforce it, and may alone waive it; for a franchise may be said to be a grant from the state to a corporation of authority to occupy the city streets, "licenses" to be the designation by the city council of the streets to be occupied, and "contracts" the stipulated arrangements between the companies and the city as to the manner of occupancy. State, ex rel. of Jones, v. City of St. Louis, 122 Mo. 1, 10 S. W. 2d 1. Light & Development Co. of St. Louis, 152 S. W. 67, 75, 246 Mo. 618.

A "contract" can arise only from the meeting of two or more minds upon the same proposition. The law of 1905, empowering cities to regulate the supply of gas and to fix, "by contract or franchise," the price thereof, does not empower a city to fix by ordinance the price at which a gas company, possessing a franchise, shall supply gas to its consumers; the ordinance not being a contract unless accepted by the company, and not a "franchise" because not granting to the company a new right or extending an existing one. City of Richmond v. Richmond Natural Gas Co., 79 N. E. 1031, 1032, 168 Ind. 82, 11 Ann. Cas. 746.

As corporate franchise

A franchise is a privilege conferred in the United States by the immediate or antecedent legislation of an act of incorporation, with conditions expressed, or necessarily inferential from its language, as to the manner of its exercise and for its enjoyment.

Rhinehart v. Redfield, 87 N. Y. Supp. 739, 792, 93 App. Div. 410 (citing Woods v. Lawrence Co., 66 U. S. [1 Black] 386, 409, 17 L. Ed. 122).

A "franchise" is not essentially corporate, and it is not the grant of a franchise but of a corporate franchise that is prohibited by Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting special laws granting corporate powers and privileges. In re Southern Wisconsin Power Co., 122 N. W. 801, 806, 140 Wis. 245.

Corporation and corporate capacity

The franchise of being a corporation is a "franchise," within the meaning of Const. art. 13, § 1, providing for the taxation of all nonexempt property, and defining property as including moneys, credits, franchises and all other matters and things capable of private ownership. Bank of California v. City and County of San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 833, 142 Cal. 276, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130.

A "franchise" to be a corporation and conduct business comes from the commonwealth and is different in kind from a "permit" or "location" to such corporation to use the streets of a city. A permit or location is inferior and subsidiary to the franchise. A franchise involves a greater or less degree of comprehensiveness and generality and its exercise something of time and development. A permit, specification, or location is narrow and definite, adapted to immediate or early use or service, and depending upon present conditions. Metropolitan Home Tel. Co. v. Emerson, 88 N. E. 670, 671, 202 Mass. 402.

The "franchise" to be a corporation is what constitutes an artificial person. That is, breath or being, and not property. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 132 Fed. 912, 919 (citing City of Atlanta v. Grant, Alexander & Co., 57 Ga. 340-346).

Corporate capacity is a "franchise." Corporations can exercise only such powers as are either expressly included in their franchise, or are fairly incidental to the enjoyment of it, and an attempt to do that which is ultra vires is a usurpation of what would be a franchise, if the right to do it had been granted. Malone v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 83 N. E. 408, 410, 197 Mass. 194 (quoting California v. Central Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 41, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 82 L. Ed. 150).

The right to incorporation with power to sue and be sued and to hold property as a corporate body is a "franchise." Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584 (citing Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co., 11 Leigh [Va.] 42, 36 Am. Dec. 374).

The right to be a corporation is frequently called a "franchise," as it is in one sense, but not in the sense that the grant of a right to build a railroad in a public street is a "franchise." The charter of a corporation is its general franchise, which can be repealed at the will of the Legislature pursuant to its reserved power to repeal, while a special franchise is the right granted by the public to use property for public use, but with private profit, and such a franchise, when acted on, is vested property and cannot be repealed unless power to do so is reserved in the grant that it may be condemned on making compensation. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 87 N. E. 443, 448, 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

Distinguished from license

Permission given by a city ordinance for the exercise of a corporate franchise within the city is a "license" and not a "franchise." People ex rel. Fitzhenry v. Union Gas & Electric Co., 98 N. E. 768, 771, 254 Ill. 395.

The right to construct a street railway within any municipality comes from the state as a "franchise," while the power to consent and designate the streets to be occupied comes from the municipality as a "license" or contract right. Potter v. Calumet Electric St. R. Co., 158 Fed. 521, 527 (citing Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Story, 73 Ill. 541).

A gas "franchise" is property, a vested right protected by the Constitution, while a "license" is a mere personal privilege, and revocable, except in rare instances and under peculiar conditions. Elizabeth City v. Banks, 64 S. E. 189, 191, 150 N. C. 407, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

A "franchise" is a privilege which emanates from the sovereign power of the state or government. A power conferred upon a railroad company by ordinance to locate and maintain a railroad in the streets of a city is a "license" which, after the road is built, may be irrevocable, but such ordinance does not create or confer on the railroad company, constructing the railroad in the street, a "franchise." The "license" granted by the ordinance is no more a "franchise" than would be a grant of right of way by a private citizen to the company to construct its road over his lands, and it is as competent for the city as for a private owner to extend the time of performance or to amend, modify, or annul the contract by mutual agreement. City of Chicago v. Rothschild & Co., 72 N. E. 698, 699, 212 Ill. 590 (citing Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Story, 73 Ill. 541, 547; Metropolitan City Ry. Co. v. Chicago West Division Ry. Co., 87 Ill. 317; Board of Trade of Chicago v. People ex rel. Sturges, 91 Ill. 80; Mills v. Parlin, 106 Ill. 60; Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Town of Lake, 22 N. E. 616, 130 Ill. 42; City of Belleville v. Citizens' Horse Ry. Co., 38 N. E. 584, 152 Ill. 171, 26 L. R.

A. 681; People ex rel. City of Pontiac v. Central Union Tel. Co., 61 N. E. 428, 192 Ill. 307, 85 Am. St. Rep. 338; Rostad v. Chicago Suburban Water & Light Co., 71 N. E. 978, 211 Ill. 248; Davis v. City of New York, 14 N. Y. 506, 67 Am. Dec. 186; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 579, 10 L. Ed. 274; City of Bridgeport v. New York & New Hampshire R. Co., 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am. Rep. 63; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860).

A right not essential to the general purpose of a grantee, and such that a private party might grant over his property, such as a revocable permission to occupy a portion of some public ground, highway, or street, is a license and not a "franchise." McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 158 Fed. 5, 10, 87 C. C. A. 619.

A resolution of the board of trustees of a town to let a telephone company put up telephone poles on certain streets, though acted upon by the company, is not the grant of a franchise within Const. § 164, providing that no municipality shall grant any franchise for a term exceeding 20 years, and that, before granting such franchise, it shall first advertise for bids therefor, but is a mere license, which may be withdrawn at any time, and hence a license or occupation tax may be imposed on the company by the municipality. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Calhoun, 151 S. W. 659, 661, 151 Ky. 241.

As exclusive right

Legislative "grants of franchises" to lay gas pipes and mains in highways, whether granted by special charters or under general laws, confer privileges which are necessarily exclusive in their nature, as against all persons upon whom similar rights have not been conferred. Any attempted exercise of such rights, without legislative sanction, is not only an unwarranted usurpation of power but operates as a direct invasion of the private rights of those upon whom the franchises have been so conferred. Millville Gas Light Co. v. Vineland Light & Power Co., 65 Atl. 504, 505, 72 N. J. Eq. 305.

The exclusive privilege of incinerating house refuse and garbage in a city is in the nature of a "franchise," if not such in the strict sense of the term, which has several significations. California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 126 Fed. 29, 40, 61 C. C. A. 91.

Ferry

Under Shannon's Code, §§ 1696-1699, 1703, empowering the county court to authorize the owner of a ferry landing, or the owner of land on each side of a river, to operate a ferry, etc., the operation of a ferry is a "franchise" which may be granted by the county court. Guinn v. Eaves, 101 S. W. 1154, 1155, 117 Tenn. 524.

As granted by contract

A contract by which a company agreed to erect and maintain lamp posts and fixtures to light the streets of a city for a term of 10 years was not the grant of a franchise by the city. City of Des Moines, Iowa, v. Welsbach Street Lighting Co. of Delaware, 188 Fed. 906, 909, 110 C. C. A. 540.

Under Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 74, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 629, § 12, and chapter 630, prescribing the proceedings prior to a grant of a franchise by the city, and section 242, relating to the powers of the board of estimate, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 629, § 14, and Rapid Transit Act (Laws 1891, c. 4) § 5, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 631, the making of a contract by the city of New York merely for the construction of a subway, which is to be and remain the property of the city, does not grant to the contractor a "franchise" in the street, within the meaning of such charter provisions, requiring the independent approval of the mayor in certain cases. Admiral Realty Co. v. Gaynor, 132 N. Y. Supp. 220, 223, 147 App. Div. 719.

Grant from government essential

A "franchise" is a right or privilege granted by the sovereignty to one or more parties to do some act or acts, which they could not do without this grant from the sovereign power. South McAllister-Eufaula Telephone Co. v. State, 106 Pac. 962, 968, 25 Okl. 524; McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 158 Fed. 5, 10, 87 C. C. A. 619.

A "franchise" was originally a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of the subject, and, being derived from the crown, arose only from the king's grant. People ex rel. Abraham v. Perley, 123 N. Y. Supp. 436, 437, 67 Misc. Rep. 471.

A "franchise" is a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. To be a franchise, the right possessed must be such as cannot be exercised without the express permission of the sovereign power; a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot legally be exercised without legislative grant. State v. Twin Village Water Co., 56 Atl. 763, 768, 98 Me. 214.

"A 'franchise' is a special privilege, conferred by grant from the sovereign power, not belonging to the citizen of common right. It must be derived from the laws of the state and emanate from the sovereign power, and it cannot be exercised by an individual on his own lands without the consent of the state." Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Electric Traction Co., 75 N. E. 194, 203, 216 Ill. 493 (quoting and adopting definition in Goddard v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co., 66 N. E. 1066, 1067, 202 Ill. 362, 368).

Immunity from taxation

A "franchise" is "a privilege or exemption from ordinary jurisdiction as for a corporation to hold pleas to such a value, etc., and sometimes it is an immunity from tribute, whether it is either personal or real" (quoting from Jacob's Law Dictionary). Though there are cases which seem to question this definition to its fullest extent, and which do not extend it to exemptions from taxation, still it is held by the highest authority that such an exemption is "part of the franchise" and often a valuable or essential part of it. Columbia Water Power Co. v. Campbell, 54 S. E. 833, 837, 75 S. C. 34 (citing Wilmington & W. R. v. Reid, 13 Wall. [80 U. S.] 264, 20 L. Ed. 568; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 29, 183 U. S. 67, 74, 46 L. Ed. 86).

As incorporeal hereditament

A franchise is an incorporeal hereditament, a privilege or authority vested in certain persons by grant of the state to exercise powers or to do and perform acts which without such grant they could not do or perform. It does not involve an interest in land, and is a privilege which may be owned without the acquisition of realty, and the use of a franchise may require the occupancy, or even the ownership of land without making the franchise itself an interest in land. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 95 Pac. 722, 731, 52 Or. 502.

A franchise is a special privilege conferred upon individuals or corporations by governmental authority to do something that cannot be done of common right and is an incorporeal hereditament. Leonard v. Baylen Street Wharf Co., 52 South. 718, 719, 59 Fla. 547, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636.

The "franchise" extended by Const. art. 11, § 19, to lay pipes and conduits or erect poles, and supply the inhabitants of a city with artificial light, is an incorporeal hereditament, or real estate in the nature of an easement, pertaining to the streets of a city wherein it is exercised. Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 83 Pac. 54, 58, 148 Cal. 313, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

Liquor license

A liquor license is not a franchise which is a special privilege conferred by the government, and which has the legal character of property in which the holder has a vested right, and is under constitutional guaranties, and is not a contract between the state and the licensee, giving the latter vested rights, but is merely a permit to the licensee to carry on the sale of intoxicants under restrictions, and its validity cannot be tested by quo warranto. State v. Gibbs, 74 Atl. 229, 82 Vt. 526, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 555, 18 Ann. Cas. 525.

A license to keep a dramshop is not a franchise, which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 46 S. E. 749, 750, 134 N. C. 394.

Permit or location distinguished

A "franchise" to be a corporation and conduct business comes from the commonwealth and is different in kind from a permit or "location" to such corporation to use the streets of a city. A permit or location is inferior and subsidiary to the "franchise." A franchise involves a greater or less degree of comprehensiveness and generality, and its exercise something of time and development. A permit specification or location is narrow and definite, adapted to immediate or early use or service, and depending upon present conditions. Metropolitan Home Tel. Co. v. Emerson, 88 N. E. 670, 671, 202 Mass. 402.

A privilege granted by a city to an ordinary railroad company to lay and operate its railroad across or along the streets of a city is termed a "permit," a "license," an "easement," or a "right of way," but never a "franchise." McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 158 Fed. 5, 15, 17, 87 C. C. A. 619 (citing City of Denver v. Bayer, 2 Pac. 6, 7 Colo. 113; *Denver Circle R. Co. v. As rights, privileges, and immunities

"Much confusion of thought has arisen in this case and in similar cases from attaching a vague and undefined meaning to the term 'franchise.' It is often used as synonymous with 'rights,' 'privileges,' and 'immunities,' though of a personal and temporary character, so that, if any one of these exists, it is loosely termed a 'franchise,' and is supposed to pass upon a transfer of the 'franchises' of the company. But the term must always be considered in connection with the corporation or property to which it is alleged to appertain. The 'franchises' of a railroad corporation are rights or privileges which are essential to the operation of the corporation, and without which its road and works would be of little value, such as the 'franchise' to run cars, to take tolls, to appropriate earth and gravel for the bed of its road, or water for its engines, and the like. They are positive rights or privileges, without the possession of which the road of the company could not be successfully worked. Immunity from taxation is not one of them. The former may be conveyed to the purchaser of the road as part of the property of the company; the latter is personal, and incapable of transfer without express statutory direction." Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 506, 509, 103 Va. 337, 68 L. R. A. 92 (quoting and adopting the definition in Morgan v. State of Louisiana, 98 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860, and citing *Hamphrey v. S. 217, 223, 23 L. Ed. 860).

The word "franchise," as used in Coburn's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,477, relating to taxation, includes all rights and privileges granted to or exercised by a person, association, or corporation engaged in the express telegraph or telephone business in the state. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. City of Omaha, 103 N. W. 84, 85, 73 Neb. 527.

Right to be or exist distinguished from powers

The word "franchise," as used in section 68 of the Public Service Commission Law, providing that no electrical corporation shall begin construction or exercise any right or privilege under any franchise hereafter granted, or under any franchise heretofore granted but not heretofore actually exercised, without first having obtained permission of the proper commission, refers to the secondary franchise or consent of the local authorities and not to the primary franchise to be a corporation and do business as such, derived from the fact of incorporation. An electric franchise owned by corporation granted in 1887, and actually exercised by another company then owning by supplying electricity to customers in 189 and 1890, when it was driven out of business, did not fall within either class of franchises referred to in such section 68 laws 1907, c. 429). People ex rel. Long v. Electric Light & Power Co. v. Public Service Commission for First District, 122 Y. Supp. 641, 137 App. Div. 810.

The term "franchise" when applied to corporations has various significations, both a legal and popular sense, and has two well-defined meanings, one pertaining to what is sometimes called the "primary franchise," the right to exist as a corporation, and the other to the different rights, privileges, and powers which are obtained by the corporation, and which are not a prerequisite to corporate existence, such as the right to occupy and use public places for the operation of a system of water or gas works, electrical lighting plants, railroads, etc. Cook v. Utah Light & Ry. Co., 102 Pac. 202, 6, 35 Utah, 570, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1075 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, pp. 2929-2941; Cyc. 1451).

The term "franchise," as applied to a corporation, means a special privilege conferred by the state which does not belong to citizens generally of common right, and which cannot be enjoyed or exercised without legislative authority. Corporations usually possess many powers which are not franchises or privileges in that sense, such as the right to receive money on general or special deposit, to lend money on securities, to discount or purchase bills, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness, and, as applied to banks of issue, the only franchise or privilege which they possess, aside from the mere right to exist and act as a corporation, is that of issuing their notes to circulate as money. Northwestern Trust Co. v. Bradley, 127 N. W. 386, 388, 112 Minn. 76 (quoting and adopting the definition in International Trust Co. v. American Loan & Trust Co., 65 N. W. 78, 632, 62 Minn. 501).

The "franchise" of a corporation comprises its existence, its activity, and its liability, the right to be, the power to do, and the liability of being acted upon; and these are sometimes called separate and independent franchises. The franchise to be is only one of its franchises. The franchise to do is a combination of independent franchises embracing all things which the corporation is given power to do, and may be denominated as active powers, those powers which, when properly exercised, render it successful and valuable. For the purposes of taxation, franchises to do may go wherever the work of the corporation is done, and, exercised in connection with the tangible property which it holds, create substantive matter of taxation to be asserted by every state in which that tangible property is found. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Tax Assessors of Providence, 55 Atl. 877, 879, 25 R. I. 355 (citing Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 224, 225, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965.)

The word "franchise" means the right of a corporation to exist as such, which right does not partake of the incidents of property, and it also means the right of an existing corporation to carry on a particular enterprise, which right is property, which may be sold as any other tangible property. Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tingey, 98 Pac. 180, 182, 34 Utah, 369, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 131 Am. St. Rep. 850.

Right to connect store with elevated railroad

Where a city ordinance granted the right to maintain an elevated passageway connecting a store building with an elevated railroad, and limited the right to maintain such elevated road to a term of 50 years, such right was neither a "franchise" nor a "freehold interest"; and hence a writ of error, in a suit to restrain the city from interfering with the construction of the passageway, was not issuable direct from the Supreme Court in the first instance. City of Chicago v. Rothschild & Co., 72 N. E. 698, 699, 212 Ill. 590.

Right to construct and operate railroad

It is the elementary definition of a "franchise" that it is a grant from a sovereign power, and a franchise to construct and operate a railroad is a grant from the state, although the consent of local authorities must be obtained. It may be granted to individuals and when granted becomes property and cannot be arbitrarily recalled unless power to do so is reserved in the grant, but it is subject to forfeiture by failure to exercise it within a reasonable time, if no time is specified, or by abandonment, after it has been exercised. City of New York v. Bryan, 89 N. E. 467, 469, 196 N. Y. 158.

Railroad Law, § 4, subd. 4, granting railroads the right to construct their roads across highways is a grant to cross streets subsequently opened, and such a grant is a "franchise" within the tax law, imposing a tax on special franchises to construct and operate railroads across and on streets. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 133 N. Y. Supp. 135, 143, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 145.

Right to construct and operate street railroad

The right to construct and operate a street railway or other similar public utility is a "franchise" derived from the state. State v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 872, 135 Iowa, 694.

"A 'franchise' is a special privilege conferred by the government on individuals which does not belong to the citizens of a country generally by a common right. A special 'franchise' is the right granted to a corporation to construct, maintain, or operate in a public highway some structure intended for public use which, except for the grant, would be a trespass." City of New York v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 157, 160, 53 Misc. Rep. 126 (quoting People ex rel. Metropolitan St. Ry. v. Tax Commissioners, 67 N. E. 69, 174 N. Y. 417, 63 L. R. A. 884, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674).

Right to construct and operate telephones

"A 'franchise' to operate a telephone is a privilege to operate a public business." Lowther v. Bridgeman, 50 S. E. 410, 411, 57 W. Va. 306.

The consent of a city granted by ordinance to a person and his successors and assigns to construct a telephone system within its limits is not a franchise, although such consent is necessary under the Constitution and statutes of the state. Dakota Central Telephone Co. v. City of Huron, 185 Fed. 226, 231.

Right to maintain dam

Rights granted by the Legislature as to maintaining a dam of a special height in a stream, which parties had and claimed, held to be in their essential nature "franchises," within the meaning of the law relative to quo warranto. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Norcross, 112 N. W. 40, 44, 132 Wis. 534, 122 Am. St. Rep. 998 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2929).

Right to take tolls

Const. Cal. art. 14, § 2, defines as a "franchise" the right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof. The value of such a franchise, then, is the monetary value of the right to collect water rates. Spring Valley Water Co. v. San Francisco, 165 Fed. 667, 693.

Right to use public streets

A right to occupy the streets is a "franchise" for purposes of taxation. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 128 Pac. 19, 20, 164 Cal. 156.

The word "franchise," as used with reference to the rights derived by Laws III. 1859, pp. 530, 532, as amended by acts of 1861 and 1865 incorporating the Chicago City Railways, and granting necessary rights in the streets selected and thereafter to be selected, means the grant from the city of authority to occupy the streets. Govin v. City of Chicago, 132 Fed. 848, 857.

The grant by a municipality of a franchise to use its streets is the exercise by delegation of a power which resides in the state, and which is by its nature governmental; hence, if grounds for forfeiture arise, the state may alone enforce it, and may alone waive it; for a franchise may be said to be a grant from the state to a corporation of authority to occupy the city streets, "licenses" to be the designation by the city council of the streets to be occupied, and "contracts" the stipulated arrangements between the companies and the city as to the manner of occupancy. State, on Inf. of Jones, ex rel. City of St. Louis v. Light & Development Co. of St. Louis, 152 S. W. 67, 75, 246 Mo. 618.

Under a valid ordinance conferring on a subway company the right to the use of streets for the construction and operation of electrical conduits, at a semiannual rent, it is immaterial whether such grant be called a mere "consent" of the city to the exercise of a franchise already conferred by the state, or whether it is called a "franchise." National Subway Co. v. City of St. Louis, 69 S. W. 290, 293, 169 Mo. 819.

The grant by a city of the exclusive privilege to construct a waterworks plant and to use the streets for that purpose was the grant of a "franchise," within the narrowest definition of the word. It is the grant of a valuable right, constitutes property, and is taxable. It is distinct in its nature from any sort of property which may be described for purposes of taxation as "capital invested in merchandise and manufacturing." The grant by the sovereign power of any exclusive valuable right is a franchise and taxable property, whether it be in the form of a contract or some other manner of giving the right. Adams v. Bullock, 47 South. 527, 529, 94 Miss. 27, 19 Ann. Cas. 165.

The authority to use public streets for railroad purposes is a right or privilege, which, for convenience, is called a "franchise" and proceeds from the state. Village of Phoenix v. Gannon, 108 N. Y. Supp. 255, 256, 123 App. Div. 93.

Right to place gas pipes and mains in the streets of a city for distribution of gas for use is a franchise, the privilege of exercising which can only be granted by the state or by the city acting under legislative authority. Elizabeth City v. Banks, 64 S. E. 189, 191, 150 N. C. 407, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

The right to occupy the public streets with a railway depends entirely upon legislative grant, and is therefore a "franchise," notwithstanding the fact that the terms of such grant and their acceptance constitutes also a contract. State v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 872, 135 Iowa, 694.

Under section 361a of the Civil Code, providing for the transfer of corporate "franchises," the term is aptly used to describe the class of property belonging to quasi public corporations possessing rights and privileges which they had acquired and possessed after they became incorporated, and which they had devoted to public service. Where a water company had laid its pipes in the streets of a city, and was using the streets as a way through which to transmit water to the users, and had a right thus to do, this right, when made available by actual possession and use, is appropriately designated as "franchise." City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co., 93 Pac. 490, 493, 152 Cal. 579.

A right granted by ordinance to a corporation to operate an interurban railway on the streets of a city is a "franchise" within the meaning of Gen. St. 1905, § 5150, relating to quo warranto, and authorizing an action to be brought by a person claiming an interest in the franchise or any interest adverse to the same, so that a franchise may be annulled for proper cause in an action of that character. City of Olathe v. Missouri & K. I. Ry. Co., 96 Pac. 42, 78 Kan. 193.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1948, providing that the Attorney General may sue a person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises a franchise within the state, he may not sue a gas company to prevent further exercise of its rights in streets on ground that municipal grants or consents to their use have terminated by expiration of the period for which given, since such consents are not "franchises" within the statute, and, if they were, the matter is local, within control of the city, which may by appropriate proceedings effectuate withdrawal thereof. People v. Consolidated Gas Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 393, 396, 130 App. Div. 626.

The right to occupy streets with gas mains is a "franchise." Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584 (citing State ex rel. Attorney General v. Cincinnati Gas Light & Coke Co., 18 Ohio St. 262; Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242).

Const. § 163, provides that no telephone company within a city or town shall construct its poles or other apparatus along, over, under, or across the streets, alleys, or public grounds of a city or town without the consent of its legislative authority, and section 164 prohibits the town from granting such consent, except on advertisement and sale to the highest bidder. Held, that a telephone franchise within such section was not the right to operate a telephone exchange in a city, but the right to occupy some portion of the public streets for the maintenance of such line. Bland v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ky.) 109 S. W. 1180, 1181.

The word "franchise," as used in the law of 1905, empowering cities to regulate the supply of gas and to fix by contract or "franchise" the price thereof, refers to a grant by the municipality of a special right or privilege to use its streets, alleys, and public places for the purpose of supplying heat, light, or water. Such franchises are ordinarily granted by ordinance or resolution upon prescribed terms and conditions and for a specified term of years. An ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation using and occupying the streets and other public grounds of the city for the purpose of supplying gas, or for any officer, or agent, or employé of such person, company, or corporation, to charge more than 30 cents for each 1,000 cubic feet of gas is without any of these characteristics, since it neither grants a new right nor confirms or extends an existing one, but merely seeks to impose an existing right to the streets and alleys of the city. City of Richmond v. Richmond Natural Gas Co., 79 N. E. 1031-1033, 168 Ind. 82, 11 Ann. Cas. 746.

Of corporation

Strictly speaking, the franchise of a corporation consists of the rights, powers, and privileges given by the act incorporating it, or the certificate of incorporation. People v. Consolidated Gas Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 393, 395, 130 App. Div. 626.

A corporate "franchise" is the right or privilege to exist and do business as a corporation, or its business opportunity and capacity. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 313, 46 Misc. Rep. 623 (citing People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Coleman, 27 N. E. 818, 126 N. Y. 433, 437, 12 L. R. A. 762).

The word "franchises," in Const. art. 18, § 2, providing that all property defined to include franchises shall be taxed in proportion to value, when considered in connection with sections 3 and 12, and article 12, § 7, authorizing a franchise tax, and providing that no corporation shall alienate any franchise, etc., does not include the mere right of a corporation to exist as such, but means the right granted to an existing corporation to carry on specified business. Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tingey, 98 Pac. 180, 182, 34 Utah, 369, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 131 Am. St. Rep. 850.

A tax on a corporate franchise is not a tax on the right to be a corporation, for the right to be a corporation is a right or franchise belonging to the individuals who compose the corporation, and not to the corporation itself; its "franchise" being the right to carry on the business for which chartered. Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 405, 160 Ala. 396; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Gaston, 49 South. 412, 160 Ala. 671.

The term "franchise," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4077, imposing a franchise tax on corporations engaged in freight traffic, etc., is not the right to do the thing, but the doing of it in fact, so it is no answer to a corporation's liability for such tax that its engaging in such business is ultra vires. Jamés v. Kentucky Refining Co., 113 S. W. 468, 470, 132 Ky. 333.

The word "franchise," in Ky. St. 1903, §§ 4077-4080, providing for the assessment of a corporation's franchise, embraces all the intangible property of the company, and is not used in its strict technical sense. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 91 S. W. 672, 674.

Of railroad company

The intangible thing known as a corporate "franchise" has no local situs for the purposes of local taxation, but appertains to the whole road. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

Of street railroad company

A street railway franchise is a "franchise," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 3466, providing for actions in the name of the state by the Attorney General when any person unlawfully holds or exercises any franchise. State ex rel. Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Milwaukee, B. & L. G. R. Co., 92 N. W. 546, 548, 116 Wis. 142.

Of telegraph or telephone companies

Under the amendment of 1900 to the Constitution, and Laws 1901, c. 26, providing for the taxation of franchises of telegraph or telephone companies, the word "franchise" should not be taken as meaning simply direct authority from the state to do business, thus excluding from taxation a railway company not having a separate franchise to do a telegraph business, but which has assumed such franchise and is doing such business, since it is estopped to deny that it has a franchise. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co. v. Oppergard, 118 N. W. 830, 832, 18 N. D. 1.

Where a "franchise" of constructing and operating telegraph lines along post roads had been granted to a corporation by Congress, a city ordinance purporting to grant to the corporation a franchise to use the city streets for its poles and regulating the manner of such use was a mere attempt to give what the company already had, and did not create a "franchise" which could be taxed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. City of Visalia, 87 Pac. 1023, 1025, 149 Cal. 744.

FRANCHISE REQUIREMENT

A law requiring as a test of party fealty that the elector shall subscribe an oath stating that he belongs to an organized political party and requiring him to designate it therein by name and making the required oath a condition precedent to the right of an elector to participate at the party primary election is not unconstitutional as prescribing an added "franchise requirement."

State v. Flaherty, 136 N. W. 76, 78, 23 N. D. 313, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132.

FRANCHISE TAX

A "franchise tax" is a tax on the privilege of doing business under corporate organization. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 7 Atl. 944, 949, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 20.

The words "franchise tax" have a special meaning, and signify the annual license tax exacted by the state for the privilege of doing business in corporate form. City of New Orleans v. Tunis, 78 Atl. 1066, 1071, 81 N. J. Law, 48.

In taxing a bank's intangible property which includes its capital not invested in taxable property, the tax is called a "franchise tax." Marion Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Burton, 90 S. W. 944, 949, 121 Ky. 876, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

The tax imposed by Rev. St. Me. 1883, c. 6, § 55, providing that express companies shall apply to the state treasurer for a license to do business and shall pay to the treasurer annually $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the gross receipts of such business as shall be done in the state, including a pro rata part on all express business coming from other states or countries into this state and on all going from this state to other states or countries, section 56 requiring the making of an annual return by the corporations affected, and section 57, providing that the tax assessed shall stand in place of all local taxation, was "franchise tax." State v. Boston & Portland Exp. Co., 61 Atl. 697, 698, 100 Me. 278.

The "franchise tax" imposed by the act of 1900 (P. L. 1900, p. 502) is in the nature of a license tax and not a tax on property. North Jersey St. R. Co. v. Jersey City, 6 Atl. 833, 834, 73 N. J. Law, 481.

The tax on a corporate franchise does not depend on the profits or amount of the business of the corporation, but it is a payment for the privilege of doing business as a corporation. New York Terminal Co. v. Gould, 124 N. Y. Supp. 200, 202, 139 App. Div. 347.

FRANCHISE VALUE

The words "franchise value," as used in Revenue Laws, § 78, are used in a broad sense, and really mean the value of the intangible property. This may or may not include "corporate franchise," since it may be either an individual or a copartnership or corporation which conducts the business, and the "corporate franchise," if included, is only an incident and not the subject-matter which it was intended to tax. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. City of Omaha, 103 N. W. 88, 73 Neb. 527.

FRANK

As commerce, see Commerce.

The commonly accepted meaning of the word "frank" is that it refers only to prop-

y. telegrams, and the Mke. United States Wells Fargo Exp. Co., 161 Fed. 606, 616.

The term "franks," as used in the Anti-Pass Law, means authority for free vice. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wells Fargo p. Co., 110 S. W. 38, 40, 101 Tex. 564.

The word "frank," as used in section 161 of the Constitution of 1902 (Code 1904, p. x), prohibiting any state, county, district, municipal officer from accepting a frank, a pass, or free transportation, is construed in section 153 (p. cxxliv) to mean a writing or check issued by a transmission company entitling the holder to some service free of charge. Commonwealth v. Gleason, 69 S. E. 2d, 450, 111 Va. 388.

FRATERNAL

FRATERNAL ASSOCIATION

See Secret and Fraternal Society.

"As we understand it, the test of a 'fraternal beneficiary association,' within the meaning of the Missouri statute (Rev. St. Mo. § 1408), is that the association must be organized for the sole benefit of its members and not for profit. It should possess a lodge system and representative form of government, with a ritualistic form of work, and should issue the issue of its benefit certificates to members in favor of such beneficiaries, as they may from time to time designate, thus placing the benefit within the control of the member and precluding a vested interest of a beneficiary, which obtains with respect to regular life insurance." An association chartered by the state of Iowa, and conforming in other respects to the statutory requirements of this state, is a fraternal beneficiary association, "notwithstanding the fact that it has authority under its Iowa charter to issue certificates to classes of beneficiaries other than and distinct from those named in the Missouri statute." Armstrong v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 112 S. W. 24-27, 132 Mo. App. 171 (citing and adopting Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470-477, 196 Mo. 670-701, 5 L. R. A. [N. D.] 1114; Tice v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 100 S. W. 519, 123 Mo. App. 85-104).

An insurance association which has no lodge system, ritualistic form of work, or representative form of government is not within the meaning of a "fraternal beneficiary association" as a corporation, society, or voluntary association for the benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and having a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work, and a representative form of government. Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Tenant, 106 S. W. 1073, 1075, 128 Mo. App. 541.

A "fraternal beneficiary association" must mean a corporation, society, or voluntary association organized and carried on for the sole benefit of the members and their beneficiaries, but not for profit, and having a lodge system and ritualistic form of work and representative form of government. Such associations are members of the class known as beneficiary associations; and hence a provision against the sale of endowment by beneficiary associations applies to fraternal beneficiary associations. National Protective Legion v. O'Brien, 112 N. W. 1050, 1051, 102 Minn. 15 (quoting the definition in Rev. Laws 1905, § 1594).

Rev. St. 1899, § 1408, defines a "fraternal beneficiary association" as one organized for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit, operating on a lodge system with a ritualistic form of work and a representative form of government, making provision for the payment of benefits in case of death, sickness, temporary or permanent physical disability, etc. The section also declares that the fund for the payment of benefits and expenses shall be derived from assessments and dues collected from its members, and that payment of death benefits shall be to the families, heirs, blood relations, affianced husband or wife of, or to the persons dependent on the member, and that such association shall be exempt from the insurance laws of the state, etc., but may create, maintain, and disburse a reserve or emergency fund in accordance with its constitution and by-laws. Held, that a uniformed rank of the Knights of Pythias, which issued insurance only to members of its various lodges, had a representative form of government, worked according to ritual, and paid death benefits, etc., from a fund accumulated from assessments, dues, and a reserve fund, was a "fraternal beneficiary association" within such section, and not an old line life insurance company, and was therefore not subject to Rev. St. 1889, § 5855, making the defense of suicide unavailable to regular life companies. Tice v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 100 S. W. 519, 524, 123 Mo. App. 85.

A fire insurance company operating on the assessment plan is not a "fraternal beneficiary order," within Civ. Code 1910, §§ 2866-2877, relating to such orders. Puryear v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 78 S. E. 851, 852, 137 Ga. 579.

Where a foreign insurance organization was not a "fraternal beneficiary association," as defined by statute, it was immaterial that it called itself as such, and that the superintendent of insurance of the state issued to it the statutory license to do business as such. Herzberg v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 85 S. W. 986, 110 Mo. App. 328.

"Fraternal benefit associations," as defined by Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 6483, are corporations, societies, or voluntary associations formed or organized and carried on for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit. Soehner v.

Grand Lodge of Order of Sons of Herman, 104 N. W. 871-874, 74 Neb. 399.

An Illinois corporation having a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work and a representative form of government, carried on for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries and not for profit, is a "fraternal benefit society," within the meaning of Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 1408, and Laws Ill. 1893, p. 130, § 1. Lloyd v. Modern Woodmen of America, 87 S. W. 530, 535, 113 Mo. App. 19.

Where a foreign insurance society was authorized to issue insurance to the legal representatives of the insured, it was an "insurance company," subject to Rev. St. 1899, § 7890, providing that misrepresentations made by insured in obtaining the policy are no defense unless the matters misrepresented shall have actually contributed to the death, and not a "fraternal beneficiary society," authorized by section 1408 to issue certificates only for the benefit of "families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, or affianced wife, or to person dependent upon the member." Herzberg v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 85 S. W. 986, 110 Mo. App. 328.

A society organized under a law providing for the organization of fraternal societies, and controlled by a national council, operating through a lodge system exclusively and paying no commissions for procuring members, is a "fraternal society" within the exception of Ky. St. § 679 (Russell's St. § 4400), which prohibits reception of a life policy or certificate in evidence unless a copy of the application, etc., is attached thereto, except as to fraternal societies. Yeomen of America v. Rott, 140 S. W. 1018, 1020, 145 Ky. 604.

FRATERNAL ORDER

As life insurance company, see Life Insurance Company.

Similar order, see Similar.

Where a benefit order having a central organization and local bodies throughout the United States and foreign countries had insurance features, and paid death and sick benefits from dues collected from members, etc., it was a fraternal order within Revisal 1905, § 4795, providing that every incorporated association, lodge, or society doing business in the state on the lodge system with ritualistic form of work and representative form of government, organized to pay benefits to members and their beneficiaries in case of disability resulting from disease, accident, or old age, is a fraternal benefit order, and subject to regulation by the state's authorities. State v. Arlington, 73 S. E. 122, 125, 157 N. C. 640.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen is a "fraternal organization." Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Shober, 94 N. W. 405, 406, 16 S. D. 513.

The word "fraternities," as used in St. 1909, p. 332, which prohibits secret fraternities in the public schools, includes organizations of both sexes, sororities, and clubs. Bradford v. Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco, 121 Pac. 929, 933, 18 Cal. App. 19.

"Fraud" is "an intentional perversion of the truth for the purpose of obtaining some valuable thing or promise from another." Bellevue State Bank v. Coffin, 125 Pac. 816, 819, 22 Idaho, 210 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2943).

"Fraud" consists in deception effectually practiced in order to induce another to part with property or surrender a legal right. Sallies v. Johnson, 81 Atl. 974, 976, 85 Conn. 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386.

"'Fraud' consists in one man endeavoring by deception or circumvention to alter another's rights." Such is the meaning of the word as used in the statute of Limitations (Gen. St. 1889, par. 4095, subd. 3). Cloud County v. Hostetler, 51 Pac. 62, 63, 6 Kan. App. 286 (citing Bigelow, Frauds, 5).

Words and actions may be held to constitute fraud as to persons of weak intellect or whose minds are enfeebled by disease when they would not be regarded as such in favor of one in the full exercise of his faculties. Porter v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 148 S. W. 162, 164, 165 Mo. App. 619.

"Fraud" is a deception practiced on one to obtain an unfair or unlawful advantage. It is hard to give a definition to fit all cases. Webster's definition is as follows: "Fraud is a deception deliberately practiced upon one to obtain an unfair advantage." McCaskey Register Co. v. Keena, 71 Atl. 898, 81 Conn. 656.

All surprises, trick, cunning, dissembling, and other unfair way that is used to cheat any one is considered as fraud. Cooper v. Smith & W. R. Co., 99 Pac. 785, 789, 28 Cal. 139.

"Fraud," in its ordinary application to cases of contract, includes any trick or artifice employed by one person to induce another to fall into, or detain him in, an error, so that he may make an agreement contrary to his interest." Board of Com'rs of Howard County v. Garrigus, 73 N. E. 82, 85, 164 Ind. 9 (quoting and adopting the definition in ouv. Law Dict. p. 689).

"Fraud" is the successful employment of cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent, cheat, or defraud another. It is the inducing by one's self or inducing another to do such things as lead the opposite party into error, and the intent to deceive is one of its main characteristics, and fraud may be perpetrated by misrepresentations, either by word or deed, as to material facts. Brettner v. Foley, 113 Pac. 356, 359, 15 Cal. App.

A plaintiff suing for "fraud" must show that the false representation was intentional, made by defendant with intent that plaintiff should act on it, or so as to naturally induce him to act on it; that the representation was false, and was known to defendant to be false, or made as a fact of his own knowledge; that the representation was an expression of a past or existing fact and not opinion; that it was material; and that plaintiff relied on it and was deceived, and thereby induced to act, to his damage. Perce v. Cole, 85 Atl. 567, 568, 110 Me. 184.

"Fraud" is a name given by law to certain facts and to certain conduct of the accused party. The fact may be misrepresentation and deceit, and the term "fraud" is a legal epithet applied to such facts. Fraud may be actual or constructive. Where fraud is fact is relied on, the acts done must be set out, and, the intent being material, it must be inferred that they were done fraudulently with intent to cheat and defraud; but, when an action is founded on constructive fraud, all that is necessary is to plead the facts from which the court will determine whether the doing of them worked a constructive fraud. Barrie v. United Rys. Co. St. Louis, 119 S. W. 1020, 1057, 138 Mo. App. 557.

"Fraud" consists in artifice, trick, cunning, deception, or any unfair dealing by which another is cheated. Where one erected dams on certain lakes and streams, thereby diverting or keeping back the waters to which the plaintiff, in equity, claimed to have a legal right for his mills below such erections, it was held, not to be a case of "fraud," without the meaning of St. 1830, c. 462, extending the equity powers of the supreme judicial court. Galvin v. Shaw, 12 Me. 454, 457.

"Fraud," as used in an insurance policy providing, "This entire policy shall be void * * * in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relative to this insurance or the subject thereof, whether before or after a loss," covers frauds otherwise than by false swearing. "The distinction between actions based on fraud and fraud or false swearing, within the meaning of the clause in the policy in question which forfeits it, is clearly pointed out in F. Dohmen v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 96 Wis. 56, 71 N. W. 74: 'No authority can be found, we may safely say, to sustain the contention that fraud which will avoid a policy under such a clause must have the elements necessary to constitute a cause of action based on fraud.'" Meyer v. Home Ins. Co., 106 N. W. 1087, 1088, 1089, 127 Wis. 293.

The refusal of one who has made an oral contract for services not to be performed within a year to execute a written contract as agreed does not constitute "fraud," within the rule that the statute of frauds will not be enforced, where the effect would be to perpetrate a fraud. Long v. Long, 122 Pac. 1077, 1079, 162 Cal. 427; Lieber v. Lieber, 148 S. W. 458, 467, 239 Mo. 1.

The word "fraud," in Rev. St. 1899, § 8528, as amended, authorizing the board of dental examiners to revoke the license of any dentist for "fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation" in the practice of dentistry, means an intentional perversion of truth to induce another, in reliance on it, to part with some valuable thing belonging to him or to surrender a legal right; and the word "deceit" means any trick or contrivance used to defraud another to his injury; and the word "misrepresentation" means untrue, improper, or unfaithful representation, such as a false statement of account or as a misrepresentation of one's motives; and the words, when so construed, prevent the statute from being invalid for uncertainty. State ex rel. Williams v. Puri, 128 S. W. 196, 201, 228 Mo. 1.

As act involving breach of duty, trust or confidence

"Fraud" in equity includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of either legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence. Dickinson v. Stevenson, 120 N. W. 324, 325, 142 Iowa, 567.

Fraud includes all acts and omissions which involve a breach of legal duty injurious to others. Wadsworth v. Board of Sup'rs of Livingston County, 115 N. Y. Supp. 8, 19.

"Fraud," generally speaking, is any act or concealment which involves a breach of legal duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed and is injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another. Horton v. Smith (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1088, 1093.

"'Fraud,' in the sense of a court of equity, properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence, justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which undue or unconscientious advantage is taken of another." City of Clay Center v. Myers, 35 Pac. 25, 26, 52 Kan. 363 (quoting and adopting definition in Myers v. Board of Education, 32 Pac. 658, 51 Kan. 87, 37 Am. St. Rep. 263; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 187).

"'Fraud,' in the sense of equity, includes all acts, commissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence, justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another; and courts of equity will not only interfere in cases of fraud to set aside acts done, but they will also, if acts have by fraud been prevented from being done by the parties, interfere and treat the case exactly as if the acts had been done." Holliday v. Perry, 78 N. E. 877, 880, 38 Ind. App. 588 (quoting and adopting definition in Story's Eq. Jur. § 187); Johnson v. Sherwood, 73 N. E. 180, 187, 84 Ind. App. 490 (quoting and adopting the definition in Fetter's Eq. p. 130, note 82); Moore v. Sawyer, 167 Fed. 826, 838; Derby v. Donahoe, 106 S. W. 632, 637, 208 Mo. 684 (quoting and adopting definition in Kerr, Fraud & M. pp. 42, 43); Ewing v. Ewing, 126 Pac. 811, 813, 33 Okl. 414 (quoting Moore v. Crawford, 9 Sup. Ct. 447, 130 U. S. 122, 32 L. Ed. 878).

While inadequacy of consideration is insufficient to warrant a court of equity in annulling a sale of land, yet, in connection with other facts, it may be considered in determining the question as to whether an actual fraud has been committed on the rights of an individual, or whether the conduct or acts of the parties have been of such a nature as are calculated to operate a fraud on those induced to act by reason of such conduct. Derby v. Donahoe, 106 S. W. 632, 637, 208 Mo. 684 (quoting and adopting definition in Kerr, Fraud & M. pp. 42, 43).

"A court of equity has original and inherent jurisdiction to declare and enforce trusts, and will interfere in cases of fraud to set aside acts done which involve a breach of a legal or an equitable duty or trust, which are injurious to another. 'Fraud,' as understood and defined in a court of equity, includes all acts which involve such breach of duty." The equity jurisdiction conferred on district courts by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, is limited to matters connected with the administration of bankrupt estates, and such court is without general equity jurisdiction to entertain a plenary suit by a third person to cancel the satisfaction of a mortgage and declare a trust in mortgaged property of a bankrupt which is not in the possession of his trustee, nor a part of the estate for distribution, and in which his general creditors have no interest. Brumby v. Jones, 141 Fed. 818, 322, 72 C. C. A. 466 (citing Brick. Dig. p. 662; 1 Hill, Mortg. p. 525).

As actual fraud or fraud in fact

A judgment of a state court is rendered in "an action for fraud," so as to be exempted by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550, from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy, where such judgment, whatever may be the form of the action, was based upon actual, as distinguished from constructive, fraud of the bankrupt. Bullis v. O'Beirne, 25 Sup. Ct. 118, 123, 195 U. S. 606, 49 L. Ed. 340.

The "fraud" which saves a judgment from a discharge in bankruptcy, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 551, declaring that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from provable debts, except judgments in actions for frauds, is fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bryant, 149 S. W. 830, 831, 149 Ky. 359.

The word "fraud," as used in the bankrupt law of 1867, meant positive "fraud" or intentional wrong, and not implied "fraud," such as may exist without any bad faith. Flanders v. Mullin, 66 Atl. 789, 80 Vt. 124, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010.

The word "fraud," within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act 1867, is positive fraud or fraud in fact involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, and not implied fraud or fraud in law which may exist without the implication of bad faith or immorality. Crosby v. Miller, Vaughn Co., 55 Atl. 328, 329, 25 R. I. 172 (citing Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. Ed. 586).

"'Fraud,' in the clause defining the debts from which a bankrupt is not relieved by proceedings in bankruptcy, means positive fraud, or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, and not implied fraud, which may exist without bad faith. In re Collins, 157 Fed. 120, 123 (quoting and adopting definition in Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. Ed. 586, and citing Strang v. Bradner, 5 Sup. Ct. 1038, 114 U. S. 555, 29 L. Ed. 248; Noble v. Hammond, 9 Sup. Ct. 235, 12 U. S. 65, 32 L. Ed. 621; Ames v. Moir, 11 Sup. Ct. 311, 138 U. S. 306, 34 L. Ed. 951; Upshur v. Briscoe, 11 Sup. Ct. 313, 138 U. S. 365, 34 L. Ed. 931).

Where a mortgagor failed to interpose a set-off in foreclosure and to avail herself of the plea of limitations, because of a promise made by the mortgagee to prevent the interposing of such defenses, and without intending to keep it, it was actual fraud, within the Code, defining "fraud" as consisting of the making of a promise without any intention of performing it, which entitled the mortgagee to have the judgment of foreclosure set aside.

Ad v. Templeton, 92 Pac. 78, 82, 152 Cal. 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579.

Bad faith synonymous

"Good faith is the opposite of bad faith, bad faith and 'fraud' are synonymous." Ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, 75 N. E. 602, 36 Ind. App. 269 (quoting and adopting definition in Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawy. [U. S.] 22 Fed. Cas. 1064).

Concealment or suppression of facts

A party to a contract, concealing any material fact peculiarly or exclusively within own knowledge, knowing that the other party acts on the belief that no such fact exists guilty of "fraud." Barrett v. Lewis-Brunswick & Bath St. R. Co., 85 Atl. 306, 110 Me. 24.

Criminal offense

"Fraud," in the statute (Wilson's Rev. Stat. 1903, § 2465), defining larceny as taking of personal property, accomplished by fraud or stealth, and with intent to deprive another thereof, is the getting possession of property by means of falsehood, deception, or artifice. Flohr v. Territory, 78 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

"Fraud," within Rev. St. § 5440, prohibiting conspiracy to defraud the United States, is not limited in fraud against property of United States, but includes fraud against rights of government. Haas v. Henkel, Fed. 621, 625.

The words "fraud" and "dishonesty," in fidelity bond insuring a corporation against loss through the "fraud or dishonesty" of an employee, are not restricted to such conduct imports a criminal offense. An act entailing a financial loss to another may be fraudulent and dishonest, and yet not within the definitions of embezzlement or larceny. The liability on the bond is limited to such losses as result from the employee's criminal act, but includes losses resulting from any acts which show want of integrity or a breach of trust. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Egg Shippers' Association & Filler Co., 148 Fed. 358, 355, 10 C. A. 345.

Damage must result

"The law does not regard or treat as a fraud a deception so intangible as not to cause damage. To amount to a legal fraud, must both deceive and damage." A fraudulent alteration of books submitted by the insured on adjustment of its loss will not debar the adjustment, unless the insurer was misled thereby. Commercial Bank of Milwaukee v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 58 N. W. 391, 87 Wis. 297.

It is not essential to charge or prove actual financial or property loss to establish a "fraud" against the United States, within Rev. St. § 5418, and an indictment charging the forgery of vouchers required on examination by the Civil Service Commission of the United States certifying to the character, physical capacity, etc., of an applicant, and for presenting the same to the Commission, charges an offense. United States v. Plyler, 32 Sup. Ct. 6, 222 U. S. 15, 56 L. Ed. 70.

Dishonesty synonymous

"Fraud" and "dishonesty" are synonymous terms. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 27, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105.

"Fraud" and "dishonesty" are synonymous terms. Whatever is dishonest is fraudulent in foro conscientiae. If one acts unjustly and unlawfully, he acts fraudulently. An unjust man is a fraudulent man. Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986, 991.

Duress and undue influence synonymous

An instruction in a will contest that the words "fraud," "duress," and "undue influence," as used in the instructions, generally meant the same thing, to wit, undue influence, was not erroneous; the statement being for the guidance of the jury, and furthermore the words being frequently used synonymously in contests of this kind. Pickler v. Wise, 132 N. W. 815, 817, 152 Iowa, 644.

Error or mistake

Where a seller by mistake drew on the purchasers for less than the price, the failure of the purchasers to notify him of the mistake was not legal fraud, within 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4800, subd. 4 (Pierce's Code, § 285), providing that, in an action for relief on the ground of fraud, the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud. Evert v. Tower, 99 Pac. 580, 51 Wash. 514, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 950.

As fact to be proved

"Fraud" is not a fact. It is a name given by law to certain facts, to certain conduct of the accused party. The fact may be misrepresentation, deceit, specifically stated; and the term "fraud" is the legal epithet applied to such facts. Tibbitts v. Miller, 60 Pac. 95, 96, 9 Okl. 677 (quoting Bliss, Code Pleadings, § 211).

Force distinguished

"Force implies physical restraint of the will, while 'fraud' implies an overruling moral necessity by which a certain state of the will is brought about which could not have been so without deceit." Avakian v. Avakian, 60 Atl. 521, 529, 69 N. J. Eq. 89 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, § 514).

Intention and act

"Fraud" is complex and involves a mental state as well as an open act. The mental state has three elements: Knowledge, intent, and design. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 295, 302, 73 N. J. Law, 790.

Misstatements by which one is deceived, though without fraudulent intent, are embraced within the word "fraud." Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Miazza, 46 South. 817, 819, 93 Miss. 18, 136 Am. St. Rep. 534.

Intention to deceive is a characteristic of "fraud." Rowell v. Ricker, 66 Atl. 569, 570, 79 Vt. 552.

"Fraud" is a willful, malevolent act directed to perpetrating a wrong to the rights of another, and such an act in a vendor is actionable as against the mere negligence or inadvertence of the purchaser in failing to prevent fraud. Judd v. Walker, 114 S. W. 979, 980, 215 Mo. 812.

"Fraud" is a willful wrong, and the word implies the doing of a wrong willfully. Sometimes, without part of the actual evil purpose, the law will imply fraud, but only so in the case where one has been so oblivious of his duty, showing such a disregard for the rights of others, as to make his contract as bad as if actuated by a desire to do wrong. An agent owes his principal perfect good faith and may not take on himself the character of an agent where, because of his relations to others or his own personal interest, he will be compelled to assume inconsistent duties and obligations, and, as a general rule, the contracts procured by an agent who has an interest in the subject-matter of the agency, which is undisclosed to his principal, are voidable, in an action for that purpose, and, in a suit to avoid such a transaction, much less is required to sustain the charge of fraud than in an action at law for fraud. Wann v. Scullin, 109 S. W. 688, 702, 210 Mo. 429.

"Fraud," on the part of a corporation may consist of an act done without the authority of law and against the provisions of the charter, though the act may be innocently done, and therefore it may be said to be a fraud as to creditors for a corporation to insert in its articles of incorporation a provision that the stock shall be sold at 50 cents on the dollar, and, when that is paid, the stock shall be issued as fully paid and non-assessable, since such an act would result in giving the stock a fictitious value. Security Trust Co. v. Ford, 79 N. E. 474, 477, 75 Ohio St. 322, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263.

As injury to property

See Injury to Property.

Knowledge of falsity of misrepresentation.

"Fraud" is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made knowingly, without belief in its truth, or recklessly, carelessly, whether it be true or false. Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 81 N. 595, 598, 40 Ind. App. 354.

Defendant, having stated as a fact what he knew was false with a fraudulent intent to deceive plaintiff and thereby induce him to purchase a farm, perpetrated a "fraud." Sipola v. Winship, 66 Atl. 962, 966, 74 N. 240.

"Fraud" means an intention to deceive. If there was no such intention, if the party honestly stated his own opinion, believing at the time that he stated the truth, he is not liable in an action for deceit, although the representation turned out to be entirely untrue. Bartles v. Courtney, 98 S. W. 1313, 6 Ind. T. 379.

Civ. Code 1895, § 4026, declaring misrepresentation of a material fact, made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party, if made by mistake or innocently, to constitute fraud, is found under chapter 10, title 10 dealing generally with fraud, and its provisions are not all necessarily essential to an action for deceit, and that part of it which relates to fraud by mistake or innocently could hardly be applicable to an action for deceit where knowledge is an essential element. Camp v. Carithers, 65 S. 583, 585, 6 Ga. App. 608.

An instruction that if a person represents a material fact to be true to his own personal knowledge, where he does not know whether it is true or not, instead of merely expressing an opinion or belief, and the representations are untrue, he is guilty of falsehood and "fraud," even though he may think it true, is correct. McCabe v. Desnoyers, 108 N. W. 341, 343, 20 S. D. 581.

Fraud in representations of fact may be either in the knowledge of their falsity, or, without knowledge of their truth or falsity, in coupling the representations with express or implied affirmation of the knowledge of their truth. Crosby v. Wells, 67 Atl. 295, 299, 73 N. J. Law, 790.

What will constitute "fraud," in an action for deceit, has been considered by the English courts. The leading case upon the subject is Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337, decided in the House of Lords in 1889. The complainant in that case charged the defendants with knowingly making false representations. It was found in the court of first instance that the representations had been honestly made, believing them to be true; and the Court of Appeal (37 Ch. D. 541) held that, notwithstanding this fact, the representations must be taken to be fraudulent because the defendants had no reasonable ground for that belief. The question, therefore, which was presented for consideration of the House of Lords when the case came before that body in 14 App. Cas. 337, was whether a statement honest-de and believed to be true should be treated as fraudulent because those who made it had no reasonable ground for entertaining that belief. In the House of Lords the decision of the Court of Appeal was reversed, and it was there held, in conformity with the universally recognized rule, that an action in deceit is based upon fraud; that an action for negligent misrepresentation, as distinguished from fraudulent misrepresentation, could not be maintained; that want of reasonable ground for believing a representation to be true might be evidence of fraud, and the circumstances indicated such recklessness or negligent disregard for the truth to be incompatible with the idea of honesty, but that even gross negligence, in the absence of dishonesty, did not of itself amount to fraud; that, notwithstanding a verdict or jury might find that the speaker had no reasonable ground for believing his representations were true, he may nevertheless have honestly entertained such belief; and consequently that fraud could not be predicated upon such a finding. Lord Herschell, who delivered the leading judgment in the case, said (page 374): "I think the authorities establish the following propositions: First. In order to sustain an action in deceit, there must be proof of fraud, and nothing short of that will suffice. Secondly. Fraud is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made (1) knowingly, or (2) without belief in its truth, or recklessly, careless whether it be true or false. Although I have treated the second and third as distinct cases, I think the third is but an instance of the second, for one who makes a statement under such circumstances can have no real belief in the truth of what he states. To prevent a false statement being fraudulent, there must, I think, always be an honest belief in its truth. And this probably covers the whole ground, for the person who knowingly alleges that which he has obviously no such honest belief. Thirdly. If fraud be proved, the motive of the person guilty of it is immaterial. It matters not that there was no intention to cheat or injure the person to whom the statement was made." In Angus v. Clifford (1911) 2 Ch. 449, 465, 466, Lindley, L. J., in commenting upon this statement of Lord Herschell, said: "You may have * * * a false statement made, but without the matter being present to your mind, and made carelessly; and, if that is the fact, that is not fraud, but carelessness, for which an action will not lie. * * * The passages about knowledge, knowingly making it, and making a statement without believing its truth, are based upon the supposition that the matter was really before the mind of the person making the statement; and if the evidence is that he never really intended to mislead, that he did not see the effect, or even that the effect of what he was saying could mislead, and that that particular part of what he was saying was not present in his mind at all, that, I should say, is proof of carelessness rather than of fraud. I base my judgment * * * on the * * * ground that * * * an action of this kind cannot be supported without proof of fraud, an intention to deceive, and that it is not sufficient that there is blundering carelessness, however gross, unless there is wilful recklessness, by which I mean wilfully shutting one's eyes, which is, of course, fraud." In Le Lievre v. Gould (1893) 1 Q. B. 491, 498, Lord Esher, M. R., states: "A charge of fraud * * * against a man * * * cannot be maintained in any court unless it is shown that he had a wicked mind. * * * If a man tells a wilful falsehood, with the intention that it shall be acted upon by the person to whom he tells it, his mind is plainly wicked, and he must be said to be acting fraudulently. Again, a man must be said to have a fraudulent mind if he recklessly makes a statement intending it to be acted upon, and not caring whether it be true or false. I do not hesitate to say that a man who thus acts must have a wicked mind." And Bowen, L. J., in the same case, says (pages 500, 501): "But his mind is wicked, not because he is negligent, but because he is dishonest in not caring about the truth of his statement. In the first case it is the knowledge of the falsehood, in the second it is the wicked indifference which constitutes the fraud. There seems to have been some sort of idea that * * * whether the man had made the representation, not knowing and not caring whether his statement was true or false, the expression 'not caring' had something to do with his not taking care. But that expression did not mean not taking care to find out whether the statement was true or false. It meant not caring in the man's own heart and conscience whether it was true or false, and that would be wicked indifference and recklessness." It is apparent from the views expressed by the judges in these cases that to establish "fraud" you must prove a dishonest mental state or condition of mind on the part of the speaker with reference to the truthfulness of his statement; that when he makes a statement of fact, intending it to be relied upon, he of necessity affirms his belief in its truth (Smith v. Chadwick, 9 App. Cas. 187, 203; Angus v. Clifford, supra, 470); that if his statement was untrue and he knew it, or he made it without belief in its truth, or with a conscious indifference, not caring whether it was true or false, the wickedness of his mind is manifest, and the fraudulent character of his act established. Shackett v. Bickford, 65 Atl. 252, 253, 74 N. H. 57, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, 124 Am. St. Rep. 933 (citing Mahurin v. Harding, 28 N. H. 128, 59 Am. Dec. 401; Hanson v. Edgerly, 29 N. H. 343; Pettigrew v. Chellis, 41 N. H. 95; Springfield v. Drake, 58 N. H. 19; Rowell v. Chase, 61 N. H. 135; Stewart v. Stearns, 63

Misrepresentation

To constitute deceit and fraud by the use of language, the language need not affirm the existence or nonexistence of something which is untrue. It is sufficient if the language of one party misleads the other as to the existence of a fact and induces him to contract. Marietta Fertilizer Co. v. Beckwith, 61 S. E. 149, 150, 4 Ga. App. 245.

To constitute fraud, a misrepresentation must be of a specific material fact that is untrue and known to be so, and stated for the purpose of inducing another to act, upon which statement the other relies in acting to his injury. Allen v. United Zinc Co., 60 South. 182, 64 Fla. 171.

To constitute "fraud" growing out of representations, the representations must not only knowingly have been false, but they must have been material, and relied on as an inducement to the making of the contract alleged to be vitiated by fraud. Becker v. Colonial Life Ins. Co. (N. Y. Sup.) 138 N. Y. Supp. 491, 493, 153 App. Div. 382.

Three elements must concur to constitute "fraud by false representations": First, there must be a knowingly false representation; second, the plaintiff must have believed it to be true, relied thereon, and have been deceived thereby; and, third, that such representation was a matter relating to the contract about which the representations were made, which if true would have been to plaintiff's advantage, but, being false, caused him damage and injury. Anderson v. Adams, 74 Pac. 215, 217, 43 Or. 621.

Under Rev. Codes, § 5063, providing that a party to a contract may rescind, if his consent was obtained by fraud, or if, through the fault of the other party, the consideration fails, and section 4978, which defines "fraud" as the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the party making it, of what is not true, or any act fitted to deceive, a purchaser of land may rescind, where the vendor unintentionally represented that all of the land to be sold, save a few acres, was on one side of a road, while in reality a large part of it was on the other side of the road, and was rocky land, and not so valuable as the land pointed out by the vendor. Post v. Liberty, 121 Pac. 475, 479, 45 Mont. 1.

A false statement as to title and ownership of land is such "fraud" as will entitle the party deceived to rescind. Actual fraud consists in the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true, made by a party to the contract who does not believe it to be true and with intent to deceive another party thereto or to induce him to enter into the contract. Sonnesyn v. Akin, 104 N. W. 1026, 1036, 14 N. D. 248 (dissenting opinion, citing Rev. Codes 1899, § 3848).

Misrepresentation, to amount to fraud authorizing equity to rescind a contract, must relate to a fact material to the interests of the other party, and must be a representation as to the subject-matter which if true would add substantially to the value or promise of that subject-matter. Crooker v. White, 50 South. 227, 228, 162 Ala. 476.

"To constitute a representation a "fraud," there must be a statement or representation as to a fact existing in the present or the past. An expression of opinion as to what will take place in the future is wanting in all the essential elements which constitute a fraud. Guthrie & Western R. Co. v. Rhodes, 91 Pac. 1119, 1122, 19 Okl. 21, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490.

To constitute fraud by false representations, representation must be of an alleged existing fact, be false in fact, be made with intent to deceive, and the person to whom made must believe it. Scarsdale Pub. Co. v. The Colonial Press v. Carter, 116 N. Y. Supp. 731, 735, 63 Misc. Rep. 271.

"Fraud" consists in false representation of things as facts which are not such or in deceitful concealment of existing facts. A promise is not itself a false and deceitful representation; performance may have been intended when the promise was made. Lowry Nat. Bank v. Hazard, 72 Atl. 889, 890, 223 Pa. 520 (quoting Grove v. Hodges, 55 Pa. 504).

A representation to constitute in law a "fraud" must relate to an existing fact, as distinguished from a promise, and representations regarding existing facts must be relied upon to constitute fraud. Defendant's statement that he would send plaintiff a check on his return home and his failure to do so are a breach of contract, but not such a false representation as to constitute fraud, though he obtained possession of certain lands purchased from plaintiff. Mathews v. Eby, 129 S. W. 1016, 1017, 149 Mo. App. 157.

Where a policy provides that it shall be void in case of any "fraud" or false swearing, an intentional overvaluation of the loss, or any other artifice or deception practiced by the insured with the object of securing some advantage in the adjustment of the loss, and liable to have that effect avoids the policy. F. Dohmen Co. v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 71 N. W. 69, 73, 96 Wis. 38.

An instruction, in an action for "fraud," which defines "fraud" as "a false statement of statements made for the purpose of inducing another to part with money or other valuable things, which statements are calculated to influence the person to whom they are made, and which statements do actually deceive the person to whom they are made and thereby induce him to part with money or other valuable things," correctly defines "fraud" as against the objection that it omits to state that the representation must be material and relate to a fact either present or past. McDonald v. Smith, 102 N. W. 668, 139 Mich. 211.

An allegation that certain representations were made by the grantee, that they were false, and made with intention to deceive plaintiff, and that he relied upon the representations and promises, and therefore executed a conveyance, brings the case within section 1572 of the Civil Code, defining "fraud." Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 95 Cal. 659, 660, 7 Cal. App. 634.

"Fraud," within the contemplation of law, is such as will justify rescission of a contract upon its discovery, the elements of which are said to be that, where one makes a false representation of a material fact, knowing it to be false, with intent to induce a person to whom it is made to rely on it, and this person does rely on it, and is deceived, and peculiarly damaged, it is "fraud" which will avoid the contract. First Nat. Bank of Wellington v. Person, 111 N. W. 730, 731, 101 Minn. 30 (quoting and adopting definition in Riggs v. Thorpe, 69 W. 891, 67 Minn. 217).

"Fraud," as used in equity, arises where a person procures from another a promissory note upon a verbal promise or pledge that it shall not be enforced, and thereafter makes the rule against varying the terms of a written instrument by oral evidence. Brien v. Paterson Brewing & Malting Co., Atl. 437, 442, 69 N. J. Eq. 117.

"A promise made with the intention of performing it constitutes a 'fraud' for which a contract may be rescinded or avoided." Glass v. Glass, 88 Pac. 734, 735, 4 Cal. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupiabe & Water Co., 52 Pac. 995, 120 Cal. 530, Am. St. Rep. 186).

A company was selling stock under a scheme whereby it represented it would insure the maturity of the certificates at certain times and on which the holders could rely in advance of that period, loans from the company thereon, with the result that the owners of some certificates would probably not receive anything thereon. The secretary and president of the company offered to sell certain certificates to a buyer; but the buyer wished a loan before the time that the certificate offered would entitle him to a loan, whereupon they represented that they could secure, from a certificate holder, earlier certificates, on which a loan would earlier mature, if the buyer put up a bonus. The buyer put up the bonus, but received no loan or any part of the money paid in. The certificates sold the buyer were not purchased from any one else, but were unsold certificates. Held, that the transaction was fraudulent and within the rule that false representations must be made with reference to present existing or past facts before fraud can be predicated of them. United States Home Co. v. O'Connor, 110 Pac. 74, 75, 48 Colo. 354.

By Code, § 1620, fraud in deceiving the public or individuals as to a corporation's condition is a misdemeanor, and section 1621 makes the diversion of corporate funds, if any person is injured, and payment of dividends leaving insufficient funds, a fraud within the preceding section. Section 1622 provides that the intentional violation of the two preceding sections shall work a forfeiture of the corporate privileges. Section 1640 empowers courts of equity to close up the business of any corporation on good cause shown and to appoint a receiver therefor. Acts 30th Gen. Assem. 1904, pp. 57, 58, c. 66, § 1, provides that the term "association" as used in the act shall mean any corporation, etc., which issues stock on the installment plan, and the term "stock" shall mean contracts, etc., of any kind upon the installment plan. Section 2 prohibits such an association from issuing stock unless it has procured from the state auditor a certificate and requires it to file with him a statement to procure the certificate, which statement shall be laid before the executive council, which body, by section 3, may direct the issuance of the certificate. Section 4 requires compliance with the act within 60 days after it takes effect. Section 6 requires such association, before doing business, to deposit a bond or securities for performance of contracts, and at the end of the year to deposit with him securities equal to the amount of its liabilities. Section 7 makes any member of such association guilty of a misdemeanor who transacts business without complying with the act. Defendant corporation issued a large number of installment land contracts without complying with chapter 66, and also published false and misleading statements as to its capital and assets, and falsely advertised that it had deposited securities with the state auditor. The money received under the contracts was not invested according to its advertised plan, and its expenses were very largely out of proportion to its revenue. Defendant had no substantial business other than the land contract business, and, while it bought and sold some land, it did not have enough funds to pay its outstanding land contracts, and it did not appear that creditors and stockholders could not be protected upon the dissolution of the corporation. Held, that chapter 66 contemplated the dissolution of an association not complying with its provisions, and, in view of the violations of Code, §§ 1620, 1621, shown, and its failure to comply with chapter 66, the business of the association should be wound up in a suit for that purpose by the state. State ex rel. Mullan v. Syndicate Land Co., 120 N. W. 327, 328, 142 Iowa, 22.

A representation that an option to purchase property at a specified price has been obtained when in fact a rebate from such price is to be made constitutes a "fraud and deceit" where such representation induces others to join in the joint purchase of such property. Vennum v. Palmer, 123 Ill. App. 619, 620.

All modes included

Duress and deceit are simply different methods by which "fraud" is consummated. The same remedies are available to the injured party. Neibuhr v. Gage, 108 N. W. 884, 887, 99 Minn. 149.

Fraud has been defined to be any kind of an artifice by which another is deceived. All surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and other unfair way by which another is cheated, is fraud. Collusion in a court of equity is fraud. In short, fraud is infinite. The suppression of the truth is equivalent to the utterance of a falsehood, and both are fraud. Holt v. King, 47 S. E. 362, 365, 54 W. Va. 441.

Moral turpitude

There can be no "fraud," misrepresentation, or concealment without some moral delinquency. There is no actual "fraud," "legal fraud," which is not also a moral "fraud." This immoral element consists in the necessary guilty knowledge and consequent intent to deceive, sometimes designated by the technical term "scienter." No misrepresentation is fraudulent at law, unless it is made with actual knowledge of its falsity or under such circumstances that the law must necessarily impute such knowledge to the party at the time he makes it. Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 936, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240 (citing Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 2, § 884).

The "frauds" which destroy the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy, within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall not release judgments in actions for fraud or obtaining property by false pretenses or representations, are those connected with the obtaining of property by false pretenses or false representations involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong; and implied fraud, existing without the imputation of bad faith and immorality, is insufficient. Cooper Grocery Co. v. Gaddy (Tex.) 141 S. W. 825, 827.

Negligence distinguished

See Negligence.

Official misconduct or bad faith

Under Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 21, 18 Stat. 190, making the settlement of duties final in the absence of "fraud," it was not fraud by the government, where subordinate customs officers, without notice to importers or instructions from their superior officers, made a change in the method of assessing duties, after years of uniform practice. Gulbenkian v. United States, 175 Fed. 860, 865.

As personal injury

See Personal Injury.

As rendering award void

There are two kinds of "fraud" which will avoid an award of arbitrators: Positive "fraud," as by some act that can be proved, or inferential "fraud," as where the circumstances so strongly point to dishonesty that the court will consider the fact of its existence to be clearly indicated, a common case of which is when the award is obviously and extremely unjust. Perry v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 49 S. E. 889, 890, 137 N. C. 402 (citing Morse, Arb. 539).

As rendering conveyance void

"Fraud," in fraudulent conveyances, is defined as "an act unwarranted in law to the prejudice of third persons, and not that crafty villainy and grossness of deceit to which it is applied in common language." Daugherty v. Bogy, 53 S. W. 542, 549, 3 Ind. T. 197 (quoting and adopting definition of May, Fraud. Conv. p. 94).

The term "fraud" as used in the law of fraudulent conveyances, means facts tending to throw suspicion on a transaction calling for an explanation, an act made to hinder and defraud creditors. In re Duggan, 182 Fed. 252, 255.

The "fraud" contemplated by a statute authorizing an attachment upon the ground of a fraudulent conveyance or disposition of property is actual fraud and not that denominated "fraud in law," or constructive fraud, and an offense which, if fraudulent at all, is constructively so only under the provisions of a statute is not ground for attachment, where it affirmatively appears from the finding of the trial court, that the sale was made in good faith, and no actual fraud was contemplated or practiced. Williams v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Wichita, Kan. 82 Pac. 496, 498, 15 Okl. 477, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 6 Ann. Cas. 970.

As rendering debtor liable to arrest

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 479, subd. 4 providing for the arrest of a defendant in a civil action when he is guilty of "fraud," where an affidavit or order for arrest aver-defendant in a foreign country presented to plaintiff a forged check, and obtained on the value of $6,260, and shortly afterwards took passage for the United States under an assumed name, it sufficiently appears that the defendant has been guilty of fraud, so as to authorize the issuance of an order for defendant's arrest. Ex parte Hoxz, 84 Pac. 229-231, 2 Cal. App. 752.

As rendering instrument void

Fraud, in the inducement of a will, consists of willful, false statements of fact which are intended to and do induce testator to execute the instrument which he does execute with full knowledge of its nature and contents, and, where fraud is in the inducement as distinct from the execution, the same considerations apply to the validity of a will obtained thereby as to a will executed under a mistake of fact. Sanger v. Donald, 112 S. W. 365, 368, 87 Ark. 148.

"'Fraud' is so multifarious as to admit of no rules or definitions, and hence equity leaves the way open to punish frauds and redress wrongs perpetrated by means of them in whatever form they may appear" (quoting and approving Bigelow, Fraud, 14). In each case of fraud dependence must be placed upon the special circumstances surrounding it, and no definite rule can be laid down as to what degree of ignorance of condition of mind will vitiate a contract." But where defendant, an experienced business man, falsely represented to plaintiff, an ignorant man, that a mortgage on her property, yet due, was about to be foreclosed, so that the property would be lost, and because of plaintiff's reliance on such representations induced her to convey to him for $800 property which was worth $1,800, he was guilty of "fraud" justifying the cancellation of the deed. Schaeffer v. Blanc (Tex.) 87 S. W. 746.

"'Fraud' which would relieve a party who has signed a contract without reading as he was able to do, must be 'fraud' which prevented him from reading. Failure to read was not excused because the contract was in the form of a booklet covering 12 pages which would have taken some time to read. Stoddard Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 118 S. E. 915, 916, 122 Ga. 802.

As rendering judgment void

"'Fraud,' which will vitiate a judgment, must be 'fraud' in procuring the judgment, and not 'fraud' in the account upon which the cause of action is instituted. Bolden v. Bullis, 90 Pac. 634, 635, 40 Colo. 253.

The "fraud" for which a judgment may be set aside must be actual fraud involving intentional wrong, as distinguished from legal or constructive fraud. One against whom a decree quieting title has been rendered upon publication service and without actual notice cannot, after the lapse of three years, have the judgment set aside as fraudulent merely by showing that plaintiff's title was based solely upon a tax deed which showed upon its face that it was not effective as a conveyance. Wagner v. Beadle, 108 Pac. 859, 860, 82 Kan. 468.

"'Fraud' is of two kinds with reference to judicial proceedings: Fraud in obtaining the decree by false evidence, and fraud which gives the court colorable jurisdiction over the defendant's person. In the case of fraud of the former kind, the usual rule is that the decree can only be attacked in the original cause and cannot be impeached in a separate and independent proceeding, though it may be attacked collaterally in an independent proceeding where the fraud goes to the jurisdiction of the court. Pratt v. Griffin, 79 N. E. 102, 103, 223 Ill. 349 (citing Caswell v. Caswell, 11 N. E. 342, 120 Ill. 377; Evans v. Woodsworth, 72 N. E. 1082, 213 Ill. 404).

The "fraud" in obtaining a foreign judgment for which equity will enjoin execution of a domestic judgment, founded on the foreign judgment, does not relate to the cause of action, or to evidence adduced before the foreign court, but to deception and downright "fraud" in procuring jurisdiction, or in preventing defendant by fraudulent means from presenting his defense. Wilson v. Anthony, 66 Atl. 907, 908, 72 N. J. Eq. 836.

The "fraud" which authorizes equity to grant relief against a judgment obtained through fraud means the perpetration of an intentional wrong, or the breach of a duty growing out of a fiduciary relation; and it is necessary to show that the fraud was practiced or participated in by the successful party, and that it was actually effective in bringing about the judgment, and that the party seeking equitable relief has a good defense to the action on the merits, and has no other adequate means of obtaining relief against the judgment, and that his situation is not due to his own negligence. One falsely claiming to be a creditor of a decedent procured the appointment of an administrator, and he purchased land belonging to decedent's son at an administrator's sale, and obtained a judgment in ejectment against the son, who was an infant, by his guardian ad litem making no defense. The guardian ad litem did not consult with the son or his mother in regard to his interests in the land. Held, that the probate proceedings resulting in the administrator's sale and the judgment in ejectment were vitiated by fraud, and equity, at the suit of the son, would set the same aside as a cloud on his title. Bowman v. Anderson, 123 Pac. 1092, 1095, 1096, 62 Or. 431.

Where a party, by a statement concerning a transaction with a person since deceased, shown by the party's books to be false, misled another into reliance on the statement in prosecuting an action against the party, who thereby procured a judgment releasing himself from an obligation which otherwise would have been enforced, the party was guilty of "fraud," within Code, § 4091, authorizing the vacation of a judgment for fraud practiced in obtaining the same, justifying the granting of a new trial. Griffith v. Merchants' Life Ass'n, 127 N. W. 1079, 148 Iowa, 727.

"Fraud" perpetrated by means of a judgment is entitled to no more immunity than a fraud perpetrated by any other means. If a judgment, founded upon a just debt, is entered, not for the purpose of securing or collecting the debt, but for the purpose of being used for a cover to protect the defendant's property from his other creditors, the court will denounce it as a 'fraud' and set it aside, as it would any other fraudulent contrivance." Turner v. Kuehnle, 62 Atl. 327, 329, 70 N. J. Eq. 61 (citing Mechanics' Nat. Bank at Newark v. H. C. Burnet Mfg. Co., 33 N. J. Eq. 486; Sculer v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Newark, 35 N. J. Eq. 344; Kirkpatrick v. Corning, 40 N. J. Eq. 241).

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 4197, par. 4, authorizing judgments to be vacated after the term of their rendition for fraud practiced in obtaining the judgment, where a husband leads the wife to believe that he will not prosecute a pending divorce suit, and she, relying on such assurances, makes no defense, it is a fraud "in obtaining the judgment," within the statute, for him to thereafter prosecute the suit to judgment without giving her further opportunity to defend it. Womack v. Womack, 83 S. W. 937, 938, 73 Ark. 281 (citing Nels. Div. § 1052; Scanlan v. Scanlan, 41 Ill. App. 449; Nicholson v. Nicholson, 15 N. E. 223, 113 Ind. 131; Thelin v. Thelin, 8 Ill. App. 421).

As rendering marriage void

That a party to a marriage contract represented himself to be 21 years of age, when in fact he was but 20 years and some months, and that he stated to the other party prior to the marriage ceremony that she need not leave her home; that the fact of marriage would make no difference in her circumstances or condition, and that she could always continue to reside at her home as formerly, did not constitute such fraud as to authorize an annulment of the marriage, under Domestic Relations Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 14) § 7, subd. 4, declaring a marriage void from the time its nullity is declared if either party consent to the marriage by reason of force or fraud, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1743, giving an action for the annulment of such a marriage. Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. Supp. 875, 71 Misc. Rep. 590.

Undue influence distinguished

"Undue influence is not the same thing as fraud. One may exist without the other. Undue influence may, however, be exerted by means of fraud. 'Fraud, is a distinct head of objection from importunity and undue influence. Importunity and undue influence may be fraudulently exerted, but they are not inseparably connected with fraud." In Snowball's Estate, 107 Pac. 598, 600, 157 Cal. 301 (citing Davis v. Calvert [Md.] 5 Gill & J. 269, 25 Am. Dec. 282; Powell v. Plant [Miss.] 23 South. 399; Eckert v. Flowry, 43 Pa. 46; Robinson v. Robinson, 53 Atl. 253, 203 Pa. 400).

"'Fraud' on a testator consists in making that which is false appear to him to be true, and so affecting his will. Fraud need not be attended with undue influence, except in so far as the misrepresentation amounts to influence. There need be no pressure such as is necessary to constitute influence. Wetz v. Schneider, 78 S. W. 394, 396, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 201 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bigelow, Frauds, p. 571).

Generally the same considerations control when a testator is unduly influenced by misrepresentations and artifices usually comprehended by the term "fraud," although in strictness "fraud" and "undue influence" are distinguishable more often than otherwise, and is a mere matter of choice of terms. In the one case the mind of testator is so overmastered that another will is substituted for his own. In the other he is in a sense a free agent, but is deceived into acting upon false data. Something sinister is involved which perverts the testator's will by overcoming his power truly to express his real desires. To destroy the validity of a will, the "undue influence" must amount to coercion, compulsion, or restraint, which destroys the testator's free agency, and by overcoming his power of resistance obliges him to adopt the will of another instead of exercising his own. Ginter v. Ginter, 101 Pac. 634, 640, 79 Kan. 721, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024 (citing Terry Buffington, 11 Ga. 337, 56 Am. Dec. 423; re Shell's Estate, 63 Pac. 413, 28 Colo. 167, 1 L. R. A. 387, 89 Am. St. Rep. 181).

FRAUD IN FACT

"There is no difference in principle between 'fraud in fact' and 'fraud in law.' Where the direct and inevitable consequence of an act is to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, the presumption at once conclusive arises that such illegal object furnished one of the motives for doing it, and it is upon this ground held to be fraudulent." Pu St. c. 206, § 9, authorizing a writ of arrest issue against a debtor who has committed fraud in the concealment or disposition of his property, applies whether the fraud is actual or constructive. Eichenberg v. Marx, 26 Atl. 46, 48, 18 R. I. 169 (quoting with approval from Bump, Fraud. Conv. [Ed. 1875] p. 71).

FRAUD IN LAW

A "fraud in law" is a false affirmation of fact, and not a mere promise or matter

vention, and a statement of a matter in the future must, to be a fraud, amount to an assertion of a fact and not an agreement to do something in the future, so that one making a promise to do something in the future at a time he did not intend to perform is not guilty of fraud in law. Miller v. Sutliff, 89 E. 651, 652, 241 Ill. 521, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5.

In order to constitute presumptive fraud, "fraud in law," as against a creditor of a donor, three elements must be proved: A voluntary gift; a then existing or contemplated indebtedness against the donor; and that the donor did not retain sufficient property to pay the indebtedness. State Bank of Clinton v. Barnett, 95 N. E. 178, 181, 250 Ill. 312.

To impeach a transaction for fraud of one of the parties, it is not necessary that the fraud complained of be the sole cause of the making of the contract, but it is sufficient if it forms one factor in the transaction; and in an action for personal injuries, and to set aside a settlement as having been fraudulently obtained through misrepresentations as to extent of plaintiff's injuries, an instruction to find for defendants, if plaintiff is induced to make the settlement and execute a release because of his financial need and anxiety to go home to his family, is properly refused, where there was evidence of misrepresentations as well as of matters covered by the requested instruction, for "fraud in law" does not consist alone in false representations, but is as varied as the conditions under which it may rise. Texas & Ry. Co. v. Jowers (Tex.) 110 S. W. 946, 111.

"Fraud in law" is of two kinds: Actual and constructive. The former arises from deception practiced by means of the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; the latter from a rule of public policy, or the confidential or fiduciary relation which one of the parties affected by the fraud sustained towards the other. It is a constituent of actual fraud that the party alleged to have been defrauded was deceived. No positive dishonesty of purpose is required to show constructive fraud. Parsons v. Balaban, 109 N. W. 136, 138, 129 Wis. 311 (citing Forker v. Brown, 80 N. Y. Supp. 827, 133).

FRAUD IN MANAGEMENT

The phrase "fraud in management," Reynolds 1894, c. 235, § 5, providing that a joint-stock association shall not be dissolved except in pursuance of its articles of association, or by consent of all its stockholders, or by judgment of a court, for "fraud in its management," or for good cause shown, was previously meant to refer to a case of fraud in the management which would tend to defeat the rights of the stockholders in violation of and contrary to the spirit of the agreement of association, or result in a wrongful diversion or spoliation of the assets. Colton v. Raymond, 85 N. Y. Supp. 210, 214, 41 Misc. Rep. 580.

FRAUD OF CREDITORS

See Assignment in Fraud of Creditors;
Money Paid in Fraud of Creditors.

FRAUDULENT—FRAUDULENTLY

See Deem Fraudulent.

"Fraudulent" means using fraud, trickery or deceit; dishonest. Adams v. Barber, 139 S. W. 489, 494, 157 Mo. App. 370.

"It is a general rule of pleading that, in alleging fraud, the facts which constitute such fraud must be stated. To characterize an act as 'fraudulent' does not in legal effect charge it as fraudulent unless some circumstance or fact be charged which shows in what the fraud consists, and how it has been effected." An allegation in a complaint in a suit to restrain the collection of taxes that the board of equalization without inquiry arbitrarily raised plaintiff's assessment with the design of forcing him to pay an unequal portion of the taxes, but without averring an excessive valuation of his property, does not allege a legal fraud. County of Cochise v. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co., 71 Pac. 946, 949, 8 Ariz. 221.

Where a person states of his own knowledge material facts with an intent that the other party shall act upon such statement, the statement, if false, is fraudulent both in morals and law. Atlas Shoe Co. v. Bechard, 66 Atl. 390, 393, 102 Me. 197, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245.

The words "fraud" and "fraudulently" have a well-defined and known meaning in law, and defendant, in a prosecution under Ky. St. 1903, § 1228, making it an offense for any one to fraudulently or willfully destroy a corner tree or corner stone of a survey, is presumed to and must have been known that by the use of the word "fraudulently," in an indictment under such statute, he was charged with destroying the corner tree with the wrongful intent and purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage and securing for himself or another the lands or property of some other person. Commonwealth v. Gregory, 89 S. W. 477, 121 Ky. 458.

The terms "fraudulent," "false," and "willful," in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, 26 Stat. 135, providing for forfeiture of imports entered by means of a fraudulent or false invoice, imply the necessity of a guilty scienter and intent to constitute the offense, and, where merchandise is mistakenly entered by a person on an invoice fraudulently made out by the foreign shipper, a forfeiture is not warranted. United States v. Twenty Boxes of Cheese, 163 Fed. 369, 371.

Pertinacious zeal to secure the payment of a just debt is not "fraudulent." Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 Pac. 42, 44, 12 Cal. App. 572.

That a hotel corporation was unable to pay its debts as they became due when bonds issued by it and given to subscribers of its stock at par as a bonus to secure the subscriptions did not make the issuance of the bonds fraudulent as to creditors, under Civ. Code, § 3442, providing that a voluntary transfer or incumbrance of property without valuable consideration by one while insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, shall be fraudulent as to existing creditors. McKee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 113 Pac. 140, 144, 159 Cal. 206.

Act March 3, 1839 (5 Stat. 354, c. 88, § 7), relating to patents, provides that the same shall be void if the invention covered thereby was in public use more than two years before the application was filed, and under the statutes the invalidity is brought about by such use unless it appears that the use was "fraudulent." Held, that the word "fraudulent" means fraudulently obtained; obtained by suppression or concealment of facts; surreptitious. The word "fraudulent," in this connection, means acts done clandestinely, treacherously, and by means of falsehood or breach of trust. Eastman v. City of New York, 134 Fed. 844, 852, 69 C. C. A. 628.

The words "unlawfully," "willfully," "fraudulently," and "feloniously," in an indictment, include the word "wrongfully." State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 162, 118 La. 547 (citing State v. Brown, 6 South. 541, 41 La. 345; Marr's Criminal Jurisprudence of Louisiana, verbo "Indictment," p. 865, subd. "The Words of the Statute").

The word "fraudulently" in an indictment alleging that accused unlawfully, wrongfully, fraudulently, etc., took certain property from the owner by force, implies an intent to steal. Holland v. State, 68 S. E. 861, 862, 8 Ga. App. 202.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1726, making guilty of forgery one who, with intent to defraud, shall "make any false entry" or shall "falsely alter any entry" in the books of account of a banking corporation, an indictment charging that defendant did feloniously alter, etc., the books, etc., and that "said felonious, fraudulent changes," etc., were made, etc., was defective in not charging that the entry was falsely altered; the word "false" distinctly characterizing a wrongful act known to involve an error or untruth, while the word "fraudulent" relates, not to the act done, but to the intent with which it was done, and the word "falsely" as used in the statute not only imparting an element of fraud or bad faith, but also relating to the act done. Quertermous v. State, 127 S. W. 951, 952, 95 Ark. 48.

Where a clerk in the office of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes in Muskogee, Ind. T., appointed by the commissioner acting for and on behalf of the Secretary of the Interior, who kept the Creek roll in his office, took the roll from the office with the intent to make a copy thereof, the taking was fraudulent within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5408, providing a punishment for any officer having the custody of any record filed in his office, or deposited with him, or in his custody, who fraudulently takes it away or destroys it. Martin v. United States, 104 S. W. 678, 680, 7 Ind. T. 451.

The word "fraudulently," as used in Rev. St. § 2987, providing that if any warehoused merchandise shall be fraudulently concealed in or removed from any public or private warehouse, etc., means that the acts must be done with an intent to evade the law; the intent being fully alleged. United States v. Ehr Gott, 182 Fed. 267, 270.

An attempt or an intent to injure the rights or interests of another, or an effort to so injure or alter some of them, is essential to a fraud, and, without such an attempt or effect, an act cannot be done "fraudulently" under Rev. St. § 5408. Martin v. United States, 168 Fed. 198, 204, 93 C. C. A. 484.

An information sufficiently charged the offense of fraudulently attempting to vote within the primary election law (Laws 1901, p. 149 [Ann. St. 1906, §§ 7162—1 to 7162—26]), where the offense was charged in the language of the statute, specified the essential details concerning the election, the ward, election district, date, and particular polling place, and substantially charged that accused unlawfully and willfully attempted to vote on the name of a specified person who resided at a specified place as though accused were a duly registered and qualified voter residing at such place. State v. Doe, alias Hill, 129 S. W. 713, 714, 150 Mo. App. 185.

FRAUDULENT AFFIDAVIT

Where the statements made in an affidavit in support of a pension claim are true, it is not a "false or fraudulent affidavit," the making of which constitutes a crime, under Rev. St. § 4746, merely because it was not in fact sworn to on the date shown in the notary's certificate. United States v. Wood, 127 Fed. 171, 173.

FRAUDULENT CERTIFICATE

Alteration of a certificate for an independent nomination for a public office without the signers' consent by pasting over the name of the proposed candidate a sticker containing the name of another person constituted a fraudulent and forged certificate within Election Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 17) § 123, rendering the certificate void, though the person first named in the certificate was discovered to be ineligible and the chairman of the county committee acted in good faith and under the advice of the law committee of his party in making the alteration, and though the certificate purported to authorize a certain committee to fill vacancies. In re Shook, 137 N. Y. Supp. 834, 836, 8 Misc. Rep. 89.

The duplication of names, whether intentional or not, upon the sheets filed for an independent certificate of nomination, is fraudulent within Election Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 17) § 123, providing that no separate sheet comprising an independent certificate of nomination shall be received and filed if 5 per cent. of the names thereon are fraudulent, and such names cannot be counted in either place in which they appear. In re Objections to Nomination Certificate of Sallee for Mayor of City of Cohoes, 137 N. Y. Supp. 957, 958, 78 Misc. Rep. 84.

FRAUDULENT CLAIM

A "fraudulent claim" against the government is a false or fictitious claim, gotten up or contrived by some person or persons with the design or purpose to deceive or defraud the government or its departments or officers in Washington, or to present it for approval or payment. Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577, 594, 72 C. C. A. 145.

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT

Concealment becomes fraudulent only when it is the duty of the party having knowledge of the facts to discover them to the other. Arkins v. Arkins, 77 Pac. 256, 157, 20 Colo. App. 123.

"There may be such relations between the parties that silence or the nondisclosure of a material fact will be a 'fraudulent concealment.' If a person standing in a special relation of trust and confidence to another has information concerning property and contracts with the other, and does not disclose his exclusive knowledge, the contract may be avoided. Mere silence under such circumstances becomes fraudulent concealment." Pitman v. Holmes, 78 S. W. 961, 963, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 485 (quoting Perry, Trusts, 178).

"A 'fraudulent concealment' is the suppression of something which the party is bound to disclose. To constitute fraud the intent to deceive must clearly appear. The mere relation of principal and surety does not require the voluntary disclosure of all the material facts in all cases." In an action against a surety on a bond conditioned on the principal therein performing his agreement as an agent of the obligee, the surety alleged that his signature was obtained by the misrepresentation of the obligee as to the character of the principal and the fraudulent concealment of the fact that the principal, while in the employ of the obligee, had committed forgery. The evidence failed to show that the principal had committed forgery, and the obligee had no knowledge of the fact that the surety was to be a surety on the bond until after it had been delivered. As the obligee was not bound, in the absence of inquiries from a surety, to communicate to him the circumstances that might affect his undertaking, there was no concealment sufficient to discharge the surety. Wright v. German Brewing Co., 63 Atl. 807, 808, 103 Md. 377 (quoting and adopting definition in Magee v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 98, 23 L. Ed. 609).

A "fraudulent concealment" is the suppression of something which the party is bound to disclose. Sherman v. Harbin, 100 N. W. 629, 631, 125 Iowa, 174 (citing Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 99, 23 L. Ed. 699).

A fraudulent concealment is the intentional concealment of some fact known to defendant which it is material for plaintiff to know to prevent being defrauded; the concealment of a fact which one is bound to disclose being the equivalent of an indirect representation that such fact does not exist, and differing from a direct false statement only in the mode by which it is made. T. O. Power & Bro. v. Turner, 97 Pac. 950, 955, 87 Mont. 521.

While a purchaser, who stands on an equal footing with the seller as to access to means of obtaining knowledge of the value of the thing sold, is not bound to disclose any knowledge he may have on the subject, if in addition to keeping silent as to such knowledge he makes any statement which tends affirmatively to the suppression of the truth, or is calculated to deceive the seller, or to distract his attention from the real facts, his concealment becomes fraudulent and will afford ground for a rescission of the sale. Defendant purchased from the receiver of a national bank for $25 a judgment held by the bank against a deceased debtor, amounting to over $9,000. At the time of the sale, the bank held, as collateral to the judgment, an assignment of a claim in favor of the debtor against an insolvent firm whose assets were being administered by the court, which was of considerable value, and on which a dividend had been declared, and was then payable, amounting to nearly $900. Defendant knew of this collateral, but the receiver did not, having succeeded prior receivers who had lost the evidence of the transfer, and there being nothing on the receivers' books to put him on inquiry. Nor did the record in the insolvency case show that the bank was the owner of the claim. The receiver lived at a distance, and the negotiations for the purchase were conducted by correspondence, in which defendant made no mention of the collateral, but stated his understanding that the debtor had died insolvent after going through bankruptcy, and suggested that the claim would soon be barred by limitation, and that if handled at once a small sum might be realized, but even that was very doubtful. Held, that such statements and suggestions amounted to an active and "fraudulent concealment" of the facts, and entitled the receiver to a rescission of the sale. Files v. Rankin, 153 Fed. 537, 541, 82 C. C. A. 491.

In order to establish a fraudulent "concealment" by a bankrupt of property belonging to his estate from his trustee, which will deprive him of his right to a discharge under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, §§ 14b (1), 29b (1), 30 Stat. 550, 554, it must appear that the property in fact belonged to him at the time of the bankruptcy. The fact that it had previously been fraudulently transferred, if the transfer was actual, and not colorable, and placed it beyond the reach of the bankrupt, is not made by the act a ground for refusing a discharge. In re Hammerstein, 189 Fed. 37, 38, 110 C. C. A. 472.

Of cause of action

Where it was the duty of defendants to make known a breach of trust in paying funds to a receiver in violation of the order of the court and a failure to disclose such fact with fraudulent intent, it constituted a "fraudulent concealment" of the facts giving rise to the cause of action and tolled the statute. American Nat. Bank of Macon v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 63 S. E. 622, 623, 131 Ga. 854, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962.

The "fraudulent concealment" avoiding the running of the statute of limitations must go beyond mere silence, and must be something actually done or said which is directly intended to prevent discovery. State ex rel. Bell v. Yates, 132 S. W. 672, 674, 231 Mo. 276; Same v. Grant, 132 S. W. 676, 231 Mo. 292.

Under Code, § 3448, providing that, in actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake, the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until the fraud complained of shall have been discovered by the party aggrieved, "fraudulent concealment" by a trustee is the same as active fraud, and where the fiduciary relation exists, as in the case of the promoters of a corporation and the company, mere silence upon the part of the agent or trustee is "fraudulent concealment" and will be deemed as continuing to avoid the statute of limitations. Caffee v. Berkley, 118 N. W. 267, 269, 141 Iowa, 344.

A mere statement that a holder had no knowledge of the existence of the cause of action does not amount to a statement that the person liable has "fraudulently concealed the cause of action," within Hurd's Rev. St. 1901, c. 83, § 22, providing that, if a person liable to an action fraudulently conceals the cause of such action from the knowledge of the person entitled thereto, the action may be commenced any time within five years after the person entitled to bring the same discovers he has such cause of action, and therefore such statement is not sufficient to prevent the application of the statute of limitations. Parmelee v. Price, 70 N. E. 725, 730, 208 Ill. 544 (citing Conner v. Goodman, 104 Ill. 365).

FRAUDULENT CONTRACT

A "fraudulent contract," within the statute making a "fraudulent contract" a ground for divorce, is not necessarily one rendering the marriage void ab initio. The fraud which makes the contract fraudulent is a fraud in law and upon the law, and hence one induced by fraudulent concealment to marry an epileptic, forbidden by Pub. Acts 1895, p. 667, c. 325, to marry, is entitled to a divorce on the ground of "fraudulent contract." Gould v. Gould, 61 Atl. 604, 607, 78 Conn. 242, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531.

FRAUDULENT CONVERSION

Where, on a trial for a violation of Pen. Code 1895, § 194, providing that, if any person intrusted with money shall fraudulently convert the same, he shall be punished as therein prescribed, the court repeatedly instructed that the evidence must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, the "fraudulent conversion" of the money intrusted to defendant, it was not necessary to go beyond the statutory definition, and further charge that the conversion must have been with intent to steal; a "fraudulent conversion," in the statutory definition of the offense, being synonymous with "taking with intent to steal" in ordinary larceny. Hagood v. State, 62 S. E. 641, 744, 5 Ga. App. 80.

A foot race was arranged between H. and W.; one T. being H.'s backer, and defendant G. being W.'s backer. Prosecutor gave T. a sum of money to bet on the race, on the latter's promise that it, or an equivalent sum, should be returned, whatever the outcome of the contest; prosecutor not intending to part with his money. The money was placed in a satchel, and after the race G. and W. claimed the same, and it was turned over to them. Held, that such acts constituted "theft," as defined by White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 858, and not "swindling" or "fraudulent conversion by a bailee," though the money was obtained by fraudulent pretext. Glasgow v. State, 100 S. W. 933, 935, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 635.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE

The "fraud" contemplated by a statute authorizing an attachment upon the ground of a "fraudulent conveyance" or disposition of property is actual fraud and not that denominated "fraud in law," or constructive fraud, and an offense which, if fraudulent at all, is constructively so only under the provisions of a statute is not ground for attachment, where it affirmatively appears, from the finding of the trial court, that the sale was made in good faith, and no actual fraud was contemplated or practiced. Williams v.

Fourth Nat. Bank of Wichita, Kan., 82 Pac. 496, 498, 15 Okl. 477, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 6 Ann. Cas. 970.

It is the intent and purpose with which the debtor acts that renders the conveyance "fraudulent," and this must be determined by the facts of each particular case. Peyton v. Webb (Ky.) 96 S. W. 839, 840 (citing O'Kane v. Vinnedge, 55 S. W. 711, 108 Ky. 34; Rose v. Campbell [Ky.] 76 S. W. 505; Frazer v. Frisbie Furniture Co. [Ky.] 86 S. W. 539).

The term "fraudulent conveyance," as used in Rev. St. 1909, § 6360, providing that when any person shall testify, either as a party or as a witness, in any suit or proceeding, his testimony shall not be used as evidence to prove any fact in any suit or prosecution against him for any penalty for violating any law in relation to fraudulent conveyance of property, referred only to fraud of a grantor or vendor against the right of his creditors or purchasers from him, and such section did not preclude the introduction in evidence, in a prosecution for false pretenses in securing a deed, of a deposition given by him in a civil suit to set aside a deed wherein he did not object to testifying on the ground that his answers might incriminate him. State v. Marion, 138 S. W. 491, 497, 235 Mo. 359.

The legal effect of Const. 1874, art. 9, § 3, providing that the homestead of a husband or head of a family shall not be subject to the lien of any judgment, etc., is that fraud cannot be predicated of a conveyance of the homestead, for the creditor could not have reached that with his execution if it had been retained. As to exempt property, there are, within the meaning of the statute of frauds, no creditors, and, as there is no restraint upon the debtor against selling or conveying such property, the motives with which such transfers are made do not concern the creditor. The debtor may sell, exchange, or give it away, and his creditor has no just cause of complaint, for, being exempt, it is no more beyond his reach after transfer than it was before. In such alienations there may be a bad motive, but no illegal act constituting a "fraudulent conveyance" as to the creditor. Gibson v. Barrett, 87 S. W. 435, 75 Ark. 206.

Under Ky. St. 1908, § 1907, declaring that a transfer of any of his estate by a debtor without valuable consideration shall be null as to his then existing liabilities, a voluntary conveyance by one indebted at the time is presumptively a "fraudulent conveyance" as to the existing creditors, irrespective of the intentions of the debtor or the amount conveyed, but, as to subsequent debts, a creditor assailing voluntary conveyance must show circumstances justifying the presumption that the intent of the conveyance was fraudulent before the land conveyed can be subjected to the payment of subsequent debts. Standifer v. Baker (Ky.) 101 S. W. 365, 366.

A conveyance by a debtor of property in which his creditors have and can have no interest or concern is not fraudulent as to such creditors; hence a conveyance by a debtor and his wife of property bought with the wife's money, the title to which was taken in the husband's name, is not "fraudulent" as to the husband's creditors. Matador Land & Cattle Co. v. Cooper, 87 S. W. 235, 236, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

A "fraudulent conveyance" is no conveyance as against the interests intended to be defrauded. Salemonson v. Thompson, 101 N. W. 320, 324, 13 N. D. 182 (quoting and adopting language of Chancellor Kent from Sands v. Codwise [N. Y.] 4 Johns. 536, 4 Am. Dec. 308).

A "fraudulent conveyance" is no conveyance against the interest intended to be defrauded, and a creditor recovering judgment and levying on and selling land fraudulently conveyed by the debtor prior to the rendition of the judgment may recover the land in ejectment by virtue of his deed of purchase at the execution sale, without first going into equity to set aside the fraudulent conveyance. Ward v. Sturdivant, 98 S. W. 690, 692, 81 Ark. *73.

A creditor's bill to reach the debtor's property alleged a large overdue indebtedness by the principal defendant and a conveyance by him of his property upon an inadequate consideration and a distribution of large sums of money out of this consideration among other defendants without account to him, and either without any indebtedness to them or an indebtedness grossly insufficient to justify the payments to them, that a specific intent to defraud tainted every part of the transaction, and that it resulted from the execution of a design in which all the defendants participated with the purpose of profiting out of property which ought to have gone to payment of debts of the principal debtor, who, during the execution of the scheme, was secreted from his creditors. Held, on demurrer, that the bill alleged a "fraudulent conveyance," within R. L. c. 159, § 3, cl. 8, allowing a suit in equity to reach and apply in payment of a debt property conveyed by a debtor to defraud creditors. Hutchins v. Nickerson, 98 N. E. 791, 793, 212 Mass. 118.

Where, by force of a statute, the effect of a conveyance is to create a statutory lien in favor of a particular creditor, and the conveyance is otherwise valid and sufficient to pass a title to the purchaser, such a transfer cannot properly be denominated a "fraudulent conveyance" or a conveyance which is held void as against creditors of such debtor by the laws of the state. Sellers v. Hayes, 72 N. E. 119, 122, 163 Ind. 422.

FRAUDULENT INTENT

"It does not necessarily follow that a party intends fraud because he deliberately commits an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another. The 'unlawful act' may be an act of personal violence intended simply to injure the person, or it may be intended only to injure the character and in no way directed at the property or property rights of the person. In any of these instances it would be very difficult to adduce a 'fraudulent purpose' from the act." People v. Jackson, 71 Pac. 566, 567, 138 Cal. 462.

A false representation does not amount to fraud at law unless it be made with a "fraudulent intent." There is, however, a "fraudulent intent" if a man, either with a view of benefiting himself or misleading another into a course of action, makes a representation which he knows to be false or which he does not believe to be true. In re Collins, 157 Fed. 120, 126 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooper v. Schlesinger, 4 Sup. Ct. 360, 111 U. S. 148, 28 L. Ed. 382).

"Fraudulent intent" is a mere state or condition of mind and constitutes an ultimate fact in the definition of any offense of which it is made an ingredient. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7254A, declaring a punishment against any person who shall obtain food, lodging, entertainment, or other accommodations at an inn with intent to defraud the owner or keeper thereof, shows that the subject-matter to which the fraudulent intent relates is the price or value of the accommodations. Clark v. State, 84 N. E. 984, 985, 171 Ind. 104, 16 Ann. Cas. 1229.

FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATION

See, also, False Representation; Fraud; Fraudulent Representation; Misrepresentation.

"It is said in Bigelow on Frauds, 466, that a 'fraudulent misrepresentation' is made up of five elements: (1) A false representation. (2) Knowledge by the person who made it of its falsity. (3) Ignorance of its falsity by the person to whom it was made. (4) The intention that it should be acted upon. (5) Acting upon it, with damage. An action at law for damages for deceit requires all these elements. In equity a case may be made without the second, and sometimes without the fifth. Very nearly the same enumeration of the elements going to make up a fraudulent misrepresentation is given in 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 357." Pomeroy lays down this rule (2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 357): "A misrepresentation, in order to constitute fraud, must contain the following essential elements: (1) Its form as a statement of fact. (2) Its purpose of inducing the other party to act. (3) Its untruth. (4) The knowledge or belief of the party making it. (5) The belief, trust, and reliance of the one to whom it is made. (6) Its materiality." The same rule is announced in Lahay v. City Nat. Bank, 25 Pac. 704, 15

Colo. 339, 22 Am. St. Rep. 407, and Connell v. El Paso Gold M'n. & Mill. Co., 78 Pac. 677, 33 Colo. 30. The rule is thus stated in 8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 901: "As a general rule, false representations not being fraudulent or actionable unless made with knowledge of their falsity, or stated as the truth when the person has no knowledge on the subject, scienter must be expressly alleged in a declaration or complaint for false representation and deceit, or specific allegations must be used which sufficiently import knowledge." And cases cited. The specific allegations referred to in the last above quotation, which will import knowledge upon examination of the cases cited, are found to be allegations to the effect that the defendant falsely and fraudulently represented, etc.; it being held that the word "fraudulently" included scienter. Colorado Springs Co. v. Wight, 96 Pac. 820, 821, 44 Colo. 179, 16 Ann. Cas. 644 (quoting Wheeler v. Dunn, 22 Pac. 827, 833, 13 Colo. 428, 436).

If a statement of fact actually untrue is made by a person who honestly believes it to be true, but under such circumstances that the duty of knowing the truth rests upon him, which if fulfilled would have prevented him from making the statement, such misrepresentation is fraudulent in equity. Tolley v. Poteet, 57 S. E. 811, 819, 62 W. Va. 231.

FRAUDULENT PREFERENCE

"To constitute a 'fraudulent preference' by an insolvent debtor, the preference must be an advantage actually given to one or more creditors over the others, with the knowledge of his situation and the intent to accomplish this end; and there must be guilty collusion." Bacon v. Merchants' Bank, 40 South. 413, 146 Ala. 521 (quoting and adopting definition in Brandenburg, Bank 344).

FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATION

See, also, False Representation; Fraud; Fraudulent Misrepresentation; Misrepresentation.

While a promise to do an act in the future cannot be untrue at the time it is made, if made in bad faith and with no intention of performing, it constitutes a "fraudulent representation." McLaughlin v. Thomas, 85 Atl. 370, 372, 86 Conn. 252.

A representation "fraudulently" made is one made both with intent to deceive and to defraud. "To defraud" necessarily includes "to deceive," and one cannot be defrauded unless he is deceived in some respects. Isaacs v. State, 68 S. E. 338, 339, 7 Ga. App. 799.

"The general principles applicable to cases of 'fraudulent representation' are well settled. * * * The representation must be in regard to a material fact, must be false, and must be acted upon by the other erty in ignorance of its falsity, and with a reasonable belief that it was true. It must be the very ground on which the transaction took place, although it is not necessary that it should have been the sole cause, if it were proximate, immediate, and material. If the purchaser investigates for himself, and nothing is done to prevent his investigation from being as full as he chooses, he cannot say that he relied on the vendor's representations." Where defendants, who had knowledge of engineering, before contracting to construct certain waterworks went on the ground, occupied a month in making investigations, preliminary surveys, etc., and were afforded every opportunity to acquire knowledge of the exact conditions, they were not entitled to defend an action for breach of the contract on the ground that they were induced to make it by plaintiff's false representations. Smith & Benham v. Curran & Mussey, 138 Fed. 150, 157 (quoting with approval from Farrar v. Churchill, 10 Sup. Ct. 1, 135 U. S. 609, 34 L. Ed. 246; citing Trunsworth v. Duffner, 12 Sup. Ct. 164, 142 U. S. 43, 35 L. Ed. 931; Shappirio v. Goldring, 24 Sup. Ct. 259, 192 U. S. 232, 48 L. Ed. 9).

The essentials of "fraudulent representations" are that the representations shall not only be false but fraudulent, and they must be made by one who either knows them to be false or else, not knowing, asserts them to be true, and made with intent to have the other party act on them to his injury, and which must be their effect. A vendor of goods goes on, with design to cheat the vendee, changing the price marks on the goods, or, knowing that they do not correctly show the cost, falsely represents to the vendee that they do correctly show such cost, is liable where the vendee, relying on such representations, is deceived to his injury, though the latter, by proper diligence, could have discovered the misrepresentation. Mason v. R. M. Thornton & Co., 183 S. W. 1043, 1049, 74 Ark. 46 (citing Louana Molasses Co. v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co., 84 S. W. 1047, 73 Ark. 542).

A fraudulent representation is one which is either knowingly untrue or made without belief in its truth, or recklessly made, and in each case made for the purpose of inducing action upon it. Sallies v. Johnson, 81 Atl. 4, 976, 85 Conn. 77, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386.

A statement to be "fraudulent" must not only be false, but the party making it must have known that it was false when he made it and made it with the design to induce an action by another who relied thereon. Security Sav. Bank of Wellman v. Smith, 22 N. W. 825, 828, 144 Iowa, 203.

Before a representation will be considered "fraudulent" in law so as to give a right of action, it must be made relative to a matter susceptible of accurate knowledge, must be a statement importing knowledge on the part of the person making the representation, and it must be relied on as such. Ryan v. Batchelor, 129 S. W. 787, 788, 95 Ark. 375.

An allegation, in an accusation for being a common cheat and swindler, that representations were fraudulent, is a sufficient statement that such representations were made with intent to defraud. Crawford v. State, 62 S. E. 501, 504, 4 Ga. App. 789.

Where a person states to another that which he knows to be false, or recklessly states that which he does not know to be true concerning a material matter, and the person to whom the statement is made is justified by the circumstances in relying on it without further investigation or inquiry, it is in law a "fraudulent representation." Goodwin v. Fall, 66 Atl. 727, 730, 102 Me. 353.

Where defendant represented monthly dividends to be about $72, and made remittances as such by personal checks in amounts greater even than this, which amounts plaintiff accepted for, and believed were, the actual dividends, when in fact the actual dividends were about $40, a purchase of additional stock upon such belief was upon "fraudulent representations." Gilluly v. Hosford, 88 Pac. 1027, 1029, 45 Wash. 594.

"Fraudulent representations" sufficient to authorize the cancellation of a deed made pursuant to a contract must be material to the contract or transaction to be avoided and must be made by one who either knows them to be false, or, not knowing, asserts them to be true, and they must be made with intent to have the other party act on them to his injury, and such must have been their effect. Evatt v. Hudson, 183 S. W. 1023, 1025, 97 Ark. 265.

Under the statute making it swindling to acquire property by any false or deceitful pretense or device or "fraudulent representation," an indictment for swindling, that does not allege that defendant knew the representation was false, was defective, though it characterized the representation as false and "fraudulent." Doxey v. State, 84 S. W. 1061, 1062, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 503, 11 Ann. Cas. 830.

FRAUDULENT TAKING

On a trial for theft, an instruction that by "fraudulent taking" is meant that the person taking knew at the time of taking that the property was not his own, that the property was taken without the consent of the owner, and with intent to deprive the owner of the value thereof and to appropriate it to the use or benefit of the person taking, was correct. McCoy v. State, 120 S. W. 858, 859, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 551.

FRAUDULENT TRANSFER

A "preference," within the bankruptcy act, is not the same as a "fraudulent transfer" of a bankrupt's assets. In a preferential transfer, the fraud is technical and infringes the rule of equal distribution among all creditors which it is the policy of the court to enforce when all cannot be fully paid, while in a "fraudulent transfer" the fraud is actual in that the bankrupt has secured an advantage for himself out of what should belong to his creditors. Where a bankrupt with knowledge of insolvency assigns certain accounts to secure advances from a banker and at once uses the money so obtained to pay favored creditors, the transaction while constituting a "preference," shows no intent to defraud except inferentially by a preferential payment, and therefore is not a "fraudulent transfer" prohibited by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67e, 30 Stat. 564. Van Iderstine v. National Discount Co., 174 Fed. 518, 519, 521, 98 C. C. A. 300 (4), (5).

In a "fraudulent transfer" of a bankrupt's assets, within the bankruptcy act, the fraud is actual, in that the bankrupt has secured an advantage for himself out of what in law should belong to his creditors, while a preferential transfer consists in the infraction of the rule of equal distribution among all creditors. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Elsey-Hemphill Carriage Co., 133 S. W. 412, 415, 152 Mo. App. 401.

FRAUDULENT USE OF THE MAILS

The fact that a circular sent out by mail by a commission merchant to advertise his business contained some exaggerations as to his facilities for handling property consigned to him, or that he failed to settle with some of his patrons, is not sufficient to establish a scheme or artifice to defraud, which will support an indictment under Rev. St. § 5480, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, c. 393, § 1, 25 Stat. 873, for "fraudulent use of the mails." Faulkner v. United States, 157 Fed. 840, 841, 85 C. C. A. 204.

FREE

The word "free," in a contract of sale which requires the buyer to pay a specified price f. o. b. cars at his place of business in this country, or laid down at his place of business, or "free" at his place of business, duty unpaid, must be construed according to the universal understanding of merchants and importers throughout the United States and the foreign country, and the universal understanding is that the buyers should pay import duties; and the buyer must pay such duties without deduction from or credit on the price. Steidtman v. Joseph Lay Co., 84 N. E. 640, 642, 234 Ill. 84.

Where testator declared his wife to be his sole heir with the "free disposal" of all his property, the words "free disposal" gave her the right to do therewith as it might please her and were not qualified by a subsequent provision that she should leave the same to the children "when the time comes." Bollentin v. Bollentin, 109 N. Y. Supp. 212, 213, 57 Misc. Rep. 250.

Under Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 739, granting to cities the power to control the use of their streets, an ordinance, making it unlawful to drive an automobile on the street at a greater speed than six miles per hour, is valid, notwithstanding Sess. Laws 1905, p. 293, c. 154, providing that no driver in charge of an automobile shall permit it to be driven in the thickly settled portion of any city at a greater speed than one mile in 5 minutes, nor over any crossing faster than one mile in 15 minutes, and also providing that cities shall have no power to pass any ordinance requiring of any operator of an automobile any license or permit to use their streets or prohibiting any automobile the "free use" of such streets; the word "free" being used for the purpose of prohibiting a city from collecting any additional license or fee from owners of automobiles kept for private use, or making the payment of the same a condition precedent to the use of its streets. City of Bellingham v. Cissna, 87 Pac. 481, 482, 44 Wash. 397.

As without compensation

"Free medical treatment," guaranteed by contract to members of the relief department of a railroad company, means without cost to the disabled member; and the place of treatment, "one of the hospitals under its control," as between the member and the company, means the hospital to which the member is taken by the medical examiner of the company. Gainesville & Alachua County Hospital Ass'n v. Hobbs, 69 S. E. 79, 81, 153 N. C. 188.

A trust created in testator's residuary estate that it should constitute a fund the income from which fund when it should amount to $75,000 should be used for the maintenance of a hospital where the unfortunate might receive care and skillful treatment, and that, if the hospital should not have been built, when the fund should amount to the sum named, then $25,000 of the principal might be used for building a hospital, provided a sufficient sum was guaranteed for its maintenance, is not void as impossible of fulfillment on the ground that testator's purpose was to establish a hospital absolutely free, not a hospital some branch of which might be free or which might provide a certain number of free beds to charity patients, and that, if $25,000 was taken to build such a free hospital, the income of the remaining $50,000 would be entirely inadequate to maintain it, for the word "free" means "thrown open or made accessible to all," and does not preclude receiving a compensation from those able to pay. Webber Hospital Ass'n v. McKenzie, 71 Atl. 1032, 1035, 104 Me. 320.

As unobstructed

In a deed conveying a lot of land and "a right of way for an alleyway 12 feet wide, extending from the rear end of said lot across another lot owned by said K. to the alley running to L. street," the word "free" qualifies and relates to "right of way" and is descriptive of the right of way, the thing wanted, and not of the use to be made of the right of way. According to Webst. Dict., the word "free," when used in relation to a thing to be enjoyed or possessed, means "thrown open, or made accessible to all; to be enjoyed without limitations; unrestricted; not obstructed, engrossed, or appropriated; open." Applying that definition, the word "free," as used in the deed, indicates the condition and character of the right of way, which is the thing granted, and the thing to be enjoyed and possessed, and, as thus interpreted, it means an unobstructed right of way as far as any future act of the owner of the servient tenement is concerned. Flaherty v. Fleming, 52 S. W. 2d 857, 859, 53 W. Va. 609, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000.

FREE ELECTION

An election conducted under the supervision of the military power is not a "free and equal election," within the meaning and spirit of the Constitution. Scholl v. Bell, 102 S. W. 2d 259, 125 Ky. 750.

The election is "free and equal" where all the qualified electors of the precinct are fully distinguished from the unqualified, and all are protected in the right to deposit their ballots in safety and unprejudiced by fraud. The election is not free and equal where the electors are not separated from the false, where the ballot is not deposited in safety, or where it is supplanted by fraud. A voter is "free" when he is left in the untrammelled exercise of his right or privilege. The vote of an elector is "equal" when it is counted at the same value as the vote of every other qualified elector exercising the privilege. When persons not legitimately qualified are permitted to vote, the legal voter is thereby denied his adequate proportionate share of influence in the election. The election as to which is unequal. Rouse v. Thompson, 81 N. W. 2d 1109, 1122, 1123, 228 Ill. 522.

The election is not "free and equal" where a third of the electors are prevented from voting because of an insufficient supply of ballots. Hocker v. Pendleton, 39 S. W. 2d 100, 100 Ky. 726.

The guaranty of a "free and equal election" signifies that elections shall not only be open and untrammelled to persons endowed with the elective franchise, but shall be closed to all not enjoying such privilege under the constitution. Ex parte Wilson, 125 Pac. 739, 8 Okl. Cr. 610.

FREE FROM ARTIFICIAL COLORATION

Oleomargarine made to look like butter of a shade of yellow by the use of one-half of 1 per cent. of palm oil, a vegetable oil recognized as a possible ingredient by Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 2, is not "free from artificial coloration" within the meaning of the proviso in section 8 of that act, as amended by Act May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 3, imposing a lesser tax on oleomargarine when free from artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow, although the addition of such palm oil may give the product a slightly better grain of texture, and a slightly better physiological effect upon those who eat it, where, but for its coloring power, it probably would not have been used. Wm. J. Moxley v. Hertz, 30 Sup. Ct. 305, 216 U. S. 344, 54 L. Ed. 510.

FREE FROM CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

The expression "the employé injured being free from contributory negligence" is the equivalent of the provision of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, requiring an allegation that the employé was at the time of the injury complained of in the exercise of due care and diligence. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Collins, 71 N. E. 661, 662, 163 Ind. 569 (citing Indianapolis Union Ry. Co. v. Houlihan, 60 N. E. 943, 157 Ind. 494, 498, 54 L. R. A. 787; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lichteiser, 71 N. E. 218, 163 Ind. 247).

FREE FROM FAULT

Where it is said that, before a homicide can be treated as justifiable, it must appear that the slayer was "free from fault" or did not provoke the difficulty, it is to be understood, not that he must not have done anything which might in the ordinary sense of the word be regarded as provocation, but that the provocation must not have been such as would in law be sufficient to justify the attack against which he was defending himself when the homicide was committed. Smarrs v. State, 61 S. E. 914, 917, 131 Ga. 21 (quoting Butler v. State, 19 S. E. 51, 92 Ga. 601).

FREE FROM INCUMBRANCE

An agreement to convey land "free from incumbrances" calls for a marketable title. Van Keuren v. Siedler, 96 Atl. 920, 921, 73 N. J. Eq. 239.

Where a vendor engaged to convey full fee-simple title, the further terms, "free and clear from any taxes, mortgages or other liens of any character," did not by enumeration of incumbrances of a particular class exclude the idea that the title was to be free from all other incumbrances such as an easement to maintain water ditches or pipes thereon. Wingard v. Copeland, 116 Pac. 670, 672, 64 Wash. 214.

Plaintiff, who was interested in options on mining claims, associated H. with him, who expended considerable money in developing the property. A corporation was formed of which plaintiff was elected secretary and H. president. Plaintiff asserted an interest in the company to the extent of 100,000 shares of the capital stock, under an agreement with H. in which the latter agreed to "protect all present subscribers to the extent of assessing 750,000 shares fully 15 cents before any further assessments shall be levied against those of such subscribers who shall pay their full subscription to said stock, that is, 15 cents per share, fully guaranteeing to carry free from all assessment or incumbrance 100,000 shares of said stock of (plaintiff), who shall not be assessed for said 100,000 shares until all the aforesaid 750,000 shares shall have paid into the treasury fully 15 cents per share." Held, that the words "free of incumbrance" cannot be construed as meaning free from any charge or payment; but the agreement would be construed to mean that plaintiff would not be called upon to pay any assessment upon, or any part of the purchase price of, the stock until H. had paid in full for the 750,000 shares. Cunningham v. Independence Consol. Mining Co., 108 Pac. 956, 959, 58 Wash. 371.

FREE MARKET

The "right to a free market" "is the right of every dealer, in the full enjoyment of his right to contract, to have all other possible dealers with him left free to deal or not, as they may voluntarily elect. Thus recognition is accorded to the interest that one man has in the freedom of another. The tort exhibited by the violation to free market consists in coercing the market; i. e., interfering with the right of a particular dealer to enjoy the advantages of freedom to deal with him on the part of all who may voluntarily desire to deal with him." Alfred W. Booth & Bros. v. Burgess, 65 Atl. 226, 229, 72 N. J. Eq. 181.

FREE OF ALL CHARGES

An act permitting telegraph companies to construct, operate, and maintain their lines in the streets in consideration of such companies rendering certain services for the right of way over public property imposes a charge for the privilege, so that a further provision that they might construct their lines "free of charge" is without significance. City of Memphis v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 139 Fed. 707, 713.

Anti-Free Pass Law March 26, 1907, § 1, provides a penalty where a carrier, etc., "shall" knowingly carry persons free of charge, or give free passes, franks, substitutes for use instead of regular fare or rate for transportation, or sell transportation for anything except money, etc., except as otherwise provided. Section 3 imposes penalties upon those who "shall" use or attempt to use free passes, franks, etc. A contract made between an express company and railway companies before the passage of the act required the railway companies to furnish cars for the transportation of express matter, to carry, "free of charge," the express company's messengers, property, etc., to furnish passes for the free transportation of the express company's officers, etc., when traveling on business for the company, and to transmit, "free of charge," business messages, etc. The express company is required to make a specified payment, and to carry, "free of charge," remittances, business packages, etc. Held, that the contract is not impaired by the act; the act being prospective in its operation, the mutual services to be performed by the contracting parties being valuable considerations for their respective obligations, and the term "free of charge" and similar expressions used in the contract meaning that no specific additional charge should be made for such services. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wells-Fargo Express Co. (Tex.) 110 S. W. 38; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Same (Tex.) 110 S. W. 41.

An allegation that certain rents and property were given by an insolvent to his children "free of charge as advancements" sufficiently charges that the gifts were voluntary; the phrase "free of charge as advancements" meaning that there was no charge for the gifts and no valuable consideration other than love and affection. Patton v. Walker's Trustees (Ky.) 118 S. W. 312, 314.

FREE ON BOARD

See, also, F. O. B.

The letters "f. o. b.," in contracts of sale, mean "free on board" the cars, and this means free of expense to the buyer. A seller contracting to deliver goods free on board cars impliedly agrees to supply the cars necessary. Elliott v. Howison, 40 South. 1018, 1026, 146 Ala. 568.

The abbreviation "f. o. b." for "free on board," used in the sale of goods, denotes the duty of the seller to deliver them free from all charges on board the vehicle or vessel of the carrier. Harman v. Washington Fuel Co., 81 N. E. 1017, 1019, 228 Ill. 298.

The abbreviation "f. o. b." has a well-defined business meaning, and, as applied to the sale of merchandise destined for shipment, means that it will be placed on a car or vessel free of expense to the buyer. Manganese Steel Safe Co. v. First State Bank of Leola, 125 N. W. 572, 573, 25 S. D. 119.

In a contract of sale, the phrase "these prices are f. o. b. California" means that the purchaser is to pay the freight from California to the place of destination. Phoe-

Packing Co. v. Humphrey-Ball Co., 108 C. 952, 954, 58 Wash. 396.

The expression "f. o. b. at R." is equivalent to the expression "laid down at R." Idtmann v. Joseph Lay Co., 84 N. E. 640, 234 Ill. 84.

An agreement to sell property at a certain time for a stated price "f. o. b." at a certain place implies that the seller will place the property on the cars at the designated point free of any expense to the buyer. Hunter Bros. Milling Co. v. Krar Bros., 80 Pac. 963, 965, 71 Kan. 468.

The expression "f. o. b. cars," used on sale of goods means a delivery without charge for drayage or other expenses previous to loading, and has nothing to do with the time or place of payment of the agreed purchase price, and does not bind the purchaser to pay at the place of shipment, but merely binds him to accept the property delivered on board the cars at that point. Russell & Co. v. F. W. Heitmann & (Tex.) 86 S. W. 75, 76.

A parol sale at a specified price of certain wheat then in a storehouse, delivered "f. o. b. cars" at a named point under a contract that the words "delivered f. o. b. cars" meant that the grain was to be delivered by the seller on board the cars before the grain was passed, without any payment made on the price, was within the statute of frauds. McCock Mill Co. v. Honeycutt, 103 Pac. 1112, 85 Wash. 18.

The phrase "f. o. b. cars," when used in a contract between a buyer and a seller of commercial commodities, where the use of a common carrier is necessary, means that the seller will secure the cars, load them, and do whatever may be required to accomplish shipment and consignment to the buyer, free of expense. Hurst v. Altamont Mfg. Co., 103 Pac. 551, 553, 78 Kan. 422, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 928, 117 Am. St. Rep. 525, 9 Ann. Cas. 549. See the definitions in John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 94 N. W. 337; 117 Wis. 100.

"F. o. b." denotes that the seller has agreed to deliver on cars or vessels "without charge to the buyer for packing, portage, cartage, and the like," and "in such a contract the seller is under no obligation to act until the buyer names the ship to which the delivery is to be made." A contract by which a coal company sold a quantity of coal, to be delivered during a series of months "f. o. b. cars at the mines," did not cast upon the seller an obligation to provide cars, but only to be ready to load the same when supplied. Wanston Elevator & Coal Co. v. Castner, 103 Fed. 409, 410 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bouv. Dict.).

Acceptance of an order for shipment "f. o. b. cars" means that the goods shall be delivered free on board of cars and loaded without expense to the purchaser, and implies that the seller shall procure the cars for loading. Statements in the seller's acceptance of an order that they "accept and enter the same for shipment," and "anticipate making shipment," implied that the seller was to furnish the cars for loading. R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co., 108 Pac. 621, 623, 58 Wash. 223, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007.

The term "f. o. b." cars, in mercantile contracts, means "free on board" cars at the place of shipment. Such term means that the seller will, without expense or act of the buyer, deliver to the latter the subject of the sale on cars at such place. All the authorities declare that a sale f. o. b. cars so plainly indicates that the seller, without expense to the buyer, is to deliver the subject of the sale on cars, ready to be taken out by the carrier, that the term is not open to construction. Vogt v. Shlenebeck, 100 N. W. 820, 822, 122 Wis. 491, 67 L. R. A. 756, 106 Am. St. Rep. 989, 2 Ann. Cas. 814.

The ordinary effect of a purchase of coal at a specified price "f. o. b. mines" is that title shall pass on delivery of the coal to the carrier. Where defendant requested plaintiffs to ship to defendant, at a specified place, 50 cars of coal of a specified kind at $2.25 f. o. b. mines during the first week in April, 1906, shipping date guaranteed and defendant accepted regardless of conditions, weighing the coal was not a condition precedent to the passing of title. Hoffman v. Gosline, 172 Fed. 113, 117, 96 C. C. A. 818.

A contract required plaintiff to furnish defendant with its entire consumption of coal between specified dates at $2.40 per long ton f. o. b. Philadelphia; the Eastern Coal Company, or any other mutually satisfactory concern, to freight, insure, unload, and haul to defendant's works for $1.35 per long ton, defendant's total payment to both parties being $3.75 per long ton delivered in defendant's yard at such times and in such quantities as defendant might direct, and plaintiff to have at least 1,000 tons constantly in defendant's yard and 3,000 tons on dock at Providence and in transit. Held, that the contract required delivery of the coal at defendant's yard; the words "f. o. b. Philadelphia" being used merely to fix the price up to that point. Sterling Coal Co. v. Silver Spring Bleaching & Dyeing Co., 162 Fed. 848, 851, 89 C. C. A. 520.

Where a coal company contracted to sell the output of its mine, and the buyer agreed to accept, receive, and pay at a specified rate "f. o. b." at the place, where the mine was situated, that place, and not the buyer's place of business, or other place to which the coal was to be shipped, was the place of delivery. Tuttle-Chapman Coal Co.

†. Coaldale Fuel Co., 113 N. W. 827, 829, 136 Iowa, 382.

A contract to deliver hay on the track at a certain town should be considered the same as a contract to deliver it f. o. b. there, so that the place of shipment was the place of delivery. National Warehouse & Storage Co. v. Toomey, 129 S. W. 423, 425, 144 Mo. App. 516.

A contract to deliver lumber "free on board cars" at the destination is unambiguous, and not open to construction by proof of custom or otherwise; the provision requiring the seller to deliver on board cars at the destination free to be taken by the buyer without impediment, and there was no such delivery when to take possession the buyer was bound to pay the freight. Chandler Lumber Co. v. Radke, 118 N. W. 185, 186, 136 Wis. 495.

Under Civ. Code, § 1245, requiring a contract to be interpreted to give effect to the mutual intent, an agreement to accept a secondhand safe and time lock, f. o. b. Leola, in part payment for a new safe, meant that the secondhand safe and time lock were to be delivered to the manufacturer of the new safe free on board the cars, notwithstanding the omission of the word "cars." Manganese Steel Safe Co. v. First State Bank of Leola, 125 N. W. 572, 573, 25 S. D. 119.

Where a writing evidencing a contract for sale of hay stated, "sold my hay to A. for $10.50 per ton, f. o. b.," the letters "f. o. b.," without designation of place, meant delivery on board at the usual place of shipping such freight from that locality. Adams v. Janes, 75 Atl. 799, 800, 83 Vt. 334.

The natural meaning of the words "free on board" is that the goods are to be furnished by the seller on board free of all charges and expenses up to and including the loading. Some courts have followed the rule applicable in other cases that, where one makes an agreement to perform an act, whatever is necessary to the performance of the act is a part of his agreement, and it is implied that he will secure the means necessary to the accomplishment of the act. Courts adopting that rule hold that the seller must furnish cars. Other courts have held that the duty to furnish cars rests upon the purchaser. The term in question was frequently inserted in contracts for sale and delivery of goods free on board a vessel, and it was held that the seller was under no obligation to act until the purchaser should name the ship on which delivery was to be made, for the reason that, until the seller knew the ship, he could not put the goods on board. It was held that the seller was entitled to know on what ship and where he was required to deliver the goods, but that rule is manifestly unsuited to shipments by rail under present conditions, at least unless the sale is made to a railroad company, or the means of transportation contemplated is under the control of the purchaser. A contract for the sale of coal required the seller to furnish a specified number of tons from the date of contract, June 1st to April 1st, at a specified price per ton, "free on board" cars at mine; shipments to be made at the rate of one to two cars per day, subject to car supply, etc. The seller furnished a part of the coal and the cars for the shipment thereof without asking the buyer to furnish cars. In view of this construction placed on the contract by the parties, together with the stipulation regarding car supply, the buyer was not required to furnish cars, notwithstanding the phrase "free on board cars at mine." Harman v. Washington Fuel Co., 81 N. E. 1017, 1019, 228 Ill. 298.

Though an agreement to sell goods f. o. b. cars at a designated place will ordinarily be regarded as an agreement to deliver the goods at that place, the meaning of the term depends on the connection in which it is used, and, if the meaning is doubtful, the construction placed on the contract by the parties will be adopted, and, where a contract of sale of piling "f. o. b." cars at the final destination provided for the stopping of the shipment at an intermediate point for the piles to be treated by a creosoting company at the expense of the buyer, the term "f. o. b." should be construed to mean nothing more than that the price of the piling should include the freight charges to the destination. Barnett & Record Co. v. Fall (Tex.) 131 S. W. 644, 649.

The phrase "f. o. b.," in a contract of sale, prima facie imposes on the purchaser the duty of furnishing the cars or vessel upon which the goods are to be transported from the place of delivery; yet the whole agreement, when taken with its attending circumstances, or the construction of the contract by the parties, may shift the obligation of furnishing the cars or vessel upon the seller. A contract of sale, providing for a number of successive deliveries, called for cement "f. o. b." at a certain point. The seller, in acting under this contract, always obtained the cars itself, and, in correspondence with the buyers concerning its failure to ship promptly, never alluded to the duty of furnishing the cars as resting upon the buyers. The buyers never obtained the cars, and both parties evidently regarded the duty of obtaining them as resting on the seller. Held that, in view of the construction placed upon the contract by the parties, it was the seller's duty to furnish cars for the shipment of the cement. Davis v. Alpha Portland Cement Co., 134 Fed. 274, 277.

Under a contract of sale of fruit requiring delivery "f. o. b.," such delivery was a condition precedent to the sellers' right to demand payment of a draft with bill of lading attached; and hence the sellers are not entitled to recover the difference between the contract price and a lower price at which the fruit is resold, on the buyer's failure to pay the draft at sight, where the fruit was not actually shipped, but was placed with the carrier, with private instructions to hold until the seller heard from the draft. Aspegren & Co. v. Wallerstein Produce Co., 69 S. E. 957, 958, 111 Va. 570.

A contract of sale of a machine which stipulates for its shipment f. o. b., and for the payment by the buyer of expenses of unloading, installing and operating the machine for demonstration to determine compliance with the seller's guaranty, and which provides that, on the failure of the seller to demonstrate fitness, it will remove the machine at its own expense, and refund any portion of payment received thereunder, and that the buyer waives any right for possible damages or expenses, is ambiguous on the question of liability for freight charges in case the sale fails because the machine does not comply with the guaranty, and parol evidence was proper that the seller agreed in that event to refund the freight paid by the buyer; the word "expense" waived by the buyer referring only to the expense of unloading, installing, and operating, and the words "f. o. b." contemplating payment of freight by the buyer in case of consummation of the sale. Steenstrup v. Toledo Foundry & Machine Co., 119 Pac. 16, 18, 66 Wash. 101, Ann. Cas. 1913C. 427; Elliott v. Same, 119 Pac. 19, 66 Wash. 701.

FREE PASS

The definition of "free pass" in Acts 32d Gen. Assem. c. 112, § 1, prohibiting common carriers from giving free passes, and defining such to be any transportation for any other consideration than money at the rate open to all, is not ineffective as being mere "expository legislation," which has reference to those acts that purport to put a construction upon past enactments without making any amendments thereto. Schulz v. Parker (Iowa) 139 N. W. 173, 176.

A "free pass," within Const. 1902, § 161 prohibiting any state, county, district, or municipal officer from accepting a free pass, under penalty of forfeiture of his office, is "one which is not gained by importunity or purchase; gratuitous." Commonwealth v. Gleason, 69 S. E. 448, 449, 111 Va. 383.

Annual passes, issued pursuant to a contract by which a carrier agreed to issue an annual pass for life to one injured by it in settlement of his claim for damages, are not "free passes" within Act Cong. June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, prohibiting any common carrier from directly or indirectly giving any interstate free pass or ticket for passengers except to employes, nor did the contract violate section 2, prohibiting carriers from charging any different compensation between points named in its tariff than the fare specified therein, or from extending to any person any privileges except as specified in its tariff; it not appearing that the contract discriminated in favor of the person injured. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 118 S. W. 982, 984, 133 Ky. 652; Mottley v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 150 Fed. 406, 409.

FREE PUBLIC SCHOOL

"Free Public Schools" exempted from taxation by Pub. Laws, c. 533, April 14, 1876, are only schools which are established, maintained, and regulated under the statutory laws of the state, and hence real estate held by religious corporations and used by ecclesiastical officers to furnish gratuitous instruction in parochial schools is not relieved from taxation. St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes of Providence, 12 R. I. 19, 20, 34 Am. Rep. 597.

A "freehold" is an estate for life or in fee simple. Bourn v. Robinson, 107 S. W. 873, 876, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 157 (citing 1 Washb. Real Prop. 41, 42); Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 930, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

A "freehold" is realty. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 492, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

"At common law the 'freehold' could not be in abeyance. The doctrine was the necessary sequence of feudal tenures, but our statute has provided for freehold estates commencing in the future." Beatson v. Bowers, 91 N. E. 922, 924, 174 Ind. 601.

By Rev. St. 1899, § 4596, an estate of "freehold" or inheritance may be made to commence in future by deed in like manner as by will. At common law, a freehold estate in lands to commence in futuro could not be created because it could not arise without livery of seisin, which must, in its nature, take effect immediately or not at all, and, if it should take effect so far as to pass the freehold out of the grantor, the same would not be vested in anybody but would be in abeyance, contrary to the established policy of the law. O'Day v. Meadows, 92 S. W. 637, 646, 194 Mo. 588, 112 Am. St. Rep. 542 (quoting and adopting 2 Minor's Institutes, p. 270).

A "freehold," within the statute authorizing a direct appeal to the Supreme Court, is not involved in a suit to foreclose a deed of trust brought against party defendant who files a cross-bill praying for a decree compelling complainant to convey the premises to him, and an appeal from a decree dismissing the crossbill and foreclosing the deed must be taken to the Appellate Court; a "freehold" not including a mere right to do that which in equity will entitle a party to a freehold. Hollinger v. Dickinson, 96 N. E. 896, 252 Ill. 123.

The determination of the rights accruing under an ordinance authorizing a property owner to construct a platform on a sidewalk, the permission to cease at the end of 10 years, does not involve a "freehold" so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal. Chicago Cold Storage Warehouse Co. v. People ex rel. Stirling, 74 N. E. 133, 134, 215 Ill. 225.

Where a city ordinance granted the right to maintain an elevated passageway connecting a store building with an elevated railroad, and limited the right to maintain such elevated road to a term of 50 years, such right was not a "freehold interest"; and hence a writ of error, in a suit to restrain the city from interfering with the construction of the passageway, was not issuable direct from the Supreme Court in the first instance. City of Chicago v. Rothschild & Co., 72 N. E. 698, 699, 212 Ill. 590.

The right to go upon land and occupy it for the purpose of prospecting, if of unlimited duration, is a "freehold interest," but such interest, being vested for a specific purpose, becomes extinct when the purpose is accomplished, or the work is abandoned. Watford Oil & Gas Co. v. Shipman, 84 N. E. 53, 54, 233 Ill. 9, 122 Am. St. Rep. 144.

A purchaser at an execution sale of the title of the debtor in real estate, held by him and his wife as tenants by the entirety under a conveyance executed after the passage of the married woman's act, acquires a "freehold," and the sheriff's deed gives him the same title which a deed executed by the debtor would have given. Bilder v. Robinson, 67 Atl. 828, 829, 73 N. J. Eq. 169 (citing Washburn v. Burns, 34 N. J. Law, 18; Den ex dem. Wyckoff v. Gardner, 20 N. J. Law, 556, 558, 45 Am. Dec. 388).

Easement

A perpetual easement in land is a freehold interest. Funston v. Hoffman, 83 N. E. 917, 918, 232 Ill. 360.

A "perpetual easement" involves a freehold, authorizing an appeal direct to the Illinois Supreme Court. Espenscheid v. Bauer, 85 N. E. 230-232, 235 Ill. 172.

Ground rent

A ground rent, being an estate of inheritance in the rent of lands, is a "freehold estate." McCammon v. Cooper, 69 N. E. 658, 659, 69 Ohio St. 366.

Homestead right

A homestead estate is a "freehold." Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 86 N. E. 219, 225, 236 Ill. 188.

Leasehold interest

An action to compel the assignment of the legal title to a leasehold interest in mining claims under a five-year lease does not relate to or involve a freehold so as to authorize an appeal under Mills' Ann. Code, § 388, since a lease of real estate for a term of years is not a freehold estate. Equitable Mines Co. v. Maxwell, 127 Pac. 243, 244, 23 Colo. App. 55.

Water right

FREEHOLDER

See Bona Fide Freeholder; Reputable Freeholders; Resident Freeholder.

A "freeholder" is one who holds land in fee or for life or for some indeterminate period. Campbell v. Moran, 99 N. W. 498, 499, 71 Neb. 615; Maitten v. Barley, 92 N. E. 738, 174 Ind. 620; Porter v. Purdy, 29 N. Y. 106, 110, 86 Am. Dec. 283. It is also defined as "an estate of inheritance or for life in real property." In order to be a freeholder, a person must have a property right in and title to real estate, amounting to an estate of inheritance, or for life, or for an indeterminate period. Thus a wife living with her husband on land, the title to which is in the latter, and which is occupied by them jointly as a family homestead, is not by reason thereof a "freeholder," within the meaning of Cobbey's Ann. St. § 7175, providing that village authorities may grant license to sell intoxicating liquors on petition signed by a designated number of resident freeholders; and the same is true as to a husband living with his wife on land occupied by them jointly as a homestead, the legal title to which is in her. Campbell v. Moran, 99 N. W. 498, 499, 71 Neb. 615 (quoting Winfield's Adjudged Words and Phrases).

The same technical strictness does not attach to the term "freeholder" when used in a statute authorizing road improvement pro-dings, as in deeds and other instruments affecting title. Thus a tenant by the entirety is a "freeholder" within Burns' Ann. St. 8, §§ 7711-7734, authorizing road improvement proceedings on petition by freeholders. Mitten v. Barley, 92 N. E. 738, 174 Ind. 620.

A petition for a liquor license must be signed by bona fide freeholders. In re Cohn, N. W. 107, 108, 84 Neb. 230; Colglazier McClary & Martin, 98 N. W. 670, 671, 50 (Unof.) 332.

A resident of a village in which an application for a saloon license is made, who purchased and paid for property in the village, which he had occupied for three years prior to the application as a home, was a freeholder, though he received no deed until shortly before he signed the petition. In re Frank, 134 N. W. 269, 90 Neb. 732.

A husband, whose wife is seised in fee in real estate and is the mother of children, is a "freeholder" and eligible as a voter, notwithstanding Const. art. 10, § 6, providing that the property of any female acquired before or after marriage shall remain a separate estate, and may be devised, and without the written assent of her husband conferred by her as if she were unmarried. Edgins v. Southern Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 413, 414, 10 N. C. 93, 10 Ann. Cas. 417 (citing Thompson v. Wiggins, 14 S. E. 301, 109 N. C. 510).

A person who owns a vested remainder in real estate located within the limits of a proposed borough, subject to a life estate, owned and enjoyed by some other person, is not a freeholder within the meaning of Act April 1, 1834, § 2 (P. L. 163), relating to the incorporation of boroughs and receiving the signatures of a majority of the resident freeholders. In re Borough of Mountville, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 18, 21.

A resident of the borough and county in which goods are distrained, who owns real estate in fee in an adjoining county of a neighboring state, is a freeholder, not only at common law, but also within the meaning of Act March 21, 1772 (P. L. 370) § 1, providing that freeholders in distress proceedings for rent shall be "reputable freeholders." Singer v. Wing Mach. Co. v. Follett, 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 429, 430.

Since at common law and by Comp. Laws, § 8787, estates of inheritance are freehold estates, and the estate of a vendee in possession under a land contract is an estate of inheritance, such a vendee in possession is a "freeholder," within Comp. Laws § 4319, requiring a petition for a drain to be signed by a certain number of freeholders. Starkweather v. Chatfield, 112 N. W. 1071, 149 Mich. 443. Every tenant by entirety is also a "freeholder," within the statute. Bankley v. Bishopp, 114 N. W. 676, 677, 678, 150 Mich. 256. And so is a lessee for life.

Sess. Laws 1903, c. 166, § 1, provides for the submission of the question of granting permits to sell intoxicating liquors at retail upon a petition signed by twenty-five legal "freeholders, voters of such township," etc. Civ. Code, § 245, provides that estates of inheritance and for life are called estates of freehold. Civ. Code, § 2444, provides that, whenever the meaning of a word or phrase is defined in any statute, such definition is applicable to the same word or phrase wherever it occurs, except where a contrary intention plainly appears. Held, that the word "freeholder," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, c. 166, § 1, contemplates any person who holds a life estate or any estate in realty which may be inherited, even though the class of persons who may take the estate be limited by the terms of the tenure or by the provisions of the laws of inheritance. State ex rel. Dillman v. Weide, 135 N. W. 696, 698, 29 S. D. 109. A voter whose wife is the owner of a homestead is not a competent signer, for a freeholder is one who has title to the property and not simply a contingent or expectant estate or right of occupancy or privilege with power to prevent alienation. State ex rel. Cain v. Toomey, 129 N. W. 563, 564, 27 S. D. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 324.

The word "freeholders," as used in Revisal, § 4115, amended by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 525, and Pub. Laws 1911, c. 135, § 1, providing that special school districts may be formed upon a petition signed by one-fourth of the freeholders within the proposed special school district, does not embrace female owners of freehold estates, nor infants, nor non-residents, as the word "freeholder," when used with reference to political rights, or suffrage or governmental matters, has never been understood to include such persons. Gill v. Board of Com'rs of Wake County, 76 S. E. 203, 207, 160 N. C. 176, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293.

Householder distinguished

"Householders" is not synonymous with "freeholders," as the latter term is used in a constitutional provision that compensation for property taken for public use shall be ascertained by a jury or board of not less than three "freeholders." Grossman v. Patton, 85 S. W. 548, 550, 186 Mo. 661.

FREEHOLDERS OF THE MUNICIPALITY

Under Laws 1903, c. 166, which provides that the petition calling for a vote upon the question of licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors within a municipality must be signed by 25 freeholder voters of such municipality, one who is a voter of such city and owns a freehold in the county is not a competent signer. State ex rel. Cain v. Toomey, 129 N. W. 563, 564, 27 S. D. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 324.

FREELY

Where there was evidence that confessions of accused to the officers were induced by threats or promises of assistance, an instruction that unless the statements were made voluntarily, and not induced by threats or promises, the jury could not consider them in the case, was sufficient, under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 789, 790, requiring that the confessions be made "freely" and without compulsion in order to be admissible as evidence, though it be conceded that "freely" and "voluntarily" are not synonymous. Cross v. State (Tex.) 101 S. W. 213, 214.

FREEZEFREEZE OUT

To "freeze out" a stockholder in a corporation, within the meaning of the colloquial phrase, consists of conduct of those in control of the corporation, in manipulating and representing its affairs, so as to induce a stockholder to part with his holdings under the impression that they are less valuable than they really are. Von Au v. Magensmer, 110 N. Y. Supp. 629, 635, 128 App. Div. 257; Theis v. Spokane Falls Gaslight Co., 74 Pac. 1004, 1006, 34 Wash. 23.

FREIGHT

Perishable freight, see Perishable Property.

Handling freight, see Handle.

Tender of freight, see Tender.

"Freight" is the hire or compensation paid for the use of a ship for carrying goods. Norman Prince, 185 Fed. 169, 171; Buffalo City Bank v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 251, 252.

The word "freight" has two meanings, one being used to denote the compensation paid to a carrier of goods and also the property carried. The Nassau, 188 F. 46, 48, 110 C. C. 184.

"Freight rate" is the net amount paid to the carrier by the shipper. The giving of a private car company of a rebate or an advance to a shipper using its cars, although from its own funds and without the influence or the knowledge of the carrier, is a violation of the federal statute known as "Elkins act." Interstate Commerce Commission v. Reichmann, 145 Fed. 235, 238, 241.

Freight as cargo or goods carried

The term "freight shipments," as commonly used, means those distinct from baggage to go by railroad carriers, and not by express carriers, who undertake to make delivery to the consignee personally though their lines of travel may be identical. Baum v. Long Island R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 1113, 9, 58 Misc. Rep. 34.

The word "freights," as used in section 1 of the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 1887, c. 104, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other carrier for the pooling of freights of different or competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof, means the commodities carried, and not the compensation paid for such carriage. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 U. S. 829, 838.

Rev. St. § 4472, prohibits passenger steamers from carrying as "freight" certain articles, including petroleum products or other like explosive fluids, except in certain cases and under certain restrictions. By Act Feb. 20, 1901, c. 386, the section was amended by adding the following provision: "Nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this act shall prohibit the transportation by steam vessels of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by motor vehicles (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: Provided, however, that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished before entering the said vessel and the same be not relighted until after said vehicle shall have left the same. * * *" Held, that gasoline contained in the tank of an automobile being transported on a steam vessel was carried as "freight," within the meaning of the statute. The Texas, 134 Fed. 909, 914.

FREIGHT BRAKEMAN

See Railway Freight Brakeman or Switchman.

FREIGHT CAR

"Freight cars are generally, if not universally, constructed so as to ride upon two four-wheeled trucks, upon which the cars are supported by means of devices called bolsters. One of these devices is attached to the bottom of the car body, and is called a body bolster. The other is attached to the truck, and is called the truck bolster. The body bolster rests upon the truck bolster, and at the point of contact there is a device called the centre bearing plate, which, acting in connection with a king bolt, permits the truck to conform to inequalities and curvatures in the track, regardless of the direction of the axis of the car body. Side supports * * * are also furnished, to secure stability of the car upon the track, and prevent any tendency to upset, by limiting the rocking of the car body. Ordinarily, though, the weight is carried upon the centre bearing plate, that the swivelling may be done as easily as possible, in order to avoid friction between the car and the side bearings, especially in hauling a heavy train around a curve." McCarty v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 16 Sup. Ct. 240, 242, 160 U. S. 110, 40 L. Ed. 358.

A statute requiring coupler devices on each end of every freight car, etc., does not require such devices on the tenders of locomotives. Blanchard v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 103 N. W. 170, 171, 139 Mich. 694.

Safety Appliance Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, provided that within 90 days after the passage of the act the American Railway Association was authorized to designate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the standard height of drawbars for freight cars, for each of the several gauges of railways in use in the United States, and should fix a maximum variation from such standard height to be allowed between the drawbars of empty and loaded cars. The section then requires all common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to conform their cars thereto, and imposed a penalty for the use in interstate commerce after July 1, 1895, of cars not conforming to the standard. Held, that the term "freight cars," as used in such section, included the locomotive at the head of the train and the caboose at the other end, so that the use of a locomotive with a drawbar on the front end not conforming to the specified height constituted a violation of the act. Chicago, M. & P. S. Ry. Co. v. United States, 196 Fed. 882, 883, 116 C. C. A. 444.

FREIGHT PENDING

The annual subsidy paid to the vessel, and the passenger and freight receipts earned on her sailing from Havre to New York need not be surrendered as "freight then pending" for the voyage, within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. §§ 4283, 4284 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2943), in proceedings for the limitation of liability for claims arising out of the sinking of the vessel as a result of a collision occurring on the vessel's return trip from New York to Havre. But sums prepaid for freight and passage on the voyage, under an absolute agreement that such sums are, in any event, to belong to the owner of the vessel, must be surrendered as "freight then pending" on the voyage, within the meaning of the statute. Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 28 Sup. Ct. 664, 679, 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. Ed. 973; La Bourgoigne, 139 Fed. 433, 435, 71 C. C. A. 489.

Where, at the time of an injury which gave rise to proceedings for limitation of liability, the vessel surrendered was employed in raising a sunken vessel under a contract by which the petitioner received a stated sum for the service, such sum may properly be considered as "freight pending" within the meaning of the statute, which must also be surrendered, and no deduction can be made therefrom on account of other vessels or appliances also used in the service, but which the petitioner did not surrender. The Captain Jack, 162 Fed. 808, 809.

FREIGHT RECEIPT

As contract, see Contract.

FREIGHT TRAIN

A "freight train" is primarily for the carriage of freight. Southern Ry. Co. v. Cunningham, 50 S. E. 979, 981, 123 Ga. 90.

A "freight train," not intended for both passengers and freight, within Code 1906, § 4054, limiting the liability of carriers for injuries to passengers on such trains, is one on which passenger business is subordinated to the carriage of freight. White v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 55 South. 593, 595, 99 Miss. 651; Thacker v. Same (Miss.) 55 South. 595.

The carrying of passengers in a caboose car attached to a freight train, the only train operated on a branch line, does not change the train into a passenger train. Such train is simply a "freight train" within the exception contained in the separate coach law. Southern R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 110 S. W. 372, 378, 129 Ky. 87.

FREIGHTING

The word "freighting" in a charter party, whereby the owner of a vessel agrees on the "freighting" and chartering thereof to the charterer for one voyage, means a loading with goods for transportation, and does not indicate a demise of the vessel to the charterer. Grimberg v. Columbia Packers' Ass'n, 83 Pac. 194, 197, 47 Or. 257, 114 Am. St. Rep. 927, 8 Ann. Cas. 491.

FREIGHTYARD

A place where there were side tracks and where cars were unloaded and trains made up and which was used as a storing yard, and the tracks and such mode of use had been continued for 23 years, was a "freight-yard," across which a city had no power to lay out a street. Paterson & R. R. Co. v. City of Paterson, 60 Atl. 47, 72 N. J. Law, 112.

FREQUENT

The term "frequent," as used in a provision of a surety company's bonds insuring the fidelity and honesty of factors that the principal should make "frequent audits and examinations," should be construed with reference to the situation of the parties, and means no more than with reasonable frequency, depending on the situation of the parties and the existing obligations of the contract with reference to accounts, etc. T. M. Sinclair & Co. v. National Surety Co., 107 N. W. 184, 188, 132 Iowa, 549.

The fair meaning of an allegation in a bill for an accounting, that complainant "frequently" protested against statements rendered him, is that he protested from time to time. Daab v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 62 Atl. 449, 452, 70 N. J. Eq. 489.

FRESH

FRESH MEAT

The tax imposed by section 16, c. 5106, p. 9, Laws 1903, is upon the wholesale dealer in "fresh" meats only. Whether the same be either "packed or refrigerated," it must be, at the time that he sells it in the ordinary course his business, in that state where it can properly be termed "fresh meat," as distinguished from cured or salted meats, in order to render him liable to the occupational tax imposed by said section. Meats technically known as "cured," from having been treated with salt, smoke, etc., keep in an edible condition indefinitely even in the warm latitudes, whereas the same meats when created and fresh, though capable of being kept in their fresh and natural condition for long periods in a low temperature either natural or artificial, quickly spoil, become putrid, and unfit for food when subjected to high or even mean or ordinary temperatures. It is upon the wholesale dealer, in the last described commodity, that the said section 16, 5106, p. 9, Laws 1903, imposes the license tax, and not upon the dealers in cured or salted meats. Florida Packing & Ice Co. v. Freney, 41 South. 190, 192, 51 Fla. 190 (citing Cross v. Seeberger [C. C.] 30 Fed. 427).

FRESH-WATER RIVERS

"A 'fresh-water river,' like a tidal river, composed of the alveus, or bed, and the water, but it has banks instead of shores. The banks are the elevations of land which confine the waters in their natural channel when they rise the highest and do not overflow the banks; and in that condition of the water the banks and the soil which is permanently submerged form the bed of the river." State v. Faudre, 46 S. E. 269, 270, 54 W. Va. 122, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 7, 1 Ann. Cas. 104 (quoting and adopting definition in Gould, Waters, §§ 41, 45).

FRESHET

See Unusual Freshet or Storm.

FRICTION

A "friction wheel" is one of the wheels of frictional gearing. "Frictional gearing wheels" are those which transmit motion by surface friction, instead of teeth. Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon, 85 N. E. 2, 835, 42 Ind. App. 288. See, also, Meyer v. Lyon-Rosing Mach. Co., 104 N. W. 132, 95 Minn. 329.

FRIEND

A "friend" is one who entertains regard for another and takes active interest in his welfare. In re Wagner, 114 N. W. 868, 869, 151 Mich. 74.

The word "friend," in Insanity Law, § (Laws 1893, p. 501, c. 545), providing that any one in custody as an insane person is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus on a proper application made by him or some "friend" on his behalf, means one "favorably disposed." People ex rel. Belro v. Bond, 93 N. Y. Supp. 7, 104 App. Div. 47 (quoting And. Law Dict.).

The word "friend," as used in a letter reciting that a "fellow" used to be a "friend" of a certain woman, implies that the word was used with a defamatory meaning. Irving v. Irving, 105 N. Y. Supp. 609, 610, 121 App. Div. 258.

FRIVOLOUS PLEADING

A "frivolous answer" is one which, assuming its truth, is so clearly bad as to require no argument to convince a court that it presents nothing worthy of adjudication. Mills v. Territory, 81 Pac. 447, 448, 13 N. M. 174.

Both denials and defenses may be "frivolous." A denial is frivolous when upon its face it is not a denial, and a defense is frivolous when upon its face it is not a defense. Rochkind v. Perlman, 108 N. Y. Supp. 224, 225, 123 App. Div. 808.

A "frivolous demurrer" is one which raises no serious question of law. The refusal to hold a demurrer frivolous and to render judgment accordingly is not appealable. Morgan v. Harris, 54 S. E. 381, 382, 141 N. C. 358 (citing in support of definition, Johnston v. Pate, 83 N. C. 110; Dunn v. Barnes, 73 N. C. 273; Hurst v. Addington, 84 N. C. 143; Porter v. Grimsley, 4 S. E. 529, 98 N. C. 550).

Where creditors seek to reach the beneficial interest of their judgment debtor in a voluntary trust which she had created for herself, an answer that the rents of the premises which were subject to the trust, after paying therefrom the interest on the mortgage, taxes, repairs, and insurance, were insufficient for the proper support and maintenance of defendant, and that there was no surplus income derived from the premises, is "frivolous." Kene v. Hill, 92 N. Y. Supp. 805, 102 App. Div. 370.

As pleading setting up no defense

A frivolous defense is one which at first glance can be seen to be merely pretensive, setting up some ground which cannot be sustained by argument. Dominion Nat. Bank v. Olympia Cotton Mills, 128 Fed. 181, 182.

A "frivolous answer" is one that contains no valid defense, and which is insufficient on its face. White v. Calhoun, 94 N. E. 743, 744, 83 Ohio St. 401.

A "frivolous answer" is one that does not, in any view of the facts pleaded, present a defense to the action. State ex rel. Engelhard v. Webber, 105 N. W. 490, 492, 96 Minn. 422, 113 Am. St. Rep. 630.

The defense of the want of corporate existence or power is not a "frivolous" one. A defense is only "frivolous" when it contains nothing that can affect the plaintiff's case. Oregonian Ry. Co. v. Oregon Co., 22 Fed. 245, 248, 249.

An allegation of no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of the complaint raises an issue, and such a defense cannot usually be regarded as a "frivolous defense." But an allegation that the defendant corporation has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the entry of a judgment against it, and the issuing and return of an execution unsatisfied, states a frivolous defense, for the existence of a judgment against defendant is peculiarly within the knowledge of its officers, and the judgment and execution are matters of public record open to public inspection, and such want of knowledge and information arises from unwillingness to learn the facts. W. J. Morgan & Co. v. Quo Vadis Amusement Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 882, 883, 45 Misc. Rep. 130.

FROG

The word "frog," as used in Ky. St. § 780, requiring every railroad company to block the frogs on its tracks to prevent the feet of its employes from being caught therein, means a device made of several rail sections secured to a plate or bolted together to form a connection of one track with another branching from or crossing it, and does not include the opening at the end of a guard rail, maintained opposite the frog and used to keep the wheel from slipping off the other rail while passing over the frog. Commonwealth v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 136 S. W. 869, 870, 143 Ky. 501.

In railroad parlance, "frogs" are pieces of railroad iron joined together so as to constitute an appliance for rerailing derailed cars. Pollard's Adm'r v. Kentucky & Ind. Bridge & R. Co. (Ky.) 97 S. W. 735. Or for transferring cars from one track to another. Morie v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 962, 116 Mo. App. 12.

FROM

Ky. St. § 2282, creates the office of trustee of the jury fund, such trustee to be appointed by the circuit court in each county, and to hold his office for four years "from his appointment," and until his successor is appointed and qualified, and provides that the judge shall have power to remove the trustee and appoint another for the unexpired term whenever the public interest may in his opinion require it. Held, that the intent was to designate consecutive periods of four years following each other in regular order, the one beginning where the other ends, as the terms of office, and not that each incumbent should serve four years after his appointment; the words "from his appointment" merely designating the beginning of the term of the first incumbent under the act, and where an incumbent was reappointed from term to term, the time being permitted to lap over the expiration of the term, each reappointment was for the unexpired term, and where a four-year term ended on January 9, 1910, and an appointment was made December 18, 1909, the appointee was entitled to hold only until such later date. Castleman v. Meglemry, 127 S. W. 1010, 1011, 138 Ky. 318.

As exclusive or inclusive according to intent

The word "from" in its literal and restricted sense generally means exclusive, but it may be used in a connection that means inclusive. In construing it, therefore, the courts will take into consideration the context and subject-matter and construe it to mean either inclusive or exclusive, accordingly as it is influenced by its connection. Baker v. Hammett, 100 Pac. 1114, 1116, 23 Okl. 480; McGee v. Corbin, 70 S. W. 79, 80, 96 Tex. 35 (citing Hazelwood v. Rogan, 67 S. W. 80, 95 Tex. 295).

Whether the word "from" shall be construed as inclusive or exclusive of the terminus a quo depends on the context, or the subject-matter, and particularly on the expressed intention of the parties. Budds v. Frey, 117 N. W. 158, 159, 104 Minn. 481, 15 Ann. Cas. 24.

As the word "from," which is used with respect to place, may be either exclusive or inclusive, according to the context, the question whether an assurance that if anything happened it would be made all right, given to a servant hired "to ice cars from an ice-house," which consisted of a house and high platform, extended to the icing of cars from ice which was piled on the side of the ice-house, but which was brought to the platform the same as that from the icehouse, to be loaded into the cars, is a question for the jury. Dalley v. Swift & Co., 84 Atl. 603, 607, 86 Vt. 189.

Const. Ala. 1901, § 116, which provides that the Governor shall hold office for four years "from" the first Monday after the second Tuesday in January next succeeding his election and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. Section 48 declares that the Legislature shall meet on the second Tuesday in January next succeeding their election, and section 115 provides that the returns of every election for Governor and other state officers shall be transmitted to the Speaker of the House, "who shall, during the first week of the session * * * open and publish them," and it was held that, since the word "week" in section 115 can only mean seven consecutive days, the returns might be opened as late as the Monday following the meeting of the Legislature, so that the word "from" contained in section 116, relating to the commencement of the term of office of the Governor, must be construed according to the context and subject-matter as a word of exclusion. Oberhaus v. State ex rel. McNamara, 55 South.

898, 900, 173 Ala. 483 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 2983, 2986).

"Instances are not rare in which statutes have been construed, not literally, but in accordance with the common use of the language employed by the lawmakers. Authority to construct a railroad or turnpike from A. to B., or beginning at A. and running to B., is held to confer authority to commence the road at some point within A., and to end it at some point within B. The words 'from,' 'to,' and 'at,' are taken inclusively, according to the subject-matter." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 348, 23 L. Ed. 428.

As exclusive as to time

In the computation of time, where a period is fixed as commencing "from" a named date, as a general rule of construction, the date named will be excluded, and by the same rule, when a period of time is to continue "until" a certain day named, such day is also excluded. Under a lease where the words "from" and "until" are used in connection with the other phrase, "a term of two years," as fixing the term granted, it may well be that either one or both of the dates named may be either included within the term or excluded therefrom. Thus where the term of a lease extends "from the first day of December, 1904, for and during and until the first day of December, 1906, a term of two years," it expires November 30, 1906, if possession is taken December 1, 1904, or December 1, 1906, if possession is taken December 2, 1904. I. X. L. Furniture & Carpet Installment House v. Berets, 91 Pac. 279, 280, 32 Utah, 454.

As inclusive as to place

In articles of incorporation of a railway company providing that it is to be constructed and operated "from" Covington to Erlanger, and such further points beyond as may thereafter be determined upon and over and along such streets, roads, etc., as may be acquired by due process of law, the expression "from" Covington means from within the city, and hence land within the city can be condemned for a right of way. Devon v. Cincinnati, C. & E. Ry. Co., 109 S. W. 361, 362, 128 Ky. 768.

The word "from," as used in an information under Comp. Laws, § 11,551, prohibiting larceny by stealing in any building on fire, which charged defendant with stealing goods from a building on fire, means "in"; the word "from" being often used interchangeably with "in." People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 137 Mich. 399.

FROM AND AFTER

In devise of remainder

Adverbs of time, such as "upon," "then," "from and after," etc., in the devise or bequest of a remainder limited upon a life estate, are construed to relate merely to the time of enjoyment of the estate, and not to the time of its vesting in interest. Staples v. Mead, 137 N. Y. Supp. 847, 850, 152 App. Div. 745.

The words "from and after," and similar expressions used in a devise of a remainder following a life estate, are not in and of themselves sufficient to justify the conclusion that a remainder is contingent and not vested. Such words, unless there is something else in the will to indicate the contrary, are construed to relate merely to the time of the enjoyment of the estate and not to the time of its vesting in interest. Trowbridge v. Coss, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1108, 1111, 126 App. Div. 679 (citing Connelly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 154 N. Y. 496; Nelson v. Russell, 31 N. E. 1008, 135 N. Y. 137; Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 112 App. Div. 254); Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 112 App. Div. 254 (citing Connelly v. O'Brien, 60 N. E. 20, 166 N. Y. 406; Hersee v. Simpson, 48 N. E. 890, 154 N. Y. 496; Nelson v. Russell, 31 N. E. 1008, 135 N. Y. 137; Moore v. Lyons [N. Y.] 25 Wend. 119); McGraw v. McGraw, 176 Fed. 312, 322, 99 C. C. A. 650 (quoting and adopting Haug v. Schumacher, 60 N. E. 245, 166 N. Y. 506).

Testator's will gave his property to his wife for life, and it was then provided that "from and after" her death it should go to testator's surviving child or children. Held, that the expression "'from and after' the death of my wife I give" was not a declaration of an intent that the title should vest only on the happening of the decease of the wife and therefore only in those of his children who should survive her, but the children of testator who survived him took on his death a vested interest in the remainder. Barnes Cycle Co. v. Haines, 61 Atl. 515, 517, 69 N. J. Eq. 651 (citing and following Howell v. Green, 31 N. J. Law, 572; Post v. Herbert's Ex'rs, 27 N. J. Eq. 544).

As exclusive as to time

A statute declared to take effect from and after a date named takes effect on the day after the day of the date named. State ex rel. Harness v. Roney, 92 N. E. 486, 488, 82 Ohio St. 376, 19 Ann. Cas. 918.

Under Const. art. 5, §§ 2, 17, providing that the Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, etc., shall be elected and shall hold office for four years "from and after" the first Monday after the first day of January, subsequent to the election, and article 20, § 20, providing that the terms of officers shall commence "on" the first Monday after the first day of January following their election, the official term of the state officers begins "on" the first Monday after the first day of January after the election. The phrase "from and after" does not have any certain meaning that can be accepted as a guide under all circumstances and is equivalent to the words "on and after," though as a general rule, the phrase "from and after" a designated day requires the exclusion of the first day. People ex rel. Mattison v. Nye, 98 Pac. 241, 246, 9 Cal. App. 148.

Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, § 18, amendatory to laws relating to drainage districts, and relating to appeals under the act, was to take effect "from and after" its publication, and the Secretary of State certified that it had been published April 19, 1909, the same day as that on which the plaintiff filed notice of appeal, with a bond, in a drainage matter. Held, on motion to dismiss the appeal, that the act did not take effect on April 19th, but "from and after" that date, and after plaintiff's appeal had been taken. Arnold v. Board of Sup'rs of Kossuth County, 130 N. W. 816, 151 Iowa, 155.

As inclusive as to time

Statutes taking effect "from and after" a specified day take effect on that day. Whittaker v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 114 S. W. 53, 54, 133 Mo. App. 664 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 2986).

The phrase, "from and after the passage of this act," occurring at the beginning of an act, will not put the act into immediate effect, in the absence of the usual effective clauses generally observed in the state, and when a comprehensive view of the statutes makes it reasonably clear that the Legislature did not intend an immediate change in the existing law, and Act May 27, 1907, regulating the admission of attorneys containing such clause, does not become effective until 60 days from the date of its enactment. In re Alexander, 44 South. 175, 176, 53 Fla. 647.

Where a statute provides that it shall take effect "from and after its publication," in computing the time when it takes effect the day of its publication is to be included; but the precise time of its publication or taking effect may be shown, where an act is done on the same day of its publication, if the hour of publication affects such act in any way. Leavenworth Coal Co. v. Barber, 27 Pac. 114, 115, 47 Kan. 29.

A lease from quarter to quarter "from and after" a designated date includes that date; for, where the word "from" is used in connection with the creation of an estate, and it is not contrary to the expressed intent of the parties, the date named from which the estate is to exist is to be included, and the estate vests thereon. Budds v. Frey, 117 N. W. 158, 159, 104 Minn. 481, 15 Ann. Cas. 24.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5925 (Pierce's Code, § 6121), provides for the giving of a bond by a contractor for public work for the benefit of materialmen and contractors. Section 5927, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 172, c. 105, provides that such persons shall not have any right of action on the bond unless, within 30 days "from and after" the completion of the contract with and acceptance of the work by the board, they shall file with the board a notice in writing, etc. Held, that the statute only fixes the time after which notices may not be filed, and hence notice given before the work was completed or accepted was sufficient, the object of the statute being that notice of the claimant's intention of holding the surety be given him. Cascade Lumber Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 106 Pac. 158, 159, 56 Wash. 508; Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 106 Pac. 160, 56 Wash. 699 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 2986, 2987).

FROM AND THROUGH THE MOTHER

"From" and "through," as used in a statute making children capable of inheriting from and through their mother, and giving them the right to distributive shares of the personal estates of any of their kindred on the part of their mother, includes inheritance directly from the mother and indirectly from any one to whom or from whom kinship can be traced through her, either in ascending or descending line. By the use of the word "from" it was the intention of the Legislature to allow the child to inherit real property from the mother direct; the descent being direct on her death. Berry v. Powell, 105 S. W. 345, 348, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

FROM AND TO

See From and To.

Where a written contract between attorneys and client provides for the payment, as a contingent fee for services, of a sum equal to "from 10 to 15 per cent." of the market value of the interest of the client recovered, the contract gives them the right to claim 15 per cent. and they cannot be restricted to 10 per cent. Helberger v. Worthington, 23 App. D. C. 565, 566.

"From" is a term of exclusion, and the word "to" is inclusive. Under a statute making it unlawful to kill game except "from the 15th day of November to the 5th day of December," in computing the time or duration of the "open season" the first-named day should be excluded and the last-named day should be included, making the period of such open season 20 days. State v. Elson, 83 N. E. 904, 905, 77 Ohio St. 489, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686.

In a lease providing for its termination on 60 days' notice, in the event of the landlord conveying his right, title, and interest in the premises "from the 1st day of May, 1909, to the 1st day of May, 1910," the clause quoted is the period within which a conveyance would give the landlord the right to terminate the lease, and does not mean the term for which the conveyance was to be made, and so require a notice of 60 days prior to May 1, 1909, the word "from" therein meaning the same as "between"; and, the lord having conveyed between the dates specified, the right to give the notice accrued to his grantees, so that the lease terminated 30 days after they gave notice on June 27. D. Scheele v. Waldman, 121 N. Y. Supp. 488, 136 App. Div. 679.

FROM BUILDING

The words "from any buildings," as used in a city ordinance providing that no person shall distribute in any public street or on any buildings handbills or papers of any description except newspapers, are clear and to be held as relating to the distribution of circulars, etc., from buildings into the public streets. International Text-Book Co. v. Auman, 155 Fed. 986, 987.

FROM DATE

"Six months from date," as a time within which an act is to be performed by agreement, cannot by proof of any custom be extended or explained to mean or include a day or two before the particular date. Lombardo Case (N. Y.) 45 Barb. 95, 97.

FROM DAY TO DAY

An adjournment "from day to day" is from one day to its succeeding day. "Day by day" according to Webster, means daily, every day, each day in succession, continually, without intermission of a day. Although an order authorizing the sale of unseated lands for taxes provided for an adjournment of the sale "from day to day," yet a title was held good which was founded on a sale made by adjournment to a certain day which did not immediately succeed the first. Burns v. Lynch (Pa.) 4 Watts, 363, 366.

A provision in a city charter, directing a collector to continue the sale "from day to day" between the hours of 10 o'clock and 5 o'clock in the afternoon as long as there were bidders or until the taxes were paid, did not prevent the collector from adjourning the sale over Thanksgiving day. Lynch v. Donahue, 15 S. W. 927, 930, 104 Mo. 519.

Under statutes requiring a tax sale to begin on the second Tuesday of April, and adjourned from that day to be continued on the next succeeding days till completed, where a sale began on the first day named, the sale was continued "from day to day" on the succeeding days, the statute did not require that it should have been continued for any given time on each day. If a single lot was sold on each day and the sale continued until the next day, this was held sufficient. Wood v. Meyer, 36 Wis. 308, 312.

Under a statute authorizing a sheriff as collector to sell land certified as delinquent for taxes, and if the sale be not completed on the first day it shall be continued "from day to day (Sundays excepted)," a sheriff began his sale of lands December 2d, and then adjourned until January 9th, and made no sales between said dates, and completed his sales on the last-named date. Held, that the sheriff had the right to adjourn the sale if the same was not completed on the first day, but that the adjournment was required to be from day to day and not from time to time; consequently the sale was invalid. Collins v. Sherwood, 40 S. E. 603, 606, 50 W. Va. 138.

The expression "from day to day," in Code, § 50, providing that the police court shall hold a term on the first Monday of every month, and shall continue the same from day to day as long as may be necessary for the transaction of its business, suggests that it was not contemplated that the continued term would extend beyond the next term of the court; and it is doubtful whether the January term may be extended until November. Harris v. Nixon, 27 App. D. C. 94, 98.

FROM THE EVIDENCE

The words "from the evidence," used in an instruction requiring a finding from the evidence, means all the evidence in the case. Little Rock & H. S. W. R. Co. v. McQueeney, 92 S. W. 1120, 1123, 78 Ark. 22.

The phrase, "from all the other circumstances appearing in the trial," and the phrase, "all the evidence in the case," are not equivalents, and the use of the former instead of the latter, in an instruction in a criminal prosecution, is erroneous. Ryan v. People, 122 Ill. App. 461, 463.

It is not error to use in an instruction the words "from the evidence," as such a phrase performs the function of the words "from the preponderance of the evidence." Hall v. Ditto, 128 Ill. App. 187, 189.

FROM THE PERSON

See, also, Theft from the Person.

A robbery in the presence of a person is equivalent to an actual taking from his person, so that, though an information charged robbery "from the person," the proof was sufficient where it showed that the taking was in the presence of the prosecuting witness. State v. Lamb, 146 S. W. 1169, 242 Mo. 398.

The words "from the person of another," as used in our statutory definition of robbery, are used in the same sense and with the same meaning that these terms had acquired at common law at the time the statute was enacted, and the offense of robbery under our statute may be committed by violence or putting in fear and feloniously taking money or other thing of value from the person of, or in the presence and under the immediate control and possession of the person assaulted.

ed. O'Donnell v. People, 79 N. E. 639, 642, 224 Ill. 218, 8 Ann. Cas. 123.

FROM PLACE TO PLACE

Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 24, provides that a city may make ordinances for the regulation of carriages and vehicles used therein. An ordinance of a city provided that no person should use or drive any vehicle for the conveyance "from place to place within the city" for hire of any goods, wares, or merchandise, without a license. Defendant was engaged in a business in a city which was conducted by taking orders for the purchase of merchandise in other cities, receiving a cash payment to cover the cost of the goods bought, and on arrival of the goods over the railroad, placing them in defendant's wagons, and delivering them in the city on payment of defendant's charges; the cost of the railroad transportation being paid by defendant. Held, that defendant's business was within the statute and ordinance. Commonwealth v. Beck, 79 N. E. 744, 745, 194 Mass. 14 (citing Commonwealth v. Stodder [Mass.] 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679).

FROM PORT OF THE UNITED STATES

The words "from ports of the United States" include all voyages, whether domestic or foreign, which begin in this country. Knott v. Botany Worsted Mills, 21 Sup. Ct. 30, 32, 179 U. S. 69, 45 L. Ed. 90; The Tampico, 151 Fed. 689, 691.

FROM TIME TO TIME

A recognizance, binding an appellant in a criminal case to appear before the trial court "from time to time of the same," is not in compliance with a statute under which the recognizance should bind defendant to appear "from term to term." Fulton v. State (Tex.) 78 S. W. 227.

The term "from time to time," in a contract for the sale of real estate which provides that the price shall be paid "from time to time," is sufficiently definite and certain as to time of payment to justify performance of the contract. Tingue v. Patch, 101 N. W. 792, 794, 93 Minn. 437 (citing Lankton v. Stewart, 7 N. W. 360, 27 Minn. 346).

The words "from time to time" in such deed apply to the successive irrigation seasons, which may or may not be coextensive with the year, and the entire expense for such time or irrigation season is the expense incurred during the whole season, and cannot be determined, and is not payable until the close of the season, so that the average amount of water carried through the irrigating season is the proper denominator to determine the fractional amount which the grantor must pay. Rogers v. West Riverside 350-Inch Water Co., 124 Pac. 447, 449, 18 Cal. App. 707.

The words "from time to time," in Const. art. 16, § 20, providing that the Legislature shall enact a law whereby the voters of a county or such subdivision as may be designated by the commissioners' court may determine "from time to time" whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited "within the prescribed limits," do not prevent the Legislature from authorizing such an election in a subdivision of the county in part of which local option is in force, and in part of which it is not in force. Griffin v. Tucker, 118 S. W. 635, 638, 102 Tex. 420.

FRONT

As adjoining or bordering

Where a deed described defendant's lot as "fronting" 65 feet on a certain road in a straight line, and the road as it passed the premises curved, so that, if measured according to the margin of the road, the lot would be less than 65 feet in width, and prior to the construction of defendant's house plaintiff and defendant agreed that the lot should be 65 feet wide, according to a survey, and the marks made on the fences at the time of the survey gave a lot 65 feet wide at the front, and the grantee built to that line, the deed would not be construed as limiting the lot to 65 feet measured according to the margin of the road. Webb v. Walters, 87 S. W. 1051, 1052, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 623.

Under a statute authorizing the city council to order street work, including the construction of sidewalks, and providing that the expenses shall be assessed on the "lots and lands fronting thereon," etc., a lot fronting on one side of a street may be assessed for the cost of constructing a sidewalk along the opposite side thereof, though the owner of such lot has, in advance of any proceeding by the council and for his own convenience, laid a sidewalk along his property line without obtaining an agreement from the opposite owner to pay a half of the cost thereof. Millsap v. Balfour, 97 Pac. 668, 669, 154 Cal. 303 (citing and adopting San Diego Inv. Co. v. Shaw, 61 Pac. 1082, 129 Cal. 273).

A city charter provided that three-fourths of the cost of street grading should be assessed on all the property in the assessment district, to be established by drawing a line midway between the street to be improved and the next parallel or converging street on each side thereof, except that, if the property adjoining the street to be improved was divided into lots, the district line should embrace the entire depth of all lots "fronting on" such street, and if the line, when drawn midway, would divide a lot lengthwise, running within 25 feet of the nearer boundary thereof, then it should diverge and follow

h boundary. If there were no parallel or converging streets, the line was to be drawn 20 feet from the street to be improved. If, if a parallel or converging street existed only on one side, the line on the other side should be drawn equidistant with the street thus indicated. Throughout the charter the phrases "fronting upon or adjoining" and "fronting upon or bordering on" were used in reference to assessments on the rear basis, while sidewalk assessments were directed on abutting property. The charter defined "lot" as the lots shown by recorded plats; but if there were no such plat, or if the owners of the property had regarded the lines of the lots as platted, and treated two or more or fractions thereof as one lot, then the whole should be regarded as one lot. An entire block, bordered by a street to be improved, was improved by the erection of a residence and outbuildings fronting on a street intersecting the former; the entrance to the property being on such intersecting street. The half of another block, which was vacant, extended lengthwise 817 feet on another intersecting street, and a depth of 225 feet on the street to be improved, and taxes had been assessed against it as fronting on such intersecting street, while residences on the other half of the block faced the parallel intersecting street. Neither tract had been platted as provided by the charter. Held, that drawing an assessment district line so as to include these entire tracts violated the charter. The words "adjoining" and "fronting" in the charter are not synonymous. Collier's Estate v. Western Paving & Supply Co., 79 S. 947, 949, 180 Mo. 362.

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 14, provides that the total cost of grading streets, shall be ascertained, and one-fourth thereof shall be assessed on all property fronting on or adjoining the improvement, the proportion that the frontage of each lot so fronting or adjoining bears to the total aggregate frontage of all lots or parcels of ground "fronting on or adjoining" the improvement, and the remaining three-fourths shall be levied and assessed on all the property in the district to be defined and bounded by drawing a line midway between the street to be improved and the next parallel converging street on each side of the improved street, provided that, if the property divided into lots, the district line shall be drawn as to include the entire depth of all lots "fronting" the street to be improved, and that the assessment shall be in the proportion that the area of each lot or parcel of ground, or a part of each parcel of ground, lying within the district, bears to the total area of the district, exclusive of streets and alleys. Held, that where a parcel of land ought to be assessed for a street improvement had never been divided into lots or tracts, and such property fronted on a street other than the one improved, the taxing district for the assessment of the three-fourths of the cost of the improvement should be ascertained by dividing it midway between the street improved and the next parallel street. The words "fronting" and "adjoining" in the charter are synonymous. Meier v. City of St. Louis, 79 S. W. 955, 956, 958, 180 Mo. 391.

Where, in 1875, the United States government built a dike, which follows the course of a bulkhead line established under Laws 1857, c. 763, along the north shore of Staten Island, substantially east and west in front of the uplands of plaintiff and defendant, and the waters within the dike, prior to the erection of a wharf and bulkhead upon defendant's neighboring uplands and fillings, were unnavigable for ordinary commercial purposes, and the bulkhead line, both legally and physically, indicates the line of deep water, plaintiff's riparian rights are determined with reference thereto; the "front" of plaintiff's lands, from which she has right of access to deep water, being that portion which is abreast of the bulkhead line, namely, its north shore. Dooley v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 187 N. Y. Supp. 737, 740, 77 Misc. Rep. 398.

As street frontage

The "front property line," within the restriction of deeds of property platted into lots that no building shall be erected within 20 feet of the front property line of any street, includes, in the case of a corner lot, the line of the street on which is the side of the lot, as well as the line of the street on which the lot faces. Waters v. Collins (N. J. Ch.) 70 Atl. 984.

FRONT DOOR

A return on substituted service that it had been served by posting and leaving on the "door" of the usual dwelling place of the person sought to be served was not equivalent to stating that it was left and posted on the "front door," as required by the Code. King v. Davis, 187 Fed. 198, 206.

FRONT FOOT

The mode of assessing property for sidewalk improvements, known as the "front foot rule," does not limit the amount of the assessment by the special benefits accruing to the property charged with the cost of the improvements. Wilzinski v. Greenville, 87 South. 807, 808, 85 Miss. 393.

FRONTAGE

A statute authorizing a special tax on the lots "on any street" for the improvement of the street, and providing for the apportionment of the cost upon the several lots according to the "frontage," contemplate that the property shall front on the street improved, and a city paving a street together with the area at the place of intersection with another street cannot levy a special tax on property abutting on the latter street. City of Chillicothe ex rel. Meek v. Henry, 118 S. W. 486, 488, 136 Mo. App. 468.

A description in an assessment roll of property as the east half of a certain lot having 38 "feet front" and a depth of 66 feet, and situate on the east side of a certain street and north of the cross street, is misleading and inadequate, being made without reference to the map of the lots; the statement that the lot has a "frontage" suggesting that it is bounded on a street or some other open space, whereas the portion of the lot sought to be assessed abutted on the side of another lot, and not on a street; and there being nothing in the description of the assessment roll sufficiently appraising one of the location of the frontage, and therefore from what point the line of depth is to be measured. Fulton v. Krull, 93 N. E. 494, 496, 200 N. Y. 105.

FRONTAGE RATE

"In the city of Chicago the system prevails of charging what is known as a 'frontage rate' against every building which fronts upon a street, through or along which a water main has been laid. This 'frontage rate' is in addition to the charges made for instruments of service which may be used in the building. It is based upon the minimum of 12 feet front of a one-story building, and increases as the frontage increases and the number of stories in the building increases." Denver v. Denver Union Water Co., 91 Pac. 918, 924, 41 Colo. 77.

FRUCTUS

FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES

"In no sense can trees, the natural and permanent growth of the soil, be regarded as partaking of the character of emblements or 'fructus industriales,' but are a part of the inheritance and can only become personal by actual severance, or by severance in contemplation of law, as the effect of a proper instrument of writing." Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. Law, 138, 139, 13 Am. Rep. 432.

Crude turpentine in turpentine boxes in the pine trees in a state, to be dipped up, is personal property, and the turpentine crop is properly classed with "fructus industriales," as it requires annual labor and cultivation. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 So. 69, 74, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274.

Where plaintiff leased a farm in January on which there was then a vineyard and crop of young grape plants, nearly a year old, attached to the parent vines, making no reservation as to crops, and on the following March, when the plants were ready for severance and transplanting and when it was necessary for them and for the vineyard that they be severed, the lessee severed them and appropriated them to his own use, whereupon the lessor brought action for waste to recover treble damages under the statute. The plants were personal property, "fructus industriales," not belonging to the inheritance, and for their removal the lessor had no cause of action. Deltenre v. Deltenre, 188 S. W. 632, 633, 152 Mo. App. 487.

FRUCTUS NATURALES

Those crops which grow from perennial roots, and which do not require the natural labor of the owner to bring them into existence, are called "fructus naturales," and pass to the heir at law or devisee as a part of the real estate. Simanek v. Nemetz, 9 N. W. 508, 510, 120 Wis. 42.

FRUIT

Fruit hermetically sealed in bottles which is preserved by the sealing rather than by the sugar, etc., in the surrounding fluid is dutiable as "fruits * * * prepared," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 262, rather than as "fruit preserved in sugar," etc., under paragraph 263. United States v. Reiss & Brady, 10 Fed. 746, 747, 92 C. C. A. 408.

Cherries

Cherries which have been prepared by removing the stems and pits and washing away dirt, natural acid, etc., so as to prevent decay in transportation, and which are imported in a very weak saline solution, are dutiable as fruits in their own juices, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263. A. L. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 690, 691.

Cherries, which have been washed, pitted, and packed in salt water to preserve them in transit, are not dutiable as "fruit preserved * * * in their own juices," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, but as "edible fruits * * * prepared in any manner," under paragraph 262. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 15 Fed. 4, 5, 80 C. C. A. 461.

Certain cherries imported in casks, in the surrounding fluid containing alcohol added for the purpose of resisting fermentation and decay, the cherries being an inedible variety, intended to be used in the manufacture of cherry juice, are specially provided for in paragraph 263, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, as "fruits preserved in * * * spirits," and are not dutiable under paragraph 299, Schedule H, § 1, c. 11, said act, either as "cherry juice" or as an unenumerated article similar thereto, "either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied," under section 7 of said act. Voight v. Mihalovitch, 125 Fed. 707, 79, 81, 82, 83.

Certain fruit in spirits, consisting of cherries in maraschino, is not dutiable under paragraph 218, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894,

, § 1, Schedule G, relating to "fruits preserved in sirup," but under section 3 of said act, as unenumerated manufactured articles. United States v. Reiss & Brady, 142 Fed. 59, 73 C. C. A. 185.

Chutney

The article commercially known as "chutney," which consists of various fruits preserved with sugar and spices, is dutiable as "fruits preserved," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, rather than as "edible fruits * * * prepared," under paragraph 262. Park & Tilford v. United States, 164 Fed. 910, 912.

As emblements

See Emblements.

Lemons

Halved lemons in brine are "fruits in brine" within paragraph 55a, in the Free List of the Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, Schedules G, N, and not dutiable as lemon preserves under paragraph 267, notwithstanding the brine renders the pulp inedible and the only value is in the peel. Hill Bros. v. United States, 123 Fed. 477, 478, 50 C. C. A. 412.

Limes

Limes in brine held not to be dutiable as "fruits in brine" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 266 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1651], but to be free of duty under section 2, Free List, par. 558, of said act, as "fruits in brine, not specially provided for." Wannan v. United States, 136 Fed. 743, 744, C. C. A. 395.

As merchandise

See Merchandise.

Olives

Ripe olives sometimes called "black olives," are free of duty under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 559, "fruits in brine." United States v. Zuck & Co., 175 Fed. 578, 579.

Pineapples

Pineapples preserved in cans in their own juice, with 8 per cent. of sugar added for flavoring, and not aiding substantially in the preservation, which is accomplished by the canning process, held dutiable as "pineapples preserved in their own juice," and not as fruit preserved in sugar, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263. United States v. J. S. Johnson & Co., 12 Fed. 164, 165, 81 C. C. A. 416.

The addition of from 2.28 to 8.82 per cent. of sugar to pineapples preserved in cans in their own juice does not remove the fruit from the provision for "pineapples preserved in their own juice," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 1, to the provision in the same paragraph for "fruits preserved in sugar." U. H. Dud- ley & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 881, 882, 82 C. C. A. 627.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, for "pineapples preserved in their own juice," held not to include pineapples in which sugar has been used as a preservative. They are dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "fruit preserved in sugar." U. H. Dudley & Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 333, 334.

Watermelon

A "watermelon" is a species of fruit, and is also generically a vegetable. Massey v. City of Columbus, 70 S. E. 263, 264, 9 Ga. App. 9.

FRUIT DEALER

FRUITS

Revenue synonymous

An affidavit in sequestration proceedings, stating that plaintiff fears that defendant will make use of his possession to convert to his own use the fruits "or" revenues produced by the property, was not rendered indefinite or uncertain by the use of the word "or"; the words "fruits and revenues," as used in the sequestration statute, being synonymous. Huribut v. Gainor, 103 S. W. 409, 411, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 588.

FUCK

Where, in a trial for homicide, accused testified that prior to the homicide his brother had informed him that deceased had stated that he would whip accused and his brother and "fuck" the whole family, a charge on manslaughter was not insufficient because it did not charge the jury that insulting conduct towards the female relatives of accused constituted adequate cause; for the word "fuck" only conveyed the idea of ill will towards the brother of accused, and a purpose to bring on a difficulty with him, especially in view of affidavits on a motion for a new trial averring that the word used meant "to whip, or beat, or chastise." Lara v. State, 95 S. W. 1083, 1084, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 163.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE

See, also, Flee from Justice.

One found in another state on institution of prosecution against him who refuses to return voluntarily is a fugitive within the extradition law, though he left openly, not in flight or with any intent to avoid arrest; the manner of his leaving being immaterial. Taylor v. Wise (Iowa) 126 N. W. 1126, 1127.

One who is within the state at the time of the commission of a crime and thereafter leaves it, no matter for what reason, or under what belief, is a "fugitive from justice" of that state within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States. A person indicted the second time for the same offense is none the less a fugitive from justice within the meaning of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, and Rev. St. § 5278, governing extradition, because, after the dismissal of the first indictment, on which he was originally extradited, he left the state with the knowledge of, or without objection by, the state authorities. Bassing v. Cady, 28 Sup. Ct. 392, 394, 206 U. S. 386, 52 L. Ed. 540, 18 Ann. Cas. 905.

A person who departs from the jurisdiction after having committed an act in furtherance of a crime subsequently consummated is a "fugitive from justice" and subject to extradition. State ex rel. Rinne v. Gerber, 126 N. W. 482, 484, 111 Minn. 132.

The belief of the accused, when leaving the demanding state, that he had not committed any crime against the laws of that state, does not prevent his being a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the provision of Const. art. 4, § 2, and Rev. St. § 5278, relating to extradition proceedings. Appleyard v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 123, 203 U. S. 222, 51 L. Ed. 161, 7 Ann. Cas. 1073.

To be a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the provisions of Const. art. 4, § 2, and Rev. St. § 5278, relating to extradition proceedings, it is only necessary that the accused, having been in the demanding state when the crime was committed, thereafter leave that state and be found within the territory of another. Appleyard v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 123, 203 U. S. 222, 51 L. Ed. 161, 7 Ann. Cas. 1073.

A fugitive from justice is one who commits a crime and withdraws himself from the jurisdiction of that state in which the offense was committed, and the deputy sheriff has no power to pursue such a fugitive into another state and claim his pay or compensation therefor from the county in which he is deputy. Roberts v. Board of Com'rs of Custer County, 105 Pac. 797, 798, 17 Idaho, 379.

A person who, after having been convicted of a crime committed within a state, when sought for, to be subjected to the sentence of the court, is found within another state, is a "fugitive from justice," within the meaning of the extradition statute. Hughes v. Pfanz, 138 Fed. 980, 981, 71 C. C. A. 234 (citing Ex parte Reggel, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 250; Roberts v. Reilly, 6 Sup. Ct. 291, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. Ed. 544).

"One may be a nonresident of the state and also a fugitive from justice, or a fugitive from justice and still be a resident of the state," and the fact that an information charges that accused was a fugitive from justice during a certain time and during said time was not an "inhabitant or resident of this state" does not make such allegations repugnant or inconsistent, and since they are conjunctively pleaded, to prevent the bar of limitation, refusal to compel the state to elect as to which ground it would rely is not error. "It is not essential that he should leave the state before he could be regarded as a 'fugitive from justice.' One who commits an offense and conceals himself to avoid arrest is a 'fugitive from justice.' If he successfully hides or conceals himself so as to avoid punishment for his crime, although such concealment may be upon his own premises, he is as much a fugitive from justice as if he had escaped into Canada." Stata v. Miller, 87 S. W. 484, 487, 188 Mo. 370 (quoting and approving State v. Harvell, 89 Mo. 588, 1 S. W. 837).

Purpose or time of flight

"To be a 'fugitive from justice' in the sense of the act of Congress regulating the subject under consideration, it is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed after an indictment found or for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that, having within a state committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense he has left its jurisdiction and is found within the territory of another." Ex parte Dickson, 69 S. W. 943, 947, 4 Ind. T. 481 (quoting and adopting definition in Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 6 Sup. Ct. 291, 29 L. Ed. 544).

One is a "fugitive from justice," within Rev. St. U. S. § 5278, which provides for the extradition of such fugitive, and a statute excepting, from the limitation of time for prosecuting crimes, "any person fleeing from justice," where he is within the state at the time the alleged offense was committed, and failed, for any reason, to remain therein until the bar of the statute was complete, even though he did not leave for the purpose of avoiding prosecution. In re Bruce, 132 Fed. 390, 391.

That petitioner remained in Alabama for some time after an alleged homicide, then moved to Georgia, remaining in constant communication with the Alabama authorities, and where his location was known to them when he moved to Texas, where he lived for a number of years before extradition proceedings were instituted, did not prevent him from being a "fugitive from justice" within the extradition law, which term includes any person who commits a crime in one state for which he is indicted, and departs therefrom and is found in another state. Ex parte Coleman, 113 S. W. 17, 21, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 98.

It is not necessary that the person accused should have fled from the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed or have left it in apprehension of a prosecution to constitute him a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the federal statute. If, having been within a state, he is accused of having committed while there that which by its laws constitutes a crime, and when he is sought to be subjected to criminal proceeding therefor he has left its jurisdiction and is found within another state, he is a fugitive from justice. It is not important whether the accused leaves the state to avoid prosecution or not. His motive does not affect his relation to the law. Commonwealth v. Hare, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 25, 130.

To be a "fugitive from justice," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5278, relative to the extradition of persons accused of crime, it is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, after an indictment found, or for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that, having within a state committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he has left its jurisdiction and is found within the territory of another. Depoilly v. Palmer, 28 App. D. C. 324, 329.

FULFILLED

Where a city clerk has examined a petition for the removal of a city officer, and certified that he had compared the names on the petition for removal with the great register and found the petition sufficient, it implies that the petition "fulfilled the requirements of the law." Good v. Common Council of City of San Diego, 90 Pac. 44, 47, 5 Cal. App. 265.

FULL

See In Full.

The term "full," in a statute providing that an act shall be of "full" force and effect from a certain date, implies that the statute shall have some effect at once, where necessary to carry out the intention of the legislature, and where Laws 1905, c. 703, created the office of county auditor and imposed on him, among others, certain duties previously laid on the register of deeds, some of which could not be performed during the incumbency of then existing officers, and further provided that the act should be in full force and effect from and after the expiration of the term of office of existing officers, the operation of the act was postponed till the expiration of such term of office only as to those duties which could not be performed before that time by the new auditor, but as to other duties took effect at once. Fortune v. Board of Com'rs of Buncombe County, 52 S. E. 950; 953, 140 N. C. 322.

FULL AND ENTIRE USE

Where defendant contracted to employ plaintiff, an individual shop owner, to produce certain drop forgings for plaintiff's plant, and plaintiff agreed to give defendant during the period specified the "full and entire use" of the plant with the exception of one machine, defendant was bound to keep the shop employed during the period. Speirs v. Union Drop-Forge Co., 54 N. E. 497, 498, 174 Mass. 175.

FULL AND FAIR CASH VALUE

See, also, Full Cash Value.

The term "full and fair cash value," as used in a statute requiring an assessor to fix the valuation of property at its full and fair cash value, contemplates the full and fair cash value at the time the valuation is made, with reference to all practicable uses to which the land with its buildings can be put. Tremont & Suffolk Mills v. City of Lowell, 89 N. E. 1028, 1029, 163 Mass. 288.

FULL AND FAIR STATEMENT OF ALL THE FACTS

The term "full and fair statement of all the facts," as applied to the statement to counsel to obtain advice as to the commencement of a criminal prosecution, does not mean all the facts discoverable, but all the facts within the knowledge of the person making the statement. If he knows facts enough either personally or by credible information which, when fairly and fully stated, results in advice which is honestly followed in commencing the prosecution, that is sufficient. King v. Apple River Power Co., 111 N. W. 688, 670, 131 Wis. 575, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1063, 11 Ann. Cas. 951.

Where one, before instituting a criminal prosecution, states to an attorney fully all the facts within his knowledge or of which he has reasonably reliable information, and acts upon the advice of such attorney, he has in the legal sense probable cause for his action rendering him immune from liability for malicious prosecution. The attorney consulted before a criminal prosecution need not be necessarily the public prosecutor, and the term "full and fair statement of all the facts" does not call for all facts reasonably discoverable or require the informer to make diligent inquiry in respect thereto. Topolewski v. Plankinton Packing Co., 126 N. W. 554, 558, 143 Wis. 52.

FULL AND FREE USE AND ENJOYMENT

A provision in a chattel mortgage of cordwood reserving to the mortgagor the "full and free use and enjoyment" thereof does not authorize the sale of the wood by the mortgagor. Meyer v. Munro, 71 Pac. 969, 970, 9 Idaho, 46.

FULL AND TRUE VALUE

There is a marked distinction between the terms "full and true value" and "full and true cash value," as used in statutes relating to taxation. Richardson v. Howard, 120 N. W. 768, 769, 23 S. D. 86.

FULL ANSWER

Under section 77 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that a party against whom a judgment or order has been rendered, without other service than by publication in a newspaper, may at any time within three years of the date of the judgment or order have the same opened and be let in to defend, and, before the judgment or order shall be opened, the applicant shall give notice to the adverse party of his intention to make application and shall file a "full answer" to the petition, the "full answer" mentioned must be interpreted to mean that the answer must be full and complete as a pleading by the defendant in the cause. It need not present a defense coextensive with the entire demand, or with every demand of the petition, and whatever defense it proposes must be complete and perfect in the sense of fully overcoming the portions of the plaintiff's claim against which it is directed, and it must subvert sufficient of the cause of action set forth in the petition to make it worthy of consideration in the doing of substantial justice between the parties. Hence an answer filed in connection with an application to open a judgment rendered upon publication service under the act of 1901, relating to the collection of delinquent taxes, on real estate, which is otherwise sufficient, is a full answer if it shows that one per cent. of the judgment consists of taxes intentionally levied for specific purposes not sanctioned by any provision of law, and interest on such taxes. Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Kiowa County, 88 Pac. 70-72, 74 Kan. 693 (citing Durham v. Moore, 29 Pac. 472, 48 Kan. 135).

FULL BENEFIT AND ENJOYMENT

An agreement by an employé to give his employer, who was a candy manufacturer, "the full benefit and enjoyment" of any and all inventions which he might make pertaining to the employer's business, imports an agreement for a shop right or license to use such inventions merely, and does not entitle the employer to an assignment of patents secured by the employé therefor. Hildreth v. Duff, 143 Fed. 139.

FULL CASH VALUE

See, also, Full and Fair Cash Value.

A statute requiring that a taxpayer desiring to attack the valuation in the assessment of his property must, under oath, state the "full cash value" of his property, was not complied with in an objection to an assessment made in 1903 by stating that the property was assessed at a specified less figure in 1902 and that the assessed valuation in 1902 was a "fair valuation." Humbird Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Pac. 941, 945, 946, 11 Idaho, 614.

Const. Cal. art. 13, § 1, provides that all property in the state not exempt under the laws of the United States shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law. Carrying out the command to provide for the ascertainment of the value of property to be taxed, it was enacted by Pol. Code, § 3627, that all taxable property shall be assessed at its "full cash value," and by section 3617 that the terms "value" and "full cash value" mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. San Francisco Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 25 Sup. Ct. 384, 385, 197 U. S. 70, 49 L. Ed. 669.

According to Pol. Code, § 3617, the terms "value" and "full cash value" mean the amount at which property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 106, 149 Cal. 575.

The term "full cash value," as used in Pol. Code Cal. § 3627, requiring all taxable property to be assessed at its "full cash value," defined by Pol. Code, § 3617, to mean the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor, is synonymous with the requirements in the assessment of shares of stock that their market value must be the criterion; the general market value of stock being its true cash and selling value. San Francisco Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 25 Sup. Ct. 384, 386, 197 U. S. 70, 49 L. Ed. 669.

"Market value" is synonymous with the terms "value" and "full cash value," defined by Pol. Code, § 3617, as the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor, and the market value of stock, fairly represents its full cash value in absence of exceptional circumstances giving it an abnormal value, so that any inference of fraud by the placing of an excessive valuation on stock, taken as a basis for assessing a corporate franchise, is rebutted by a showing that the value of the franchise was ascertained by the approved method of deducting from the aggregate market value of its stock, the value of its tangible property, and taking the difference as the franchise value. City of Los Angeles v. Western Union Oil Co., 118 Pac. 720, 721, 161 Cal. 204; Western Union Oil Co. v. Los Angeles County, 118 Pac. 721, 161 Cal. 718.

Laws 1901, p. 238, § 10, provides that all taxable property shall be assessed at its full cash value, and section 8, subd. 5, provides that the term "value" in "full cash value" means the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor. Held, that the words "cash," "fair," or "true" value of the property, as alleged in a complaint attacking an assessment, were not the same as the words "full cash value" used in the act, and therefore did not allege that the property was assessed at more than its full cash value. Humbird Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 83 Pac. 941, 945, 11 Idaho, 614.

FULL COMPENSATION

When used to define damages recoverable, the words "full compensation" mean simply "compensation." In an action for personal injuries, an instruction authorizing the jury to assess plaintiff's damages at such amount as would "fully" compensate him was not erroneous, since, while plaintiff was entitled to recover only such damages as would fairly and reasonably compensate him, yet in contemplation of law, to be either a fair or reasonable compensation, the damages must be a full compensation for the injuries. Texas & P. R. Co. v. McCarty, 108 S. W. 764, 765, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 582.

FULL CONTROL

See Under Full Control.

In a will containing five clauses, the first directing the payment of debts and funeral expenses, the second giving testator's dwelling house to his wife, "she to dispose of same at her pleasure," the third giving his wife moneys arising from collections which might be made, "she to dispose of same at her pleasure," the fourth providing, "All the rest of my estate I give her 'full control,'" and the fifth appointing executors, "full control" did not mean merely control during the wife's life, but the phrase implied complete dominion, and the wife took an absolute estate. Welsh v. Gist, 61 Atl. 665, 666, 101 Md. 606.

FULL COPY

Rev. St. § 1695, providing that in case of a voluntary assignment a full and true copy thereof shall be filed by the officer taking the same in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, is sufficiently complied with by the filing of a duplicate original instead of a "copy." Western Twine Co. v. Teasdale, 73 N. W. 568, 570, 97 Wis. 652.

FULL EVIDENCE

Under Pub. Laws 1866, p. 431, § 7, authorizing a town to appoint commissioners to designate the crossings and lines of streets and providing, that the records or maps or profiles filed by them shall be "full evidence" of the street, the term "full evidence" merely means prima facie. Lathrop v. City of Morristown, 47 Atl. 450, 65 N. J. Law, 467; Id., 51 Atl. 854, 853, 67 N. J. Law, 247.

FULL EXTENT

The instruction that the defense of contributory negligence involves the element that plaintiff knew and appreciated the full extent of the danger can, notwithstanding the words "full extent," mean nothing more than that plaintiff had full appreciation of the danger; and so is not erroneous. Collier v. McCilentic-Marshall Const. Co. (Iowa) 138 N. W. 522, 523.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT

The "full faith and credit" commanded by section 1, art. 4, of the federal Constitution, to be given by each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state, does not mean that such proceedings shall be given any greater faith and credit in a sister state than they would be accorded in the state where taken. Schuler v. Ford, 80 Pac. 219, 221, 10 Idaho, 739, 109 Am. St. Rep. 233, 3 Ann. Cas. 886.

The requirement of the federal Constitution that "full faith and credit" shall be given by states to the judicial decrees of other states requires the other states to give a decree in one state the force and effect to which it was entitled in the state where rendered. The mere domicile within the state of one party to the marriage does not give the courts of that state jurisdiction to render a decree of divorce enforceable in all the other states by virtue of the full faith and credit clause of the federal Constitution against a nonresident who did not appear and was only constructively served with notice of the pendency of the action. Haddock v. Haddock, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 526, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

Full faith and credit are not denied an Illinois judgment by Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1780, which, as construed by the New York courts, precludes the maintenance of an action on such judgment by one foreign corporation against another, because it is not upon a cause of action which arose within the state. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co. No. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 191 U. S. 373, 48 L. Ed. 225.

The refusal of the courts of a state to adopt the construction of a life insurance contract made in the state by a foreign insurance company which adopted the form of the policy to conform with the laws of the state of its incorporation was not a failure to give "full faith and credit" to the laws of the state where the company was incorporated within the meaning of the constitutional provision that "full faith and credit" shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Glover (Ky.) 78 S. W. 146, 147.

The constitutional provision is as applicable to a decree of the Circuit Court in the Southern District of New York as to a decree in the state courts; but the constitutional provision does not preclude the courts of the state in which the judgment is presented from inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the court by which the judgment is rendered. Whether one is a privy to a judgment rendered in a sister state must be determined by the law of the state where the question arises, notwithstanding the full faith and credit clause of the federal Constitution, the purpose of which was not to enlarge or change the jurisdiction of the courts of the several states, but to prescribe the precise weight to be attached to foreign judgments. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 213, 214, 216, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314 (quoting and adopting Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 28 Sup. Ct. 702, 703, 210 U. S. 82, 88, 52 L. Ed. 968. Citing and adopting Deposit Bank of Frankfort v. Frankfort, 24 Sup. Ct. 154, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. Ed. 276; Central Nat. Bank v. Stevens, 18 Sup. Ct. 403, 169 U. S. 432, 460, 42 L. Ed. 807; Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. [84 U. S.] 521, 21 L. Ed. 687).

The "full faith and credit" clause of the federal Constitution does not prevent the courts of one state awarding on the then existing conditions the custody of minors, then living in the state with their mother, to their father though the decree of divorce of the court of another state had awarded custody to their mother. Ex parte Stewart, 137 N. Y. Supp. 202, 204, 77 Misc. Rep. 524.

FULL JURISDICTION

Const. 1890, § 159, which declares that the chancery court shall have full jurisdiction in all matters of equity, means that in whatever is a matter of equity the court's power to adjudge is full, and that, when the court takes hold of a subject, it ought to dispose of it fully and finally, the word "full" implying that nothing is reserved, and, as thus construed, the provision is broadly declaratory of the rule that, where equity has jurisdiction for one purpose, it acquires jurisdiction for all purposes, and a court of chancery, having statutory jurisdiction under Laws 1910, c. 134, to abate a liquor nuisance, may not only abate the nuisance, but may also render judgment for the statutory penalties. State v. Marshall, 56 South. 792, 796, 100 Miss. 626.

FULL LEGISLATIVE POWERS

In a statute conferring upon a board of school commissioners "full legislative powers," the expression quoted covers the entire field of legislation upon this subject, including the officers and agents to be employed, the mode and manner of their election or appointment, the tenure of their respective offices, their duties and compensation, and for what causes and by whom they may be suspended or removed from office. These and any other matters requiring legislation are necessarily embraced. It means ample, complete, perfect powers, not wanting in any essential quality. Mobile School Com'n v. Putnam, 44 Ala. 506, 587.

FULL-PAID STOCK

Building associations are authorized by statute to borrow money for temporary use when applications for loans exceed the accumulations in the treasury and when a series of stock has matured. The issuing of such associations of "full-paid stock" serve the same purpose as borrowing and enlargement of their scope of operations is inconsistent with their original design if properly restricted. Folk v. State Capital Savings & Loan Ass'n, 63 Atl. 1013, 1019, 214 Pa. 53.

FULL PARTICULARS

Under an accident policy requiring written notice of the happening of an accident, a letter stating that insured had been found dead at a specified town in the nighttime near a railroad track, and that apparently death had been caused by his being run over, was not fatally deficient; the requirement of full particulars being that the fact of death be stated, and, as far as known at the time, the cause thereof, so that the insurer may inquire into the accident and the circumstances thereof, and the requirement that "full particulars" be given not meaning that all the details of the accident must be stated. Corn v. National Acc. Soc., 116 N. W. 1046, 1048, 139 Iowa, 86, 130 Am. St. Rep. 294.

FULL POWER

Where a statute gave an independent commission "full power" to pave any street in an annex, the power was not conditional, nor did it mean power to pave only some streets as the council might name, but was plenary power of an independent agent without restriction. City of Baltimore v. Flack, 64 Atl. 702, 708, 104 Md. 107.

The words "full power," in the Florida Constitution giving the Legislature full power to pass laws to prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges by persons and corporations engaged as common carriers in transporting persons and property or performing other services of a public nature, mean a power which cannot be cut down. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. City of Tampa, 190 U. S. 23, 24, 190 U. S. 241, 50 L. Ed. 170.

The Canadian joint-stock companies act provides that the affairs of a corporation shall be managed by a board of directors, who, in the absence of other provisions in a special act or in by-laws, shall elect the president. It also provides for by-laws regulating the number of directors, etc., and the appointment, functions, duties, and removal of all agents, officers, and servants, and their remuneration. The charter of a corporation organized thereunder provided for the appointment by the directors from among the number of an executive committee with su-powers as the by-laws should define, and a by-law provided that the directors should annually appoint from their number two directors, "who with the president shall form an executive committee, and said committee shall have full powers of the board of directors when said board is not in session." Held, that such "full powers" were limited to the conducting of the ordinary business operations of the corporation and did not include the general powers of the board of directors under the statute to amend the by-laws, change the number of members of the committee, remove a member by a majority vote, or to appoint or remove officers and fix their salaries. Hayes v. Canada, Atlantic & Plant S. S. Co., 181 Fed. 289, 292, 104 C. C. A. 271.

FULL SATISFACTION

"Full satisfaction" of the minds and consciences of the jury of the guilt of a defendant is no compliance with the rule which requires the jury to be convinced of guilt "beyond all reasonable doubt." Jones v. State, 36 South. 243, 84 Miss. 194.

FULL STATE GOVERNMENT

The phrase "full state government," in the enabling act (Act Cong. Jan. 16, 1906, c. 3335, § 21 [34 Stat. 267]), providing that the constitutional convention may by ordinance provide for the election of officers for a "full state government," includes not only the state officers whose powers and duties are coextensive with the limits of the state, but includes all the officers whose duties in any manner are connected with the administration of the state government; and the constitutional convention had authority to provide for the election of all the officers provided for in the Constitution. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 198, 212, 18 Okl. 561.

FULL TIME

A provision in a contract of employment by which the employé was to give his "full time to the company's service" is in its nature ambiguous. It does not require 24 hours a day nor every moment of his waking hours. On the other hand, it undoubtedly does require that he shall make that employment his business to the exclusion of the conduct of another business, such as usually calls for the substantial part of a manager's time or attention. Where the managing officer of a corporation devoted his entire business days, of approximately nine hours, and about one-half of his evenings, to the company's service, it could not be said that he failed to give his full time to the company, though he at the same time looked after his mother's estate and the finances of another company and occupied a place on the directory of a bank. Johnson v. Stoughton Wagon Co., 95 N. W. 394, 397, 118 Wis. 438.

FULL TITLE

Where an entryman devised the land, and the devisees conveyed through mesne conveyance duly registered, to plaintiff, whose grantor had held adverse possession for more than 10 years, the title thereby acquired was superior to the title acquired by the entryman's heirs, to whom a patent was issued after his death, under Rev. St. art. 3347, declaring that, whenever the action of any person to recover land is barred by limitations, the person having peaceable and adverse possession shall have full title, precluding all claims; the "full title" meaning in such case all of the title which had emanated from the state. Burton's Heirs v. Carroll, 72 S. W. 581, 582, 96 Tex. 320.

FULL, TRUE, AND CORRECT COPY

The phrase "full, true, and correct copy," in a certificate to a transcript reciting that it contains a "full, true, and correct copy" of the petition, demurrer, and journal entry, does not purport to be a full, true, and complete transcript of all the papers and proceedings in the case, as appears from the records in the office of the clerk of court; and in the absence of a complete record, where the cause is presented on a transcript, it will be presumed that the trial court took proper steps to and did correct any apparent errors appearing on the face of an incomplete transcript. Wade v. Mitchell, 79 Pac. 95, 96, 14 Okl. 168.

FULL, TRUE, AND DETAILED ACCOUNT

To constitute a true account within Act March 5, 1906 (P. L. 78), requiring candidates for nomination to file a "full, true, and detailed account" of expenditures made to secure the nomination, the account must set forth each sum disbursed by the candidate, whether personally or by his agent for election expenses, the date of each disbursement, the name of the person to whom paid, and the purpose for which it was disbursed, and the account must be accompanied by vouchers for all sums exceeding $10, and the filing of the receipts of the agents of the candidate for money placed in their hands does not meet the requirements of the act. In re Umbel, 80 Atl. 541, 542, 231 Pa. 94.

FULL VALUE

The term "full value," as used in the rule that an implied warranty of title arises on the sale of a chattel for full value, means that there must be no such inadequacy of price as would warn a prudent buyer that the seller's acceptance of it was suspicious; not that the exact value must be paid. Shultis v. Rice, 89 S. W. 357, 358, 114 Mo. App. 274.

Under the employers' liability act of 1909, now Civ. Code 1910, § 2782, fixing the measure of damages for a negligent homicide within the provisions of the act at the "full value of the life of the deceased," the quoted phrase means, as defined by Civ. Code 1910, § 4425, the full value of the life of the deceased, without deducting for necessary or other personal expenses of the deceased, had he lived. Atkinson v. Hardaway, 78 S. E. 556, 10 Ga. App. 389.

FULLY ADMINISTERED

Since property of a bankrupt conveyed in fraud of creditors is not property of the estate until the sale is set aside, the existence of a cause of action by the trustee to set aside such conveyance was insufficient to establish that the estate was not fully administered when it was closed, within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, subd. 8, providing that estates shall be closed whenever it appears that they have been "fully administered," by approving the final accounts and discharging the trustees; and section 11, par. "d," declaring that suits shall not be brought by or against a bankrupt's estate after two years from the time the estate is closed. Kinder v. Scharff, 55 South. 769, 770, 129 La. 218.

FULLY DEVELOPED MINE

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, by representing that the mine of a corporation in which defendant sold the prosecuting witness stock was a fully developed mine, the jury were instructed that "a 'fully developed mine' is a deposit of metals or minerals whose underground works or developments are of such an extent or nature as to permit of the extraction of the metals and minerals therein contained with profit without further waste work." Held, that the instruction, though incorrect as a general proposition, properly defined the meaning of the term "fully developed mine" as used by defendant in his representations to the prosecuting witness. To constitute a "fully developed mine," it is not necessary that the mine shall be in such a condition that the metals or minerals therein contained may be extracted with profit without further waste work, as it would be "fully developed" if the ore was sufficiently exposed and ready for extraction to permit active operations in the regular course of mining, although, owing to the barrenness of the ore, it would be impossible to work it with profit. People v. Whalen, 98 Pac. 194, 196, 154 Cal. 472.

FULLY DISTRIBUTED

Rev. Laws, c. 167, § 127, providing that, where an attachment has been dissolved by appointment of a receiver, the receiver shall not be discharged until all the assets which have come into his hands have been "fully distributed," precludes the remission of assets, as to which an attachment had been dissolved by the appointment of an ancillary receiver, by the ancillary receiver to himself as receiver in another state; the requirement that the assets shall be "fully distributed" not being satisfied by a remission of assets to a receiver in another state, but demanding a division, apportionment, and delivery of the assets. Second Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. J. C. Lappe Tanning Co., 84 N. E. 301, 302, 198 Mass. 159.

FULLY IN VIEW

An instruction, in an action for injuries at a railroad crossing, which declares that if the view was in any manner obstructed it was the duty of the plaintiff to stop, will be construed as equivalent to saying that if the track was not "fully in view," that is to say, if there was an obstruction of the view by a hill, bank, trees, or in any manner, due care requires the traveler on the common highway to stop and listen before attempting to cross. State, to Use of Manfuso, v. Western Maryland R. Co., 62 Atl. 754, 756, 102 Md. 257.

FULLY PAID IN

The language of section 1765, Rev. St. 1898, "capital fully paid in," contains the idea of full payment of the authorized capital into the corporation, either in money or its equivalent in property, effecting an extinguishment of the subscription liability for the stock, and an actual addition to the capital of the corporation, not a mere agreement to contribute to the capital stock. Williams v. Brewster, 93 N. W. 479, 483, 117 Wis. 379.

FULLY SATISFIED

Defendant is given the full benefit of the doctrine of reasonable doubt by an instruction that the jury must be "fully satisfied" of defendant's guilt before they can convict him; and if not "fully satisfied" that he did the act charged they must acquit. State v. Charles, 76 S. E. 715, 716, 161 N. C. 286.

FUNCTION

See Executive Function; Governmental Function; Judicial Function; Legislative Function; Municipal Function; New Function.

With reference to patents, it is not always clear what is meant by the use of this elastic and indefinite word "function." But it is thought that the assertion of a new function or effect should only be sustained upon proof of novel or unexpected properties or uses capable of producing novel results. General Electric Co. v. Yost Electric Mfg. Co., 139 Fed. 568, 570, 71 C. C. A. 532.

The phrase "functions of a machine," as used in the patent law, defined as that power or property of the machine of acting in the specific manner designed or intended by its construction; in other words, that which the machine is designed to do, as distinguished from the machine itself and from the product of its action on something external to it.

self. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Denning Wire & Fence Co., 160 Fed. 108, 110; Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey, 169 Fed. 793, 798, 95 C. C. A. 259.

The "function of a court of justice" is to ascertain and declare the truth on the issues presented, and not to see that truth and error are treated with the same favor, and, while reserving to the jury the right and duty of deciding upon facts according to their own conscience, the court should not hesitate, when in his opinion the occasion demands it, to make such comments on the evidence as he believes will direct the jury to right conclusions. Desautelle v. Nasonville Woolen Co., 66 Atl. 579, 580, 28 R. I. 261.

FUND

See Available Funds; City Improvement Fund; Contingent Fund; County Fund; Expense Fund; General Fund; Improvement Fund Tax; Money Order Funds; Paving Fund; Permanent Fund; Public Funds; Reserve Fund; Sinking Fund; Special Fund; Trust Fund.

Webster defines "fund" as follows: "(1)

An aggregation or deposit of resources from which supplies are or may be drawn for carrying on any work, or for maintaining existence. (2) A stock or capital; a sum of money appropriated as the foundation of some commercial or other operation undertaken with a view to profit; that reserve by means of which expenses and credit are supported; as, the fund of a bank, commercial house, manufacturing corporation," etc. Under San Antonio City Charter, § 112, which provides that creditors of the city having established claims shall be entitled to warrants drawn on the city treasurer, which shall be numbered, "designating the fund out of which the same are payable," a judgment creditor of the city may refuse a back tax warrant in discharge of the judgment, where there is no back tax fund in existence; the word "fund" in the charter not including uncollected back taxes which may never be collected. City of San Antonio v. Routledge, 102 S. W. 756, 758, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 196.

In Acts 1885-86, p. 142, c. 1233, § 9, providing that churches and all property of seminaries, asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, and colleges, and all other funds devoted to charitable purposes, shall be exempt from taxation, the word "funds" is used in the sense of "capital." City of Louisville v. Werne (Ky.) 80 S. W. 224, 225.

Real estate obtained by an appropriation made by a fraternal benefit association from its reserve fund for a home office intended to be used for that purpose is not exempt from taxation as a part of such fund under Gen. St. 1909 § 4313. Life & Annuity Ass'n v. Shilling, 120 Pac. 548, 549, 86 Kan. 290.

Checks, notes, bills, stocks, and bonds

Certificates of stock in a bank on which only 60 per cent. has been paid and which were held by the bank as security for the balance, are not moneys, funds, or credits of the bank within Free Banking Act, § 30 (Rev. St. § 3821-85), making it an offense for an officer of a bank to embezzle moneys, funds, or credits of the bank. State v. Davis, 96 N. E. 1022, 1025, 85 Ohio St. 43.

The word "funds," as used in Rev. St. § 3821-85, relating to embezzlement by bank officers, means permanent investment for income, stock of convertible use, or, perhaps in its broadest sense, it is merely synonymous with "assets," but a certificate of stock is not an asset when the real thing of which the certificate is only evidence of title is within complete control of the creditor company. State v. Davis, 96 N. E. 1022, 1025, 85 Ohio St. 43.

In Rev. St. § 5209, which makes it a criminal offense for any officer or agent of a national bank to embezzle, abstract, or willfully misapply "any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association," the word "moneys" refers to the currency or circulating medium of the country; the word "funds" refers to government, state, county, municipal, or other bonds, and to other forms of obligations and securities in which investments may be made; and the word "credits" refers to notes and bills payable to the bank, and to other forms of direct promises to pay money to it. United States v. Smith, 152 Fed. 542, 544 (citing United States v. Greve, 65 Fed. 489).

The term "funds," as used in Code, § 1841, providing that savings banks may receive on deposit the savings and funds of others, is not limited to money. It is used in connection with "savings" and was evidently intended to include notes, bills, stocks, bonds, and other securities appropriate for deposit in such an institution, and which it has long been customary to leave there for safe-keeping. Sherwood v. Home Sav. Bank, 109 N. W. 9, 11, 131 Iowa, 528.

Money

A "fund" is well defined as money or its equivalent gathered for or to be appropriated to a specific object. McCammon v. Cooper, 69 N. E. 658, 659, 69 Ohio St. 366.

A "fund," as generally understood and defined, means a sum of money, and the words "pay over" are commonly used with reference to money and never as the equivalent of a conveyance or a transfer of real estate. Where a testator directed his executor to divide his property into as many portions as there were children living at his decease or who, having previously died, had left lawful issue, and upon the death of his daughters directed the executor to pay over the portion or part of the "fund" then held for the benefit of such daughter, there was an implied power of sale of the real estate. Burnham v. White, 102 N. Y. Supp. 717, 719, 117 App. Div. 515.

In the case of the division of a township and the establishment of a new township, the new township, under Rev. St. 1906, § 1377, providing that in case of a division of any township the "funds" in the treasury of such township shall be partitioned to the new township, is entitled not only to its portion of the money in the treasury of the original township at the time the new township is established, but also to money thereafter in the treasury to the extent the same was collected from the territory established into the new township. Cooley v. State ex rel. Village of Bay, 78 N. E. 386, 370, 74 Ohio St. 252.

FUNDAMENTAL ERROR

"Fundamental error," which will be considered, whether assigned or not, is that going to the foundation of the case, or taking from defendant a right essential to his defense. Rea v. State, 105 Pac. 386, 3 Okl. Cr. 281.

FUNDED DEBT

Village Law, § 41, subd. 2, permits women possessing the qualifications to vote for village officers, except that of sex, who own property assessed at the preceding assessment, to vote upon a proposition to "raise money by taxes or assessment." General Municipal Law, § 6, provides that a "funded debt" shall not be created by a municipal corporation, unless by a resolution passed by a two-thirds vote of the council adopting it, or on submission to the taxpayers of the village when required by law. A proposition was submitted to the voters of defendant village to issue village bonds to establish a waterworks system, to be paid by the annual levy and collection of taxes. Held, that the bonds would be a "funded debt," within section 6, which included all municipal indebtedness evidenced by a bond, the principal of which was payable after the current fiscal year, with periodical payments of interest, when provision for payment was made by future taxation, and the proposition to issue them was one to "raise money by taxes or assessment," within the village law, so that women were entitled to vote thereon, and the election was void. Gould v. Village of Seneca Falls, 118 N. Y. Supp. 648, 651.

Under General Municipal Law, § 5, the words "funded debt" include all municipal indebtedness embraced in or evidenced by a bond the principal of which is payable at a time beyond the current fiscal year of its issue, with periodical terms for the payment of interest, and when provision is made for the payment by raising necessary funds by future taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the municipal revenue. Said section 6 declares that a funded debt shall not be created, except by resolution or ordinance passed by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to the board or council adopting it, or submitted to and approved by the electors of the town or county, or taxpayers of the village or city, when required by law. Held, that women otherwise qualified, except for sex, were entitled to vote on the question of the levy of a tax to pay waterworks bonds under Village Law, § 128, subd. 6, providing that a woman who possesses the qualifications to vote for village officers, except the qualification of sex, who is the owner of village taxable property, may vote on the proposition to raise money by tax assessment. Gould v. Village of Seneca Falls, 121 N. Y. S. 723, 724, 137 App. Div. 417.

FUNDING

A corporation purchasing the property of another corporation, subject to a mortgage securing an issue of $500,000 of bonds, of which $425,000 were issued, executed a mortgage on such property and other property to secure an issue of $1,500,000 of its bonds. The bonds to be issued under the mortgage were called "refunding mortgage bonds," while the bonds secured by the prior mortgage were called "underlying bonds." The refunding mortgage recited that it was subject to a prior mortgage, and that the mortgagor desired to "fund" the indebtedness thereby secured, and that $500,000 face amount, of refunding mortgage bonds, should be reserved to be issued and delivered to take up at maturity, or before, the underlying bonds, and that, when the mortgagor tendered any underlying bonds, the trustee, in exchange therefor, should authenticate and deliver refunding mortgage bonds. Each of the bonds stated that it was one of a series of bonds secured by mortgage. Held, that the corporation was entitled to receive from the trustee refunding bonds in exchange for underlying bonds, whether canceled or not, or to exchange such bonds, whether canceled or not, for cash deposited in exchange for refunding bonds; the word "funding" meaning the process of collecting together a variety of outstanding debts against a corporation payable at short periods and substituting therefor a single form of indebtedness payable at periods comparatively remote. Twin State Gas & Electric Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 764, 767, 135 App. Div. 467.

FUNDS OF A BANK

Where a bank receiving a deposit of county funds without giving the statutory bond therefor thereby became a trustee for the county for the amount of the deposit, the county, on the insolvency of the bank, which had commingled the money deposited with its funds and used it in its business as the funds of general depositors, could follow the funds not only in the actual possession of the bank at the time it suspended, but also the funds held in correspondent banks, the expression "the funds of a bank" meaning all its funds, including deposits in correspondent banks. Yellowstone County v. First Trust & Savings Bank of Billings, 128 Pac. 596, 599, 46 Mont. 489.

FUNDS OF ESTATE

On an appeal from a decree, construing a will, an order providing that costs of the appeal should be advanced out of the "funds of this estate" means the funds in the hands of the executor at the time, where the costs were required to be paid within the time allowed to prosecute the appeal. Boyce v. McLeod, 68 Atl. 135, 136, 107 Md. 1.

FUNERAL

A "funeral" is merely the disposition of the bodies of human beings after death, with the accompanying rites and ceremonies. People v. Ringe, 110 N. Y. Supp. 74, 76, 125 App. Div. 592.

FUNERAL EXPENSES

The term "funeral," in the law as to the liability of estates for "funeral expenses," includes many circumstances and may cover varied outlays. The term embraces not only the solemnization of interment, but the ceremonies and accompaniments attending according to the religious faith and sentiment of the friends of the deceased. Expenditures for a wake, made at the request of the widow of decedent who left no children, being reasonable, are recoverable of the executors as expenses of the funeral; they being proper in character. McCullough v. McCready, 102 N. Y. Supp. 633, 634, 52 Misc. Rep. 542.

Reasonable cost of keeping a burial plot and monument in repair is properly a part of the "funeral expenses," exempt from the transfer tax on an estate; and so a bequest of $250, to be invested and the income used for such a purpose, is exempt. In re Maverick's Estate, 119 N. Y. Supp. 914, 915, 135 App. Div. 44.

FUR

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

Pieces of fur sewn together continuously for convenience or safety, but not intended to be used as articles in that shape, are not articles made of "fur," under the Tariff Act of 1897, Schedule N, but are dutiable as "dressed furs on the skin," under the same schedule. Fleet v. United States, 148 Fed. 335.

Sheepskins, purchased indiscriminately and imported unsorted, without regard to any particular use to which they might be adapted, and not shown to be used as furs, are not classifiable as "furs," or "fur skins," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, pars. 561, 562. International Hide & Skin Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 602.

As to combings of loose or dead hair obtained in preparing rabbit or hare skins, which are commercially known as "hares' combings" or "fur waste," and which, after further treatment, are used as an adulterant in cheap hats, held, that they are dutiable as waste under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 463, and not as furs prepared for hatters' use under paragraph 426, nor free of duty as "furs, undressed," under section 2, Free List, par. 561. United States v. Hatters' Fur Exchange, 153 Fed. 595, 596.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 426, for "furs dressed on the skin," does not include dressed goose skins with the down on. Such articles are dutiable as "bird skins, * * * dressed * * * or manufactured in any manner," under paragraph 425. Herskovits & Roth v. United States, 180 Fed. 631, 632.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 561, providing for "furs, undressed," includes undressed clippings and detached portions of fur, used for the same purpose as the skin from which derived; and such material is therefore removed from the provision for "waste, not specially provided for," in section 1, Schedule N, par. 463. Hatters' Fur Exchange v. United States, 175 Fed. 538, 539.

FURNACE

As appurtenance, see Appurtenance—Appurtenant.

The provision for "furnaces," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 152, does not include so-called arched Purves furnaces, consisting simply of corrugated steel cylinders or tubes, which are not furnaces in fact, but are intended to be used in the manufacture of furnaces. Such articles are dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for boiler tubes or flues. Thomas v. F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 162 Fed. 645, 646, 89 C. C. A. 437.

FURNISH

Ordinarily to "furnish" means to deliver, or to supply, and, in the mechanic's lien law, to deliver or supply for use in the making of the improvement or erection of the building. A. E. Shorthill Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn. (Iowa) 124 N. W. 613, 615.

The various expressions that the payor must "pay," or "furnish," or "advance" the consideration, used interchangeably in defining a resulting trust, all imply that the payor does something and that he has the intention, in so doing, to acquire at least an equitable interest in the land. Merrill v. Hussey, 64 Atl. 819, 821, 101 Me. 439.

A contract by one to print and furnish to another illustrated advertising booklets is not a contract for particular personal services, but may be assigned; the word "furnish" meaning to supply or provide. H. C. Browne & Co. v. Jno. P. Sharkey Co., 115 Pac. 156, 157, 58 Or. 490 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3010).

The word "furnish," as used in the charter of a corporation organized for the purpose of furnishing treatment for a certain disease and medical and surgical treatment for all other diseases, means to "supply." The corporation is entitled to contract with persons to supply medical treatment and to contract with physicians to render medical and surgical services. State ex inf. Sager v. Lewin, 106 S. W. 581, 582, 583, 128 Mo. App. 149.

A tender of a certificate of stock with an assignment upon its back and a power to the transferee to effect a transfer of the same on the books of the company is a compliance with a contract to "furnish shares of stock" thereby indicated. Noyes v. Spaulding, 27 Vt. 420, 423, 426.

A charterer who contracts to "furnish" certain towage to the chartered vessel cannot relieve himself from responsibility for the manner in which the service is performed by employing a tug to perform it but is liable for any damage or injury caused to the vessel through the negligence or fault of such tug. The Naos, 144 Fed. 292, 298.

It is not a violation of the statute, forbidding one to "furnish" intoxicating liquors for one who lives in a county in which the traffic in intoxicating liquors is prohibited, under the provisions of that statute, to go into a county where such traffic is not prohibited, and purchase intoxicating liquors in any quantity for his own use, and bring the same into the county where he lives, to be used therein by him as a beverage, and such a person may, under the statute, not only himself purchase intoxicating liquor, but he may also do so by another, whom he has constituted his agent for that purpose. State v. Lynch, 90 N. E. 935, 936, 81 Ohio St. 336, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834.

That plaintiff brought planks to another employé, from which the latter constructed certain platforms, did not constitute a "furnishing" of the contrivance, within Labor Law (Laws 1897, c. 415, p. 467). Madden v. Hughes, 98 N. Y. Supp. 324, 326, 104 App. Div. 101.

The fact that the general contractor permitted a subcontractor to use its material for the construction of a scaffold, the breaking of which injured an employé of the subcontractor, did not make the scaffold the general contractor's "property," or make it one "furnished" by it, within the Employer's Liability Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31). Keyser v. Reid-Palmer Const. Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 452, 454, 78 Misc. Rep. 898.

Administer synonymous

Though, as applied to a physician administering intoxicating liquors to a patient, the word "furnish" is synonymous with administer, under Laws 1881, p. 235, c. 128, § 3, as amended by Laws 1885, p. 237, c. 149, § 2, permitting a physician to administer intoxicating liquors to a patient if necessary, an instruction is not erroneous because the word "furnish" is not used in defining "administer." State v. Wilson, 80 Pac. 565, 71 Kan. 263.

As deliver

The word "give" may be treated as synonymous with "deliver," which is the meaning of the word "furnish," in a statute making it an offense to "furnish" liquor to minors. Southern Exp. Co. v. State, 58 S. E. 67, 69, 1 Ga. App. 700.

A lease provided that "party of the first part agrees to furnish water sufficient to irrigate land above described; said water to come from an artesian well located on land." Held, that the word "furnish" was used in the sense of "deliver"—that is, to provide with the right of possession and use—and the covenant was not complied with where the lessor had a well dug and the contractor locked it so that the lessee could not get water therefrom without breaking the lock, and thereby incurring danger of litigation, or by bringing legal proceedings. Smith v. Hicks, 98 Pac. 138, 140, 14 N. M. 500, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938.

Where a person for the purpose of delivering or selling to others selects food, including oleomargarine, with an opportunity for examination and thereafter delivers such food to guests or patrons, he "furnishes" a substance so delivered within St. 1898, § 4607d, prohibiting the furnishing of oleomargarine to a guest or patron of a restaurant without first notifying him that the substance furnished is not butter. State v. Welch, 129 N. W. 656, 145 Wis. 86, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3010).

As give away

Giving away intoxicating liquor is within the inhibition of Acts 1902, p. 92, No. 90, forbidding "furnishing liquor," but not expressly forbidding giving. State v. Tague, 56 Atl. 535, 536, 76 Vt. 118.

As sold and delivered

To furnish materials for a building, there must be an actual or constructive delivery of the material at or near the building; the word "furnished" meaning to have sold and delivered. Foster Lumber Co. v. Sigma Chi

Chapter House of De Pauw University, 97 N. E. 801, 802, 49 Ind. App. 528.

Furnish for manufacturing purposes

See Water Furnished for Manufacturing Purposes.

Furnish materials

The word "furnished," as used in a mechanics' lien law, does not mean that the materials must be delivered at the building, in the construction of which materials are furnished. McEwen v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 90 Pac. 359, 361, 35 Mont. 470.

Where the last item of charge but one of an itemized account and lien statement filed by a subcontractor, under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, §§ 6151, 6153, was for material furnished and used in a building, and the last item of charge was for material not actually so used, held, that the latter material was not furnished within the contemplation of the statute, and that the 60 days within which to file the lien statement ran from the date of the last item but one, and, it having run at the time of the filing of a statement, no lien attached. P. T. Walton Lumber Co. v. Cox, 116 Pac. 798, 799, 29 Okl. 237.

The mere delivery of material by a subcontractor to a contractor at the latter's place of business, the latter never incorporating it in the structure for which it was bought, or even delivering it on the premises or to the control of the owner of such structure, is not a "furnishing" of the material for, in, or about the construction of the improvement, within St. 1898, § 3315, giving the subcontractor a lien for materials so furnished; the intent in that respect being shown by the concluding sentence, imposing penalty on a principal contractor, who without consent of and with intent to defraud a subcontractor uses, or causes to be used, material for an improvement other than that for which it was represented to be bought. Francis & Nygren Foundry Co. v. King Knob Coal Co., 126 N. W. 39, 40, 142 Wis. 619.

Furnish work

The contract of a subcontractor to carve and erect in place and finish exterior marble work on a building, employed because of his skill in that class of work, and who does the work in the sense of giving it intelligent direction, and who is responsible for its proper execution, brings him within the terms and reason of the statute as one "furnishing work" so as to entitle him to a lien. Evans Marble Co. v. International Trust Co., 60 Atl. 667, 671, 101 Md. 210, 109 Am. St. Rep. 568, 4 Ann. Cas. 831.

FURNISHINGS

Cells in a jail, consisting of steel tanks or cages erected in, but independent of, the jail building, are not within Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 8, requiring a county board to award contracts for public buildings to the lowest bidder, based on plans and specifications previously adopted, but are "furnishings," as to which there is no requirement. Sarver v. Los Angeles County, 108 Pac. 917, 918, 156 Cal. 187.

FURNITURE

See Household Furniture; Necessary Furniture; Office Furniture; Ships' Tackle, Apparel, and Furniture.

As merchandise, see Merchandise.

Showcases are "furniture" within the ordinary meaning of the word, which governs in the construction of tariff schedules published for the information of the public, and are included in a commodity rate on "furniture (new) all kinds." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Feintuch, 191 Fed. 482, 487, 112 C. C. A. 126.

Of business

An iron safe contained in a bank was "furniture" within a policy insuring the bank's furniture and fixtures. Mecca Fire Ins. Co. (Mut.) of Waco v. First State Bank of Hamlin (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1083.

Of house

"Household goods" is a wider term than "furniture," including everything about the house that is usually held and enjoyed therewith, and that tends to the comfort and accommodation of the household. Webb v. Downes, 101 N. W. 966, 967, 93 Minn. 457.

Same—Piano

Notice to insurer's agent that insured had other insurance on his "furniture" was notice of other insurance on a piano. Utz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 122 S. W. 318, 319, 139 Mo. App. 158.

Of schoolhouse

Under a statute authorizing school districts to issue bonds "for the purpose of erecting schoolhouses and furnishing the same," a district may issue bonds for the purpose of providing a heating plant for an old school building, as a heating plant comes within the meaning of the term "furniture," and the statute does not confine the power of the district to furnishing new schoolhouses, but under such provision they may furnish old schoolhouses. State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. No. 1, Tp. 53, R. 23 v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 52, 231 Mo. 547.

FURNITURE OF WOOD

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, providing for "furniture of wood, * * * and manufactures of wood, or of which wood is the component material of chief value," the last clause as to chief value does not relate to the provision for furniture; and furniture, whose framework and principal bulk are of wood, is "furniture of wood," within the meaning of the paragraph, though decorative metal may be the component of chief value. O. G. Hempstead & Son v. United States, 168 Fed. 450, 451.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, includes under the provision for "furniture of wood" Buhl furniture, in which metal ornamentation is the element of chief value, but in which wood predominates in quantity. United States v. O. G. Hempstead & Son, 175 Fed. 966, 967, 99 C. C. A. 356.

Upholstered furniture with wooden frames is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, as "furniture of wood," though silk, and not wood, is the chief component in the completed articles. United States v. A. J. Woodruff & Co., 175 Fed. 776, 99 C. C. A. 348.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, relating to "furniture of wood, * * * and manufactures of wood, or of which wood is the component material of chief value," the furniture provision is not modified by the chief value clause; and upholstered furniture, whose frames are of wood, is dutiable under that provision, though wood is not the most valuable component. A. J. Woodruff & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 452, 453.

FURTHER

The purport of the word "further," in a clause in a will declaring testator's "further meaning" as to prior provisions, is to amplify, to add to, not to negative. Blair v. Scribner, 60 Atl. 211, 213, 67 N. J. Eq. 583.

Where a will provided that, upon the marriage of the testator's son, the executors should pay over to him the sum of $7,500 in quarter yearly payments, beginning from the date of such marriage; in case he should still be married and living with his wife at the end of 12 months, the sum of $8,000 in quarter yearly payments from that date; in case he should be married and living with his wife at the end of 24 months from his marriage, the further sum of $8,500 in quarter yearly payments—the word "further," as used in relation to the first two payments, cannot be construed as giving the son the last sum in addition to the amount directed to be paid. United States Trust Co. v. Soher, 85 N. Y. Supp. 266, 269, 88 App. Div. 506.

FURTHER ANSWERING

The phrase "further answering," used by the defendant to introduce a paragraph of its answer, was not a statement that the paragraph set up a further defense. Ells v. Dumary, 82 N. Y. Supp. 531, 534, 84 App. Div. 105.

FURTHER ASSETS

Rev. Laws, c. 142, § 10, relating to insolvent estates, provides that a creditor who does not present his claim for allowance to the commissioners, or to the court where no commissioners are appointed, within the time prescribed by that court, shall be barred, but that, if "further assets" come into the hands of executor or administrator after the decree of distribution, the claim may be proved and paid. Held, that the term "further assets" is substantially the same as "new assets," which belated creditors are permitted to reach under chapter 141, § 11, relating to solvent estates, and in general does not include property for which the administrator has been charged, or the property into which such property, or any part thereof, has been changed, or the natural increment of such property; and where an administrator did not include in the inventory, nor in his first nor second and final account, certain land, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, if he knew that the land belonged to his intestate long before the decree of distribution, and had it in his control well within the two-year period from his appointment, neither the land nor the proceeds of its sale would be "further assets," but, if his knowledge of intestate's interest in such tract did not come to him until after two years from his appointment, the proceeds of their sale would be "further assets." Fay v. Haskell, 93 N. E. 641, 642, 207 Mass. 207.

FURTHER CONSTRUCTION

The words "further construction," as used in Acts 1845, p. 141, § 6, incorporating a canal company, and giving the power of eminent domain to obtain material necessary for "the further construction" of such canal, raceways, etc., refer to repair work on the canal which was authorized to be constructed by the act, as well as to work of original construction. Alexander v. City Council of Augusta, 66 S. E. 704, 706, 134 Ga. 849.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENT

"Further development," in a contract providing that if, in making certain developments, more water was made to flow than plaintiff was entitled to, then plaintiff was to have the option of purchasing such excess of water, less the amount actually paid by it in making such further development, referred to the development further or beyond what was necessary to make up the deficiency. Chapea Water Co. v. Chapman, 77 Pac. 990, 992, 144 Cal. 368.

FURTHER EMPLOY

The words "further employ," in Kirby's Dig. § 6649, as amended, requiring that railroads pay wages due discharged employes within seven days after demand, and on non-payment the wages shall continue from the date of the discharge or refusal to "further employ" at the same rate until paid, meant employment of the same class and kind and in the same locality in which the wages were earned, and hence, in an action for a penalty, evidence that defendant offered plaintiffs other employment generally or at another place generally was inadmissible. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bryant, 122 S. W. 996, 998, 92 Ark. 425.

FURTHER LEASE

Where a written lease for five years contained a covenant for a further lease for six years at an advanced rent, on notice by the tenant that he desired a continuation of the lease, and the tenant gave the notice and remained in possession paying the advanced rent, it constituted an extension of the original term and a "further lease" provided for in the covenant. Mattlage v. McGuire, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 1085, 59 Misc. Rep. 23.

FURTHER NOTICE

In a note secured by a pledge of collaterals, reciting that it was secured by the pledge of the sureties mentioned, with the right to call for additional security should the same decline, and that, on failure to respond, this obligation should be deemed to become due and payable on demand, with full authority to sell "without further notice," the words "further notice" imply actual previous notice of the demand of the payment. Smith v. Shippers' Oil Co., 45 South. 533, 539, 120 La. 640.

FURTHER PROCEEDING

Where the Supreme Court remanded a cause for "further proceedings," the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial on proper application therefor by him with showing that, under the opinion of the Supreme Court, it considered the findings insufficient to authorize entry of judgment, and this right was not waived by waiting two years. Canosia Tp. v. Grand Lake Tp., 92 N. W. 215, 87 Minn. 347.

FURTHER SECURITY

"Further security," in the ordinary acceptance of the term, means additional, not substituted or superior, security. A grantee of mortgaged property executed a deed of trust thereon to the mortgagee, to secure the mortgage debt and the unsecured indebtedness, which recited that it was given "for the purpose of further securing any of said promissory notes which may now be secured by any mortgage," and provided that, in case a sale thereunder should not realize sufficient to pay the entire indebtedness, the creditor should "retain, have, and possess the same remedies to enforce the payment of said promissory notes or any of them which they would have or possess if this deed of trust had not been executed." The mortgagor whose note was secured by the mortgage consented to the giving of said deed. Held, that the mortgage was not merged in such trust deed, and that the right of the mortgagor to have the proceeds of the property applied to the payment of her note was not affected thereby. Crisman v. Lanterman, 87 Pac. 89, 91, 149 Cal. 647, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167.

FURTHER TIME

As used in a bond given by the treasurer of a mutual benefit association during the first year of his election to that office and conditioned that he should perform his duties faithfully during the term for which he has been elected, and "during such further time as he should continue to hold said office," the phrase quoted applied to such further time beyond the term of one year as the principal might hold the office by virtue of his first election, and was not intended to cover the time during which he might hold office under any subsequent election. O'Brien v. Murphy, 56 N. E. 283, 285, 175 Mass. 253, 256, 257, 78 Am. St. Rep. 487.

The words "further time," as used in the lease in which the covenant was to hold for a term of one year, and providing that the lessee should pay the rent "as above stated, and all taxes and duties levied or to be levied thereon during the term and for such further time as the lessee may hold the same," can have no other meaning than time beyond the stipulated time of one year. Kanouse v. Wise, 69 Atl. 1017, 76 N. J. Law, 423 (quoting Salisbury v. Hale, 12 Pick. [Mass.] 416).

FURTHERANCE

See In Furtherance of.

The word "furtherance," within the rule that no declarations except those made during the pendency of a conspiracy, and in "furtherance" of its objects, can be used against a co-conspirator, means an act, statement, or declaration which in some measure aids or assists towards the consummation of the object of the conspiracy. People v. Smith, 91 Pac. 511, 513, 151 Cal. 619.

FURTHERANCE OF BUSINESS

An instruction that the defendant master was not liable if the decedent was killed by the act of one of the employees of the defendant if such act was not done "in furtherance of the business of the employer" was improper, the words "in furtherance of the business of the employer" meaning simply in the discharge of the duties of the employment, and the jury were properly told that the defendant was not responsible for the injury if caused by the wrongful act of the employee while acting in the scope of his employment. Stewart v. Cary Lumber Co., 59 S. E. 545, 551, 146 N. C. 47 (concurring opinion).

FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE

"Furtherance of justice" is "such justice as the law administers when correctly applied." Wells Fargo & Co. v. McCarthy, 90

Pac. 203, 210, 5 Cal. App. 301 (quoting Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 322).

FUSE

See Double-Tape Fuse; String Fuse; Tape Fuse.

The "fuses" used in telephones are thin hair-like wires of low fusibility, which immediately melt, and prevent any excess current of electricity from being carried over the telephone wires into the house. Dow v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., 106 Pac. 587, 588, 157 Cal. 182.

FUSIONIST

The term "Fusionist" has a well-known meaning in Nebraska. It is descriptive of those individuals who support candidates for elective offices nominated by the joint action of electors of the Democratic and People's Independent Parties, or their representatives. Shebley v. Nelson, 121 N. W. 458, 84 Neb. 393.

FUTURE

See Immediate Future.

FUTURE AGREEMENT

A contract employing an agent to solicit insurance in Oregon and Washington provided that the agent should give a bond for faithful performance "under this or any future agreement." The bond stipulated that it should remain in force so long as the agency should continue, "whether under his existing appointment or any future one and whether such present or future agency" be sole or in connection with others. Subsequently the agent was made soliciting agent in Utah, Colorado, and Wyoming. Held, that the sureties were liable for a breach of his duties in such subsequent employment; the term "future agreement" having reference to a future appointment. Daly v. Old, 99 Pac. 460, 465, 35 Utah, 74, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463.

FUTURE DATE

The word "future," in Laws 1905, p. 159, § 3, providing that an application for the purchase of school land shall be filed in the land office through the mail, in an envelope, and that, when the land is to come on the market at some "future date," the envelope shall have indorsed thereon the description, name of the grantee, date when the land is on the market, etc., and that on receipt of the same it shall be preserved by the commissioner without being opened until the day following the date indorsed thereon, did not refer to the date on which the statute was to take effect, but referred to those cases in which the lands would come on the market upon some day in the future, and the commissioner should offer them in advance for sale on that date, and it was not necessary that an application made after the land came on the market should bear such indorsement. Flores v. Terrell, 92 S. W. 32, 83, 99 Tex. 575.

FUTURE DELIVERY

See Selling for Future Delivery.

FUTURE EARNINGS

An assignment by a contractor to construct a macadam roadway for a city of all sums due or to become due from the city is not an assignment of "future earnings," under St. 1905, c. 308, and St. 1906, c. 390, relating to assignments of "future earnings." William Gilligan Co. v. Casey, 91 N. E. 124, 125, 205 Mass. 28.

Where defendant contracted to build a stable for F., who was summoned as trustee in an action against defendant, and, at the time of an assignment of the balance due on the contract, defendant had fully completed the work, with the exception of putting the fastenings on six windows, the reasonable value of which would have been not more than 25 cents, and the setting of a sill cock, which had not been previously set by reason of the owner's failure to designate its position, and, notwithstanding defendant's failure to complete the building in such respects, the owner accepted, used, and enjoyed the same, the contract was substantially performed; and hence the balance due at the time of the assignment was not "future earnings," within Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 34, requiring an assignment of such earnings to be recorded in order to be valid as against attachment by trustee process. Allen v. Mayers, 69 N. E. 220, 184 Mass. 486.

A maker of monuments, who bought the rough material and then fashioned it into the required form, no part of the work of cutting the stone being either done by him or especially under his direction, but by his workmen, over whom he when present, and in his absence his working foreman, exercised general superintendence, contracted to furnish, and did furnish, a monument; his skill and personal services not being engaged and not entering into the contract. Held, that the price to be paid therefor was not his "future earnings," an assignment of which Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 34, requires to be recorded, to be valid against attachment by trustee process. Chester v. McDonald, 69 N. E. 1075, 1076, 185 Mass. 54.

FUTURE ESTATE

See Property Right to be Owned in the Future.

"A 'future estate' is an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate or on the determination, by lapse of time or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time." In re Perry, 96 N. Y.

Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285 (quoting Real Property Law, § 27).

Where testatrix devised rents to her father for his life, and after his death, to four persons and the survivor of them, at the death of whom the property was to be sold and the proceeds divided equally among the children of the four devisees and testatrix's half brothers and sisters then surviving, the estate attempted to be devised to the children of the four devisees and the half-brothers and half-sisters was a future estate within St. 1898, § 2060, providing that disposition of rents and profits of land to accrue after the execution of the instrument creating the disposition shall be governed by the rules established in the chapter (95) relating to future estates in land, and, as the persons to whom the estate was limited remained uncertain, it was a contingent future estate under section 2037. In re Adelman's Will, 119 N. W. 929, 930, 138 Wis. 120.

FUTURE INJURY

Permanent injury and "future injury" are not expressions of the same thing. Much less is permanent injury and injury to future health. In an action for personal injuries, an instruction for defendant that there was no evidence of permanent injury, and an instruction that the jury might consider the injury to plaintiff's health in the future, were not contradictory. Wood v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 95 S. W. 946, 947, 119 Mo. App. 78.

FUTURE INTEREST

"Future interests" or remainders are vested or contingent. Civ. Code, § 693. * * * 'A future interest is contingent, whilst the person in whom, or the event upon which, it is limited to take effect remains uncertain.' Civ. Code, § 695." Testator devised the remainder of his estate in trust to manage, control, and invest it, and to pay one half the income to his wife for her life and the remaining half to his daughter, each half to go to the survivor until her death, upon the death of the other, and the trust to cease upon the death of such survivor, and the trust property vest in the two children named of testator's daughter, and such other children as may be born to her, or in such of them as shall then be living, share and share alike. Civ. Code, § 694, makes a future interest vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property upon the ceasing of the intermediate estate; and section 696 makes a future interest contingent while the person to whom, or the event upon which, it is limited to take effect remains uncertain. Held, that the remainder to the children of testator's daughter was contingent, and would go to only such of the children as were living at her death. In re Washburn's Estate, 106 Pac. 415, 416, 417, 11 Cal. App. 735.

FUTURE LOSS OF EARNINGS

"Future loss of earnings" signifies diminution of earning capacity in the future and may be shown without a special averment. Scholl v. Grayson, 127 S. W. 415, 417, 147 Mo. App. 652.

FUTURE TIME

See Determinable Future Time; Payable at a Determinable Future Time.

FUTURE WAGES

An assignment by a contractor to construct a macadam roadway for a city of all sums due or to become due from the city is not an assignment of "future wages," under St. 1905, c. 306, and St. 1906, c. 390, relating to assignments of "future wages." William Gilligan Co. v. Casey, 91 N. E. 124, 125, 205 Mass. 26.

FUTURES

Dealing in Futures, see Deal—Dealing.

As gambling contract, see Gambling Contract.

As gambling transaction, see Gambling Transaction.

As Wagering Contract, see Wager—Wager Contract.

The transaction termed "futures" is this: "One person says that I will sell you cotton at a certain time in the future for a certain price. You agree to pay that price, knowing that the person you deal with has no cotton to deliver at the time, but with the understanding that when the time arrives for delivery you are to pay him the difference between the market value of that cotton and the price you agreed to pay if cotton declines, and if cotton advances he is to pay you the difference between what you promised to give and the advance market price." Anderson v. State, 58 S. E. 401, 410, 2 Ga. App. 1, and Henry Hentz & Co. v. Booz, 70 S. E. 108, 110, 8 Ga. App. 577 (both quoting Cunningham v. National Bank of Augusta, 71 Ga. 403, 51 Am. Rep. 266).

GALL CURE

The term "gall cure" is one descriptive of a medicine, and, standing alone, could not be monopolized as a trade-mark and, when used as such in connection with a picture, is not infringed by the use of the words as a part of the name of another remedy in connection with another and distinctive picture. Bickmore Gall Cure Co. v. Karns Mfg. Co., 126 Fed. 573, 574.

GALLERY

See Rognes' Gallery.

GALLON

See Customs Gallon; Dry Gallon; One-Half Gallon; Wine Gallon.

The "gallon," under the Tariff Act, imposing a duty as various rates per gallon, is the wine or liquid gallon, and not the dry gallon, regardless whether the goods are imported dried or in brine. J. M. Ceballos v. United States, 146 Fed. 380, 381; J. M. Ceballos & Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 705.

The description of merchandise in an invoice as contained in "gallon" tins is not to be taken as conclusive against the importers, as fixing the amount contained in the tins for the assessment of duty. Such descriptions do not purport to indicate exactly the amount so contained, and it is the duty of government officers to ascertain as nearly as possible the quantity imported. United States v. Zucca & Co., 154 Fed. 172, 173.

GALLOON

See, also, Narrow.

"The dictionaries generally concur in defining 'galloon' as a 'narrow, tapelike fabric used for binding hats, shoes, etc.'" Certain woven articles from 1 to 2½ inches wide, chiefly used as hat bands for trimming men's hats, are not "galloons," within the meaning of that word as it is used in Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 1, par. 263. United States v. Walter H. Graef & Co., 127 Fed. 688, 689, 62 C. C. A. 414.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 390, for galloons or trimmings, includes narrow strips of silk having interwoven thereon ornamental designs which are chiefly used to decorate and embellish women's apparel. J. Loewenthal & Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 941, 942.

GAMBLE

To "gamble" is to play or game for money or other stakes. Hence, in a complaint for vagrancy under an ordinance denouncing as vagrants all persons who gamble, it is immaterial whether any game is specified, or if specified, what game it is. A complaint charging that defendant is a vagrant, being without visible means of support, who gambles at the game of draw poker for a living, is sufficient. City of Shreveport v. Bowen, 40 South. 859, 116 La. 522 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.). And so an ordinance punishing gambling generally as a crime is valid, though it does not define "gambling." City of Lake Charles v. Marcantel, 51 South. 106, 107, 125 Ga. 170 (quoting and adopting definition in City of Shreveport v. Bowen, 40 South. 859, 116 La. 523).

See Common Gambler.

A "gambler" is "one who gambles, especially one who makes gambling his business" (Stand. Dict.). "One who practices gambling" (Worcest. Dict.). "One who games or plays for money or other stake" (Webst. Dict.). "One who gambles; one addicted to gaming or playing for money or other stakes" (Cent. Dict.). In common parlance a gambler is one who follows or practices games of chance or skill, with the expectation and purpose of thereby winning money or other property. Consequently a special agent of the excise department, who operates a slot machine for the purpose of securing evidence to establish a violation of law, is not a gambler. Clement v. Belanger, 105 N. Y. Supp. 537, 538, 120 App. Div. 662 (citing Buckley v. O'Neil, 118 Mass. 183, 18 Am. Rep. 466).

GAMBLING—GAMING

See Resort for Gambling.

See, also, Game.

"Gambling" means the playing of a game of chance or skill for stakes, or the betting on the result of the game, or gaming or playing for money. Fleming v. State, 53 S. E. 579, 125 Ga. 17 (citing And. Law Dict.).

"Gaming" includes bets or wagers made on any physical contest, whether on man or beast, when practiced to decide such bets or wagers. James v. State (Okla.) 113 Pac. 226, 228, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827.

"Gaming" includes all contests of strength, skill, or chance, between men or beasts, on the result of which a wager is laid. Cheeves v. State, 114 Pac. 1125, 1126, 5 Okl. Cr. 361.

It is not "gaming" or "gambling," within the statute, to play monte, poker, or craps, unless the same are played "for money, checks, credit, or some representative of value." Proctor v. Territory, 92 Pac. 389, 390, 18 Okl. 378.

"Anything which induces men to risk their money or property, without any other hope for return than to get for nothing any given amount from another, is 'gambling,' and demoralizing to the community, no matter by what name it may be called." Ander-son v. State, 58 S. E. 401, 411, 2 Ga. App. 1 (quoting Appeal of Brua, 55 Pa. 298).

Where chance enters into a bet as an element, there is a case of "gambling," within Const. art. 1, § 9, forbidding pool selling, bookmaking, or any other kind of gambling. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 496, 59 Misc. Rep. 425.

To constitute "gambling" within Rev. St. 1903, c. 129, § 20, it is not necessary that both parties should stand to lose as well as to win; it is enough that one party stands to win only, or to lose only. Lang v. Merwin, 59 Atl. 1021, 1022, 99 Me. 486, 105 Am. St. Rep. 298.

The word "gambling" is a word of very general application, and is not restricted to wagering on the result of any particular game or games of chance. Appleton v. Maxwell, 65 Pac. 153, 160, 10 N. M. 748, 55 L. R. A. 93 (citing Joseph v. Miller, 1 N. M. 621).

Contingent event

A bet by parties, not aware of the fact, involving the question whether a third person has a lease on designated real estate, refers to an event unknown to the bettors, and constitutes "gambling" within Const. art. 1, § 9, forbidding pool selling, bookmaking, or any other kind of gambling, and within Betting and Gaming Law, 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) p. 662, pt. 1, c. 20, tit. 8, §§ 8, 9, declaring that bets depending on any chance, "or unknown or contingent event," shall be unlawful, etc.; the word "unknown" referring to that which was unknown to the parties to a wager, the word "contingent" showing that the event referred to applies equally to existing or nonexisting events, the word "event" meaning that in which an action, operation or series of operations terminates and having reference to something that has taken place, the words "unknown event" meaning a past circumstance unknown to the parties, and the words "contingent event" referring to one that hereafter may or may not occur. Thomson v. Hayes, 111 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 59 Misc. Rep. 425.

Betting distinguished

See Bet.

Betting on horse race

Betting on a horse race is gaming, and, where any person conducts a place where the public are invited by means of any plan or device to bet on the result of a horse race, they are guilty of violating Comp. Laws 1909, § 2422. James v. State (Okl.) 113 Pac. 226, 228, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827.

Betting upon a horse race is not "gam-ling," within Ky. St. 1903, § 1955, avoiding every contract in consideration of money lent or advanced for the purpose of gaming, but that word applies only to betting upon a game played with cards, dice, machine, wheel, or other contrivance. McDevitt v. Thomas, 114 S. W. 273, 274, 130 Ky. 805.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 270, § 6, provides that, "If any person keeps any house, shop, or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling or lets any such place for that purpose, or suffers any person to gamble in any way in any such place, which is under his care or control, he shall be fined * * * or imprisoned." Section 18 defines a bet or wager as "any contract or agreement for the purchase, sale, loan, payment, or use of money or property, * * * the terms of which are made to depend upon or are to be varied or affected by any uncertain event in which the parties have no interest except that created by such contract or agreement." Section 7 provides that, "if any person shall gamble or bet on the sides or hands of such as are gambling or playing at any game he shall be fined * * * or imprisoned." By section 8 a gambler is defined as every person who plays at a game of chance or skill in a place which is resorted to for the purpose of gambling, unless it be shown that the game is for amusement only without a stake or possibility of gain or loss. Held, that gaming includes horse racing, and therefore betting on such races is illegal gaming. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 507, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689.

Buying or selling pools

Selling pools on horse races is "gam-bling," and maintaining a place where pools are sold is maintaining a gaming house, within the prohibition of the statute. Moores v. State, 99 N. W. 249, 252, 71 Neb. 522, 115 Am. St. Rep. 605.

Dealing in options

Under Code 1904, § 3887, providing that all laws for suppressing gaming shall be construed as remedial, which requires that such statutes shall be liberally construed, section 2837, providing for the recovery of money lost at gaming must be construed as including stock gambling, though such statute was first introduced into 1 Rev. Code 1819, c. 147, § 3, at a time when stock gambling was unknown. McIntyre v. Smyth, 62 S. E. 930, 934, 108 Va. 736.

Gambling and gaming synonymous

"Gaming" and "gambling" are synonymous. Bentler v. Commonwealth, 136 S. W. 898, 898, 143 Ky. 503.

The terms "gaming" and "gambling," in the administration and interpretation of criminal laws, are usually regarded as synonymous. State v. Shanklin, 97 Pac. 969, 970, 51 Wash. 35.

The terms "gaming" and "gambling," in their criminal sense, are synonymous. They have been used interchangeably in Rev. St. 1842, c. 220, §§ 3, 4, Gen. St. 1867, c. 254, §§ 6, 7, 8. The distinction between "betting" and "gaming" is that "gaming" always includes a wager, while "betting" is not gaming unless the wager be laid on a game. It is the betting on the game that constitutes gaming, and those game or gamble who thus bet. The word "game" is very comprehensive and embraces every contrivance or institution which has for its object to furnish sport, recreation, or amusement. Let a stake be laid upon the chances of a game, and we have gaming. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 507, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689 (quoting Webster's Dict.; Century Dict.; and People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 208, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. 557).

Rev. St. 1899, § 432, authorizes the county court to license the keepers of billiard tables used for gaming. Section 438 prescribes a punishment for any one who shall keep such a table without a license. Section 2196, Rev. St. 1899 (Rev. St. 1879, § 1549), makes it a misdemeanor for an owner of a building to permit a billiard table to be set up or used for the purpose of gaming. Held, that the word "gaming," as used in section 432, is not synonymous with "gambling," and that a person may be convicted of violation of section 438, though he does not permit gambling upon his tables. State v. Shotts, 128 S. W. 245, 246, 143 Mo. App. 346.

Keeping a gambling house distinguished

"Keeping a gambling house and gambling are distinct offenses. A person guilty of keeping a gambling house may not be guilty of gambling and one may be guilty of gambling without having any connection with the house. The essence of the former offense is the keeping of the place for the purpose of gambling, or the permission of gambling in a place under the care or control of the accused, as appears from section 4962 of the Code, defining it," by declaring that if any person keep a house, shop, or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, etc., the offender shall be fined, etc., and proof of participation in the play is not essential to a conviction, but under section 4964 of the Code, providing that, if any person play at any game for any sum of money or other property of any value, etc., he shall be guilty of misdemeanor; but, in order to convict, he must be shown to have joined in the game or have participated in the betting or wagering of money or other property. State v. White, 98 N. W. 1027, 1028, 123 Iowa, 425.

Larceny distinguished

See Larceny.

Playing poker

The word "gambling," as used in the statute denouncing the same, means playing or gaming for money or other stakes; and draw poker is a gambling game, pure and simple, more widely recognized as such than any other game known to the American people. City of Lake Charles v. Marcantel, 51 South. 106, 107, 125 La. 170; City of Shreveport v. Bowen, 40 South. 859, 116 La. 522.

Draw poker is "gambling." Town of Ruston v. Perkins, 38 South. 583, 114 La. 851.

Conducting a poker game at which money is bet, won, and lost, and out of which the keeper receives a take-out, commission, or profit, in violation of Ky. St. § 1960 (Russell's St. § 3558), constitutes "gaming" within section 1973 (section 3569), exempting one from liability for gaming disclosed by his testimony in a trial against another, and also constitutes "gambling." Bentler v. Commonwealth, 136 S. W. 898, 898, 143 Ky. 503.

Playing poker with a three, five, and ten cent limit is "gaming," within the meaning of Code 1892, § 1126, forbidding owners, lessees, or occupants of any building to permit gaming to be carried on in the same. Ford v. State, 38 South. 229, 86 Miss. 123.

Transaction to detect crime

The operation of a slot machine, by a special agent, merely to secure evidence to establish the commission of a crime or a violation of a law, is not "gambling." Clement v. Belanger, 105 N. Y. Supp. 537, 538, 120 App. Div. 662.

GAMBLING CONTRACT

See, also, Gambling Transaction.

An agreement for the sale of any commodity for future delivery is void as a "gambling contract," where neither party intends an actual delivery of the property purchased or sold; but if one of the parties in good faith contemplated an actual delivery, and not a mere settlement by a payment of differences in the rise and fall of the market price, the contract was valid and enforceable. Bailey & Graham v. Phillips, 159 Fed. 535, 536.

A contract by a corporation to sell a certain quantity of bonds, which it had obtained the right to buy, to various subscribers to the agreement at a certain price, reserving to the corporation, however, the right to sell all or any of the bonds on account of the subscribers at a higher price than the subscribers were bound to pay, provided its option was exercised before a certain time, which contract was executed by the actual delivery of the bonds to all but one of the subscribers. was not a "gambling contract." Nes v. Union Trust Co. of Maryland, 64 Atl. 310, 312, 104 Md. 15.

"Where one bought chips in a gambling house and used them in a game of poker, and the proprietor, after settling the account for chips, gave his check, it was given for a 'gambling debt,' within the statute making void every security, the whole or any part of the consideration for which shall be for money won by playing at a game." Remer v. Ettinger, 98 N. Y. Supp. 263, 48 Misc. Rep. 641.

A contract of sale of coal, whereby seller undertook to deliver buyer a minimum of 125 tons a day and a maximum of 200 tons a day, was not, to the extent of the 75 tons a day which buyer might order in excess of 125 tons, void as being a "gambling option," in violation of the statute relating to gambling contracts. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Jones & Adams Co., 83 N. E. 851, 852, 282 Ill. 326.

Contract for future differences

A contract between a broker and his customer, whereby there is to be no other liability on either side than a settlement of differences, and under which the broker, as well as the customer, equally stand to gain or lose by the rise or fall of prices, and the parties have no other right or interest against each other under the entire contract than that resulting from the differences, is a "gambling contract." Thompson v. Williamson, 58 Atl. 602, 605, 67 N. J. Eq. 212.

A contract whereby a so-called purchaser of stock, in case of a decline in the market price, is to pay the difference between the contract price and the market price, with no intention that he shall receive and pay for the stock itself is a gambling contract, and no action can be maintained upon it. Richter v. Poe, 71 Atl. 420, 422, 109 Md. 20, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

"Contracts in form for the sale or purchase of commodities, where neither party intends to deliver or accept the property nominally sold; but where it is intended by both parties that the transaction shall be settled by the difference in prices according to the rise and fall of the market, are 'gambling contracts.'" Carson v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 113 N. W. 393, 395, 133 Wis. 85.

Where a contract between a stock broker and a customer is that, in case of a decline in the market price of the stock, the purchaser is to pay the difference between the contract price and the market price, and there is no intention that he shall receive and pay for the stock itself, the dealing is a "gambling contract," and the law does not permit an action to be maintained thereon. Dryden v. Zell & Merceret, 65 Atl. 33, 34, 104 Md. 345 (citing Billingslea v. Smith, 26 Atl. 1077, 1082, 77 Md. 519).

No matter however explicit the words in any contract which may require a delivery, if in fact there is no intention to deliver, but the real understanding is that at the date stipulated the losing party shall pay to the other the difference between the market price and the contract price, this is a "gambling contract," and is null and void at common law. State v. Clayton, 50 S. E. 866, 867, 138 N. C. 732.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, pp. 698, 699, c. 38, § 130, providing that all contracts to have or give the option to sell or buy at a future time any grain or other commodity shall be considered "gambling contracts," and shall be null and void, all transactions in grain or other commodities are gambling transactions, when neither party understood that deliveries were to be actually made, but both intended that the purchase or sale should be adjusted by the settlement of differences. R. E. Pratt & Co. v. Ashmore, 79 N. E. 952, 954, 224 Ill. 587 (citing Schneider v. Turner, 22 N. E. 497, 130 Ill. 28, 6 L. R. A. 164; Pope v. Hanke, 40 N. E. 839, 155 Ill. 617, 28 L. R. A. 568; Jamieson v. Wallace, 47 N. E. 762, 167 Ill. 388, 59 Am. St. Rep. 302; Irwin v. Williar, 4 Sup. Ct. 160, 110 U. S. 507, 28 L. Ed. 225).

GAMBLING DEVICE

Keeping gambling device, see Keep.

Other gambling device, see Other.

Setting up gaming device or table, see Set Up.

By the word "device," as used in Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2422, prohibiting the carrying on of gambling games by some "device," is meant the means, instrument, contrivance, or thing by which the banking or percentage game is played. James v. State, 112 Pac. 944, 946, 4 Okl. Cr. 587, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515, 140 Am. St. Rep. 693.

An instrument which is adapted and designed for the purpose of playing a game of chance for money and property, and is so used, is a "gambling device," within Kirby's Dig. § 1732. Johnson v. State, 141 S. W. 493, 495, 101 Ark. 159.

A "device or apparatus for gambling" is a device or apparatus designed for carrying on actual gambling, or determining whether the player is to win or lose, like the wheel of fortune, in its manifold modifications, and contrivances of that sort. People v. Engeman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 174, 177, 129 App. Div. 462.

A table with poker chips and cards used for the purpose of gambling is a "gambling device." State v. Turner, 124 Pac. 424, 425, 87 Kan. 449.

The floor of a dwelling house occupied by one is not a "device," within 11 Del. Laws, p. 515, c. 454, § 1 (Rev. Code, p. 961, as amended in 1893, c. 132), punishing one who shall keep a gaming table, faro bank, or other "device" at which a game of chance is played. State v. Hamilton (Del.) 67 Atl. 836, 837, 6 Pennewill, 433 (citing State v. Norton, 38 Atl. 438, 9 Houst. [Del.] 586; 20 Cyc. 906; 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3033).

Billiard or pool table

A pool table kept for the playing thereon of Kelley pool is a "gambling device" within Kirby's Dig. § 1732, making it punishable to keep any gambling device adapted, etc., to the playing of any game of chance, etc., where it is understood by the keeper, as well as the players, that as a part of the game the loser shall pay the tolls of the players. State v. Sanders, 111 S. W. 454, 96 Ark. 353, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 3018 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1729), prohibiting a dramshop keeper from keeping a billiard table or other gaming table, the keeping of a billiard table in a licensed dramshop is the keeping of a "gambling device." State v. Shotts, 128 S. W. 245, 246, 143 Mo. App. 346.

Chuck-a-luck table

A chuck-a-luck table, although not specifically mentioned, is within the prohibition of Rev. St. 1890, § 2194, making it a felony for one to set up or keep, and to entice or permit any person to play on, any table or gambling device "commonly called A B C, faro bank, E O, roulette, equality, keno or any kind of gambling table or gambling device" adapted for the purpose of playing games of chance. State v. Rosenblatt, 83 S. W. 975, 977, 185 Mo. 114 (citing Gould's Dig. Ark. § 1, art. 3, c. 51, p. 369; Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 360; Trimble v. State, 27 Ark. 355; Euper v. State, 35 Ark. 629; Bell v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 187, 22 S. W. 687; Kelshorn v. State, 97 Ga. 343, 23 S. E. 829; Mims v. State, 88 Ga. 458, 14 S. E. 712).

Crap table

A crap table is a "gambling device," within Rev. St. 1890, § 2194, making it a felony to set up or keep any table or gambling device commonly called A B C, faro bank, E O, roulette, equality, keno, or any kind of gambling table or gambling device designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property. State v. Rosenblatt, 83 S. W. 975, 977, 185 Mo. 114; State v. Locket, 87 S. W. 470, 472, 188 Mo. 415. See, also, State v. Holden, 102 S. W. 490, 203 Mo. 581.

Dice

The phrase "gambling apparatus or device," in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2181, punishing one keeping or exhibiting for gain, or to win or gain money or other property, any gaming table or any gambling apparatus or device, covers and includes any kind of apparatus, table, or device kept or exhibited for gain, or to win or gain money or other property, and dice is within the statute. White v. State, 76 N. E. 554, 558, 37 Ind. App. 95.

Horse race

"A 'gambling device' is any contrivance by the operation of which chances are determined, whereby money or property is lost or won." The keeping of a house for selling pools on horse racing is not an offense, punishable under chapter 50, Dearly's Gen. Laws, relating to the playing of games by gambling devices, since the winner is not determined by the manipulation of any device. State v. Ayers, 86 Pac. 653, 655, 49 Or. 61, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 992, 124 Am. St. Rep. 1036 (citing Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 360; In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. 253; State v. Herryford, 19 Mo. 377).

Lottery

Lottery is a "gaming device," and the keeping of a house for the purpose of selling lottery tickets is within the spirit and intentment of a charter delegating power to prevent and suppress gaming and gambling houses or places where any game in which chance predominates is played for anything of value. City of Portland v. Yick, 75 Pac. 706, 709, 44 Or. 439, 102 Am. St. Rep. 633.

Poker table

The setting up of a poker table, on which are used poker chips and cards for gaming, is not within Rev. St. 1890, § 2194, making it a felony for any one to set up or keep any gambling device commonly called A B C, faro bank, roulette, equality, keno, or any kind of gambling table or gambling device. State v. Etchman, 83 S. W. 978, 979, 184 Mo. 193.

Slot machine

A slot machine so operated that the operator putting into it a nickel receives in any event a cigar of the value of his coin, and stands to win by chance additional cigars without further payment, is a gambling device. Lang v. Merwin, 59 Atl. 1021, 1022, 99 Me. 486, 105 Am. St. Rep. 293; In re Cullinan, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1097, 1098, 1100, 114 App. Div. 654 (overruling Cullinan v. Hosmer, 91 N. Y. Supp. 607, 100 App. Div. 148, and citing People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601, 1 Ann. Cas. 185; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 194 U. S. 497, 512, 48 L. Ed. 1092; Hudelson v. State, 94 Ind. 426, 48 Am. Rep. 171).

Slot machine so operated that the operator placing a coin therein and taking a chance on the result, whether to win or to lose, is a gambling device. Mueller v. Wm. F. Stoecker Cigar Co., 131 N. W. 923, 924, 89 Neb. 438, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 573.

Slot machines, where the chances are un-equal and in favor of the machine, are gambling games, within Laws 1907, p. 25, c. 64, § 1, and are illegal. Territory v. Jones, 99 Pac. 338, 340, 14 N. M. 579, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239, 20 Ann. Cas. 128; Same v. Gonzales, 99 Pac. 1135, 15 N. M. 50.

As used in Laws 1901, p. 166, § 2, prohibiting the conduct of games of chance for "money," checks, credits, or any representative of value, or for any property or thing whatever, the word "money" includes all money; "checks" includes all kinds of articles embraced under that designation; "credits" is a term of universal application to obligations due and to become due; and the expression "any representative of value," together with these words, leave nothing of any of the classes of property enumerated. Hence, a nickel in the slot machine, involving in its operation the element of chance as to whether the player obtained in cigars more or less than the value of his money, was prohibited by such statute. State v. Woodman, 67 Pac. 1118, 1120, 26 Mont. 348.

A slot machine operated by the player depositing a nickel therein and then turning a crank, whereon the machine will automatically pay the reward, which will always contain a package of chewing gum of the retail value of five cents, and sometimes in addition thereto one or more checks which may be used in playing the machine in the same manner as nickels are used, is a gambling device, within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2474, punishing the keeping of devices for gaming; though by means of indicators the player is informed as to what the record will be before each play, though there is no method of knowing what the reward will be as to subsequent plays. Ferguson v. State, 99 N. E. 806, 178 Ind. 568, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

Relator maintained a slot machine with an indicator bearing the inscription "See what we give you for five cents," and a hand pointed to a space in which was shown to the depositor's view the goods procured for a nickel, consisting of a package of chewing gum and sometimes, also, two or more trade checks. While the depositor always knew exactly the number of checks which would be received for the first nickel, he would not know whether he might procure more or less trade checks by dropping in a subsequent nickel. Held, that the latter feature constituted an element of chance, which made the machine a "gambling machine," contrary to the statute. People ex rel. Verchereau v. Jenkins, 138 N. Y. Supp. 449, 450, 153 App. Div. 512.

A "slot machine," consisting of an upright box with some kind of machinery on the inside and a dial face with numbers on it and a crank to turn it, which was played by dropping money in the slot and turning the crank, the party playing it winning or not, dependent on where the hand stopped on the dial, which was used only for the purpose of gambling and could be used for no other purpose, was a "gambling device," and was properly destroyed under Sand. & H. Dig. § 1618, authorizing circuit court judges to issue their warrants to peace officers directing them to search for gambling tables or devices and to publicly burn them. Garland Novelty Co. v. State, 71 S. W. 257, 258, 71 Ark. 138.

Stock ticker

A transaction in a "bucket shop," consisting of a fictitious sale or purchase of stocks, with the intention that there shall be no delivery, but a settlement according to the difference in market value, is not a "game of hazard," and a telegraph wire, blackboard, and ticker, used by the broker in obtaining and publishing the rise and fall of prices in the market, is not a "gambling device," within Cr. Code, § 214, allowing a person to recover his loss because of any gambling device or at a game of hazard.—Ives v. Boyce, 123 N. W. 318, 319, 85 Neb. 324, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

GAMBLING HOUSE

As disorderly house, see Disorderly House.

Keeper of gambling house, see Keeper.

A "gambling house" is expressly defined by the Philippine Commission Act No. 1757, § 2, to be a building or structure, a vessel, or part thereof, in which gambling is frequently carried on. Ong Chang Wing v. United States, 81 Sup. Ct. 15, 16, 218 U. S. 272, 54 L. Ed. 1040.

One having charge of an ordinary game of cards played on a blanket in a shedroom to a barn by negroes as an attachment of a negro dance, and at which money was bet, is not running a "gambling house," within Pen. Code, art. 388a (Acts 30th Leg. p. 108, c. 49), punishing any person who shall exhibit for the purpose of gaming any gaming table, etc. Hanks v. State, 111 S. W. 402, 403, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 1, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210.

In Acts 1909, c. 92, § 1, prohibiting certain games for money by professional gamblers, and section 2 providing that if any proprietor, owner, or part owner, lessee, manager, or any person having management, supervision, or control, temporary or permanent, of any gambling house or other resort, maintained for gambling, or of any saloon, or of any building in which a saloon may be situate, shall permit any of such games to be played in such place, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc. The words "'gambling house,' or other resort maintained for gambling," mean any place where games are played, and not solely a place where games are carried on in the manner prohibited in section 1. Schmidt v. Territory, 108 Pac. 246, 247, 13 Ariz. 77.

A private residence may be a gambling house, within Pen. Code 1890, art. 389, imposing a penalty upon one who permits prohibited games in his house or upon his premises; the house being a public place. Simons v. State, 120 S. W. 208, 210, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 389.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388f, as added by Acts 30th Leg. p. 109, providing that if any person shall go into and remain in any gambling house, or shall remain in any place where prohibited games are being played, etc., and further providing that by "gambling house" and "gaming house" is meant any place where people resort for the purpose of gaming, a person remaining in a private dwelling house, not shown to be a place frequented for the purpose of gaming, while a prohibited game was being played therein, is guilty of no offense, since "remaining in a place," etc., means in a place where gaming is being conducted in a sense continuously. Walters v. State, 125 S. W. 11, 12, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 240.

A place where futures are bought and sold on margins is a gaming house, notwithstanding "the contracts are telegraphed out of the state," if the actual wager or settlement of wagers takes place in this state. Anderson v. State, 58 S. E. 401, 410, 2 Ga. App. 1.

"The 'gaming house' or place which the common law regarded as a nuisance, and which at common law was indictable as such, was a 'common gaming house' or place." State v. Carrick, 61 Atl. 85, 78 Vt. 1.

Pool room

A pool room on one of the principal thoroughfares of a city in which persons daily congregate to bet upon horse races, reported to the proprietor by telegraph, is a "gaming house" punishable as a nuisance at common law and under B. & C. Comp. § 1930, providing for the punishment of any person who willfully and wrongfully commits any act which grossly disturbs the public peace or health, or which openly outrages the public decency and is injurious to the public morals. State v. Nease, 80 Pac. 897, 898, 46 Or. 433.

One keeping a place where pool selling on horse races is carried on keeps a place where gambling is carried on within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3006, declaring that places of resort where gambling is carried on are nuisances, and the persons carrying on the same shall be punished, though pool selling may not be covered by Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7260, defining gambling. State v. Shanklin, 97 Pac. 969, 970, 51 Wash. 35.

GAMBLING TABLE

See, also, Gambling Device.

The characteristics of the gaming table are: First, it is a game; second, there is a keeper, dealer, or exhibitor; third, it must be exhibited for the purpose of obtaining bettors. Mayo v. State (Tex.) 82 S. W. 515, 516.

A table on which gambling games are played in a gambling place is a gaming table kept for gaming within Code 1907, § 6985, punishing the keeping of a gaming table for gaming. The state, on a trial for exhibiting a gaming table, need not show that accused operated the table for hire or reward, but it is sufficient to show that the table kept by accused was a gaming table kept for gaming purposes. Martin v. State, 56 South. 64, 65, 2 Ala. App. 175.

An indictment, charging in the alternative that accused bet at a certain "gaming table or bank, to wit, a pool table," was sufficient. Moore v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1161.

GAMBLING TRANSACTION

See, also, Gambling Contract.

Purchase of stocks on margins is a "gambling transaction," and illegal. Lancaster v. Ames, 68 Atl. 533, 535, 103 Me. 87, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229, 125 Am. St. Rep. 286.

A contract for the purchase of grain for future delivery, where both parties intend to settle by the payment of differences without any delivery, is a "gambling transaction," and insufficient to support a note given in settlement of losses. Zeller v. Leiter, 82 N. E. 158, 160, 189 N. Y. 361.

A contract made in good faith for the actual sale of grain deliverable within a specified time in the future is not a "gambling transaction," within Hurd's Rev. St. Ill. 1905, pp. 698-700, prohibiting gambling transactions in grain or other commodities for future delivery. Zeller v. Leiter, 82 N. E. 158, 160, 189 N. Y. 361.

A contract to operate in stocks, to be adjusted according to the difference in the market value thereof, is a "gambling transaction." Ives v. Boyce, 123 N. W. 318, 319, 85 Neb. 324, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

Transactions between a customer and a stockbroker, which involve payments by the customer for margins on orders for buying and selling stocks, pursuant to an understanding that no stock shall be delivered to the customer, but that settlements of differences of profits and losses shall be made, are "gambling transactions." Blessing v. Smith, 70 Atl. 933, 934, 74 N. J. Eq. 593.

GAME

See Banking Game; Head to Head Game.

Any game, see Any.

Other banking game, see Other.

See, also, Gambling—Gaming; Lottery.

"Game" is defined as a contest for success or superiority in a trial of chance, skill, or endurance, or any two or all three of these combined (Century Dictionary), and is very comprehensive, and embraces every contrivance or institution which has for its object to furnish sport, recreation, or amusement. State v. Prather, 100 Pac. 57, 58, 79 Kan. 513, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 23, 131 Am. St. Rep. 339 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3036); In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 507, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689 (quoting Cent. Dict.)

The word "game," secondarily defined as a contest, physical or mental, for amusement, recreation, or for winning a stake, is not equivalent to the word "race." State v. Hayes, 93 S. W. 98, 100, 116 Tenn. 40.

Baseball

See Baseball.

Contract for delivery of futures

The words "game or gambling device," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3424, providing that any person who shall lose any money or property at any "game or gambling device" may recover it by civil action, do not include a fictitious sale and purchase, though sections 2121, 2223, 2337-2342, declare fictitious sales and purchases to be gambling, and render all parties thereto particeps criminis. See v. Runzi, 79 S. W. 992, 993, 105 Mo. App. 435.

Election

An election does not fall within the definition of a "game," within the meaning of the statute prohibiting gambling. Lassen v. Karrer, 76 N. W. 73, 117 Mich. 512 (citing Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 14).

Horse race

A horse race is not a game within Kirby's Dig. § 1740, making it criminal to bet "on any game of hazard or chance;" it being contemplated that the game shall be "played," as shown by section 1741, providing that it shall be unnecessary for the indictment to allege with whom the game was played. State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 685, 688, 81 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 899, 118 Am. St. Rep. 29, 11 Ann. Cas. 277.

The word "game," as used in St. 1903, § 1977, punishing one engaging "in any hazard or game" on which money is bet, won, or lost, does not embrace a horse race. Commonwealth v. Davis (Ky.) 102 S. W. 327 (quoting and adopting the definition in cheek v. Commonwealth, 100 Ky. 2, 37 S. W. 152).

Kelley pool

Kelley pool, a pool game, the object of which is for a player to pocket the ball on the table corresponding in number with one which he holds in secret, in which event he wins, he losing on the ball being pocketed by another, is a game at which money or property may be won or lost within the gambling statutes. State v. Sanders, 111 S. W. 454, 86 Ark. 353, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

Pool selling

The act of pool selling or betting by buyers on pools is not a "game," within Ky.

St. 1903, § 1978, prescribing a penalty for those suffering any game in which any property or money is bet, won, or lost in any house or in premises in their occupation. City of Louisville v. Wehmoff, 79 S. W. 201, 202, 116 Ky. 812.

GAME OF CARDS

"Poker" is defined to be a "game with cards," and evidence that defendant and others engaged in a game of poker is sufficient to support an information charging him with playing a game of cards. Inman v. State, 85 S. W. 796, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 609; Mapes v. State (Tex.) 85 S. W. 797.

GAME OF CHANCE -

The game, practiced in aid of fairs and charities, of voting with tickets purchased at fixed prices for candidates, of whom one in whose name the most tickets are voted is to receive some article which the whole number of tickets pays for, is not a "game of chance" and is not illegal, either under the statute or at common law, in this state. Mon v. St. John Baptiste Soc., 19 Atl. 825, 826, 82 Me. 319.

Throwing dice is purely a "game of chance," and chess is purely a game of skill. But games of cards do not cease to be games of chance because they call for the exercise of skill by the players, nor do games of billiards cease to be games of skill because at times, especially in the case of tyros, their result is determined by some unforeseen accident, usually called "luck." The test of the character of the game is, not whether it contains an element of chance or an element of skill, but which is the dominating element that determines the result of the game. People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 755, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601, 1 Ann. Cas. 165; United States v. McKenna, 149 Fed. 252, 253.

GAME OF HAZARD OR SKILL

See, also, Hazard.

A transaction in a "bucket shop," consisting of a fictitious sale or purchase of stocks, with the intention that there shall be no delivery, but a settlement according to the difference in market value, is not a "game of hazard," and a telegraph wire, blackboard, and ticker, used by the broker in obtaining and publishing the rise and fall of prices in the market, is not a "gambling device," within Cr. Code, § 214, allowing a person to recover his loss because of any gambling device or at a game of hazard. Ives v. Boyce, 123 N. W. 313, 320, 85 Neb. 824, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

GAME OF SKILL

See Game of Chance.

GAME

See Wild Game.

Ownership of, see Ownership.

As the word "game" includes beasts, fowls, and fish, the title of an act declaring that it is for protection of "game" does not contravene the Constitution as embracing more than one subject because the act relates to the protection of fish, fowl, and quadruped. McMahon v. State, 97 N. W. 1035, 1036, 1037, 70 Neb. 722.

"Game" means animals feræ naturæ, or wild by nature, and the term "game animals," in the title of an act entitled "An act relating to the preservation, propagation and protection of game animals," etc., embraces all kinds of deer, whether tame or wild. State v. Weber, 102 S. W. 955, 956, 205 Mo. 36, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155, 120 Am. St. Rep. 715, 12 Ann. Cas. 382.

The title of the forest, fish, and game law (Laws 1906, p. 299, c. 130), entitled "An act for the protection of the forests, fish and game of the state," indicates that it was to protect wild animals so far as it relates to animals; the word "game" ordinarily not including domesticated animals. Dieterich v. Fargo, 87 N. E. 518, 520, 194 N. Y. 359, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696.

"Game" is not the subject of private ownership, except in so far as the people may elect to make it so, and they may, if they see fit, absolutely prohibit the taking of it, or traffic or commerce in it; but the power of the Legislature only applies to "game" within the state, and no such power to interfere with the private affairs of individuals can effect the right of the citizen to sell or dispose of, as he pleases, "game" which has become a subject of private ownership by a lawful purchase in another state. Cameron v. Territory, 86 Pac. 68, 70, 16 Okl. 634.

Mass. O'Brien*, 94 N. Y. Supp. 673, 674, 46 Misc. Rep. 325.

"Garages" occupy, with relation to automobiles, the same place that stables do with regard to horses." Diocese of Trenton v. Toman, 70 Atl. 606, 611, 74 N. J. Eq. 702.

GARBAGE

"Garbage" is defined as refuse organic matter in general, or any worthless or offensive matter, and does not necessarily imply the presence of organic matter. State, to use of Joyce, v. Flanagan, 74 Atl. 818, 824, 111 Md. 481 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3040, 3041).

Grease and cracklings rendered from the fat of fresh meat, cooked and carried away within 24 hours, is not "garbage" within the meaning of Police Regulations, art. 14, § 1, defining garbage to be the "refuse of animal and vegetable foodstuffs," and prohibiting persons other than the District garbage contractor from carrying garbage through the streets of the District. Nash v. District of Columbia, 28 App. D. C. 598, 601, 8 Ann. Cas. 815.

In an ordinance prohibiting the collection of garbage by persons not having a contract with the municipality therefor, though the word "garbage" involves a rejection of the material for use, it does not follow that it means a rejection of the material for all purposes, nor does the term involve the idea of filth, nor the commencement of fermentation of the material. City of Rochester v. Gutherlett, 133 N. Y. Supp. 541, 546, 73 Misc. Rep. 607.

A Cincinnati ordinance providing that no person other than the city contractor or its agents shall convey or transport through the streets or public places of the city any garbage, dead animals, etc., found within the city limits, and that the word "garbage" shall include all refuse of animal and vegetable matter which has been used for food, and all the refuse animal and vegetable matter which was intended to be so used, and includes condemned food, is repugnant to Const. U. S. Amend. 14. Bauer v. Casey, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 598, 599.

GARNISHEE

The word "garnishee" is borrowed from the French language and is derived from garnishment or from "garnir," meaning to warn, to give notice to the debtor not to pay his indebtedness, but to answer the writ served. While the word "garnishee" is derived from the French, the proceedings in garnishment, however, are derived from English jurisprudence, which confers on the garnishee the same right in defense which he could plead in a direct action, if one were brought against him on a claim for which he had been garnished. Monroe Grocer Co. v. J. A. Perdue & Co., 48 South. 1002, 1004, 123 La. 375 (quoting Cross, Plead. p. 335).

GARNISHMENT

Subject to garnishment, see Subject To.

"Garnishment," as the proceeding is at present authorized by statute, partakes of the nature of, and is in all essentials, a separate action or suit against the person garnished. Keene v. Smith, 75 Pac. 1065, 1066, 44 Or. 525.

"'Garnishment' is the institution of a suit by a creditor against the debtor of his debtor, and is governed by the general rules applicable to other suits adapted to the relative situation of the parties." Roman v. Montgomery Iron Works, 47 South. 136, 137, 156 Ala. 604, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604, 130 Am. St. Rep. 106 (quoting definition in Steiner Bros. v. First National Bank, 22 South. 30, 115 Ala. 379).

A "garnishment" is correctly defined to be "a proceeding in the nature of an attachment or execution, by means of which creditors, property, or effects of a debtor in the hands of a third person may be subjected to the payment of the claims of the creditors of such debtor." It is a mode of attachment or execution. Davis Bros. v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 83 S. W. 818, 316, 73 Ark. 120, 3 Ann. Cas. 658 (citing Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. [C. C.] 68 Fed. 685; Henry v. Murphy, 54 Ala. 246; McGarry v. Lewis Coal Co., 6 S. W. 81, 93 Mo. 287, 3 Am. St. Rep. 522; Rood, Garnishment, § 1, and cases cited).

"'Garnishment' is only a method provided by statute for a plaintiff to enforce judgment against defendant, who is his debtor." Hence it draws in controversy only so much of the garnishee's indebtedness to the defendant as is necessary to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. Bank of Waldron v. Euper, 125 S. W. 1022, 1023, 93 Ark. 609 (citing Davis v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 83 S. W. 818, 73 Ark. 120, 3 Ann. Cas. 658).

As a form of attachment

"Garnishment" is the admonition judicially given to the attachment defendant's debtor or holder of property, warning him against payment, or restoration to the defendant, and bidding him hold the property or credit subject to the order of court. It is the process by which the garnishee is brought into court, and also that by which the defendant's credit or property is attached in the garnishee's hands. Its service is constructive seizure by notice. It is attachment in the hands of a third person. Eagleson v. Rubin, 100 Pac. 765, 767, 16 Idaho, 92.

As creating a lien

"Garnishment" is an effectual attachment of the effects of the defendant in the garnishee's hands, differing in no essential respect from attachment by levy except that the plaintiff does not acquire a clear and full lien upon the specific property in the garnishee's possession, but only such a lien as gives him the right to hold garnishee personally liable for it or its value and to restrain the garnishee from paying his debt to the defendant. From the time of garnishment the effects in the garnishee's possession are considered as in custodia legis, and the garnishee is bound to keep them in safety. Longley Bros. v. McVann, 119 S. W. 268, 269, 90 Ark. 252 (citing Drake on Attachment [7th Ed.] § 453).

"Garnishment process" is in the nature of an equitable attachment of assets belonging to a defendant held by a third person; the purpose of the attachment being to apply such assets in discharge of defendant's debt. The lien being created at the time the writs are served, and the judgment in the action not creating any other or additional lien, but merely providing for the enforcement of the liens already acquired, a garnishment, more than four months before an adjudication in bankruptcy, was not affected thereby, although the judgment was rendered within the four months. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Evans, 49 South. 57, 62, 57 Fla. 311.

As a collateral proceeding

"'Garnishment' is one of the modes pointed out by the statute by which the writ is executed and is not a new suit, but an incident or an auxiliary of the judgment and a means of obtaining satisfaction of the same by reaching the defendant's credits." State ex rel. Stevenson v. Hughes, 115 S. W. 1069, 1070, 185 Mo. App. 131 (quoting and adopting definition in Tinsley v. Savage, 50 Mo. 141). And consequently a judgment against a garnishee must be reversed on his appeal where the judgment against the principal defendant is void or has been reversed since there is no longer any judgment to sustain the garnishment. Chicago Herald Co. v. Bryan, 92 S. W. 906, 907, 195 Mo. 590, 6 Ann. Cas. 751.

"Garnishment proceedings" are always ancillary to a principal suit, which is either pending or determined. Thus, where the affidavit alleges that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff on a judgment previously rendered, and for the recovery of such demand plaintiff has commenced a suit before another court which is untrue, the affidavit is fatally bad and cannot be amended so as to base the garnishment proceedings on the judgment already obtained. Heller v. People's Sav. Bank, 101 N. W. 228, 227, 138 Mich. 192.

"Garnishment" and claim proceedings are collateral to the main suit, and in the claim proceedings a judgment that the claimant do have and recover of and from the garnishee the property mentioned in both the "garnishment" and claim proceedings is erroneous. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Carstens, 37 South. 566, 567, 48 Fla. 72.

As proceeding

See Proceeding.

As a proceeding in rem

A "garnishment" is a proceeding in rem. The property is in custodia legis. To obtain the property, and not a personal judgment against the garnishee defendant, is the primary object sought to be attained. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Hollenshead, 98 Pac. 749, 750, 51 Wash. 826.

Even if the word "gas" in St. 1905, c. 435, § 629, requiring a gas company on application to furnish gas, and authorizing recovery of damages for its failure to do so, means gas for lighting purposes, it is enough for a complaint founded thereon to use simply the word "gas," as it will be given therein the same meaning it has in the statute. Fair v. Home Gas & Electric Co., 110 Pac. 347, 348, 13 Cal. App. 589.

A franchise granted by a city to a light company stipulated that the company would furnish illuminating gas of not less than 16 candle power at $1.10 per 1,000 cubic feet, less a discount, and fuel gas of 452 heat units per cubic foot at $1 per 1,000 cubic feet, less a discount, and that, in case a lower rate was made to either of two designated towns, the price in the city should be the same as so reduced. At the time of the granting of the franchise, the company supplied artificial gas to the designated towns, but later one of the towns granted a franchise for natural gas at greatly reduced rates. Natural gas had from 5 to 7 candle power and 1,000 heat units per cubic foot. Held, that the franchise referred only to artificial gas, and the company could not be compelled to reduce its rates and the city could not compel the company to furnish natural gas except pursuant to another franchise. Union Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Young, 142 S. W. 692, 693, 146 Ky. 430.

GAS WORKS

Statutory power given a city "to construct and establish 'gas works,' or to regulate the establishment thereof" by others, is broad enough to authorize the city to contract for the purchase of a natural gas distributing plant, and the construction of the term "gas works" is not to be narrowed by the fact that, when the authority was granted, natural gas was not known to be a product available for use in the locality. City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 144 Fed. 640, 642, 75 C. C. A. 442.

GASKET

A "gasket" in a vessel is a piece of leather or other packing inserted between flanges to make a tight joint. Auten v. Bennett, 84 N. Y. Supp. 689, 690, 88 App. Div. 15.

GASOLINE

What is commonly called "gasoline" is the fourth distillate of crude petroleum. This consists of what is termed naphtha, which in turn is subdivided into naphtha A, B, and C, and gasoline is the common term applied to naphtha C. It is so readily inflammable that it can scarcely be said to have any flash point. Flame coming in contact with it will almost inevitably and invariably ignite it without any appreciable period of previous heat. If gasoline is brought in contact with flame when the gasoline is unconfined within narrow limits, it will ignite without exploding, but, if the gasoline is confined and has been vaporized by coming in contact with the air, a gas or vapor is formed which explodes with all the incidents connected with the most dangerous character of explosion. Gasoline vaporizes almost instantly on coming in contact with oxygen, so that in common use, as soon as gasoline is exposed to the air, some of it at least always goes off in the form of vapor, which, being heavier than the air, tends to sink. The gravest source of danger in handling gasoline is that, since vapor sinks, it is not readily perceptible to the one standing upright in a room, because it is along the lower levels and close to the floor, and, if it is not agitated by the atmosphere so as to dissipate and blow away out of the room, it may be ignited by coming in contact with flame; the ignition causing an explosion which is of sufficient force to cause great damage. The vapor, unless dispelled by a current of air and dissipated, is likely to travel considerable distance through a building, and will almost invariably ignite and explode on coming in contact with any flame. O'Hara v. Nelson (N. J. Ch.) 63 Atl. 836, 838.

GATHERING

See Public Gathering.

GAVE NOTICE OF APPEAL

The phrase "gave notice of appeal," appearing in the exemplification of a record of a court of another state, is insufficient to show that an appeal was taken, and, in the absence of a showing that it is given a technical significance by the statute laws of such state, cannot be held to have a meaning equivalent to an order granting an appeal. McCune v. Goodwillie, 102 S. W. 997, 1004, 204 Mo. 306.

GEARING

The word "gearing" is defined by Webster as the parts by which motion imported to one part of an engine or machine is transmitted to another. The friction wheel and rattlers between which an employé caught his hand being constructed with a friction surface so as to transmit motion to the rattlers by surface friction from the wheel, the wheel was within the class of appliances termed "gearing," required to be guarded for the protection of employés. Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Wishon, 85 N. E. 832, 835, 42 Ind. App. 288. And so was a machine which was operated by means of two sets of gears.

Tabinski v. A. Harvey's Sons Mfg. Co., 134 N. W. 653, 655, 168 Mich. 392. But not a machine known as a "liner," a heavy hollow, revolving iron roller, filled with steam of high temperature, with a smaller roller above, between which papers were passed by the operator. Jenkins v. Lafayette Box Board & Paper Co., 87 N. E. 992, 43 Ind. App. 463.

The knives of the head of a machine used to surface different sized moldings are not within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring the guarding of "shafting and gearing," and the statute does not require the master to guard such knives. Kruck v. Wilbur Lumber Co., 138 N. W. 1117, 1119, 148 Wis. 76.

A sprocket wheel and chain are within St. 1898, § 1636j, requiring all belting, shafting, and gearing, so located as to be dangerous to employes in the discharge of their duties, to be securely guarded or fenced. Schweikert v. J. R. Davis Lbr. Co., 130 N. W. 508, 509, 145 Wis. 632.

GENERAL

"General" is equivalent to "extensive" and is a relative term the meaning of which must be determined by a process of inclusion and exclusion. *Times Printing Co. v. Star Pub. GENERAL ACCEPTANCE

A "general acceptance" of a draft is an agreement to pay according to the tenor of the bill, and if the draft is conditional the acceptance binds the acceptor to pay according to the conditions, and not otherwise. Hannay v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 187 Fed. 686, 688.

GENERAL ACT

See General Law.

GENERAL AGENCY OR AGENT

See also, General Manager; General Superintendent; Special Agency or Agent.

A "general agent" is one who is authorized to do all the acts connected with a particular trade, business, or employment. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, 80 Pac. 467, 471, 20 Colo. App. 529 (quoting and adopting Story, Agency, § 17); Columbus Show Case Co. v. Brinson, 57 S. E. 871, 872, 128 Ga. 487.

A person authorized to transact all the business of another at a particular place, and impliedly invested with discretion to determine the proper construction of the contract under which work was being done, is a "general agent." Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Moore, 82 N. E. 52, 57, 84 N. E. 540, 170 Ind. 328.

The term "general agent," as applied to one representing a corporation, does not necessarily import that the person designated is an officer of the corporation. Vardeman v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 54 S. E. 66, 67, 125 Ga. 117, 5 Ann. Cas. 221.

In determining whether a person is a "general agent," the extent of territory in which he operates is not to be considered, since the term implies general power and is not used in the geographical sense, and therefore the question of general agency is dependent on the extent of the powers exercised by the agent. Floars v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 56 S. E. 915, 917, 144 N. C. 232 (citing Grabbs v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n, 34 S. E. 503, 125 N. C. 397; Berry v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 80 N. E. 254, 132 N. Y. 49, 28 Am. St. Rep. 548).

Where a corporation intrusts a principal officer or manager with general supervision of a particular branch of its business, it clothes such officer or manager with the authority of a "general agent," coextensive with the business intrusted to his care, which is not limited by private instructions so as to protect the corporation from liability for acts within the officer's ostensible authority, though in excess of such private instructions. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Alexandria Water Co., 67 Atl. 861, 864, 218 Pa. 542 (Adams Exp. Co. v. Schlessinger, 75 Pa. 256; Anderson v. National Surety Co., 46 Atl. 306, 196 Pa. 288).

A surety company, which appoints agents whom it calls "general agents," with authority to solicit business for it as a surety on excise bonds, receive applications, issue bonds, and receive premiums therefor, may not claim that they have not authority to make the agreement with the applicant for a bond, for which an extra premium is paid, that he shall not be liable for any amount the company may become chargeable with on account of the bond. In re American Fidelity ty Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 711, 712, 54 Misc. Rep. 367.

Insurance company

An agent of a foreign insurance company who issues, cancels, indorses, and delivers policies, solicits and writes insurance, collects the premiums for insurer, remits them to it, and attends to its business generally, is a general agent of insurer, and has authority to waive conditions in a policy, though the company has a general agent for the state. Bank of Anderson v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 111 Pac. 507, 509, 14 Cal. App. 208.

Managing agent distinguished

Where a statute (Code Civ. Proc. Neb. §§ 73, 75) provides that, when a defendant is a foreign corporation having a managing agent in the state, personal service of process may be had on such agent, and authorizes service on the managing agent of any corporation if certain officers are not found in the county, a return of service on a "general agent" of a foreign corporation does not show a compliance with the statute; a "managing agent" being one who manages or controls the corporate business in the state, and "general agent" not being an equivalent term. Swartz v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 166 Fed. 333, 342, 343.

Special distinguished

There is a wide distinction between a general, special, or particular agent. A "special agency" exists where there is a delegation of authority to do a single act, and a "general agency" exists where there is a delegation to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business, or employment. Karns v. State Bank & Trust Co., 101 Pac. 564, 566, 31 Nev. 170 (quoting Great West. Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min. Co., 20 Pac. 771, 12 Colo. 486, 18 Am. St. Rep. 204); Belcher v. Manchester Building & Loan Ass'n, 67 Atl. 399, 400, 74 N. J. Law, 833.

A "general agent" is one who is authorized to do all acts connected with a particular trade, business, or employment. A special agent is one who is authorized to do one or more specific acts in pursuance of particular instructions, or within restrictions necessarily implied from the act to be done. In short, the former imports, not an unqualified authority, but an authority which is derived from a multitude of instances, whereas the latter is confined to an individual instance. Columbus Showcase Co. v. Brinson, 57 S. E. 871, 872, 128 Ga. 487 (citing Jesse French Piano Co. v. Cardwell, 40 S. E. 292, 114 Ga. 340; Butler v. Maples, 9 Wall. [76 U. S.] 773, 19 L. Ed. 822).

GENERAL APPEARANCE

See, also, Special Appearance.

A general appearance must be express or arise by implication from defendant's seeking, taking, or agreeing to some step beneficial to himself or detrimental to plaintiff, other than one contesting the jurisdiction. A mere inquiry as to whether a continuance can be taken without waiver of service, or offer to move for a continuance, provided it can be done without such waiver, does not amount to a general appearance. Fulton v. Ramsey, 68 S. E. 381, 383, 67 W. Va. 321, 140 Am. St. Rep. 969.

Whether an appearance is general or special is governed by the object and purpose of the appearance; and any action upon the part of the defendant, except to object to the jurisdiction, which recognizes the case as in court, will amount to a "general appearance." Dailey v. Foster (N. M.) 128 Pac. 71, 72.

A "general appearance" is the voluntary act of a party or his attorney, and is effectual to confer jurisdiction of the person without an order of court. Multnomah Lumber Co. v. Weston Basket Co., 99 Pac. 1046, 1048, 54 Or. 22. Thus where, in a proceeding for the establishment of a private road, after defendant's plea to jurisdiction based on the insufficiency of the substituted service of notice was overruled, he contested the merits of the application, agreed to a continuance, and when defeated in the county court appealed to the circuit court from the judgment, his general appearance was a waiver of legal notice, and gave the court jurisdiction. Allen v. Welch, 102 S. W. 665, 666, 125 Mo. App. 278.

An appearance for any other purpose than to question the jurisdiction of the court is general. Zobel v. Zobel, 90 Pac. 191, 192, 151 Cal. 98; J. S. Paterson Const. Co. v. First State Bank of Thebes, 133 Ill. App. 75, 81; Tager v. Fletcher, 83 N. E. 805, 232 Ill. 197 (citing 3 Cyc. 504); Hanson v. Hanson, 122 Pac. 100, 86 Kan. 622. Thus a motion to vacate or set aside judgment upon jurisdictional and nonjurisdictional grounds constitutes a "general appearance." Barnett v. Holyoke Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 97 Pac. 962, 964, 78 Kan. 630; Boulder, Colorado, Sanatorium v. Vanston, 94 Pac. 945, 946, 14 N. M. 436. But where a deficiency judgment was rendered in a proceeding to enforce a vendor's lien against a defendant, who was served only by publication, the defendant's subsequent application to vacate such judgment did not constitute a general appearance sufficient to confer jurisdiction over his person. Sweeney v. Tritsch, 44 South. 184, 186, 141 Ala. 242.

In determining whether an appearance is special or general, the question of whether it is to deny the court's jurisdiction of the person controls, irrespective of any stipulation or statement that it was special, and irrespective of defendant's intention to make it so. Sit You Gune v. Hurd, 120 Pac. 1185, 61 Or. 185. Whether an appearance is general or special does not depend upon the form of the pleading, but upon its substance. If a defendant invokes the judgment of the court upon any question, except that of the power of the court to hear and decide the cause, his appearance is general. Haynes v. City Nat. Bank of Lawton, 121 Pac. 182, 185, 30 Okl. 614. Thus where defendants by motion reciting that they were "appearing specially herein for the purposes of questioning the jurisdiction of this court, and for no other purpose," moved that "such judgment in the above-entitled action be set aside, that said action be dismissed, and that defendants have judgment against the plaintiff for their costs and disbursements, and for such other relief as to the court might seem just," and some of the affidavits in support of the motion set forth facts going to the merits of the controversy, their appearance must be construed to be "general." Bain v. Thoms, 87 Pac. 504, 44 Wash. 382 (citing Teator v. King, 76 Pac. 688, 35 Wash. 138; Burdette v. Corgan, 26 Kan. 102).

So, also, where certain orders were entered making allowances to a receiver of an insolvent bank, after which certain stockholders were granted permission to sue to vacate the orders, as granted ex parte, and without jurisdiction, and this suit was prosecuted to judgment, which was adverse to the plaintiffs, whereupon they brought a writ of error to review the original orders as improvidently entered and void for want of jurisdiction, it was held that, plaintiffs having proceeded in the trial court to set aside the orders, such proceeding constituted an appearance which cured the alleged jurisdictional defect. In re Bank of Newcastle, 89 Pac. 1085, 1087, 15 Wyo. 501.

An appearance for any other purpose than questioning jurisdiction for want of process, defect of process, defective service thereof, or because the action was commenced in the wrong county, etc., is general, and not special, though accompanied by the claim that the appearance is special; and hence an appearance to move to vacate a cause, or to dismiss or discontinue it, because plaintiffs' pleading does not state a cause of action, which is equivalent or analogous to a demurrer, amounts to a general appearance. Norfolk & O. V. Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Turnpike Co., 68 S. E. 346, 348, 111 Va. 131, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 239. And where, on the application by the county collector for judgment for drainage taxes against delinquent lands, there was a variance between the delinquent list and the published notice of application for sale, and the owner appeared and filed an objection based upon the variance that the lands were not assessed in her name nor in that of any living person, such objection was not one which went to the jurisdiction of the court, and her appearance for the purpose of making such objection is a "general appearance" which waives the variance. Waite v. People, 81 N. E. 837, 838, 228 Ill. 178 (citing McChesney v. People ex rel. Kochersperger, 58 N. E. 356, 178 Ill. 542).

A defendant who, separately or in conjunction with a motion going only to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, invokes the power of the court on the merits, or moves to dismiss, appears generally. Thus a defendant, who not only asks for the dissolution of the attachment and quashing of the writ because of defective service of process on him, but asks for the dismissal of the cause, appears generally, for the court, by virtue of the express provisions of Mills' Ann. Code, § 44, acquired jurisdiction by the filing of the complaint, and the cause could not be dismissed because of the want of jurisdiction of defendant's person. Everett v. Wilson, 83 Pac. 211, 212, 84 Colo. 476. And in an action against a nonresident, if service is made in any manner not authorized by law, defendant may appear specially and move to quash the service, but if he prays for a dismissal, it is a "general appearance," as it invokes the power of the court on a question other than that of jurisdiction. McKilip v. Harvey, 114 N. W. 155, 156, 80 Neb. 264.

Where one pleads both to the merits and to the jurisdiction at the same time, it amounts to a "general appearance." And such appearance gives the court jurisdiction of the person, though the process or service thereof is insufficient. Rhyne v. Manchester Assur. Co., 78 Pac. 558, 559, 14 Okl. 555. And so where a defect in service of process appears on the record, and a special appearance questioning the jurisdiction is overruled, if defendant answers over to the merits, he thereby enters a "general appearance." Sampson v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co., 123 N. W. 302, 303, 85 Neb. 319.

A general demurrer, filed without protestation, is a "general appearance." Pacific Selling Co. v. Albright-Prior Co., 59 S. E. 468, 469, 3 Ga. App. 143.

An appearance to apply for a continuance of a matter pending before a court is just as general as though for the purpose of invoking the action of the court in any other matter. Zobel v. Zobel, 90 Pac. 191, 192, 151 Cal. 98.

Where an appearance is properly restricted, it will stand as made until some inconsistent action is taken, and it is not necessary to state the precise purpose of the appearance on the docket, but its mere designation as "special" confines it to dilatory matters, and precludes a presumption of anything further; and hence a failure to file a motion to dismiss in time, after a special appearance, does not make the appearance "general." Wade v. Wade's Adm'r, 69 Atl. 826, 827, 81 Vt. 275.

The appearance of a defendant by filing a petition for a change of venue is a "general appearance," and gives the court jurisdiction of its person. Cook v. Globe Printing Co. of St. Louis, 127 S. W. 332, 346, 227 Mo. 471; Julian v. Kansas City Star Co., 107 S. W. 496, 508, 209 Mo. 85.

A written stipulation filed in court, signed by the counsel of the parties, agreeing that the cause might be set for trial for a certain day of a certain term, was an unlimited "appearance," by the defendant, waiving a right to plead to the jurisdiction. Markey v. Louisiana & M. R. Co., 84 S. W. 61, 64, 185 Mo. 348.

A stipulation for the continuance of a motion for a preliminary injunction filed by defendant constitutes a "general appearance," and cures any defect in the process. Tagert v. Fletcher, 83 N. E. 805, 232 Ill. 197. And a defendant, entering into a stipulation continuing the case and consenting that it may be tried on a designated date, waives irregularities and restores the jurisdiction of the court over the person of defendant, if lost; it being a "general appearance" for the purposes of the case at the date agreed on. Hobbs v. German-American Doctors, 78 Pac. 356, 357, 14 Okl. 236.

The prosecution of a writ of error from a judgment rendered on defective service operates as a general appearance when the cause is remanded, and further process is unnecessary. Hayman v. Weil, 44 South. 176, 178, 53 Fla. 127.

A general appearance must be express or arise by implication from defendant's seeking, taking, or agreeing to some step beneficial to himself or detrimental to plaintiff, other than one contesting the jurisdiction. Thus a mere inquiry as to whether a continuance can be taken without waiver of service, or offer to move for a continuance, provided it can be done without such waiver, does not amount to a general appearance. Fulton v. Ramsey, 68 S. E. 381, 383, 67 W. Va. 321, 140 Am. St. Rep. 969. So where defendant appeared and filed pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, and after demurrers had been sustained thereto defendant elected to stand by the pleas and refused to plead further in the cause, and the court thereupon proceeded to hear the evidence and assess the damages, defendant objecting to the court taking jurisdiction for that purpose and excepting to the action of the court in assessing damages and to the rendition of judgment, after which defendant moved to expunge the judgment from the record for want of jurisdiction, it was held that defendant's proceedings after refusing to plead further on demurrers being sustained to the pleas, though unnecessary to preserve its objection, were consistent with the purpose of limiting defendant's appearance to the sole purpose of questioning the court's jurisdiction, and did not, therefore, amount to a "general appearance" waiving such objection. Supreme Hive Ladies of Maccabees of the World v. Harrington, 81 N. E. 538, 537, 227 Ill. 511. .

And defendant's service upon plaintiff of an order to show cause why an injunction issued on plaintiff's application should not be vacated was an appearance for the purpose of the motion only, and was not equivalent to a "general appearance," within Code Civ. Proc. § 421, requiring defendant's appearance to be made by serving upon plaintiff's attorney a notice of appeal, or a copy of a demurrer or answer, and requiring the notice or pleading to be subscribed by defendant's attorney, who shall add to his signature his office address, etc., so as to entitle defendant to notice of all subsequent proceedings, though the affidavit upon which the order was based contained the name and office address of defendant's attorney and the papers were indorsed with his name and address. Regelmann v. South Shore Traction Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 353, 354, 67 Misc. Rep. 590.

A motion for leave to amend a plea to the jurisdiction does not constitute a general appearance. Pooler v. Southwick, 126 Ill. App. 264, 267. And the same is true of the appearance of a nonresident defendant in a state court for the sole purpose of removing the cause. It does not preclude defendant from moving to quash the service in the federal court. Carpenter v. Willard Case Lumber Co., 158 Fed. 697, 702. And the special appearance of a foreign corporation defendant in a state court for the single purpose of insisting that no valid service has been made upon it is not a submission to the claimed jurisdiction. Lathrop-Shea & Henwood Co. v. Interior Const. & Imp. Co., 150 Fed. 666, 670. And so also an agreement by the counsel for defendant that a case brought before a justice of the peace should be heard before the justice on a day subsequent to the return day, entered into prior to the return day, is not a "general appearance," and defendant may object to the insufficiency of the service of process. Woodard & Woodard v. Tri-State Milling Co., 55 S. E. 70, 71, 142 N. C. 100.

The execution of a forthcoming bond in attachment, under B. & C. Comp. § 306, does not constitute a "general appearance," neither does a special appearance to move for dismissal for want of jurisdiction, nor a subsequent plea in abatement setting up the same ground, although an application to the court to discharge an attachment on giving an undertaking conditioned to pay any judgment in the action is an acknowledgment of the court's jurisdiction. Winter v. Union Packing Co., 93 Pac. 930, 931, 51 Or. 97.

A motion by a defendant in error to strike out the bill of exceptions is a general "appearance," and is a waiver of a want of service of notice, as required by the statute, of the issuing writ. McNealy v. Bartlett (Mo.) 95 S. W. 273.

Under Rev. Codes, § 7149, providing that a defendant "appears in an action" when he answers, demurs, or gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him, or has such appearance entered in open court, defendant's application, whether accompanied by an oral showing or without showing, for time in which to answer to the merits after denial of their motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction of the person, constituted a general appearance, the effect of which could not be limited by a statement by counsel that he desired the record to show that his appearance was special. State ex rel. Mackey v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist., 106 Pac. 1998, 1100, 40 Mont. 359, 135 Am. St. Rep. 622.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

See Next General Assembly.

The term "General Assembly," in Jonst. art. 14, which declares that the General Assembly may propose constitutional amendments, each amendment being embraced in a separate bill, by three-fifths of all members elected to each of the two houses, which bill shall be published by order of the Governor for a specified time before the election at which the amendment shall be submitted to the voters in a form to be prescribed by the General Assembly, does not include the Governor. Many provisions of the Constitution refer to the "General Assembly" in a manner indicating that the Governor is not included within the term. Warfield v. Vandiver, 60 Atl. 538, 539, 101 Md. 78.

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church creates certain church courts. It declares that the government of the church is to be exercised in some certain and definite form, and by various courts, in regular gradation. These courts are denominated "Church Sessions," "Presbyteries," "Synods," and the "General Assembly." The jurisdiction of each of these courts is defined in the constitution. The Church Session has jurisdiction of a single church; the Presbytery has jurisdiction over the Church Session and jurisdiction within a prescribed district; the Synod has jurisdiction over three or more Presbyteries; and the General Assembly has jurisdiction over such matters as concern the whole church. Every court is declared to have the right to resolve questions of doctrine and discipline seriously and reasonably proposed; and, although each court exercises exclusive and original jurisdiction over all matters especially belonging to it, the lower courts are subject to the review and control of the higher courts, in regular gradation. The General Assembly has jurisdiction to review and decide all references and complaints regularly brought before it from the inferior courts, and to decide all questions respecting doctrine and discipline, and to receive under its jurisdiction other ecclesiastical bodies whose organization is conformed to the doctrine and orders of the Church. So far as any controversies in reference to the doctrine are concerned, by the very terms of the constitution the General Assembly is made the highest court, and, of course, its judgment on the matter is final and conclusive. The General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church has jurisdiction to determine whether the matter in controversy is within its jurisdiction, and also to determine the controversy itself. Mack v. Kime, 58 S. E. 184, 195, 129 Ga. 1, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

GENERAL ASSIGNMENT

As an act of bankruptcy

See Act of Bankruptcy.

Transfer to single creditor

A debtor conveyed about three-fourths of its property and the proceeds of any sale of the other fourth, which consisted in real estate of which the debtor retained possession and the right of use and disposition, to its principal creditor, in consideration of the discharge of the debtor's obligation and of the creditor's agreement to pay all other obligations out of the property conveyed. Held, the conveyance was not a general assignment for creditors, but its legal effect was that of a sale of the property to the assignee in consideration of its release of the debtor and its contract to pay the other debts. Missouri-American Electric Co. v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., 165 Fed. 283, 288, 91 C. C. A. 251.

As creating trust

A conveyance of his property by a debtor directly to his creditors for their benefit does not constitute a general assignment, because it raises no trust. Missouri-American Electric Co. v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., 165 Fed. 283, 288, 91 C. C. A. 251.

GENERAL ASSUMPSIT

See, also, Assumpsit.

At common law the action of "assumpsit" was divided into "special assumpsit," or an action brought on an express promise; and "general assumpsit," or an action brought on an implied contract. Board of Highway Com'rs, Bloomington Tp., v. City of Bloomington, 97 N. E. 280, 284, 253 Ill. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 471.

GENERAL AVERAGE

"General average" or loss is where individual loss or injury is incurred for the common good of those having a community of interest and benefit, and is apportioned to the interests benefited. Perry v. Ohio Ins. Co., 5 Ohio, 305, 307.

"General average as per foreign custom" would be a declaration not wholly lived up to, if foreign custom made the assured pay on one basis, but the memorandum clause allowed him to collect on another. International Nav. Co. v. Sea Ins. Co., 129 Fed. 13, 15, 63 C. C. A. 663.

"The term 'general average' implies a case in which, according to natural justice, there should be a contribution, by all concerned, to make good a loss incurred by a part for the common benefit. The simplest instance is that of a jettison, where the goods of one person interested are thrown overboard in order to save the vessel and everything that is at stake in it. In such case, every interest which is thus benefited—the ship, the freight, and the residue of the cargo—must contribute to make good the loss, and this is 'general average.' It may be comprehensively defined to be an expense or sacrifice voluntarily incurred on account of the ship, freight, and cargo, to save them from impending danger, threatening the whole, and which, being incurred by or at the expense of the owner of one of them, entitles him to contribution from all. 'Particular average' is a damage happening to the thing insured, or an expense incurred exclusively on its account, occasioned by the perils insured against, and when such damage or expense is not in the nature of a sacrifice for the common benefit. It is not denied that the injury to the hull and rigging of the boat was occasioned immediately by one of the perils insured against, and therefore comes directly within the general undertaking of the insurers; nor can it be denied, under these definitions, that being a damage to the subject of insurance, incurred not voluntarily for the benefit of all concerned, but fortuitously from one of the perils of the river, it is properly a particular average." Fireman's Ins. Co. of Louisville v. Fitzhugh, 4 B. Mon. (43 Ky.) 160, 164 (citing 1 Phillips, Ins., 331, 369, etc.; Benecke, Marine Ins., 165, 166).

Voluntary sacrifices and expenditures in a successful effort to save a negligently stranded vessel and her cargo and freight present a case of general average within the meaning of a clause in the bill of lading under which, if damage results from the negligent navigation of a seaworthy vessel properly manned, equipped, and supplied, the cargo owners are not to be exempt from liability for contribution in general average, but, with the shipowner, are to contribute as if the damage had not resulted from such negligence. The Jason, 32 S. Ct. 560, 562, 225 U. S. 32, 56 L. Ed. 969.

Seamen's wages and provisions incurred during an embargo cannot be recovered as a partial loss from the underwriter on freight, as they are "general average," the criterion of which is: Were the expenses necessarily and unavoidably incurred for the general safety of the ship and cargo? Insurance Co.

of North America v. Jones (Pa.) 2 Bin. 547, 559.

GENERAL BENEFICIAL POWER

See Beneficial Power.

GENERAL BENEFITS

"The term 'general benefits,' when unqualified, should probably be accepted in the same sense as the term 'common benefits'; that is to say, when there is no limitation expressed, it should be deemed applicable to the general public, rather than as embracing, as general, but a limited part of the public." Spokane Traction Co. v. Granath, 85 Pac. 261, 263, 264, 42 Wash. 506 (quoting and adopting Kirkendall v. City of Omaha, 57 N. W. 752, 89 Neb. 1).

GENERAL BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

Where a motion for a new trial was overruled, and the record showed that appellants were given 90 days in which to present their general bill of exceptions, it was held that the expression "general bill of exceptions" might be transposed so as to read "bill of general exceptions," and that the expression as used in this connection meant that appellants were granted 90 days within which to prepare a bill or bills of exceptions, in writing, exhibiting all exceptions taken by them to rulings of the court made during the trial of the cause, and which rulings had been embraced in the motion and assigned as reasons for a new trial. Wagner v. Weyhe, 73 N. E. 89, 90, 164 Ind. 177.

GENERAL BUSINESS

The word "general," in the statute forbidding transportation of liquors by persons not regularly conducting a "general express business," imports something more than a casual, infrequent, and incidental carriage of goods other than intoxicating liquors, and means that the major part of the business must be the carriage of a variety of goods commonly the subject of transportation by express companies. Commonwealth v. People's Express Co., 88 N. E. 420, 421, 426, 201 Mass. 564, 131 Am. St. Rep. 416.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1809, providing that an injunction shall not be granted ex parte which operates to suspend "the general and ordinary business of a corporation," contemplates only injunctions extending to a total suspension of corporate business, and has no application to an injunction restraining a single act or duty. Town of Ft. Edward v. Hudson Valley Ry. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 753, 754, 127 App. Div. 438.

Electric

"A 'general electric business' would include the manufacture of, the buying and selling of, every electric contrivance or apparatus known to modern science." Gamewell Fire Alarm Tel. Co. v. Fire & Police Tel. Co., 76 S. W. 862, 866, 116 Ky. 759.

GENERAL CHARACTER

See, also, General Reputation.

Of individual

"General character" is the same as "general reputation," and is determined by how one is generally regarded or esteemed in the community in which he lives. Way v. State, 48 South. 273, 278, 155 Ala. 52; Lowman v. State, 50 South. 43, 161 Ala. 47.

"General character," being the reputation one has made in the community in which he resides, is the result of his general walk and conversation, and cannot be shown by any particular act; and hence it may well be that one guilty of a crime may later establish a good character, but the question is one of fact for the jury, and it should not be charged that a man's character may be good, though he may have pleaded guilty to the crime of receiving stolen property. Bell v. State, 56 South. 842, 844, 2 Ala. App. 150.

GENERAL CHARGE

See Small General Charge.

The term "the general charge," as used in a record of appeal in which an exception is based on the refusal of the court to give "the general charge," has no such meaning that they can permit the appellate court to review the refusal of the trial court. Luna-ford v. Bailey & Howard, 38 South. 362, 142 Ala. 319.

GENERAL CIRCULATION

"General" and "universal" are not synonymous. The word "general" is derived from "genus," and technically relates to a whole genus or kind, or to a whole class or order. But its more usual meaning is "common to many; widely spread; prevalent; extensive, though not universal; as a general opinion; a general custom." The word "general," as used in Seattle City Charter, § 31, requiring the designation of an official daily newspaper of general circulation, is not synonymous with "universal," and the fact that the newspaper gave special prominence to dissemination of legal news did not preclude its being one of general circulation. Puget Sound Pub. Co. v. Times Printing Co., 74 Pac. 802, 805, 33 Wash. 551 (quoting Webster's International Dict.).

To constitute "general circulation" within the statute relating to criminal libel, it is not necessary that the newspaper circulate to any considerable extent, if at all, out of the state; but it must extend beyond the county in which it is published and have a "general circulation." Ramez v. State, 103 N. W. 438, 439, 73 Neb. 732 (quoting and adopting Koen v. State, 53 N. W. 595, 35 Neb. 676, 17 L. R. A. 821).

Under Const. art. 19, § 2, requiring the publication of proposed constitutional amendments in not more than one newspaper of general circulation in each county, a proposed constitutional amendment must be published in one newspaper in each county, which is published and has a general circulation in that county; the words "general circulation" being descriptive of the character of the newspaper and excluding a newspaper of a limited circulation and restricted to some particular trade or calling. In re House Resolution No. 10, 114 Pac. 293, 294, 50 Colo. 71.

The provision in Laws 1909, p. 419, § 6, that the board of directors of education shall, before adopting text-books for use in public schools, advertise for bids in newspapers of general circulation published in the city or district, cannot be construed as allowing the publication of an advertisement in a newspaper having a general circulation in, but not published in, the district, for a newspaper of "general circulation" need only circulate among all classes, and may be published in a place far distant from the district, and the provision requires the advertisement in a newspaper of general circulation published in the city or district; the word "published" clearly meaning the place where a newspaper is first issued or printed, and hence the section is invalid, as impossible to be obeyed. Polzin v. Rand, McNally & Co., 95 N. E. 623, 627, 250 Ill. 561, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 471.

GENERAL CREDIT

In the rule of law that it is essential to negotiability that the "general credit" of the maker be pledged to the obligation, the expression "general credit" signifies that general or personal credit must be pledged, as contradistinguished from limiting the liability to a particular or specific fund, which would make the obligation in effect an assignment pro tanto of the fund, and not a negotiable obligation of the maker. Hibbs v. Brown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 353, 357, 112 App. Div. 214 (citing Laws 1894, c. 235; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1918, 1924; Matter of Jones, 65 N. E. 570, 172 N. Y. 575, 60 L. R. A. 476; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 19 Am. Rep. 300; People ex rel. Winchester v. Coleman, 31 N. E. 96, 133 N. Y. 279, 16 L. R. A. 183).

GENERAL DAMAGES

"General damages" are such as the law implies and presumes to have occurred from the wrong complained of. Lee v. Boise Development Co., 122 Pac. 851, 852, 21 Idaho, 461. Thus a petition for treble damages to plaintiff because of defendant's alleged unlawful combination or conspiracy to monopolize interstate commerce in violation of the Anti-Trust Act, charges "general damages" by an allegation that by virtue of the alleged unlawful acts plaintiff sustained damages in a specified sum. Monarch Tobacco Works v. American Tobacco Co., 165 Fed. 774, 782 (quoting and adopting definition in Bates, Fed. Proc. § 1001).

General damages are those which necessarily result from the wrong complained of, arising by implication of law. Henderson v. Coleman, 115 Pac. 439, 448, 19 Wyo. 183; Baltimore Mach. Works v. McKelvey, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 1092, 71 App. Div. 340.

Damages are either general or special; "general" when they are such as the law implies from the wrongful acts alleged, and "special" when, though not implied by law, they are such as really take place. Hoskins v. Scott, 96 Pac. 1112, 1114, 52 Or. 271.

The distinction between general and special damages for breach of contract is that the former are such damages as the law implies and presumes from the breach complained of, while the latter are such as have proximately resulted, but do not always immediately result, from the breach and will not therefore be implied by law. Howard Supply Co. v. Wells, 176 Fed. 512, 515, 100 C. C. A. 70; Lillard v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 134 Fed. 168, 171, 177, 67 C. C. A. 74 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 13; Lawrence v. Porter, 63 Fed. 62, 64, 11 C. C. A. 27, 28 L. R. A. 167).

"General damages" are such as the law implies or presumes to have occurred from a wrong complained of, while "special damages" are such as really took place and are not implied by law, but are either super-added to general damages from an act injurious in itself, or are such as arise from an act not actionable in itself but injurious only in its consequences. "General damages" need not be pleaded, but "special damages" must be stated in the petition with a reasonable degree of particularity, and it must appear that the damage is the natural though not necessary consequence of the wrong. Hence damages to the market value of a horse by injuries received in transportation are "general," while damages from loss of earnings or use are "special." Van Buskirk v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 111 S. W. 832, 833, 131 Mo. App. 357. And so where a person claims damages for a wrongful seizure and detention of his saloon property under a writ of attachment, and it is shown that the property was held about six hours, and it is alleged that damage had been done thereby in the loss of business and profits in the amount of $5,000, such damages are special. O'Brien v. Quinn, 90 Pac. 166, 167, 35 Mont. 441 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 13).

"General damages" in actions for conversion or for the taking and detention of personal property, provable under a general allegation, are those inferred by the law itself because the immediate, direct, and proximate result of the act complained of, as an injury to the property itself, or to its value by detention. Robert R. Sizer & Co. v. Dopson, 72 S. E. 464, 466, 89 S. C. 535.

In any case predicated upon a wrong, a person may be entitled to recover general damages which are the necessary and usual results of the acts complained of, and special damages which are not the usual and ordinary result but as directly traceable to the wrongful acts complained of and result therefrom, but all other damages are too remote. The only difference between general and special damages is that general damages are the necessary and usual result of the acts complained of, while special damages need not be, but must only be the proximate result thereof. McKinney v. Carson, 99 Pac. 660, 664, 35 Utah, 180.

"General damages" are such as the law presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of as a necessary result thereof, and may be recovered under a general allegation of damages; while "special damages" are those which are the natural and proximate result of the wrong, but not the necessary consequence thereof, and must be specially alleged or they are not recoverable. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roney (Ky.) 108 S. W. 343, 344; Morris v. Allen, 121 Pac. 690, 692, 17 Cal. App. 684; Thompson v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co., 86 S. W. 465, 468, 469, 111 Mo. App. 465 (quoting and adopting definition in Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 12 S. W. 656, 99 Mo. 318); Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Overfield, 106 S. W. 242, 244, 127 Ky. 548; Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Dickinson, 52 South. 594, 595, 167 Ala. 211; Hoskins v. Scott, 96 Pac. 1112, 1114, 52 Or. 271; Epstin v. Berman, 58 S. E. 1013, 1015, 78 S. C. 327; Stowe v. La Conner Trading & Transp. Co., 80 Pac. 856, 857, 39 Wash. 28; Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Spears, 65 S. E. 482, 483, 110 Va. 110; Irby v. Wilde, 43 South. 574, 150 Ala. 402.

"Damages which necessarily result from the act complained of are denominated 'general damages,' and may be proved under the ad damnum clause." Terrace Water Co. v. San Antonio Light & Power Co., 82 Pac. 562, 563, 1 Cal. App. 511.

A general allegation in the complaint that damages have been sustained to one by reason of a personal injury authorizes the recovery of "general damages," which are the damages necessarily and directly resulting from the injuries; but "special damages," which are not the necessary result of the injuries, though the natural consequences of the act complained of, must be particularly specified in the complaint to be recoverable. Cordner v. Hall, 79 Atl. 55, 56, 84 Conn. 117.

Libel or slander

General damages are those which the law presumes must naturally, proximately, and necessarily result from the publication of the libelous matter. They arise by inference of law, and are not required to be proved by evidence. They are allowable whenever the immediate tendency of the words is to impair the plaintiff's reputation, although no actual pecuniary loss had in fact resulted; and are designed to compensate for that large and substantial class of injuries arising from injured feelings, mental suffering and anguish, and personal and public humiliation, consequent upon the malicious publication of the false and libelous matter. Hanson v. Krehbiel, 75 Pac. 1041, 1042, 68 Kan. 670, 64 L. R. A. 790, 104 Am. St. Rep. 422.

"General damages" include actual or compensatory damages, and the injuries which the law presumes to have naturally and necessarily resulted from the utterance of words slanderous per se, such as a charge of arson, including injury to the feelings and resulting mental suffering, and may also include punitive damages. Fields v. Bynum, 72 S. E. 449, 451, 156 N. C. 413.

GENERAL DEMURRER

A "general demurrer" enables a party to assail substantial imperfections in the pleadings of the opposite side without particularizing any of them, as distinguished from a "special demurrer," which goes to the structure merely and not to the substance and obliges the party demurring to lay his finger on the very point. Douglas, A. & G. R. Co. v. Swindle, 59 S. E. 600, 603, 2 Ga. App. 550 (quoting and adopting definition in Martin v. Bartow Iron Works, 85 Ga. 823, 16 Fed. Cas. 888).

A "general demurrer" goes to the whole case. A demurrer may be general in that it goes to the entire action as alleged, and yet in no wise challenge the legal sufficiency of the facts alleged to establish a cause of action. Wolfe v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 65 S. E. 62, 63, 6 Ga. App. 410.

GENERAL DENIAL

A "general denial," like the former plea of "not guilty," is the scientific way of raising the whole issue on a complaint in an action for a tort. It may be superseded, however, by admissions or other allegations connected therewith or by which it is followed. Schultz v. Greenwood Cemetery, 93 N. Y. Supp. 180, 181, 46 Misc. Rep. 299.

A "general denial" in replevin puts in issue all of the allegations of the plaintiff's petition or declaration and allows the defendant to give evidence of any special matter amounting to a defense. First Nat. Bank of Sallisaw v. Barbour, 95 Pac. 790, 791, 21 Okl. 237 (quoting Cobbey, Replevin, § 751).

GENERAL DEPOSIT

See, also, Deposit.

"A 'general deposit' in a bank is so much money to the depositor's credit; it is a debt to him by the bank payable on demand to his order, not properly capable of identification and specific appropriation." Pease & Dwyer Co. v. State Nat. Bank, 88 S. W. 172, 173, 114 Tenn. 693 (quoting and adopting definition in Florence Min. Co. v. Brown, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, 124 U. S. 391, 31 L. Ed. 424).

local option election, upon filing with the clerk of any city or town, unit, or the county auditor of any county unit of a petition subscribed by qualified electors of the unit equal to 30 per cent. of the electors voting at the last general election within such unit. The act as originally introduced into the House of Representatives provided that the petition should be signed by a percentage of those voting at the "last general election," but, as introduced into the Senate, the words "at the city election last held therein" were used, and in the Senate substitute bill it was provided that the petition should be drawn with reference to the "last general biennial state election." Held, that the words "last general election" refer to any election at which there had been a general expression of the public will, whether it be a state, county, or city election; a "general election" being one held at stated intervals to fill the terms of public officers regularly expiring under the law at which every qualified elector has the right to participate. State ex rel. Griffin v. Superior Court for Chehalis County, 127 Pac. 120, 121, 70 Wash. 545.

A general election in a city for the purpose of electing city officers to carry out the change to the commission form of government was a "general election" within Local Option Law (Laws 1909, c. 81) § 3, permitting any unit of territory thereby created to hold a special election under the statute upon the filing of a petition subscribed by at least 30 per cent. of the electors voting at the last general election. State ex rel. Forgues v. Superior Court of Lewis County, 127 Pac. 313, 314, 70 Wash. 670.

November election

Local Option Law (Laws 1887, p. 179) § 1, provides for the submission of the question whether intoxicating liquors shall be sold to the qualified voters residing outside of certain cities and towns, provided that no such election shall take place on "any general election day or within sixty days of any general election." Section 2 provides for the submission of the same question in such cities and towns, but not "within 60 days of any municipal or state election." The statutory rule of construction (Rev. St. 1889, § 6570) that the term "general election" refers to the ordinary biennial November election has existed since before the passage of the local option law, and is made controlling, unless plainly repugnant to the intent of the Legislature or of the context. The original law dealing with primaries (Rev. St. 1889, §§ 4795-4798) was merely extended for the protection of political parties who might choose such method of selecting candidates; and the primary feature was made a part of the election system by Laws 1907, p. 263, in which the word "election" is used but once, and in an amendment to a section of the act. The primary authorized thereby is simply a part of the machinery provided for the holding of general state elections. Held, that such primary is not a "general election," within the meaning of the local option law; and the holding of a local option election within 60 days thereof is not prohibited. State ex rel. Million v. Graham, 151 S. W. 729, 731, 246 Mo. 259.

The Constitution recognizes as the "general election" the biennial November election, though one of the election days fixed by the Legislature, and one necessarily general, is recognized by the Const. art. 13, § 6, and the Constitution fixes the election day for certain judges. Carton v. Secretary of State, 115 N. W. 429, 438, 151 Mich. 337.

GENERAL ELECTION LAWS

See Under the General Election Laws

GENERAL EXECUTION

A "general execution" is one that demands a levy on the debtor's property generally, and it follows a general judgment based upon personal service. Smith ex rel. McElhany v. Rogers, 90 S. W. 1150, 1152, 191 Mo. 334.

GENERAL FINDING

A "general finding" is a finding on all the issues in favor of the successful party. Board of Com'rs of Montezuma County v. Frederick, 115 Pac. 514, 515, 50 Colo. 464.

In a case tried to the court, a general finding includes a finding of all the facts necessary to sustain the claims of the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. De Vitt v. City of El Reno, 114 Pac. 253, 255, 28 Okl. 315.

GENERAL FRANCHISE

The charter of a corporation is its "general franchise," which can be repealed at the will of the Legislature pursuant to its reserved power to repeal; while a "special franchise" is the right granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit, and such a franchise, when acted on, is vested property and cannot be repealed, unless power to do so is reserved in the grant, though it may be condemned on making compensation. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Society of United States, 87 N. E. 443, 447, 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

GENERAL FUND

The fine and forfeiture fund is a "general fund" of the county within the meaning of section 15 of article 12 of the Constitution, relating to the payment of county officers. Board of Com'rs of Hillsborough County v. Savage, 58 South. 835, 837, 63 Fla. 337.

"The phrase 'general fund,' as applied to the fiscal management of a Kansas county, has a definite and well-recognized meaning. It covers the proceeds of a tax levied to provide for the usual current expenses. The building of a courthouse is a special or extraordinary matter, and not one included in the purposes for which the general tax levy is made." Smith v. Haney, 85 Pac. 550, 551, 73 Kan. 508.

The provisions in Code, § 894, authorizing any city to levy an "improvement fund tax" to pay for street improvements, and section 830, providing for payment of street improvements out of the "city improvement fund," refer to the same fund, and contracts for paving which provide for payment of difference between amount due for paving and amount raised by special assessments out of the "paving fund" and "general paving fund" refer to the fund specified in the statutes. Corey v. City of Ft. Dodge, 111 N. W. 6, 8, 133 Iowa, 686.

There is no statutory authority for the use of the term "general revenue fund" in county taxation. All funds are special in the sense that they may be applied only to such purposes as may be properly embraced therein. Harrell v. Woodberry, 56 South. 297, 62 Fla. 205.

GENERAL GUARANTY

A guaranty executed and attached to a promissory note at the time it is indorsed and delivered imposes no trust or confidence in the indorsee, and, though it specifically names him, will be considered a "general guaranty" of the note, and not a "special guaranty" personal to the indorsee, and it may be transferred by assignment upon the further indorsement of the note. Everson v. Gere, 25 N. E. 492, 493, 122 N. Y. 290; Id. 40 Hun (N. Y.) 243 (citing and adopting Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 273, 45 Am. Rep. 204).

GENERAL IMPARLANCE

A "general imparlance" is nothing else than a continuance of the case until a further date. Otis v. Ellis, 2 Atl. 851, 78 Me. 75.

GENERAL INSANITY

Insanity proved or admitted to have existed at any particular time will be presumed to continue only in cases of "general or habitual insanity," which is insanity of a permanent nature. Hudson v. Hudson, 57 S. E. 162, 163, 144 N. C. 449.

If the trial court see fit, it may recognize monomania, or so-called "partial insanity," as distinguished from "general insanity," when instructing the jury in a criminal case involving that form of mental derangement as a defense; but it is not imperative that it should do so, and, if the proper tests of criminal responsibility for the act in question be stated in the instructions, the substantial rights of the defendant are sufficiently protected. State v. Moore, 102 Pac. 475, 477, 80 Kan. 232.

GENERAL INSTRUCTION

A "general instruction" is one which puts certain facts to the jury, and tells them that if they find that way plaintiff is entitled to recover. Flaherty v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 15, 20, 207 Mo. 818.

The term "general instructions," in the rule that it is reversible error by instructions to inform the jury of the effect of their answers to the questions of the special verdict on the liability of the parties, means such instructions as are appropriate only to a general verdict, and which also inform the jury of the effect of their answers on the final result. Banderob v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 113 N. W. 738, 751, 133 Wis. 249.

GENERAL ISSUE

A plea of the "general issue" in detinue is the equivalent of a plea of "non detinet" at common law, and puts in issue the plaintiff's right of recovery. Ryall v. Pearson Bros., 41 South. 673, 143 Ala. 668 (citing Carlisle v. People's Bank, 26 South. 115, 122 Ala. 446).

The plea of "general issue" on strict principle operates only as a denial in fact of the express promise or contract where one is alleged, or of the matters of fact from which the contract or promise alleged may be implied by law. But by an early relaxation of the principle the defendant, in actions on express contracts, was admitted under the general issue, to the same latitude of defense which was open to him in actions upon the common count, and was permitted to adduce evidence, showing that on any ground common to both kinds of assumpsit he was under no legal liability to the plaintiff for the cause at the time of pleading. The practice in the English courts by recent rules has been brought back to its original strictness and consistency with principle. In the United States it remains, for the most part, in its former relaxed state; and accordingly, where it has not been otherwise regulated by statute, the defendant, under this issue, may give in evidence any matters, showing that the plaintiff never had any cause of action, such as the nonjoinder of another promisee, the defendant's infancy, lunacy, drunkenness, or other mental incapacity; coverture at the time of contracting; duress; want of consideration; illegality; release or parol discharge or payment before breach; material alteration of the contract; that the plaintiff was an alien enemy at the time of contracting; or that the contract was void by statute, or by the policy of the law; nonperformance of condition precedent by the plaintiff; or, in certain cases, by the act of God; or any like manner of defense. The defenses allowable under the general issue plea at common law, in the absence of statutory changes, are still open to the defendant, except the defense of arbitration and award, and possibly the defense of alien enemy. Seff v. Brotman, 70 Atl. 106, 107, 108, 108 Md. 278 (quoting 2 Greenleaf, Evidence; citing Poe, Pl., §§ 607-609; Yingling v. Kohlhass, 18 Md. 148; Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439).

GENERAL JUDGMENT

A "general judgment" is a judgment in personam. Smith v. Collopy, 55 Atl. 805, 806, 69 N. J. Law, 865.

GENERAL LAW

See Conflict with General Law.

See, also, Local Law; Special Law.

A general law is one framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating upon all alike. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 218, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534; Sample v. City of Pittsburg, 62 Atl. 201, 207, 212 Pa. 533.

The law is a "general" and not a "local law," notwithstanding the fact that local laws on the subject were passed at the same session and approved on the same day. State ex rel. Collman v. Pitts, 49 South. 441, 442, 160 Ala. 133, 135 Am. St. Rep. 79.

Where all objects which can constitutionally be included in a class are by legislation recognized by inclusion therein, such legislation will be general in the constitutional sense, and P. L. 1907, p. 365, art. 25, supplementary to the school law creating and providing for the Teachers' Retirement Fund, is not a private, local, or special law, violative of Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, prohibiting the passage of such laws in certain cases, because for constitutional reasons it did not compel teachers whose contracts antedated the enactment of the supplement to become members of the fund, but only those whose contracts were made after it became effective. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 108, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

A law applicable to all the people of the state and operating in all parts of the state would be most "general," but a law may be "general" without affecting all the people of the state. Koster v. Coyne, 97 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 110 App. Div. 742.

Highway Law, § 59a, added by Laws 1910, c. 701, providing that awards under any statute for damages to real estate by change of grade of any street, etc., shall bear interest, is a "general," and not a local law, as affecting the sufficiency of the title of the act. People ex rel. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Prendergast, 95 N. E. 715, 717, 202 N. Y. 188.

Acts 1904, p. 197, c. 93, amending Ky. St. 1903, § 1596a, subsec. 2, making the sheriff ex officio a member of the county board of election commissioners, so as to provide that in counties containing cities of the second class the circuit court clerk, instead of the sheriff, shall be a member of the board, is repugnant to Const. § 59, prohibiting the enactment of a "special law" where a general law can be made applicable, and forbidding the passage of special acts to provide for conducting elections. Droege v. McInerney, 87 S. W. 1085, 1086, 120 Ky. 796.

Act Feb. 25, 1904, 24 St. at Large, p. 485, amending General Dispensary Law March 6, 1890, 22 Stat. at Large, p. 128, § 7, and levying a tax of one-half a mill on counties voting out the dispensary with the exception of two counties which never had dispensaries, is not a violation of Const. art. 3, § 34, as a "special law," where a general law could be applicable, but the law is general with special provisions. Murph v. Landrum, 56 S. E. 850, 855, 76 S. C. 21.

A law is "general" when it applies to all of a class, the classification being a proper one, and a constitutional provision requiring all "laws of a general nature" to have a uniform operation has no application to city ordinances adopted in the exercise of police power, giving the city exclusive right to remove garbage. In re Zhishuzza, 81 Pac. 955, 957, 147 Cal. 828.

As relating to all of a class

The word "general" comes from "genus," and relates to a whole genus or kind, or to a whole class or order, so that as applied to statutes a "general law" is not necessarily one operative on all persons or things, but rather one which affects all of a class of persons or things. Smith v. State (Tex.) 113 S. W. 289, 291; Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 976, 210 Pa. 372 (quoting and adopting definitions in And. Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

A statute relating to persons and things as a class is a "general law," while one relating to particular persons or things of a class is a "special law." State v. Miksicek, 125 S. W. 507, 511, 225 Mo. 561, 135 Am. St. Rep. 597; Gay v. Thomas, 46 Pac. 578, 586, 5 Okl. 1; Ex parte Berger, 90 S. W. 759, 762, 193 Mo. 16, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530, 112 Am. St. Rep. 472, 5 Ann. Cas. 383 (citing State ex rel. Lionberger v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 650); City of Little Rock v. Town of North Little Rock, 79 S. W. 785, 787, 72 Ark. 195 (citing Little Rock & F. S. Ry. Co. v. Hanniford, 5 S. W. 294, 49 Ark. 291; Wheeler v. City of Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348); Sanchez v. Fordyce, 75 Pac. 58, 57, 141 Cal. 427; Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 365, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199; Boise City Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 71 Pac. 25, 28, 10 Idaho, 88 (quoting Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 121, and citing Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366); Koster v. Coyne, 97 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 110 App. Div. 742 (quoting In re New York Elevated R. Co., 70 N. Y. 327, 350).

An act applying uniformly to the whole or any single class of individuals or objects, where the classification is founded upon some natural intrinsic or constitutional distinction, is a "general law." Board of Education of City and County of San Fran- cisco v. Alliance Assur. Co., 159 Fed. 994, 999; Ex parte King, 106 Pac. 578, 579, 157 Cal. 161.

An act to be "general" in its scope need not include all classes of individuals, but it is enough if it relates to and operates uniformly upon the whole of any single class, though the classification must be a reasonable one. In re Martin, 106 Pac. 235, 237, 157 Cal. 51, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

"The term 'general,' when used in antithesis to 'special,' means relating to a class, instead of to persons only of that class." City of Baltimore v. Allegheny County Com'rs, 57 Atl. 632, 636, 99 Md. 1 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. 165, note).

A law which excepts a part of a given class is not general and uniform. State ex rel. Rocky Mountain Bell Tel. Co. v. City of Red Lodge, 76 Pac. 758, 760, 30 Mont. 338.

A law general in its nature and uniform in its operation upon all persons coming within its scope is a "general law." Tarantina v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 98 N. E. 999, 1101, 254 Ill. 624, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1058.

A law having a uniform operation as to all persons uniformly situated is a "general law," and not a special law. Clendaniel v. Conrad (Del.) 83 Atl. 1036, 1044.

A law is general which operates alike upon all the inhabitants, or all the cities, or all the villages, or other subjects of a class of subjects. A law is general, in the constitutional sense, which applies to and operates uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things requiring legislation peculiar to itself in matters covered by law. State ex rel. Corrison v. Rogers, 100 N. W. 659, 660, 93 Minn. 55 (quoting State v. Cooley, 58 N. W. 150, 58 Minn. 540); State ex rel. Board of Education of City of Minneapolis v. Brown, 106 N. W. 477, 482, 97 Minn. 402, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327; Bennett v. Nichols, 80 Pac. 392, 396, 9 Ariz. 138; Richardson v. Board of Education, 84 Pac. 538, 540, 72 Kan. 629 (Bouv. Law. Dict.).

A "general law" is one that embraces a class of subjects and does not exclude any subject or place naturally belonging to the classification when considered in its relation to the subject of classification. McGarvey v. Swan, 96 Pac. 697, 701, 17 Wyo. 120.

A statute providing for an attorney's lien on his client's cause of action, providing that attorneys may contract for a percentage of the proceeds of any settlement and that on notice to a defendant of an agreement between the attorney and client, stating the interest the attorney has in the cause of action, if defendant after such notice settles the cause of action without consent of the attorney, defendant shall be liable for the attorney's lien, is a "general law" and not class legislation on the ground that it simply applies to attorneys at law. O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co., 97 S. W. 150, 153, 198 Mo. 622, 115 Am. St. Rep. 495, 8 Ann. Cas. 703.

A law which operates only upon a class of individuals is none the less a "general law," if the individuals to whom it is applicable constitute a class which requires legislation peculiar to itself in the matter covered by the law. The class, however, must not only be germane to the purpose of the law, but must also be characterized by some substantial qualities or attributes which render such legislation necessary or appropriate for the individual members of the class. It may be founded on some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction (City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 27 Pac. 604, 607, 91 Cal. 238, 251), but the distinction must be of such a nature as to reasonably indicate the necessity or propriety of legislation restricted to that class. The classification must not be arbitrary, for the mere purpose of classification, but must be founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction, which will suggest a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity in the legislation. Deyoe v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, 74 Pac. 28, 29, 140 Cal. 476, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73 (citing People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 38 Pac. 905, 105 Cal. 576); Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 365, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199 (citing McDonald v. Conniff, 34 Pac. 71, 99 Cal. 386, 391; Deyoe v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, 74 Pac. 28, 140 Cal. 476, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73; People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 38 Pac. 905, 906, 105 Cal. 576, 584; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 27 Pac. 604, 91 Cal. 251; Rode v. Siebe, 51 Pac. 869, 119 Cal. 518, 39 L. R. A. 342; Darcy v. City of San Jose, 38 Pac. 500, 104 Cal. 642).

"In order to determine whether or not a given law is 'general,' the purpose of the act and the objects on which it is intended to operate must be considered. If these objects are distinguished from others by characteristics evincing a peculiar relation to the legislative purpose, and showing the legislation to be reasonably appropriate to the former and inappropriate to the latter, the objects will be considered, as respects such legislation, to be a class by themselves, and legislation affecting such a class, to be general. But if the characteristics used to distinguish the objects to which the legislation applies from others be not germane to the legislative purpose, or do not indicate some reasonable appropriateness in its application, or if objects with similar characteristics and like relation to the legislative purpose have been excluded from the operation of the law, then the classification is incomplete and faulty, and the legislation not general, but local and special." Parker-Washington Co. v. Kansas City, 85 Pac. 781, 782, 73 Kan. 722.

A "general law" within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 2, as amended June 4, 1906, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special laws, is one by which all persons or localities complying with its provisions may be entitled to exercise powers, rights, and privileges conferred, while a special law is one conferring on certain individuals or citizens of a certain locality rights and powers or liabilities not granted to or imposed on others similarly situated. Straw v. Harris, 103 Pac. 777, 780, 54 Or. 424; Farrell v. Port of Columbia, 91 Pac. 546, 547, 50 Or. 169.

An act relating to persons or things as a class is a general and not a special law, and hence Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Laws 1878-79, p. 125), relating to the suspension and removal of railroad commissioners, is not a special law. Gray v. McLendon, 67 S. E. 859, 868, 134 Ga. 224. And a statute providing for an attorney's lien on his client's cause of action, and for its protection against settlement between the parties is a "general law," though it simply applies to attorneys at law. O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co., 97 S. W. 150, 153, 198 Mo. 622, 115 Am. St. Rep. 495, 8 Ann. Cas. 703.

A law which defines the procedure for determining conflicting rights of appropriators and owners of water rights, and applying to all alike of this peculiar class of persons and rights, is a "general" and not a special law, in the constitutional sense. Boise Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 28, 10 Idaho, 38.

Act No. 70 of 1886, § 1, which provides that in suits against railroads for the killing, etc., of stock, it shall suffice in order to recover to prove the killing or injury unless defendant shows that it did not result from carelessness on its part, etc., is a "general law" applying throughout the state and to all railroads, and, since it merely makes a change in the rules of procedure and evidence in a particular class of cases, does not discriminate invidiously between persons, and hence does not contravene Const. art. 48, §§ 15, 18, forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating the practice of courts or changing the rules of evidence. Learner & Koontz v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 54 South. 931, 932, 128 La. 430.

Laws 1907, p. 898, c. 226, which declares its purpose to be to carry into effect the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people in Const. art. 4, §§ 1, 1a, as to general, local, and special legislation, and to regulate elections thereunder, and to carry into effect the amendment of article 11, § 2, granting cities and towns the right to amend their charters, and which provides (section 2) a form of initiative petition applicable to "any law," and provides that the circuit court of the county in which the municipality concerned is situated shall have jurisdiction over controversies arising under the act, is a general law within Const. art. 4, § 1a, requiring the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum to be prescribed by general laws, except in cases of cities and towns, and is broad enough to include proceedings by initiative to amend the charter of the port of Portland, a municipality not a city or town, but incorporated under a state law. Farrell v. Port of Portland, 98 Pac. 145, 147, 52 Or. 582.

As relating to all in like circumstances

A law is a general law which operates alike on all persons or officers in the state who are similarly situated, though it does not operate equally on every individual or officer in the state. People v. Nellis, 94 N. E. 165, 169, 249 Ill. 12.

Laws are general and uniform, not because they operate on all alike, for they do not, but because every one who is brought within the circumstances and conditions propolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kinney, 85 vided by the law is affected thereby. Indian N. E. 954, 956, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

Laws are "general" and uniform, not merely when they operate upon every person in the state, but when every person who is brought within the relations and circumstances provided for is affected thereby. They are general and uniform in their operation upon all persons in the like situation, and the fact of their being general and uniform is not affected by the number of persons within the scope of their operation. Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 115 N. W. 177, 185, 127 Iowa, 452.

A law operating alike upon all standing in the same relation thereto is general. Thus a territorial act exempting any railroad constructed pursuant thereto from taxation for a term of years is not in conflict with an act of Congress forbidding special laws granting special or exclusive privileges. Bennett v. Nichols, 80 Pac. 392, 396, 9 Ariz. 138.

Laws 1905, c. 115, prohibiting saloons within five miles of any United States government sanatorium, and within specified distances of any military reservation, and of enumerated educational institutions, is a "general" statute, and not a special one, within Act Cong. July 30, 1886, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, prohibiting the special laws, though there was but one United States sanatorium in the territory at the time of the passage of the act. Rapp v. Venable, 110 Pac. 834, 836, 15 N. M. 509.

Character of subject-matter

Whenever the subject-matter of legislation either does or may exist in or affect every part of the state, such legislation is a "law of general nature." Pump v. Lucas County Com'rs, 69 N. E. 666, 69 Ohio St. 448.

A "law of a general nature," within Const. art. 2, § 17, providing that all laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the state, is one whose subject-matter is common to all the people of the state. "Laws of a general nature" are such as relate to a subject of a general nature and subjects of a general nature that exist or may exist throughout the state or which affect the people of the state generally or in which the people generally have an interest. The difference between a "law of a general nature" and a "general law" is that the subject-matter of the former must be one common to the people of the entire state, while all that is required of the latter is uniformity of operation. Whether or not the subject of an act which is either general or special in form is one of general nature is always a question for judicial determination. Richardson v. Board of Education of Kansas City, 84 Pac. 538, 540, 72 Kan. 629.

"Without undertaking to discriminate nicely or define with precision, it may be said that the character of a law as 'general' or 'local' depends on the character of its subject-matter. If that be of a general nature, existing throughout the state, in every county, a subject-matter in which all the citizens have a common interest, * * * then the laws which relate to and regulate it are laws of a 'general' nature." Hence a law providing for the pensioning of school teachers in school districts in cities of the third grade of the first class violates the constitutional requirement that all laws of a "general nature" shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; such law at the time of its passage and taking effect being applicable only to one city and containing a provision requiring the board of education to select three members of a pension committee at its first regular meeting within 30 days after the law went into effect, and making no provision in such regard for cities which might thereafter come into the class. Hibbard v. State, 64 N. E. 109, 111, 65 Ohio St. 574, 58 L. R. A. 654 (citing Kelley v. State, 6 Ohio St. 269, 271).

Public Service Commissions Law (Laws 1907, p. 889, c. 429), creating commissions to regulate certain public service corporations and whose provisions embrace the entire state, is a "general," rather than a local or private act, and hence is not within New York Const. art. 3, § 16, providing that no local or private act shall embrace more than one subject, etc., and the fact that the act requires certain expenses of the commission in one of the two districts of the state to be met by a specified municipality does not make it a local law. Gubner v. McClellan, 115 N. Y. Supp. 753, 758, 130 App. Div. 716.

As public act or law

In an article in the Atlantic Monthly for January, 1906 (volume 97, p. 69), Mr.

Samuel P. Orth states that, "A 'public law' is a measure that affects the welfare of the state as a unit; a 'private law' is one that provides an exception to the public rule. The one is an answer to a public need, and the other an answer to a private prayer. When it acts upon a public bill, a Legislature legislates; when it acts upon a private bill, it adjudicates. It passes from the function of a lawmaker to that of a judge. It is transformed from a tribunal of the people into a justice shop for the seeker after special privilege." Anderson v. Board of Com'rs of Cloud County, 95 Pac. 583, 586, 77 Kan. 721.

The charter of a city in Oregon is a "public law" of the state of which all courts take judicial notice. Naylor v. McColloch, 103 Pac. 69, 72, 54 Or. 305.

A public law is one not designated by the statute itself as private as provided by Const. art. 4, § 27, and of which court will take judicial notice. Farrell v. Port of Columbia, 91 Pac. 546, 547, 50 Or. 169.

The common-law definition of a crime, as given by Blackstone, is, "An act committed or omitted in violation of a public law"; and the term "criminal prosecutions," as employed in Const. 1819, art. 1, § 10, giving the accused the right to be heard in all "criminal prosecutions," relates exclusively to prosecutions for violations of the "public laws of the state," and a city ordinance is not a public law of the state, but a local law of the particular corporation, made for its internal practice and good government. Costello v. Feagin, 50 South. 134, 135, 162 Ala. 191.

"'Public' and 'general,' as applied to statutes, are sometimes synonymous, depending upon the context; but they are not so in all cases. Every general law is necessarily a public one, but every public law is not a general one. Thus an act incorporating a city is a public law, but it is not a general law, because it is applicable to a particular locality." Farrell v. Port of Columbia, 91 Pac. 546, 547, 50 Or. 169.

A "general law" is a law which operates throughout the state alike, upon all the people or all of a class. Every "general law" is necessarily a public law, but every public law is not a "general law." Any law affecting the public within the limits of a county or community would be a public law, though not a "general law." Wallace v. Board of Revenue, 37 South. 321, 322, 140 Ala. 491 (citing Holt v. City of Birmingham, 19 South. 735, 111 Ala. 373); State ex rel. Attorney General v. Sayre, 39 South. 240, 142 Ala. 641, 4 Ann. Cas. 656 (quoting and adopting definition in Holt v. City of Birmingham, 19 South. 735, 736, 111 Ala. 372, 373).

Territorial comprehensiveness

A law which has a bona fide application to the entire state as to some of its chief features is a "general" and not a "local" law, as defined by Const. 1901, § 110, though it does not apply in every detail. State ex rel. Collman v. Pitts, 49 South. 441, 442, 160 Ala. 133, 135 Am. St. Rep. 79.

A law which is general in its terms and is in good faith so framed that all parts of the state may come within the circle of its operation is a "general law." The Constitution defines the "general law" as one which applies to the whole state, and one of the definitions of the word, "apply" is declare or pronounce as suitable. State ex rel. Covington v. Thompson, 38 South. 679, 683, 142 Ala. 98.

A law, to be "general," under article 1, § 4, par. 1, of the Constitution, must operate uniformly, throughout the whole state, upon the subject or class of subjects with which it purposes to deal. Futrell v. George, 69 S. E. 182, 183, 135 Ga. 285.

Under Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting local or special laws as to certain enumerated matters and in other cases where a general law can be made applicable, a general law need not be one general to the extent that it has a uniform operation throughout the state, but simply that in its nature and character it should apply equally to all persons within the territorial limits describing it, and is one whose operation is equal in its effect on all persons or things on which the law is designed to operate at all. Smith v. State, 113 S. W. 289, 290, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 298; Milam v. Same (Tex.) 114 S. W. 144.

An act is "general," as contradistinguished from, and inconsistent with, "local," in the sense the latter term is used in Const. Wis. art. 4, § 18, providing that no private or local bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title, only when its operation extends to the whole state or perhaps to the whole of some class of localities therein which the Legislature may constitutionally make upon the principle recognized and approved for the classification of cities for the purpose of general legislation. An act is "general" in the restricted sense in which the term is used in article 7, § 21, providing that no general law shall be in force until published when it is of that character within the broad meaning of the term and also when it is "public," in that its effects extend to the people of a locality such as a county, city, town, or village, or a collection of localities not forming a legislative class formed for some legitimate cause; the term "general" and the term "public" being considered in this respect synonymous. When an act is "general" merely because it is "public," it is at the same time "local" and must be tested as to its validity by section 21, art. 7, and section 18, art. 4, as well, and, if it belong to one of the prohibited classes of special legislation, it must also be tested by the constitutional restriction upon that subject. Milwaukee County v. Isenring, 85 N. W. 131, 135, 109 Wis. 9, 53 L. R. A. 635.

Classification of municipal corporations

Acts applicable to single cities or to a special class of cities are not the general laws of the state within the meaning of Charter of Atlantic City (P. L. 1902, p. 284) § 21, relating to granting of licenses. Leeds v. Atlantic City, 80 Atl. 23, 24, 81 N. J. Law, 230.

Acts 30th Leg. c. 139, known as the "jury wheel law," and providing a particular jury system for all counties having a city containing a population of 20,000 or more according to the census, is a "general" and not a special law, within Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibiting the passage of any local or special law regulating the summoning or impaneling of juries. Houston Electric Co. v. Faroux (Tex.) 125 S. W. 922, 923; Smith v. State, 113 S. W. 289, 290, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 298; Milam v. Same (Tex.) 114 S. W. 144; Pate v. State, 113 S. W. 759, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 462.

P. L. 1907, pp. 79, 89, 114, creating boards of fire and police commissioners, boards of finance, and boards of public works in cities having a population of not less than 100,000 nor more than 200,000, are each a "general law," and not a "special law," regulating municipal affairs. McCarter v. McKelvey (N. J.) 73 Atl. 884, 885.

Under the Constitution (article 11, § 5) empowering the Legislature to classify the counties by population for the purpose of regulating the compensation of officers, a statute providing for the compensation of officers within any class provided for is a general law, and it is immaterial whether the provision is in a special statute for each class or in a single act providing for all the classes, and an amendment to a statute which affects an entire class is equally a general law. Crocket v. Mathews, 106 Pac. 575, 577, 157 Cal. 153.

Rev. St. 1899, c. 91, dividing all the cities in the state into classes, is a "general law," and therefore Rev. St. 1899, c. 91, art. 3, providing a charter for cities of the second class, is not a special enactment, but is a "general law" applicable to all cities the population of which brings them within the class specified. State v. Binswanger, 98 S. W. 103, 104, 122 Mo. App. 78.

The local option law (Laws 1909, p. 9), made applicable to every county in the state alike, its provisions being operative in any county after the electors of such county have complied with its provisions in holding an election to determine whether the sale of intoxicants as a beverage shall be prohibited, and the majority of the electors at such election have voted in favor of prohibiting such sale, is a general law, declarative of the policy of the state in regard to traffic in intoxicants. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nex Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 217, 18 Idaho, 695, 82 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

Regulation of private corporations

The public utilities act of 1911 (Laws 1911, c. 117), providing for the regulation of public service utilities, creating a Public Service Commission with power to establish rates, etc., enacted pursuant to Const. art. 12, §§ 1, 18, authorizing the formation of corporations under general laws, and empowering the Legislature to adopt laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for carriers, is a general law within article 11, § 10, authorizing the incorporation of cities and the adoption of charters subject to general law, and it supersedes ordinances of cities regulating public service corporations. State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Court of King County, 120 Pac. 861, 864, 67 Wash. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 78.

Regulation of taxation

Act 1884 (P. L. p. 142) for the taxation of railroad and canal property is a "general law" assessing taxes by a uniform rule on the property of all railroad and canal corporations of the state within Act March 4, 1869 (P. L. p. 226), abolishing transit duties, and providing that all corporations theretofore paying transit duties should thereafter pay the tax therein prescribed until the Legislature should "by general law impose a uniform state tax equally applicable to all railroad and canal corporations of this state," and that the corporations should then pay such tax. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Baird, 69 Atl. 472, 474, 75 N. J. Law, 738.

V. S. 365, provides that manufacturing establishments, quarries, mines, and such machinery, tramways, appliances, and buildings as are necessary for prosecuting the business, machinery put into unoccupied buildings, and all capital and personal property used in such business, if the amount invested exceeds $1,000, may be exempt from taxation for 10 years from the commencement of business if the town so votes, is a "general" statute, and a general vote of the town extending such exemption to all business locating in the town within the statute is sufficient; it not being necessary to vote an exemption to each particular concern to which the exemption was accorded. Caverly-Gould Co. v. Village of Springfield, 76 Atl. 39, 40, 41, 83 Vt. 396.

Regulation of saloons

An act prohibiting any licensed dramshop keeper from keeping open his dramshop or selling or giving away or otherwise disposing of intoxicating liquors on Sundays applies to all licensed dramshop keepers, and is a "general law." State v. Grossman, 113 S. W. 1074, 1075, 214 Mo. 238.

GENERAL LEGACY

See, also, General Legatee.

Legacies are divided into two classes, specific and general, and a general legacy is one that is not to be paid from any particular thing belonging to the estate, the delivery of which will fulfill the intent of the testator, but may be paid from the general funds of the estate. In re Parsons' Estate, 129 N. W. 955, 956, 150 Iowa, 280.

A general legacy is a gift of personal property by a last will and testament, not amounting to a bequest of a particular thing or money, or of a particular fund designated from all others of the same kind. In re Fisher, 87 N. Y. Supp. 567, 568, 93 App. Div. 186 (citing Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 277, 159 N. Y. 514; In re Wenner, 110 N. Y. S. 694, 695, 126 App. Div. 939 (quoting Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 277, 159 N. Y. 518); Rogers v. Rogers, 45 S. E. 176, 177, 67 S. C. 168, 100 Am. St. Rep. 721 (quoting and adopting definitions in Crawford v. McCarthy, 54 N. E. 278, 159 N. Y. 514; Pell v. Ball, Speers Eq. 48).

"A 'general legacy' is one which is payable out of the general assets of testator's estate, being a gift of money or other thing in quantity and not in any way separate or distinct from other things of the like kind." White v. White, 53 S. E. 371, 372, 73 S. C. 261.

A "general legacy" may be satisfied out of the general assets of testator's estate without regard to any particular fund or property, and a general legacy has no reference to the actual state of testator's property, and it is supposed that testator has sufficient property to procure for the legatee the amount given him. Weed v. Hoge, 83 Atl. 636, 638, 85 Conn. 490, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 542.

A bequest or devise of the residue of an estate is "general" because such residue is not ascertainable at the time of the will. In re Painter's Estate, 89 Pac. 98, 100, 150 Cal. 498, 11 Ann. Cas. 760.

All legacies other than that of the residuum are either general or specific. A "general legacy" is one which does not necessitate delivering any particular thing or paying money out of any particular portion of the estate. A residuary bequest is general, though articles bequeathed are enumerated. In re Martin, 54 Atl. 589, 594, 25 R. I. 1.

A "demonstrative legacy" is one of a certain amount or quantity, the particular fund or personal property being pointed out from which it is to be paid or taken; it differing from a "general legacy" in that it does not abate upon insufficiency of assets, and from a "specific legacy" in that there is recourse for its payment from the general estate in the event of ademption. Thompson v. Stephens, 75 S. E. 136, 137, 138 Ga. 205.

Specific legacy distinguished

A legacy is a "general legacy," and not specific, where so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money, distinguished from all others of the same kind. In re Barton's Estate, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1087, 1090, 64 Misc. Rep. 242.

A "general legacy" is one payable out of the general assets of testator's estate, while a "specific legacy" is a gift by will of a specific article or particular part of an estate, which is identified and distinguished from all others of the same nature, and is to be satisfied only by the delivery and receipt of the particular thing given. Thus a bequest by testatrix of any and all sums that might thereafter be payable to her, or her estate, as the proceeds of any insurance on her husband's life, to her husband's five sisters, or such of them as should be living at the time such insurance money should be actually collected and received by testatrix's executors, etc., was a "specific legacy." Nusly v. Curtis, 85 Pac. 846, 847, 36 Colo. 464, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 118 Am. St. Rep. 113, 10 Ann. Cas. 1134.

The distinction between a specific and a demonstrative legacy involves not merely a technical question depending for its solution solely upon the precise language of the bequest, but a substantial inquiry respecting the intention of the testator as shown by the terms of the particular legacy, examined in connection with all the other provisions of the will. A specific legacy is a bequest of a specific article or particular fund which can be distinguished from all the rest of the testator's estate of the same kind, while a general legacy is payable out of the general assets of the estate. In re Stilphen, 60 Atl. 888, 890, 100 Me. 146, 4 Ann. Cas. 158. See, also, Rogers v. Rogers, 45 S. E. 176, 177, 67 S. C. 168, 100 Am. St. Rep. 721, holding a bequest of all claims held by testator against his father and of all interest in his father's estate to be a specific legacy.

Where the thing bequeathed is by the terms of the will individuated so that it is distinguished from all others of the same kind, it is a "specific legacy," and hence a bequest of all "my household goods, cash on hand or in bank, life insurance and all other personal property of every description" was a "specific legacy" so far as the household goods, cash, and insurance were concerned, though a "general legacy" as to any other property passing by the bequest. Kearns v. Kearns, 76 Atl. 1042, 77 N. J. Eq. 453, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 445.

Stock or bonds

A legacy of shares of stock given generally, and without any indication that testator intended to bequeath particular stock held by him at the date of the will or existing as a part of his estate, is a general legacy, and, if the shares bequeathed are not in testator's possession at the time of his death, the gift is considered to be a direction to the executors to purchase the securities for the legatee with his general estate. Blair v. Scribner, 57 Atl. 818, 824, 65 N. J. Eq. 498 (citing Norris v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 16 N. J. Eq. 218; 2 Williams Ex'rs [R. & T. Ed.] 1026; 3 Pom. Eq. Juris. § 1132; 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. [4th Am. Ed.] 610). See, also, In re Snyder's Estate, 66 Atl. 157, 158, 217 Pa. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 118 Am. St. Rep. 900, 10 Ann. Cas. 488.

GENERAL LEGATEE

"A general legatee is one who has a bequest of a specified quantity, payable out of the personal assets generally." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 238.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

See General Law.

GENERAL LOCALITY

The phrase "general locality" and the word "neighborhood" imply a considerable territory, and cannot be used in a legal sense as describing a circle on a street of a diameter of about six feet. Moriarty v. City of New York, 116 N. Y. Supp. 823, 824, 132 App. Div. 10.

GENERAL MANAGER

A "general manager" of a corporation is "the person who really has the most general control over the affairs of a corporation and who has knowledge of all its business and property, and who can act in emergencies on his own responsibility, and who may be considered the principal officer." Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Aztec Gold Min. & Mill Co., 93 Pac. 706, 713, 14 N. M. 300 (quoting and adopting the definition in 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3073); Manross v. Uncle Sam Oil Co., 128 Pac. 385, 886, 88 Kan. 237 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3073, 3074). He is its general agent; that is, one authorized to transact any business in which it may be engaged. Booker-Jones Oil Co. v. National Refining Co. (Tex.) 132 S. W. 815, 816. And he is impliedly invested with authority to do such acts as are necessary in the ordinary course of the company's business, but, in the absence of authority from the board of directors, he may not make a contract, on behalf of the corporation, with a third person, whereby the latter shall have the entire control over a specified part of the company's business for a fixed compensation and a percentage of profits therein, to continue for a term of years. Wainwright v. P. H. & F. M. Roots Co., 97 N. E. 8, 10, 176 Ind. 682.

In the absence of proof as to the nature of services or powers of a corporation employé designated "General Manager," the words would simply import that he is a general executive officer for all the ordinary business of the corporation, and no inference can be indulged in that he possessed authority to make a contract for the purchase of an automobile binding on the corporation. Studebaker Bros. Co. v. R. M. Rose Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 970, 972, 65 Misc. Rep. 322. But by giving to one of its officers the title "general manager" a railroad corporation holds him out to the world as possessing implied power to make in its behalf a contract to repair a sleeping car used on its line. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Pullman Co., 50 S. E. 1008, 1010, 122 Ga. 700.

The term "general manager" is not equivalent to "local agent" in Rev. St. 1895, art. 1222, requiring the citation to be served on the president or on the "local agent" representing the company in the county in actions against an incorporated company, and under this article, construed in view of article 1223, permitting process to be served on the president, "general manager," or upon any local agent within the state, in suits against a foreign corporation, service on the manager of a domestic corporation is not sufficient to sustain a default judgment. Latham Co. v. J. H. Radford Grocery Co., 117 S. W. 909, 910, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 510.

GENERAL OATH

Where a party to a suit, on the trial thereof, presents himself as a witness in support of the charges against the adverse party on his account book, and voluntarily takes the "general oath" to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, legally administered, instead of the "suppletory oath," a more restricted oath, to make just and true answers to such questions as shall be asked by the court or by the order thereof, and testifies untruly, wittingly, and willingly to matters material and legitimately derivable from him, he will come within the purview of Rev. St. c. 158, § 1, and may be convicted of perjury. State v. Keene, 26 Me. 33, 35.

GENERAL OBLIGATION

Eugene City Charter, § 112, as amended, declares that water bonds, in addition to being a "general" obligation of the city, shall be a first and exclusive lien on the water plant, so as to be secured with money derived from the sale of the water bonds, and provides for the payment of the water bonds at maturity and of the interest out of a special fund. Held, that the word "general," employed to qualify the word "obligation," meant a municipal debt for the payment of which provision must be made by devoting funds raised by taxation, and the entire section, construed together, provided for a special fund for the payment of water bonds and interest, and provided that a shortage in the funds provided for must be paid out of the general fund. City of Eugene v. Willamette Valley Co., 97 Pac. 817, 819, 52 Or. 490.

GENERAL OFFICERS

The secretary and treasurer of an association who is the custodian of its records and vouchers, so far as money is concerned, is a "general officer" thereof, within the meaning of Code 1892, § 534, providing that the answer of a corporation shall be sworn to by its president, general manager, superintendent, or other general officer, unless answer under oath is waived. Masonic Benefit Ass'n v. Simmons, 38 South. 791, 792, 86 Miss. 470.

GENERAL PARTNERSHIP

Code Civ. Proc. § 758, as amended in 1877 provides that in the case of death of one of two or more defendants, if the entire cause of action survives against the others, the action may proceed against the survivors, but that the estate of one jointly liable upon contract with others shall not be discharged by his death; and Partnership Law (Laws 1897, c. 420) § 3, makes a partnership formed otherwise than as prescribed in the chapter for the formation of a limited partnership a general partnership. Section 4 defines a "limited partnership" as one or more persons called "general partners," and also one or more called "special partners." Section 5 makes every general partner the agent for the firm. Section 6 makes every general partner liable for all firm obligations jointly and severally with his general copartner. Section 7 makes a special partner liable only to the amount of the capital invested by him, and article 8 is entitled "Limited Partnership." Section 86 provides that the general partner "in such partnership" shall be jointly and severally liable as general partners are by law, and that special partners shall not be liable beyond the fund contributed by them to the capital. Held, that section 6 of the partnership law is confined to limited partnerships, and does not make the partners of a general firm jointly and severally liable to the firm creditors, and hence the representative of a deceased partner could not be substituted for him in an action for firm debts. Seligman v. Friedlander, 92 N. E. 1047, 1049, 199 N. Y. 373.

GENERAL POST OFFICE

An order of publication requiring plaintiff to deposit "in the general post office" in the city copies of the summons, etc., is not complied with where the post office box in which a copy of the summons, etc., is mailed is a "mail chute" extending from the upper stories of an office building to a United States post office box located on the ground floor of the building. Korn v. Lipman, 94 N. E. 861, 862, 201 N. Y. 404.

GENERAL POWER

Whether a power is "general" or limited depends on the terms of the instrument creating the power, and a power general in its terms will not be cut down to a limited one by subsequent provisions, unless by express words, or unless an intent to do so is apparent from the instrument creating the power. A "general power" of appointment may be exercised in favor of whomsoever the donee pleases, even in favor of the donee himself, or for his benefit. A "general power" is, in regard to the estates which may be created by force of it, tantamount to a limitation in fee, not merely because it enables the donee to limit a fee which a particular power may also do, but because it enables him to give a fee to whom he pleases. The donee has an absolute disposing power over the estate and may bring it into the market whenever his necessities or wishes may so indicate. Grace v. Perry, 95 S. W. 875, 879, 197 Mo. 550, 7 Ann. Cas. 948 (citing 1 Sugd. Vendors [3d Am. Ed.] p. 514).

GENERAL POWER IN TRUST

Where testator gave his wife the income of his estate and provided that on her death or remarriage the property should go to his children and he gave all the property to his wife and his brother, who were appointed executors in trust to pay the legacies with power to sell, and the land devised was unimproved, the power of sale was a "general power in trust," within 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, art. 3, § 94, defining a "general power in trust," and a sale by the surviving executor evidenced by a deed reciting that it was executed by virtue of the power in the will is valid. Doecher v. Wyckoff, 116 N. Y. Supp. 389, 393, 132 App. Div. 139.

Where testatrix devised all her real estate to a trustee, empowering him, with her son's consent, to sell it, but did not dispose of the corpus, the power of sale ended with the son's death, and, no sale having been made during his life, the land thereupon passed to his heirs, so that defendant railroad company acquired easements therein as against these heirs by condemnation proceedings instituted after the death of the son. Wells v. Brooklyn Union Elevated R. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 77, 78, 121 App. Div. 491.

GENERAL PURPOSES

Under constitutional provisions and statutes providing that no tax shall be levied by a city without designating in the levy the purpose for which it is to be applied, that no tax levied for one purpose shall be applied to another, and providing that, in an ordinance fixing the tax rate for any year, the levy shall be subdivided for the following purposes: For schools, for sinking fund, for police purposes, for sprinkling streets, for general purposes, etc.—and leaving to the discretion of the city the levies to be made each year for the enumerated purposes, an ordinance subdividing a levy among a number of such enumerated purposes, but making no mention of street sprinkling, does not embrace a levy for that purpose under the head of "General Purposes," and no part of the levy can be used for street sprinkling. City of Louisville v. Button, 82 S. W. 293, 294, 118 Ky. 732.

GENERAL RECOGNITION

The word "general" is used in the statute relating to the recognition of a child with the design of emphasizing the thought that the understanding of the father's recognition should be as extensive as the immediate community of his residence and within the common knowledge of the public. Morgan v. Strand, 110 N. W. 596, 597, 133 Iowa, 299.

GENERAL REPUTATION

See, also, General Character.

"General reputation" is what people in a community commonly say about a thing. Fitzgerald v. State, 72 S. E. 541, 542, 10 Ga. App. 70.

"General character" is the same as "general reputation," and is determined by how one is generally regarded or esteemed in the community in which he lives. Way v. State, 46 South. 273, 278, 155 Ala. 52.

"General reputation" is what a person's neighbors generally say of him; the concurrence of many voices to the same fact. That a woman's reputation for chastity is what the people of her acquaintance generally say of her in this regard. Moore v. Dozier, 57 S. E. 110, 113, 123 Ga. 90 (citing Treschman v. Treschman, 61 N. E. 961, 28 Ind. App. 219; Deputy v. Harris [Del.] 40 Atl. 714, 715, 1 Marv. 104; State v. Bryan, 8 Pac. 260, 266, 84 Kan. 72).

"General reputation and repute," as to the marital relation, means the understanding among neighbors and acquaintances with whom the parties associate in their daily life that they are living together as husband and wife, and not in meretricious intercourse. Klipfel's Estate v. Klipfel, 92 Pac. 26, 28, 41 Colo. 40, 124 Am. St. Rep. 96.

The phrase "general repute in the family," or "general reputation in the family," when applied to cases of pedigree, means declarations of deceased members of the family made ante litem motam, and family history and tradition, handed down by declarations of deceased members of the family, made ante litem motam. The same would be the case when it is necessary to prove marriage, birth, or death for any other purpose. In re Hurlburt's Estate, 35 Atl. 77, 78, 63 Vt. 366, 35 L. R. A. 794.

GENERAL RESTRAINT

The terms "general restraint of trade" and "partial restraint of trade" have no longer a territorial meaning. In respect of time and territory and in the absence of any affirmative showing that the public welfare is put in jeopardy or that a monopoly is created, or the like, the validity of all contracts in restraint of trade must be made to depend upon the question as presented by each case whether the restraint goes so far as to reasonably insure to the purchaser the full enjoyment of the right purchased by him in good faith and for a good and valuable consideration. Swigert v. Tilden, 97 N. W. 82, 86, 121 Iowa, 650, 63 L. R. A. 608, 100 Am. St. Rep. 374.

GENERAL STATUTE

See General Law.

GENERAL STRIKE

As construed by the courts of England, a strike may be a "general strike" within the clause of a charter party though not all of the men were on the strike; the word "general" not being used in opposition to "partial." A strike was a general strike if it was not a particular strike, and by a particular strike was understood a strike either by an individual workman or by a particular body of workmen working for a particular master; but if there was a strike against all the masters, and if that strike was taken part in by the workmen irrespective of the masters for whom they were working, that amounted to a general strike. The Toronto, 168 Fed. 386, 393.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENCE

See Officer Having General Superintendence.

GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT

The "general superintendent" of a railroad is necessarily clothed with large specific as well as discretionary powers. He has the general superintendence of the business affairs of the road, and authority to incur liability for medical services to an injured employé. Hall v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 278, 281, 27 R. I. 525 (citing Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Rodrigues, 47 Ill. 183, 95 Am. Dec. 484; Sevier v. Birmingham, S. & T. R. R. Co., 92 Ala. 258, 262, 9 South. 405, 406).

GENERAL SUPERVISION

The words "general supervision" imply something more than a mere power to advise and suggest, and confer authority to oversee and review the acts and to correct the errors of those over whom the right of supervision is granted. Under Laws 1905, p. 225, c. 115, § 2, subd. 2, requiring the state board of tax commissioners to exercise "general supervision" over assessors and county boards of equalization, and the assessment of taxable property in order to secure equality in taxation, the commissioners do not act merely in an advisory capacity, but have power to classify intercounty railroads and fix the value thereof for purposes of taxation. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Snohomish County, 93 Pac. 924, 927, 48 Wash. 478.

The grant of appellate jurisdiction given to circuit courts by the constitutional provision declaring that they shall have appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals, and a supervisory control over the same, and shall also have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to give them a "general control over inferior courts and jurisdictions," does not include authority to review the proceedings of an inferior tribunal on the merits by the writ of certiorari. The use thereof to commence an action relates to judicial authority to supervise inferior courts and jurisdictions. The power of superintending control given to the circuit courts is limited by the means afforded for its exercise; the functions of the original writs referred to in connection with the grant, all of which appertain to matters of jurisdiction. The writ of certiorari was, by the Constitution, made an appurtenance, as before, to jurisdiction of superintending control, with its common-law function in that regard and that only. Such function extends wholly to matters of jurisdiction as regards independent proceedings. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittendon, 107 N. W. 500, 514, 127 Wis. 468.

GENERAL TAX

"The general levy of taxes is understood to exact the contributions in return for the general benefits of government, and it promises nothing to the persons taxed, beyond what may be anticipated from an administration of the laws for individual protection and the general public good." Farnham v. City of Lincoln, 106 N. W. 666, 668, 75 Neb. 502.

Where a town voted to exempt certain business organizations from taxation for 10 years, such vote precluded a village within the town from levying general taxes on such exempt property, but did not preclude the levy of special assessments thereon for municipal improvements; "general taxes" being based on the fact that the government must have revenue, and on the principle that all citizens and property within its jurisdiction should contribute, without special benefit, while "special assessments" are based on the theory of a special benefit to the property assessed, by means of a local improvement. Caverly-Gould Co. v. Village of Springfield, 76 Atl. 39, 42, 83 Vt. 396.

GENERAL TITLE

A "general title" to a statute is one which is broad and comprehensive, covering all legislation germane to the general subject stated, as distinguished from a restrictive title, which is one by which a particular part or branch of a subject is carved out as the subject of legislation. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Byrne, 104 S. W. 460, 462, 119 Tenn. 278.

GENERAL TRUST

A transfer by a person of all his property to a trustee to hold as a trust fund is a "general trust." Babbitt v. Fidelity Trust Co., 66 Atl. 1076, 1080, 72 N. J. Eq. 745.

GENERAL VERDICT

See Separate General Verdict.

A "general verdict" is that by which the jury pronounce generally upon all or any of the issues either in favor of plaintiff or defendant. Wiruth v. Lashmett, 123 N. W. 427, 429, 85 Neb. 286; Farmers' Savings Bank of Arispe v. Arispe Mercantile Co. (Iowa) 127 N. W. 1084 (Code, § 3725); Nerger v. Commercial Mut. F. Assoc., 114 N. W. 689, 690, 21 S. D. 537 (Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 270); Glade v. Eastern Illinois Min. Co., 107 S. W. 1002, 1004, 129 Mo. App. 443 (citing Shipp v. Snyder, 25 S. W. 900, 121 Mo. 155; Rev. St. 1889, § 2160); Russell v. Rhinehart, 122 N. Y. Supp. 539, 542, 137 App. Div. 843 (Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1186).

A general verdict for plaintiff is a finding in his favor of every fact material to a recovery, and answers to special interrogatories will not overthrow the general verdict, unless they are in irreconcilable conflict with it. Henderson v. McGruder (Ind.) 94 N. E. 580, 582; Indiana Ry. Co. v. Maurer, 68 N. E. 156, 157, 160 Ind. 25 (citing Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Peyton, 61 N. E. 722, 157 Ind. 690, 697).

Separate general findings on separate causes of action are "general verdicts." Farmers' Savings Bank of Arispe v. Arispe Mercantile Co. (Iowa) 127 N. W. 1084, 1087.

A "general verdict" in favor of the plaintiff against one of the defendants without mentioning the other is a "general verdict" in favor of the defendant not mentioned, sufficiently definite, in the absence of any objection thereto on the part of the plaintiff, to satisfy the statute requiring the rendition of a general verdict in all cases. Lawson v. Robinson, 75 Pac. 1012, 1013, 68 Kan. 737.

In criminal proceedings

A "general verdict" is a conviction of everything well charged in the indictment. Blackahare v. State, 128 S. W. 549, 551, 94 Ark. 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 144 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 1006a).

Under Mansf. Dig. § 2283, providing that a "general verdict" is either "guilty" or "not guilty," if guilty the jury affixing the punishment, if the amount thereof is not determined by law, in force in the Indian Territory, by reason of Act Cong. March 1, 1895, one on trial for crime punishable by fine not exceeding a specified sum, and by imprisonment for not less nor for more than a specified time, is entitled to have the jury determine the punishment on their finding him guilty. Taylor v. United States, 98 S. W. 123, 125, 6 Ind. T. 350.

GENERAL WARRANTY

See Covenant of General Warranty.

GENERAL WELFARE

A city whose charter contains a "general welfare" clause may legally pass an ordinance prohibiting the possession of intoxicating liquors kept for the purposes of illegal sale. Sawyer v. City of Blakely, 68 S. E. 399, 400, 2 Ga. App. 159.

A city ordinance for the separation of the races on street cars is within the "general welfare" clause of the charter enabling the city "to pass all ordinances necessary for the health, convenience, and safety of the citizens." Patterson v. Taylor, 40 South. 498, 495, 51 Fla. 275.

Since assessments for benefits from a levee are justified under the police power, rather than the taxing power, in furtherance of the "general welfare," which includes the public health, as well as other things, the inclusion of property of a railroad in a levee district and its assessment for benefits is not violative of the railroad company's charter rights. Des Moines & Mississippi Levee Dist. No. 1 v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 145 S. W. 35, 38, 240 Mo. 614, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 543.

GENERALLY

The use of the word "generally" imports the existence of exceptions; thus, Civ. Code 1895, § 3656, declaring that an instrument under seal "generally" imports a consideration, indicates an intention to provide for exceptions to the general rule which conclusively presumes a consideration where the instrument is executed under seal. Sims v. Scheussler, 64 S. E. 99, 102, 5 Ga. App. 850.

GENERATOR

A "dynamo" or "generator" is a mechanism which generates electromotive force by moving a closed circuit in a magnetic field. In re Charlestown Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 165.

GENS

"Among the American Indians, the 'gens' is an organized body of consanguineal kindred; an indeterminate number of these gentes making a tribe. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 636, 20 Okl. 687 (quoting "the American Race" [1901] by Daniel G. Brinton).

GENS DE TRAVAIL

The term "laborers and servants" as used in Civ. Code 1870, art. 3534 (C. C. 1825, art. 3499), is a translation of the term "gens de travail et de service," and sick nurses are "gens de travail." Succession of Dolson, 56 South. 514, 129 La. 577 (citing Vaughn v. Terrell, 23 La. Ann. 62).

GENTLY

A statement of a witness that a conductor laid his hand "gently" upon the shoulder of a passenger for the purpose of ejecting him from the train excludes the idea of rudeness or force. According to Webster's Dictionary, "gently" means softly, mildly; while "rude" means rough, insulting. Holmes v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 94 N. C. 318, 323.

GENUINE

Comp. Laws 1907, § 4083, punishing every person who with intent to defraud presents for allowance to any state or county officer, etc., authorized to allow or pay the same if genuine, any fraudulent claim, is violated where the claim presented is one which on its face purports to be a charge against the political division for which the officer acts in allowing or paying it, and the mere fact that the claim is unauthorized by law, and that the officer cannot legally allow or pay it, is not decisive; and so long as the claim, if valid, is one that could or should be allowed or paid, it is within the statute, though the claim itself may be for a matter which the law does not authorize or even forbid, the word "genuine" referring to a real claim as distinguished from a counterfeit. Law v. Smith, 98 Pac. 300, 307, 34 Utah, 394.

GENUINENESS

"The 'genuineness' of an instrument, which is admitted unless denied under oath, evidently goes to the question of its having been the act of the party just as represented; or, in other words, that the signature is not spurious, and that nothing has been added to it, or taken away from it, which would lay the party changing the instrument, or signing the name of the person, liable to forgery." Puritan Mfg. Co. v. Toti & Gradi, 94 Pac. 1022, 1023, 14 N. M. 425 (quoting and adopting Cox v. Northwestern Stage Co., 1 Idaho, 376, 381).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing that when the defense is based on a written instrument, and a copy thereof is contained in the answer, or is annexed thereto, the "genuineness" and due execution thereof are admitted, unless the plaintiff file, within 10 days after receiving a copy of the answer, an affidavit denying the same. By "genuineness" is meant nothing more than that it is not spurious, counterfeit, or of different import on its face from the one executed, but is the identical instrument executed by the party. Hence under section 462, providing that the statement of any new matter in the answer in avoidance or defense must be deemed controverted by the opposite party, an instrument set up as a defense can be controverted on the ground that its execution was procured by fraud, where no affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution has been filed. Moore v. Copp, 51 Pac. 630, 631, 119 Cal. 429.

GEOGRAPHICAL CENTER

It is contended that the words "geographical center" should be restricted so as to mean nothing more than the word "point" when used in considering a geographical problem or proposition—something without length, breadth, or thickness, without magnitude or parts—from which it would follow that no place sufficient for the purposes of a county seat was selected. But it is obvious that such a meaning was not attributed to the words when used with reference to the selection of a place for a county seat, and that any person so voting must have intended and desired to be understood as voting to locate the county seat at a place where the courthouse and other public offices and buildings required by law could be erected; at a place that would include the center of the county and have such area as was necessary for all purposes for which county seats are used and required by law to be established and maintained. State ex rel. Kaufman v. Martin, 106 Pac. 318, 322, 32 Nev. 197 (quoting and adopting Whitaker v. Dillard, 16 S. W. 1086, 81 Tex. 363).

GEOGRAPHICAL MILE

See English Geographical Miles.

GERM

Poisonous germ, see Poison.

GERMANE

Literally "germane" means "alike," "closely allied," and when applied in the sense in which the word is used in an amendment of a city charter creating a municipal court it signifies that the changes in the articles amended by implication are such as are calculated to promote the object and purpose sought to be accomplished by express amendment. City of Chicago v. Reeves, 77 N. E. 237-243, 220 Ill. 274.

Provisions in "an act to create a board of officers" (Laws 1909, p. 466, c. 125, § 1), relating to the qualifications of such officers, are properly included therein as being "germane" to the general subject expressed in the title; that word meaning "pertaining to" or "related to." State ex rel. Thompson v. Majors, 123 N. W. 429, 431, 85 Neb. 375.

GESTATION

See Period of Gestation; Utero-Gestation.

GET

GET AN OFFER

An employment to "get an offer" for land is one to make a sale or exchange in a reasonable time, and not merely to procure a single offer. Curran v. Hubbard, 114 Pac. 81, 82, 14 Cal. App. 733.

A memorandum signed by an owner and delivered to a broker, which states description and price of land and asks him to "get an offer," satisfies the requirements of Civ. Code, § 1824, as a written authority to sell or exchange land on commission. Curran v. Hubbard, 114 Pac. 81, 82, 14 Cal. App. 733.

GHEE

The Encyclopedia Britannica (9th Ed.) vol. 4, p. 590, describes "butter" as "the fatty portion of the milk of mammalian animals. The milk of all mammals contains such fatty constituents; and butter from the milk of goats, sheep, and other animals, has been, and may be used; but that yielded by cows' milk is the most savory, and it alone really constitutes the butter of commerce." "Ghee" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as follows: "Butter clarified by boiling or heating and skimming or straining until it becomes a liquid or semi-solid oil, capable of being kept for many years; largely used in India, in cookery and medicines, and in religious rites." "Ghee" is within the provisions for "butter" and substitutes therefor in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 286, 80 Stat. 170. Sahadi Bros. v. United States, 152 Fed. 486, 487.

GIANT POWDER

An information for the malicious placing of an explosive near a dwelling house, describing the explosive as "nitroglycerin," commonly known as "dynamite" or "giant powder," was not objectionable for indefiniteness as to the explosive charged, the substances all being nitroglycerin explosives. People v. Swaile, 107 Pac. 134, 136, 12 Cal. App. 192.

Webster's Dictionary defines a "gift" as anything given or bestowed; any piece of property which is voluntarily transferred by one person to another without compensation. A gift is not returnable either in kind or equivalent. Kirchner v. Lena, 87 N. W. 497, 498, 114 Iowa, 527.

"There can be no gift without an intention to give and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given. There must be both a purpose to give, and the execution of this purpose. The purpose must be expressed either orally or in writing, and it must be executed by the actual delivery to the donee of the thing given, or of the means of getting possession and enjoyment thereof. It is the fact of delivery that converts the unexecuted and revocable purpose into an executed and complete gift." Collins v. Maude, 77 Pac. 945, 947, 144 Cal. 289 (citing Knight v. Tripp, 54 Pac. 267, 121 Cal. 674).

A gift is perfected when the donor places in the hands of the donee the means of obtaining possession of the contemplated gift, accompanied by acts clearly showing an intention to divest himself of all dominion over the property. Candee v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 71 Atl. 551, 552, 81 Conn. 372, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568.

An obligation to return or repay the thing received is irreconcilably in conflict with the theory of "gift." Erkson v. Parker, 84 Pac. 437, 8 Cal. App. 115.

A "gift" is a voluntary transfer of any property or thing by one to another without consideration. To be valid, it must be executed. There must be a delivery by the donor such as will place the property or thing given under the control of the donee, and there must be an intent to vest the title in him. Actual and personal delivery by the donor is not always necessary, for, when another person is the custodian, an order of the donor to deliver to the donee may constitute a gift. It may be oral or in writing. No formal words or expressions are required. It is a question of intent, and the inquiry is as to what was intended by that which was said or done. A promissory note or other evidence of debt may be the subject of a gift, and the delivery of the note or of the evidence of debt is evidence tending to show an intent to give. A debt may be forgiven, and a receipt in full may be evidence of such forgiveness. McKenzie v. Harrison, 24 N. E. 458, 460, 120 N. Y. 260, 8 L. R. A. 257, 17 Am. St. Rep. 638 (citing and adopting 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. §§ 68-90).

"To constitute a valid 'gift' among the living there must be an intention to give and a delivery of the property to the donee or to some one for him." Equity will not enforce a voluntary gift of property in trust so long as it is executory only. Brannock v. Magoon, 125 S. W. 535, 536, 141 Mo. App. 316 (quoting and adopting rule in re Soulard's Estate, 43 S. W. 617, 141 Mo. 642; citing Doering v. Kenamore, 86 Mo. 588; Gartside v. Pahlman, 45 Mo. App. 160; Thomas v. Thomas, 18 S. W. 27, 107 Mo. 459).

"Civ. Code 1895, § 3564, defines the essentials of a 'gift': To constitute a valid gift there must be the intention to give by the donor, acceptance by the donee, and a delivery of the article given, or some act accepted by the law in lieu thereof. Section 3567 declares that: Actual manual delivery is not essential to the validity of a gift. Any act which indicates a renunciation of dominion by the donor, and the transfer of dominion to the donee, is a constructive delivery." Philpot v. Temple Banking Co., 60 S. E. 480, 482, 3 Ga. App. 742.

A "gift" cannot be made to take effect in the future. Such a transaction would only amount to a promise to make a gift in the future, and, being without consideration, is void. Harris Banking Co. v. Miller, 89 S. W. 629, 635, 190 Mo. 640 (citing Spencer v. Vance, 57 Mo. 429; School Dist. of Kansas City v. Sheldley, 40 S. W. 656, 138 Mo. 672, 37 L. R. A. 406, 60 Am. St. Rep. 576).

"Where the only words of 'gift' are found in the direction to divide or pay at a future time, the 'gift' is future, not immediate-contingent, and not vested." In re Southworth's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 447, 448, 52 Misc. Rep. 86 (quoting and adopting In re Crane, 58 N. E. 47, 48, 164 N. Y. 71, 76).

A "gift" of personal property from a husband to his wife must be clearly proved. There must be clear and convincing evidence of a delivery of the property by the husband with the intention of divesting himself of all dominion and control of it and of vesting title in the wife. Where jewelry was purchased by a husband in part for the wife's use and in part as an investment, there was no gift to the wife. Farrow v. Farrow, 65 Atl. 1009, 1010, 72 N. J. Eq. 421, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389, 129 Am. St. Rep. 714, 16 Ann. Cas. 507.

Under Civ. Code, § 324, making stock personalty, and providing for its transfer by indorsement and delivery of the certificates between the parties thereto, and section 1146, defining a "gift" as a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, the indorsement of stock certificates reserving dividends during the life of the donor, and the placing of the certificates in an envelope and delivery to the donee with instruction not to open it until the death of the donor, the intention being to make a gift, there is an executed "gift." Calkins v. Equitable Building & Loan Ass'n, 59 Pac. 30, 31, 126 Cal. 531.

Where a woman took from the vaults of a trust company her box containing her securities, and called in an officer of the company, stating to him her intent to make a gift of the same to a nephew, who was present with her and executed blank transfers, and the securities were then placed in a box hired by the nephew, while her own box was surrendered, and the nephew, who was about to go to a distant state, appointed his aunt as deputy, there was a valid gift of the securities, and it is immaterial that thereafter the aunt sold some of the securities and collected dividends and interest from the others which she deposited to her own account. Reese v. Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit & Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 124, 126, 218 Pa. 150, 120 Am. St. Rep. 880.

Acceptance

The owner of a railroad bond some years prior to her death handed it to her companion saying, "This is yours, but if you will cut off the coupons and give them to me during my life." Held that, the bond having been accepted, such facts constitute a valid "gift" of the bond, subject to the qualified reservation of the interest in the donor. Bone v. Holmes, 81 N. E. 290, 291, 195 Mass. 495.

It being admitted that a deposited fund is the money of A., the mere issuing by a savings bank, at the direction of A., of a pass-book to "A. or B.," will not constitute a present "gift" of the fund, evidenced by the pass-book, to B. Nor will it constitute a valid gift to take effect upon the death of A. Such a donative purpose in its intent and direction is testamentary in character; and, not being made in the manner prescribed by the statute of wills, is invalid. Schippers v. Kempke (N. J.) 67 Atl. 74, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 355.

Bargain and sale distinguished

Where a deed from a mother to a daughter recited that it was for the consideration of one dollar and natural love and affection, it was a "gift," and not a bargain and sale, and, where the daughter died intestate, the property will go to the next of kin on her mother's side, to the exclusion of her father's relatives, under Act May 25, 1887 (P. L. 261), prohibiting any person from taking the estate who is not of the blood of the ancestors or other relations by whom it was given or devised to the intestate. In re Lynch's Estate, 69 Atl. 290, 292, 220 Pa. 14.

Consideration

Where the assignment of household goods and chattels was made upon a consideration of gratitude for services rendered and was not under seal, it should be treated as a gift. Hobart's Adm'r v. Vail, 66 Atl. 820, 825, 80 Vt. 152.

Where an instrument recited that it was made in consideration of the sum of $5, and of the love and affection of the donor, the recital of a nominal consideration did not prevent the transaction from operating as a gift, within Civ. Code, § 1146, defining a gift as a transfer of personal property without consideration. In re Hall's Estate, 98 Pac. 269, 271, 154 Cal. 527.

"A 'gift' is something which is freely given and without consideration." A manual gift may be free, onerous, or remunerative, and when the donor makes such a gift omnium bonorum, on condition that the donee shall maintain him for the rest of his life, it will be dealt with as an onerous donation and not as a commutative contract. Ackerman v. Lerner, 40 South. 581, 587, 116 La. 101.

An old man, the father of several children, all of whom had married and left him except the youngest, executed about a month before his death an instrument, whereby he purported to dispose of his estate, both personal and real, subject to the payment of his debts, by creating a life estate in the land in favor of his wife with the remainder in fee to a son. The consideration expressed was "love and affection, and ten dollars." The transaction was a "gift," since the money consideration must be construed as nominal only and the real consideration was love and affection. Aldridge v. Aldridge, 101 S. W. 42, 43, 202 Mo. 565.

Delivery

In order to constitute a valid "gift," "there must be a delivery, actual or symbolic, of the subject-matter, unless it is already in the possession of the donee, with an intent on the part of the donor to presently divest himself of all title and dominion over the same, and an acceptance by the donee." The intent may be deduced from all the circumstances. Chamberlain v. Eddy, 118 N. W. 499, 504, 154 Mich. 593.

A "gift" of personalty can be consummated only by an unconditional delivery of the thing. A "gift" of realty can be consummated only by the execution and delivery of a deed. If either is incumbered, the donor gives only what he had to give. However clear may be the intention of the donor to pay the incumbrances and thus give the entire property, he can accomplish this only by actually paying them, and neither his promise without a valuable consideration, nor his intention, as evidenced by such promise, is of any avail to the donee. Fischer v. Union Trust Co., 101 N. W. 852, 855, 138 Mich. 612, 68 L. R. A. 987, 110 Am. St. Rep. 329.

A "gift" is perfected by delivery and acceptance, and it is immaterial whether delivery precedes or follows or is contemporaneous with the acceptance, and it will be taken that an absolute gift from a father to a child is beneficial to the child and is accepted by him unless the contrary is shown, and this though the child may be ignorant of the transaction. In re Harris' Estate, 72 Atl. 912, 916, 82 Vt. 92 (citing Church's Ex'r v. Church's Estate, 67 Atl. 549, 80 Vt. 228; Sparks v. Hurley, 57 Atl. 364, 208 Pa. 166, 101 Am. St. Rep. 926; Dunlap v. Dunlap, 94 Mich. 11, 53 N. W. 788).

To constitute a valid "gift" there must be an actual delivery of the property by which the gift is perfected. Where plaintiff voluntarily gave all his property to the head of a religious sect absolutely and without reservation, expecting that the same would be used for the advancement of the sect, and that he should be cared for at the home of the community, the gift was not revocable within the rule authorizing revocation of gifts induced by spiritualistic mediums, etc. Williams v. Johnston, 104 S. W. 789, 791, 84 Ark. 109 (citing 20 Cyc. p. 1212).

"A 'gift' is declared by Civ. Code, § 1146, to be a 'transfer of personal property,' which, if made in writing, is, by section 1053, called a 'grant' or conveyance or bill of sale, and by section 1083, 'vests in the transferee all the actual title to the thing transferred which the transferor then has unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied.'" Where a father in writing assigned to his daughter his interest in a partnership, the delivery of the written instrument was a sufficient delivery to make a valid gift, since the interest in the partnership was incapable of manual delivery, and the fact that he continued to deal with the partnership property as if he was the owner thereof did not impair the daughter's title, restore the ownership to him, or entitle his administrator to the possession thereof. Driscoll v. Driscoll, 77 Pac. 471, 474, 143 Cal. 528.

A "gift" is a contract executed, and, as the act of execution is delivery, it is of the essence of the title. It is the consummation of a contract which without it would be no more than a mere contract to give, and without efficacy for want of consideration. Where there was no delivery by the payee of notes during her lifetime, though she had indorsed them, there was no gift inter vivos thereof regardless of her intention to deliver them to a donee at a future time. Burchett v. Fink, 123 S. W. 74, 75, 139 Mo. App. 331 (quoting Lowrey v. Danforth, 69 S. W. 39, 95 Mo. App. 451; Doering v. Kenamore, 86 Mo. 588; Nasse v. Thoman, 39 Mo. App. 178; Gartside v. Pahlman, 45 Mo. App. 160; Thomas v. Thomas, 18 S. W. 27, 107 Mo. 459; In re Soulard's Estate, 43 S. W. 619, 141 Mo. 642).

There is no executed "gift" where one leaves notes with others, telling them they are to have them if she dies before needing them, though she dies while the notes are in their hands; an essential of a gift being the actual present transfer of all right and dominion over the thing given, and what was done amounting only to a conditional promise to give. Jones v. Luing, 132 N. W. 371, 152 Iowa, 276.

A completed gift is shown where a wife deposits money in a bank in her name "in trust for" her husband, and after his death the passbook is found in his safe deposit vault. In re Davis' Estate, 108 N. Y. Supp. 946, 119 App. Div. 85.

A "gift" may be made of a bond and real estate mortgage securing it by delivery thereof without indorsement or written assignment. Andrews v. Nichols, 101 N. Y. Supp. 977, 979, 116 App. Div. 645.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1146, 1147, defining a gift as a voluntary transfer of personal property, and providing that a verbal gift is not valid unless the means of obtaining possession of the thing are given, and there is an actual or symbolic delivery of the thing to the donee if delivery is possible, a gift of money cannot be made by a declaration of intention to pay a note on which the donee is primarily liable and the donor is liable as surety. Townsend v. Sullivan, 84 Pac. 435, 437, 8 Cal. App. 115.

In order to constitute a valid "gift," a complete delivery is essential. Where decedent, just prior to her death, drew certain checks on her bank accounts and delivered the same to claimant, to whose order they were drawn, but the checks were neither accepted nor paid by the bank prior to decedent's death, they did not constitute a valid gift of the respective amounts for which they were drawn, for want of a completed delivery. Pennell v. Ennis, 103 S. W. 147, 148, 128 Mo. App. 355.

Civ. Code, § 1146, defines a gift as a transfer of personal property, which, when made in writing is by section 1053 designated as a grant, conveyance, or bill of sale, and by section 1053 vests in the transferee all the actual title to the thing transferred which the transferor then had, unless a different intention is expressed or is necessarily implied, and section 1054 declares that the estate transferred is vested in the transferee on the donor's delivery of the grant. Held, that manual delivery of personal property is not essential to the validity of a gift thereof, evidenced by a written instrument duly executed and delivered. Fisher v. Ludwig, 91 Pac. 658, 6 Cal. App. 144.

The act of a husband in depositing money in bank in the name of his wife did not constitute a "gift" of the money to his wife, where at the time of the deposit he delivered to the bank a signature card purporting to have been written by his wife, directing the bank to pay funds on the signature of the wife per the husband. First Nat. Bank of Montgomery v. Taylor, 37 South. 695, 696, 142 Ala. 456.

Donation distinguished

A "gift" is an act of generosity or condescension and contributes to the benefit of the receiver. It is private and benefits the individual, as distinguished from a "donation," which is public and serves some general purpose. State ex rel. Western Const. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County, 76 N. E. 986, 994, 166 Ind. 162 (citing Orabbe).

Gratuity distinguished

Cr. Code 1902, § 263, provides punishment for attempting to corrupt any juror, by giving, offering, or promising any gift or gratuity, with intent to bias the opinion or influence the decision of such juror. Held, that while the term "gift" usually denotes something tangible, "gratuity" is a larger term, and embraces, not only tangible things, but services, or any benefits of pecuniary value bestowed without claim or demand. Hence, where accused requested a juror to do what he could for one about to be tried, and agreed to bring certain customers who had been trading with him down and put them to trading with the juror if the juror cleared the person to be tried, there was such a promising of a gratuity as to bring the case within the statute. State v. Maddox, 61 S. E. 964, 965, 80 S. C. 452.

Intent

To constitute a gift of either realty or personalty, there must be an intention by the donor to divest himself of possession, as well as a donative purpose. Brown v. Columbus (N. J.) 75 Atl. 917, 919.

To constitute a valid "gift" there must be a delivery of the subject-matter actually or symbolically, unless it is already in the possession of the donee, with an intent on the donor's part to presently divest himself of all title and dominion over the same, and an acceptance by the donee. The intent, which though necessary to constitute a valid gift and which may be deduced from all the circumstances surrounding the transaction, is not sufficient without a delivery to constitute a "gift." Chamberlain v. Eddy, 118 N. W. 499, 504, 154 Mich. 598.

Realty

Where plaintiffs, for the purpose of perpetuating the family name of Bales, conveyed a lot and church thereon to defendant church corporation upon its parol agreement that it would take the name of "Bales Chapel Baptist Church," the transaction constituted a gift of the property, the purpose of which was continuing, and plaintiffs were entitled to restrain a change of corporate name, and thereby the name of the church, which would defeat the purpose of the gift. Bales v. Bales Chapel Baptist Church, 101 S. W. 150, 152, 124 Mo. App. 22.

Sale distinguished

Gift of liquor as sale, see Sale.

A "gift" imports a transfer of personal property gratuitously or upon a merely good consideration, as distinguished from a "sale" ex vi termini, which imports a like transaction upon a valuable consideration. Maxwell v. State, 37 South. 266, 140 Ala. 131.

Voluntary trust distinguished

A pecuniary bequest to an unincorporated society, to be used by it in such manner as it may deem most expedient for the development and advancement of Spiritualism in a certain town, was an absolute "gift," and not a trust for the benefit of the object specified, of which the society was trustee. Fralick v. Lyford, 95 N. Y. Supp. 433, 434, 107 App. Div. 543.

"Gifts" either inter vivos or causa mortis differ from a declaration of trust, in this, that "gifts" to be effective at all require a delivery of the thing itself and must pass the whole title, so that the donor can have no further dominion or control of it; while a "gift in trust" withholds the legal title from the donee. The legal title may be transmitted to a third person, or it may be retained by the donor; but in either case the equitable title has gone from him, and, unless the declaration of trust contains a power of revocation, it leaves him powerless to extinguish the trust. Littig v. Vestry of Mt. Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, 61 Atl. 635, 636, 101 Md. 494.

A "gift" to be executed requires delivery, while a voluntary trust requires declaration. Miles v. Miles, 96 Pac. 481, 484, 78 Kan. 382.

GIFT CAUSA MORTIS

A "gift causa mortis" is defined to be a gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease. Three things are necessary to such a gift: (1) It must be made with a view to a donor's death; (2) the donor must die of that ailment or peril; (3) there must be a delivery. To establish such a gift the evidence must be sufficient to show not only that the person in extremis designated with proper distinctness the thing to be given and the person who is to receive it, but it must establish also that the property was presently to pass, and that the intention was carried into effect by an actual or effective delivery. In this respect there is no difference between gifts inter vivos and causa mortis. Stokes v. Sprague, 81 N. W. 195, 197, 110 Iowa, 89 (citing and quoting Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 313).

"A 'gift causa mortis' is generally defined as follows: 'A gift of personal estate made in prospect of death at no very remote period, and which is dependent upon the condition of death occurring substantially as expected by the donor, and that the same be not revoked before death.'" Davis v. Kuck, 101 N. W. 165, 166, 93 Minn. 262 (quoting Redfield on Wills, § 42).

A gift causa mortis exists where property is given in the donor's last sickness or in other imminent peril, and takes effect only on his death through the disorder or peril, and is revocable during his life. Stark v. Kelley, 113 S. W. 498, 500, 132 Ky. 376.

To establish a gift causa mortis, the donee must show that the gift was made with a view of the donor's death, that the donor died of his then present ailment or peril, and that there was a delivery. Davis v. Davis, 104 N. Y. Supp. 824, 825.

A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property made in immediate apprehension of death, subject to the conditions, expressed or implied, that if the donor should not die, as expected, or if the donee should die first, or if the donor should revoke the gift before death, the gift should be void. It is a gift in expectation of death, then imminent, on the essential condition that the property shall belong fully to the donee in case the donor dies, as anticipated, leaving the donor surviving him, and in case the gift is not in the meantime revoked, but not otherwise; it being essential to the validity of such gift that the property be delivered to the donee, either actually or constructively. Barnes v. Barnes, 56 South. 958, 959, 174 Ala. 166.

Under Rev. Codes, § 4638, defining a gift in view of death as one made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver, a gift causa mortis must be made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, the donor must die of the illness or peril which he then fears or contemplates, and delivery must be made with the intent that title shall vest only in case of death. O'Neil v. O'Neil, 117 Pac. 889, 890, 43 Mont. 505, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 268.

A gift causa mortis is a gift by the donor in contemplation of death to take effect only in the event of his death, and there must be a physical or symbolical delivery of the article given, and the gift is subject to revocation by the act of the donor prior to death, and is revoked by his recovery from sickness or escape from the danger in view of which the gift was made. Foley v. Harrison, 136 S. W. 354, 367, 233 Mo. 490.

A "gift causa mortis" is established by a valid delivery, expected and impending death, intention to pass title then and there, and no revocation before death. Cronin v. Chelsea Sav. Bank, 87 N. E. 484, 485, 201 Mass. 146.

To constitute a valid "gift causa mortis," there must be a manifest intention to give a subject capable of passing by delivery and an actual delivery at the time, made in contemplation of death. Hecht v. Shaffer, 85 Pac. 1056, 1057, 15 Wyo. 34.

Civ. Code 1895, § 3574, declares that a "gift in contemplation of death" must be made by the person during his last illness or in peril of death; must be intended to be absolute only in the event of death; and must be perfected by either actual or symbolical delivery. Such a gift, so evidenced, may be made of any personal property by parol and proved by one or more witnesses. Philpot v. Temple Banking Co., 60 S. E. 480, 483, 3 Ga. App. 742.

"A 'gift causa mortis' must be made on the apprehension of death, which must occur without the revoking of the gift, and it must be made with the understanding that the gift is void in case of the giver's recovery. It is now conceded by all modern authority that every species of personal property capable of delivery, either constructive or actual, may be the subject of a 'gift causa mortis.'" Phinney v. State ex rel. Stratton, 78 Pac. 927, 928, 36 Wash. 236, 68 L. R. A. 119 (quoting Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 15 S. E. 389, 89 Va. 1, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848).

"A gift in contemplation of death must be made by a person during his last illness or in peril of death, must be intended to be absolute only in the event of death, and must be perfected by either actual or symbolical delivery. Such a gift, so evidenced, may be made of any personal property by parol, and proved by one or more witnesses." Sorrells v. Collins, 36 S. E. 74, 75, 110 Ga. 518 (Civ. Code, § 3574).

The essential elements to constitute a "gift causa mortis" are that it must have been made in contemplation of impending death by a clearly expressed intention to give in present, that the subject-matter must have been delivered, and the donor must have died from the ailment or peril without revocation of the gift. Where a depositor in a savings bank sent the bank a writing requesting that another person be allowed to sign the signature book, and that the bank change the account so that the depositor or the other might draw the money, and the request was complied with, unless there had been a gift of money to the other, payment of the deposit to him on presentation of the book by the bank, with knowledge of the depositor's death, was no protection to the bank as against his estate, notwithstanding its rule that payments made to persons producing a passbook should be deemed a valid payment. O'Brien v. Elmira Sav. Bank, 91 N. Y. Supp. 364, 365, 99 App. Div. 76.

A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property made in expectation of death, then imminent, on an essential condition that the property shall belong fully to the donee in case the donor dies as anticipated leaving the donee surviving him, and the gift is not in the meantime revoked. Vosburg v. Mallory, 135 N. W. 577, 578, 155 Iowa, 165.

Under Civ. Code, § 1149, which defines a "donatio causa mortis" as "one which is made in contemplation, fear or peril of death, and with intent that it should take effect only in case of the death of the giver," a transfer of a bank deposit by a depositor to himself and his son jointly, with the right and power to each to draw on the account during their lives, and a direction to the bank to pay the residue remaining upon the death of either to the survivor, cannot operate as a gift causa mortis, since it was intended that the transfer should take effect immediately and vest and be enjoyed in present. Carr v. Carr, 115 Pac. 261, 264, 15 Cal. App. 480.

The statute taxing transfers of property made "in contemplation of death" includes gifts inter vivos, as well as "gifts causa mortis." In re Palmer's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 236, 240, 117 App. Div. 360.

A check on a bank for the entire amount of the drawer's credit therein, delivered to a person as a gift of the money, though unaccepted by the bank, operates as an assignment of the fund, and if so delivered and intended by the donor in anticipation of death from an impending peril from which he subsequently dies, it is valid as a gift causa mortis. Varley v. Sims, 111 N. W. 269, 270, 100 Minn. 331, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828, 117 Am. St. Rep. 694, 10 Ann. Cas. 473.

Where one who was ill stated that she was "going to die," and handed another a number of bankbooks, saying "Bury me out of this, and whatever is left is yours," there was a gift causa mortis. Mahon v. Dime Sav. Bank of Brooklyn, 87 N. Y. Supp. 258, 259, 92 App. Div. 506.

Delivery

Delivery is necessary to a valid gift either "causa mortis" or inter vivos. In re Miller, 119 N. Y. Supp. 52, 53, 56, 64 Misc. Rep. 232.

"An essential element, applicable alike to a 'gift inter vivos' or a 'donatio causa mortis,' is the delivery of the thing given, or the subject of the donation, to the donee or to his use." Wittman v. Pickens, 81 Pac. 299, 33 Colo. 484.

It is essential to the validity of a "gift causa mortis" that there must be an actual and complete delivery of the property made in execution of the gift, and for the express purpose of consummating it. Bruce v. Squires, 74 Pac. 1102, 1103, 68 Kan. 199.

To constitute a valid gift causa mortis there must be an actual delivery of the property during the lifetime of the donor, wholly divesting him of the possession and control, subject to the power of revocation, and the donee must retain possession uninterruptedly until after the death of the donor. Bledsoe v. Pitts, 105 S. W. 1142, 1143, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

A "gift causa mortis" is not valid, unless accompanied by actual delivery and a transfer of the dominion and control of the property in the lifetime of the donor. Day v. Richards, 83 N. E. 324, 325, 197 Mass. 86.

The holder of a note and mortgage assigned the same in trust, in contemplation of death. He delivered the note and mortgage and assignment either to the assignee, or to a third person, appointed as agent of the assignee. The assignee acknowledged the creation of the trust. The holder, by reason of the assignment and delivery, lost all dominion over the note and mortgage. Held, to constitute a complete delivery of the note and mortgage to the assignee, so as to consummate a gift causa mortis. To constitute a "gift causa mortis," there must be an intention to give and a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the thing given; and the donor must part with all dominion over the property, but the delivery need not be made to the donee personally, but may be made to another as his agent or trustee even without the knowledge of the donee at the time of the making of the gift. Hamlin v. Hamlin, 109 Pac. 862, 365, 59 Wash. 182.

A loan, by a person who did not expect to live long, of a sum of money to a firm, which executed a receipt containing an agreement to turn the money over to a certain person in case of the lender's death, was not a "gift causa mortis" because not delivered to the beneficiary, or any one for him, and not to go to him until the death of the lender. Ragan v. Hill, 80 S. W. 150, 72 Ark. 307.

Handing a purse containing a certificate of deposit, to a person, with these words: "Here is my purse. Take it. If anything happens to me, I want you to keep it. In case I get well, I shall want it back"—shortly before the donor's death from the disease, constituted a "gift causa mortis," though the certificate was not indorsed. Callahan v. Forest, 118 N. Y. Supp. 541.

As conditional gift

A "gift causa mortis" is one by a sick person, who, apprehending his dissolution, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods to keep as his own in case of the donor's death, and it only takes effect in case the donor dies, being conditional and revocable by the donor at any time. McCoy's Adm'r v. McCoy, 104 S. W. 1031, 126 Ky. 783.

A "gift causa mortis" is a gift, absolute in form, made by a donor in anticipation of speedy death, and intended to operate as a transfer only on the happening of his death, and between the time of the making of the gift with the delivery of the property given and the time of the donor's death the gift is conditional. Scott v. Union & Planters' Bank & Trust Co., 180 S. W. 757, 761, 123 Tenn. 258.

Gift inter vivos distinguished

The principal distinction between a gift inter vivos and one causa mortis is that the former requires an unconditional delivery in donor's lifetime, while the delivery in the latter case is subject to the condition that the donor's survival defeats the gift. Teague v. Abbott (Ind.) 100 N. E. 27, 29.

A gift causa mortis is distinguished from a gift inter vivos, in that the former must be made in contemplation of the near approach of death, with the implied condition that it take effect only on the donor's death, caused by a disorder of which he is then suffering or a peril then impending, whereas by a gift inter vivos, completed by delivery, the property vests immediately and irrevocably in the donee. Vosburg v. Mallory, 125 N. W. 577, 578, 155 Iowa, 165.

The vital distinction between a gift causa mortis and a gift inter vivos is that the former is subject to the donor's revocation while he lives; but, if there is no unconditional delivery or the control of the property by the donee is postponed to a future date, the transaction is an unexecuted and unenforceable promise to make a gift. Beebe v. Coffin, 94 Pac. 766, 768, 153 Cal. 174.

In the case of a "gift causa mortis," as well as in that of a gift inter vivos, a delivery is necessary to the validity of the gift. Matthews, J., uses this language: "A donatio mortis causa must be completely executed, precisely as required in the class of gifts inter vivos subject to be divested by the happening of any of the conditions subsequent; that is, upon actual revocation by the donor or by the donor's surviving the apprehended peril of outliving the donee, or by the occurrence of a deficiency of assets necessary to pay the debts of the deceased donor. These conditions are the only qualifications that distinguish gifts causa mortis and inter vivos. On the other hand, if the gift does not take effect as an executed and complete transfer to the donee of possession and title, either legal or equitable, during the life of the donor, it is a testamentary disposition good only if made and proved as a will." Duryea v. Harvey, 67 N. E. 351, 352, 183 Mass. 429 (citing Basket v. Hassell, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. Ed. 500).

A "gift inter vivos" must take effect immediately, while a "gift causa mortis" must be made in contemplation of death. A deed carrying property to be held in trust for a third person until the death of the grantor, and not made in contemplation of death, is neither a gift inter vivos nor causa mortis. Rogers v. Richards, 74 Pac. 255, 256, 67 Kan. 706.

A gift of personal property made with intent that it shall take effect immediately and irrevocably and fully executed by complete and unconditional delivery is good and valid as a gift inter vivos, although at the time the donor is in extremis and dies soon after. Moreover, a gift made in anticipation of death, but not conditioned upon that event, is a gift inter vivos, and not a "gift causa mortis." A donor to a trustee, charging him with the payment to him of the interest thereon for life, declared that on his death the trustee should deliver the bonds to persons named. Held to constitute an irrevocable disposition of the bonds, by which the title passed out of the donor, and the gift was not invalid, as against his wife, as a disposition testamentary in character. Robertson v. Robertson, 40 South. 104, 105, 147 Ala. 311, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774, 10 Ann. Cas. 1051.

Expectation of death

The delivery of a savings bank deposit book by decedent to his wife was inoperative as a "gift causa mortis," where it was not made in contemplation of a conceived approach of death. Nogga v. Savings Bank of Ansonia, 65 Atl. 129, 79 Conn. 425.

To constitute a gift causa mortis of personal property, the donor must be apprehensive of the near approach of death, and it must appear that he did not recover from the illness with which he was then afflicted, or escape from the peril then impending. Hillman v. Young, 127 Pac. 793, 796, 64 Or. 73.

Legacy distinguished.

"Donatio mortis causa" is defined as that which is made to meet the case of death, as where anything is given upon condition that, if any fatal accident befalls the donor, the person to whom it is given shall have it as his own; but, if the donor should survive, or if he should repent of having made the gift, or if the person to whom it has been given should die before the donor, then the donor shall receive back the thing given. It was much doubted by the early jurists whether such disposition of property should be considered as a gift, or as a legacy, and in some respects it is similar to a legacy. A legacy is always given in view of the possible death of the donor, and so must a gift causa mortis be given; but, in the case of a legacy, the donor need not be sick and in present peril of death, while in the case of a gift causa mortis it must be given in anticipation of a speedy death from a present sickness or impending peril. Noble v. Garden, 79 Pac. 883, 884, 146 Cal. 225, 2 Ann. Cas. 1001.

A writing is not necessary to allow a "gift causa mortis," but in contradistinction to a legacy a change of possession before the donor's death is essential. Fite v. Perry, 96 Pac. 102, 103, 8 Cal. App. 85.

GIFT, DEVISE, OR DESCENT

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1906, § 2996, providing that kindred of the half blood shall inherit equally with those of the whole blood, but if the estate came to intestate by gift, devise, or descent, those only who are of the blood of the ancestor shall inherit, the term "gift, devise or descent" includes all property real or personal that came to intestate without a consideration being paid therefor. In re Hullett's Estate, 89 N. E. 509, 510, 46 Ind. App. 412.

GIFT ENTERPRISE

The law lexicographers define a "gift enterprise" as a scheme for the division and distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, among those who have taken shares in the scheme. Black's Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; Anderson's Law Dict. So in Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17, it was said, in approving the above definition, that the words "gift enterprise," as thus understood, had attained such notoriety that the courts would take judicial notice of what is meant when they appear in legislative enactments. Manufacturers and dealers in trading stamps sold to merchants, to be given to cash customers, and absolutely redeemable in goods offered by the trading-stamp concern, without restrictions except as to the number redeemable at any one time, are not engaged in a gift enterprise within the meaning of a provision of a city charter authorizing the city to levy a license tax on each gift enterprise. City of Winston v. Beeson, 47 S. E. 457, 459, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167.

To constitute a gift enterprise, the element of chance must enter into the scheme. A trading-stamp business, consisting of the selling of checks or stamps to merchants, who give the same to their customers on purchases of goods, the number of stamps given being determined by the amount of the purchase, the stamps on presentation at the trading-stamp store entitling the holders to select any article from an assortment of articles, each article being plainly marked with its value in stamps, such value not being greater than the market value of the articles, is not a "gift enterprise" within the meaning of a statute denouncing gift enterprises, etc. State v. Shugart, 35 South. 28, 29, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"Gift enterprise," as generally defined and understood, constitutes a scheme for the division and distribution of certain articles of property to be determined by chance among those who have taken shares in the scheme. Three things must concur in order to constitute it: First, there must be the purchase of a right; second, the right must be a contingent one to receive something greater than that which is purchased; and, third, the contingent right must depend upon lot or chance. Const. art. 18, § 2, and Mills' Ann. Stat. § 2927, prohibiting lotteries or "gift enterprises," does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting gift enterprises, defined to include the giving of trading stamps, since the term "gift enterprise," as used in the Constitution and statute, applies only to transactions in which the element of chance is involved. City and County of Denver v. Frueauff, 88 Pac. 389, 394, 39 Colo. 20, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1131, 12 Ann. Cas. 521 (quoting and adopting definition in Winston v. Beeson, 47 S. E. 457, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167; Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17; citing Black's Law Dict. p. 539; Bouv. Law Dict. p. 884; Anderson's Law Dict. p. 488).

— The definition of a "gift enterprise" as the business of selling merchandise, coupled with a promise to give any other article in consideration of the purchase, which is made by Laws D. C. 1871-72, pt. 2, pp. 96, 97, licensing various trades and businesses, was not imported into Rev. St. D. C. § 1177, making it a crime in any manner to engage in any gift enterprise business in the district, by the provisions of section 1176, disapproving and appealing the earlier legislation for the licensing of gift enterprises and declaring it thereafter to be unlawful for any person or persons to engage in said business in any manner, as defined in the repealed act or otherwise. Matter of Gregory, 81 Sup. Ct. 143, 144, 219 U. S. 210, 55 L. Ed. 184.

A "gift enterprise," which is made punishable by Pen. Code 1895, § 406, is a sporting artifice by which, for example, a merchant or tradesman sells his wares for their market value, but, by way of inducement, gives to each purchaser a ticket which entitles him to a chance to win certain prizes to be determined after the manner of a lottery. The element of chance is an essential of a "gift enterprise." Russell v. Equitable Loan & Security Co., 58 S. E. 881, 884, 129 Ga. 154, 12 Ann. Cas. 129.

In a statute authorizing cities to tax, license, and suppress certain occupations named, among them "gift enterprises," such term means schemes for the distribution of property into which some element of chance enters, and the statute does not confer power on a city to impose a license tax upon the occupation of selling trading stamps to merchants, which are given by them to cash customers as a premium, and redeemed by the seller in merchandise at their face value in whatever sums presented by such customers. Humes v. Little Rock, 138 Fed. 929, 981.

Where each purchaser of goods receives from the seller, in furtherance of an advertising scheme, a certificate entitling him to a gift of a hat pin, which, so far as appears, is the same in each case, the contract is not void, as part of a "gift enterprise," under Laws 1895, p. 289, c. 152; each scheme prohibited thereby involving the element of chance as the determining factor on which property or money may be procured. United Jewelers' Mfg. Co. v. Keckley, 90 Pac. 781, 77 Kan. 797.

GIFT INTER VIVOS

See, also, Gift.

The essential elements of a "gift inter vivos" are (1) intent to vest the title of the thing given in the donee; (2) delivery; (3) acceptance by the donee. Glick v. Stumpf, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1109, 1112, 53 Misc. Rep. 83 (citing Gannon v. McGuire, 55 N. E. 7, 180 N. Y. 476, 73 Am. St. Rep. 694; Beaver v.

Beaver, 22 N. E. 940, 117 N. Y. 421, 6 L. R. A. 403, 15 Am. St. Rep. 531).

"Gifts inter vivos" have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect. To constitute such a gift, the donor must be divested of and the donee invested with the right of property in the subject of the gift. It must be absolute, irrevocable, without any reference to its taking place at some future period. The donor must deliver the property and part with all present and future dominion over it. Holman v. Deseret Sav. Bank (Utah) 124 Pac. 765, 766 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3091, 3092).

Under Rev. Codes, § 4635, defining a gift as a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily and without consideration, to constitute a "gift inter vivos," the donor must voluntarily deliver the subject of the gift to the donee with the present intention to vest the legal title in the donee, who must accept the same; the essential elements being the delivery, the accompanying intent, and acceptance by the donee, the gift being without condition and at once irrevocable. O'Neill v. O'Neill, 117 Pac. 889, 890, 43 Mont. 505, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 268.

It is essential to a "gift inter vivos" that the gift be absolute and irrevocable, that the giver part with all present and future dominion over the property given, that the gift go into effect at once and not at some future time, that there be a delivery of the thing given to the donee, and that there be such a change of possession as to put it out of the power of the giver to repossess himself of the thing given. Shafer v. Manning, 132 Ill. App. 570, 573.

A "donation inter vivos" is an act by which the donor divests himself at present irrevocably of the thing given. Hearsey v. Craig, 53 South. 17, 19, 126 La. 824 (quoting and adopting the definition in Civ. Code, art. 1468).

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be a voluntary, gratuitous, and absolute transfer of the property from the donor to the donee, effective immediately, and fully executed by delivery to and an acceptance by the donee. Shepard v. Shepard, 129 N. W. 201, 208, 164 Mich. 183; Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 129 N. W. 691, 692, 164 Mich. 345, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 219; Calvin v. Free, 71 Pac. 823, 825, 66 Kan. 466.

In a "gift inter vivos" the donor must not only part with possession of the property, but with dominion over it; it being unconditional and irrevocable. McCoy's Adm'r v. McCoy, 104 S. W. 1031, 126 Ky. 783.

"A 'gift inter vivos' must be without any conditions attached to it." Phinney v. State ex rel. Stratton, 78 Pac. 927, 928, 36 Wash. 236, 68 L. R. A. 119 (quoting Thomas' Adm'r

v. Lewis, 15 S. E. 389, 89 Va. 1, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848).

The unconditional delivery of personal property by the owner to another, with intent that such other shall immediately and permanently become the owner thereof, on acceptance constitutes a "gift inter vivos." Hall v. Hall, 93 Pac. 177, 178, 76 Kan. 806.

In order to legalize a "gift inter vivos" there must be, not only a donative intention, but also, in conjunction with it, a complete stripping of the donor of all dominion or control over the thing given. Nicklas v. Parker, 61 Atl. 267, 268, 69 N. J. Eq. 743 (citing Stevenson v. Earl, 55 Atl. 1091, 1093, 65 N. J. Eq. 721, 725, 103 Am. St. Rep. 790, Ann. Cas. 49).

To constitute a "gift inter vivos," there must exist an intent to make the gift then and there, and such delivery as divests the donor of all dominion, and invests the donee therewith. In re Ashman's Estate, 72 Atl. 899, 901, 223 Pa. 543.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be on the part of the donor an intent to give, delivery of the thing given to or for the donee pursuant to such intent, and an acceptance by the donee. Schneider v. Schneider, 107 N. Y. Supp. 792, 795, 122 App. Div. 774.

"To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be an absolute transfer of the property taking effect immediately and fully executed by a delivery of the property by the donor, and an acceptance by the donee. Combett v. Wall (Tex.) 102 S. W. 147, 150.

To make a "gift inter vivos," the donor must at the time of the alleged gift have been of sound mind so that he knew and understood the effect of his act and intended that effect, and he must have actually delivered the subject-matter to the donee, and by such act he must have intended to pass title thereto to the donee to take effect immediately, and the donee must have actually accepted it as a gift. Lowe v. Hart, 125 S. W. 1030, 1032, 98 Ark. 548.

To constitute a "gift inter vivos," the gift must be by a donor competent to contract and exercise free will, the gift must be complete, the property must be delivered by the donor and accepted by the donee, and the gift must go into immediate and absolute effect. In re Van Derzee, 121 N. Y. Supp. 662, 665, 66 Misc. Rep. 399.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be an intention to make the gift then and there, and such an actual and constructive delivery at the same time to the donee as divests the donor of all dominion of the subject and invests the donee therewith. Where a woman took from the vaults of a trust company her box containing her securities, called in an officer of the company, stated to him her intent to make a gift of the same to a nephew, who was present with her, and executed blank transfers, and the securities were then placed in the box hired by the nephew, who being about to go to a distant state, appointed his aunt as a deputy, there was a valid gift. Reese v. Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit & Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 124, 126, 218 Pa. 150, 120 Am. St. Rep. 880.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be an absolute transfer of the property from the donor to the donee taking effect immediately and fully executed by a delivery by the donor and acceptance by the donee. A gift of the donor's check, payable immediately, and delivered subject to the terms of a written memorandum stipulating that the check shall not be payable until after the donor's death, is not a valid gift inter vivos. Foxworthy v. Adams, 124 S. W. 381, 383, 186 Ky. 403, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 808, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 327.

The statute taxing transfers of property made "in contemplation of death" includes "gifts inter vivos" as well as "gifts causa mortis." In re Palmer's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 236, 240, 117 App. Div. 360.

To establish a "gift inter vivos" of a deposit in a savings bank, it must appear, not only that the depositor intended a gift, but also that he executed his intention and completed the gift by acts sufficient to pass title. Candee v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 71 Atl. 551, 81 Conn. 372, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568.

To constitute a "gift inter vivos" of a bank deposit, it is not enough that the donor should make the deposit formally in trust for the donee; but the gift does not become a completed transaction until it has been communicated to the donee, or some one acting in trust for him and for his benefit and accepted by him. Supple v. Suffolk Sav. Bank for Seamen, 84 N. E. 432, 433, 198 Mass. 393, 126 Am. St. Rep. 451.

An owner of stock filled out a transfer of it to B. and delivered the certificate to her. The certificate remained in B.'s exclusive possession for a year, when it was put into the owner's deposit box, with a paper pinned to it, in her handwriting, that the certificate was the property of B. and was placed there for safe-keeping. The owner prior to the transfer evinced an intention to retain the stock in her own control and allow title to pass only after her death, and the dividends to be paid to her for life. The stock was never transferred on the books of the corporation during the owner's life. Held, that such facts were sufficient to show a valid "gift inter vivos" of the stock. Bone v. Holmes, 81 N. E. 290, 291, 195 Mass. 495.

Gift causa mortis distinguished

See Gift Causa Mortis.

Delivery

To constitute a "gift inter vivos," there must be a delivery, either actual or symbolical. Taylor v. Purdy, 151 S. W. 45, 47, 151 Ky. 82.

Delivery is essential to a valid gift either causa mortis or inter vivos. In re Miller, 119 N. Y. Supp. 52, 53, 55, 64 Misc. Rep. 232.

"An essential element, applicable alike to a 'gift inter vivos' or a 'donatio causa mortis,' is the delivery of the thing given, or the subject of the donation, to the donee or to his use." Wittman v. Pickens, 81 Pac. 299, 33 Colo. 484.

The delivery of an inventory of decedent's assets, with an instrument attached thereto assigning them to his son, is a sufficient delivery to complete a "gift inter vivos." In re Palmer's Estate, 102 N. Y. Supp. 236, 239, 117 App. Div. 360.

In order to establish a "gift inter vivos" of personal property, the delivery must appear to have been absolute; that is to say, the donor must appear not only to have parted with the possession of the property, but he must likewise appear to have relinquished to the donee all dominion and control over it. Millard v. Millard, 77 N. E. 595, 221 Ill. 86.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos" of personal property, the gift must be voluntary, gratuitous, and absolute, and take effect at once, and ordinarily must be accompanied by a delivery of the thing to the donee, or to some one for his use and benefit. The delivery of a gift, however, is not always required. Hence, where a deed recited that part of the consideration was a note, with interest payable annually for the use of a certain person during her life, there was a valid gift of the interest, though the note was not delivered to the donee. Malone's Committee v. Lebus, 77 S. W. 180, 181, 116 Ky. 975.

It is essential to the validity of a "gift inter vivos" that there must be an actual and complete delivery of the property made in execution of the gift, and for the express purpose of consummating it. Bruce v. Squires, 74 Pac. 1102, 1103, 68 Kan. 199.

Where a husband signed and had witnessed and delivered to his wife assignments of certain shares and certificates representing the same, and the wife placed them in the safety deposit box from which the husband had taken them, and the key to which he then gave her, and she afterwards paid rental on the box and the husband survived for three years thereafter, it constituted a valid gift to the wife not in contemplation of death, so as not to be subject to the transfer tax. In re Graves' Estate, 108 N. Y. Supp. 571, 573, 52 Misc. Rep. 433.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be a gratuitous and absolute transfer of the property from the donor to the donee, taking effect immediately, and fully executed by a delivery of the property by the donor and acceptance thereof by the donee, and, where future control over the property remains in the donor until his death there is no valid gift inter vivos. Dick v. Harris' Ex'r, 141 S. W. 56, 58, 145 Ky. 739.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be both an intention to give and a complete and unconditional delivery to the donee, or to some one for him, of the property. Lohnes v. Baker, 137 S. W. 282, 285, 156 Mo. App. 397.

To complete a "gift inter vivos," there must be an absolute delivery by the donor, with intention to part with his interest in and dominion over the property. Bonds and other negotiable instruments cannot be transferred by delivery as a gift without a written assignment. The essential in case of such gifts requires such delivery as the subject-matter of the gift reasonably admits of. Many of the strict requirements for transfer by gift indicated by the old cases have been removed or relaxed. Opitz v. Karel, 95 N. W. 948, 949, 118 Wis. 527, 62 L. R. A. 982, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1004.

"Gifts inter vivos" of personal property, to be effective, must be accompanied by the delivery of the possession, the donor parting with all present and future dominion over it; the donor must be divested of, and donee invested with, the right of property in the subject of the gift; it must be absolute, irrevocable, without any reference to its taking effect at some future time; and without such proof, clear and explicit, the gift fails. No mere promise or declaration of intention to give will suffice, however clearly the same may be established. Nothing short of a complete and unconditional delivery is sufficient to constitute a valid gift, and until delivery the gift is inchoate and revocable. Bowen v. Kutzner, 167 Fed. 281, 296, 93 C. C. A. 83.

In order to constitute a valid "gift inter vivos" of personal property, there must be shown an intention to give; that is, an expressed purpose to divest the donor of title in and ownership of the thing given, carried into effect and evidenced by a delivery of possession to the donee and acceptance by him. It inheres in the conception of the possession essential to a completed gift that the donee should have some control, and such control only, of the subject-matter of the gift as is consistent with the ownership purported to be transferred to him. Where delivery of the property has once been made, and possession transferred, the gift is irrevocable, and is not affected by the fact that the donor immediately thereafter comes into physical possession and control of the property, without any retransfer of the ownership. Hence, if a donor, with the clearly expressed intention of making a gift, make an actual delivery into the hands of the donee, the fact that the donor has lawful access to the depository of the thing given does not invalidate the gift, if the donee has also the same access to said depository, and has such control over the thing given that he may remove it at any time he chooses to do so. Beaumont v. Beaumont, 152 Fed. 55, 59, 81 C. C. A. 251 (citing Corle v. Monkhouse, 25 Atl. 157, 50 N. J. Eq. 537, 546; Matthews v. Hoagland, 21 Atl. 1054, 48 N. J. Eq. 455, 485; Industrial Trust Co. v. Scanlan, 58 Atl. 786, 26 R. I. 228; Dennin v. Hillton [N. J.] 50 Atl. 600).

Immediate effect

"To constitute a valid 'gift inter vivos,' there must be a gratuitous and absolute transfer of the property from the donor to the donee, taking effect immediately and fully executed by delivery of the property by the donor and an acceptance thereof by the donee. Such gifts can have no reference to the future, but go into immediate and absolute effect." Combest v. Wall (Tex.) 102 S. W. 147, 150.

To constitute a "gift inter vivos," the property must be delivered absolutely, and the gift must go into immediate effect, and, where future control over the property remains in the donor until his death, there is no valid gift inter vivos. Stark v. Kelley, 113 S. W. 498, 500, 132 Ky. 376 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3092).

Intent

The test in determining whether there was a "gift inter vivos" is to ascertain the donor's intention as to the transfer of the property, there being no gift unless he intended to part with dominion and control over it. Shepard v. Shepard, 129 N. W. 201, 208, 164 Mich. 183.

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," there must be an intention to give and a delivery to the donee, or to some one for him, of the property given. An intention of the donor to give is not alone sufficient. The intention must be executed by a complete and unconditional delivery. Neither will a delivery be sufficient, unless made with an intention to give. The transaction must show a completely executed transfer to the donee of the present right of property and the possession. The donee must become the owner of the property given. Harris Banking Co. v. Miller, 89 S. W. 629, 635, 190 Mo. 640, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 790 (citing In re Soulard's Estate, 43 S. W. 617, 141 Mo., loc. cit. 657; Dunn v. German-American Bank, 18 S. W. 1139, 109 Mo. 97; McCord's Adm'r v. McCord, 77 Mo. 186, 46 Am. Rep. 9; Walter v. Ford, 74 Mo. 195, 41 Am. Rep. 312; Tomlinson v. Ellison, 16 S. W. 201, 104 Mo. 105).

To constitute a valid "gift inter vivos," the intention to make it must be satisfactorily established, and this intention must have been executed by actual, constructive, or symbolic delivery of the thing proposed to be given, without power of revocation.

In other words, there is no gift until the intention of giving is fully consummated by the donor transferring all right to and dominion over the thing given to the donee. This rule applies to choses in action duly assigned and gifts of funds on deposit in banks, whether represented by passbooks or certificates of deposit. Tucker v. Tucker, 116 N. W. 118, 120, 138 Iowa, 344 (citing In re Brown's Estate, 85 N. W. 617, 113 Iowa, 351; Eurenes v. Eide, 80 N. W. 589, 113 Iowa, 351, 77 Am. St. Rep. 545).

The delivery of a savings bank deposit book by decedent to his wife was in operation as a "gift inter vivos," when not intended as such. Nogga v. Savings Bank of Ansonia, 65 Atl. 129, 79 Conn. 425.

To constitute a "gift inter vivos" or causa mortis, there must be a transfer of possession under circumstances indicating an intention thereby to at once transfer title as well as possession irrevocably. Inclosing the article in a sealed envelope, and handing the package to another with instructions to keep, but not to open it until after the death of the depositor, does not indicate such intention. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Collamore, 62 Atl. 652, 655, 100 Me. 578.

GIFT IN TRUST

A gift by deed, devise, or bequest to an existing corporation, or to one to be thereafter organized within the time limited by law, with directions or conditions as to the use or management of the subject-matter of the gift which are reasonably consistent with the corporate purposes of the donee, is not a "gift in trust," but an absolute one to the corporation, within the meaning of the statute of uses and trusts. "A 'gift in trust' is one where the subject of the gift is transferred to the donee, not for the purpose of vesting both the legal title and beneficial ownership of the subject in the donee, but that it may be held and applied to certain uses for a third party—the beneficiary." Watkins v. Bigelow, 100 N. W. 1104, 1109, 1110, 93 Minn. 210, 232.

GIFT OF PUBLIC MONEY

Since a statute of limitations affects the remedy only, and does not go to the substance of the right, St. 1901, p. 646, c. 214, authorizing suits against the state on claims for coyote bounty already barred by the two-year limit imposed by St. 1893, p. 57, c. 45, was not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibiting the Legislature from making any "gift of public money" or anything of value, as in such case the waiver of defense of limitation is not a gift. Bickerdike v. State, 78 Pac. 271, 275, 144 Cal. 681.

An appropriation of money by the Legislature for the relief of one who has no legal claim therefor must be regarded as a "gift," within the meaning of that term as used in Const. art. 4, § 31, providing that "the Legislature shall have no power to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation." Act March 23, 1901, providing that all jurors in criminal cases in any superior court in the state since the act of March 28, 1896, who have not been paid the fees specified in said act, shall be paid out of the general county fund the sum of $2 per day for each day's attendance as such juror, violates this constitutional provision, as prior to its enactment there was no law making the city and county of San Francisco liable for the payment of jurors' fees in criminal cases. Powell v. Phelan, 71 Pac. 335, 337, 138 Cal. 271 (citing Conlin v. Board of Sup'rs of San Francisco, 33 Pac. 753, 99 Cal. 18, 21 L. R. A. 474, 37 Am. St. Rep. 17; Id., 46 Pac. 279, 114 Cal. 404, 33 L. R. A. 752).

GIFT TO A CLASS

A "gift to a class" is defined as a gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons, uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at future time, and who are to take in equal or in some other definite proportions; the share of each being dependent for its amount on the ultimate number of persons. In re King's Estate, 93 N. E. 484, 485, 200 N. Y. 189, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 21 Ann. Cas. 412; In re Barrett's Estate, 116 N. Y. Supp. 756, 758, 132 App. Div. 134; Id., 116 N. Y. Supp. 756, 63 Misc. Rep. 484; In re Henderson's Estate, 119 Pac. 496, 499, 161 Cal. 353 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Jarm. Wills [6th Ed.] 232); Clark v. Morehous, 70 Atl. 307, 308, 74 N. J. Eq. 658 (citing Jarm. Wills, 534; In re Russell, 61 N. E. 166, 168 N. Y. 169).

Gifts for charitable purposes, though gifts for the benefit of individuals, are not gifts to individuals, within an instruction in a will directing payment of inheritance taxes on legacies to individuals. Such gifts are not gifts to the individuals, but to the class. Kingsbury v. Bazeley, 70 Atl. 916, 917, 75 N. H. 13, 139 Am. St. Rep. 664, 20 Ann. Cas. 1355.

GIFT TO CHURCH

A gift of all the property of an estate not otherwise disposed of to a church, in trust for the repair of the church and church buildings, and for promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science, is a gift for religious purposes, and not a "gift to a church," or "gift for the use of a church," within Pub. St. 1901, c. 152, § 10, providing that the income of any grant or donation made to or for the use of a church shall not exceed $5,000 a year, nor R. L. Mass. c. 37, § 9, which limits the income of gifts for the use of any one church to $2,000 a year. Glover v. Baker, 83 Atl. 916, 924, 76 N. H. 393.

A devise of property to a church in trust is a "gift to the church," within the meaning of Rev. Laws, c. 37, § 9, providing that the income of gifts to or for the use of any one church shall not exceed $2,000 a year. Chase v. Dickey, 99 N. E. 410, 413, 212 Mass. 555.

GIFT TO INDIVIDUAL

See Individual.

GILL NET

A "gill net" is much like a seine, except in its method of use. Its meshes are made of a proper size to permit the head of the fish to pass through beyond the gills, which prevents the fish from withdrawing it, and it is thereby trapped and captured. While fishermen might be expected to distinguish between seines and gill nets, and pound or pond nets, calling each by its distinguishing name, if all might not be called by the generic name of seines, certainly the gill net is a species of trap net. Hilborn v. Smith, 111 N. W. 1082, 1083, 148 Mich. 474.

GILSONITE

Asphaltum is a solid valuable mineral deposit, commonly called "gilsonite," which is found in a vein or lode in rock in place. Webb v. American Asphaltum Mining Co., 157 Fed. 203, 205.

GIN

See Cotton Gin.

"Gin" is distilled alcoholic spirits, made from rye and barley, flavored with juniper berries or turpentine. It is notoriously strong alcoholic spirits. When diluted and sweetened, with the slight flavor of buchu leaves added, it would be and doubtless is an attractive drink as a beverage. Dr. C. Bouver Speciality Co. v. James, 118 S. W. 331, 133 Ky. 580.

GIN AND WATER

In considering an indictment charging the mixing of cantharides with "gin and water," which was objected to on the ground of ambiguity, the court said: "The court, jury, and accused must have known that 'gin and water' is a drink. That is the usual acceptance and meaning of those words, and in that sense they must be taken." Madden v. State, 1 Kan. 340, 350.

GIN HOUSE

As house, see House.

GIN MEN

"Gin men" are men employed in coal mines who have no specific work to do, but are hired to do general work, or any kind of work they are ordered to do. The word is probably a contraction of the word "general." Smith's Adm'r v. North Jellico Coal Co., 114 S. W. 785, 786, 131 Ky. 196, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1266.

GINGER

GINGER ROOT UNGROUND

A by-product in the process of extracting the essence of ginger root, which results from cracking the crude root in a machine and running it through a still, and consists of the residue of the process pressed into cakes, is not within the provision in paragraph 667, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201, for "ginger root unground." Cracking the root, so that it is reduced to small particles and pulverized, is a process of grinding. Lewis German & Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 467.

The article known as spent ginger, which is a by-product from the treatment of ginger root in the manufacture of ginger extract, etc., and consists of a dried cake of ginger particles, is held to be "ginger root, unground," as enumerated in paragraph 667, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 667, 30 Stat. 201. Lewis German & Co. v. United States, 137 Fed. 817, 818, 70 C. C. A. 815.

GINSENG

Growing ginseng as growing crop, see Growing Crops.

GIRL

Under Code 1896, § 4889, declaring that, if "any man and woman" (within the prohibited degrees) have sexual intercourse together, etc., they must, on conviction, be punished, an indictment charging that defendant, a man, being father of C. D., "a girl," and within the prohibited degree of consanguinity, etc., did have sexual intercourse with the said C. D., etc., was not fatally defective for failure to charge that C. D. was a "woman," viz., a female having passed the age of puberty. Dixon v. State, 41 So. 734, 147 Ala. 91, 119 Am. St. Rep. 57, 10 Ann. Cas. 957.

GIST

The term "gist of the action," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 72, § 2, authorizing the discharge of persons arrested in civil actions, except when malice is of the "gist of the action," means the gist of the action which was in fact brought against the person, and not the gist of an action which might have been, but which in fact was not, carved out of the original transaction or transactions. Kellar, Ettinger & Fink v. Norton, 81 N. E. 1037, 1038, 228 Ill. 353.

GIVE

See Offer to Give.

Giving away liquor as furnishing liquor, see Furnish.

"The strict and primary significance of the word 'give' is to bestow, to confer or grant, usually without any price or reward as a donation or gratuity. * * * While the word does not invariably indicate an intention to make a gift, that is its usual signification. A secondary, but entirely proper, meaning of the word 'give' is to supply; to furnish; to afford." Parol evidence of surrounding circumstances and testator's declarations is admissible in an action by an administrator c. t. a. on notes executed to testator by a legatee to show that the clause giving defendant his legacy, reading, "I will, devise, and bequeath to P. R., the young man I raised, in addition to what I have already given him, the further sum of five hundred dollars," referred to the sums represented by the notes as the amount "already given"; it being necessary to explain the latent ambiguity arising from want of certainty in the reference to the previous gift. Daugherty v. Rogers, 20 N. E. 779, 782, 119 Ind. 254, 3 L. R. A. 847 (quoting and adopting Johnston v. Griest, 85 Ind. 503, and citing and adopting Cyclop. Dict. and Anderson's Law Dict.).

Where the evidence showed that a person accused of administering a drug with intent to produce an abortion gave pills to the prosecutrix with directions to take them the next day, an instruction that to "administer" drugs to a person meant to "give" them to such person was erroneous, since while to "give" drugs to a person may in some cases include the idea that the drugs are taken into the stomach, it could not have that meaning in view of the evidence. State v. Stapp, 151 S. W. 971, 973, 246 Mo. 338.

Deliver synonymous

The word "give" may be treated as synonymous with "deliver," which is the meaning of the word "furnish" in a statute making it an offense to "furnish" liquor to minors. Southern Express Co. v. State, 58 S. E. 67, 69, 1 Ga. App. 700.

As expression of gift

In view of the other provisions of the prohibitory law, the section thereof which forbids the "giving" of intoxicating liquor to minors must be construed to have reference only to gifts properly so called, and not to sales, and therefore a conviction upon an information drawn under that section cannot be sustained by proof that the defendant sold intoxicating liquor to a minor. State v. Fletcher, 87 Pac. 729, 730, 74 Kan. 620 (citing Commonwealth v. Davis, 12 Bush. [75 Ky.] 240; Young v. State, 58 Ala. 358; Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184, 74 Am. Dec. 522).

Grant synonymous

The word "grant" is synonymous with the word "give." Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 94 Pac. 868, 862, 7 Cal. App. 534.

Under a warranty deed in the usual form, with a provision that the possession of said above-described premises is to be given to party of second part, her heirs and assigns, on or before the 1st day of March, 1901, the word "given" must be construed as synonymous with the word "granted." Schwitzgebel v. Beakey, 105 Pac. 42, 43, 81 Kan. 88.

"Give" and "receive" are synonymous with "grant" and "accept." Where all these words appear in the same phrase, the principle of ejusdem generis forbids their being taken to indicate acts of antagonistic quality. Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

Ordinary and accepted meanings of "give" and "receive" are synonymous with "grant" and "accept." U. S. v. Bunch, 165 Fed. 736, 739 (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 90 C. C. A. 364).

As sign

The word "give," in a statute requiring that one shall "give" bond, does not imply that he shall sign a bond as principal, especially where there is nothing in the stipulations or conditions of the bond which require that it shall be signed by the principal. Clark v. Bank of Hennessey, 79 Pac. 217, 222, 14 Okl. 572, 2 Ann. Cas. 219.

Transfer of title imported

Property can be as effectually transferred by gift as by sale, and the word "give" is as expressive of a transfer of title as the word "sell." In re Soulard's Estate, 43 S. W. 617, 622, 141 Mo. 642.

While the primary meaning of the word "give" is to transfer ownership or possession without compensation, it has a secondary popular meaning of putting into another's possession on any terms, whether for a consideration or as a gift. Spencer v. Potter's Estate, 80 Atl. 821, 825, 85 Vt. 1.

GIVE AND BEQUEATH

The word "bequeath" is naturally applicable to the transmission by will of personal property; but, when it is associated with the word "give," it may transmit not only personal, but real, property. Campbell v. Cole, 64 Atl. 461, 462, 71 N. J. Eq. 327.

As devise

The words "give and bequeath," in a will disposing of personalty and realty, are the equivalent of "devise." Hoefliger v. Hoefliger, 107 N. W. 312, 313, 132 Iowa, 575.

Realty may pass under a residuary clause of a will using the words "give and bequeath," although the word "devise" is not used therein. Rickman v. Meier, 72 N. E. 1121, 1126, 213 Ill. 507.

GIVE AWAY OR OTHERWISE DISPOSE OF

See Sell, Give Away, or Otherwise Dispose of.

GIVE COLOR

"As a term of pleading, the phrase 'give color' signifies an apparent or prima facie right, and the meaning of the rule that every pleading in confession and avoidance must give color is that it must admit an apparent right in the opposite party, and rely on some new matter by which the apparent right is defeated." Shipp v. Patton, 93 S. W. 1033, 1034, 123 Ky. 65 (quoting and adopting Steph. Pl. p. 206).

GIVE, DEVISE, AND BEQUEATH

The words in a will, "I give, devise, and bequeath to my daughter, A.," certain real property described, are sufficient to pass the fee to the devisee named. Aneshaensel v. Twyman, 85 N. E. 788, 789, 42 Ind. App. 354.

Where circumstances indicated that a sale of testator's property would be necessary, and the entire will showed that he probably contemplated that there should be a sale, a provision that he did "give, devise, and bequeath" to his two sons each $500, and $500 to three daughters, who should share equally of his estate, both real and personal, with the two sons, the word "devise" was not used in its technical or legal sense, but as synonymous with "give" and "bequeath." Schwengel v. Anthers, 101 N. W. 335, 336, 72 Neb. 643, 650.

GIVE IN HIS VOTE

In a statute providing the punishment for any person who shall fraudulently vote, the word "vote" imports a ballot marked according to law; and it follows that it is sufficient in a complaint for a violation of the statute to charge that accused did "give in his vote," inasmuch as it follows from this that the ballot was marked for some or all of the officers then to be voted for, and the complaint is sustained by the proof of such voting for any one of them, without an averment of the particular office or officers for whom or for which he voted. State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306, 308, 28 R. I. 222.

GIVE NOTICE

The quoted words in section 1433, Balinger's Ann. Codes & St., that the clerk shall inform "the judge of the superior court who may 'give notice,'" will be construed to mean that the judge may "cause" notice to be given, such as required by section 1434. Thomas v. Van Zandt, 106 Pac. 141, 144, 56 Wash. 595.

GIVE NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR APPEAL

Under statutes providing that a party desiring to appeal may serve on the prevailing party written notice "that he appeals from such judgment or order," and providing that no appeal shall be dismissed for any informality or defect in the notice of appeal, the phrases "intention to appeal," "will appeal," or "give notice of their application to appeal," are equivalent to the more direct phraseology of the statute, and will effect an appeal; and a notice reading, "Will please take notice that the defendant, L. J., has appealed," etc., is sufficient to effect an appeal. James v. James, 77 Pac. 1082, 85 Wash. 655 (citing Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 23 Wash. 255; In re Murphy's Estate, 66 Pac. 424, 26 Wash. 222; Brown v. Calloway, 75 Pac. 630, 34 Wash. 175).

GIVEN

See Duly Given or Made.

Where the judge, after having read a requested instruction to the jury which had been marked "given," stated that he wished to modify it, and immediately concluded not to give the same, and orally so stated to the jury, whereupon he marked it "refused," the instruction being plainly erroneous, and defendant's right to review the same having been preserved by the court's marking the same "refused," defendant was not prejudiced by the court's oral statement that he wished to modify the instruction which was objectionable, under Prac. Act, § 53, providing that the court shall not modify instructions given otherwise than in writing. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Zapp, 70 N. E. 623, 624, 209 Ill. 339.

A railroad company subject to the interstate commerce laws, which paid rebates to a shipper in 1904, is subject to prosecution therefor under the Elkins act (Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, 32 Stat. 847), although the agreement therefor was made before the passage of such act. Such agreement was unlawful and unenforceable under the original interstate commerce law, and the rebates cannot be said to have been "given," within the meaning of the Elkins act, until their actual payment, and, as so construed, the act as applied to such a case is not an ex post facto law. United States v. Great Northern R. Co., 157 Fed. 288, 289.

As delivered

In a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance from a husband to his wife, which he claimed was made in payment of a debt due for money borrowed by him, the fact that in a will executed by him he directed the payment of such money, and referred to it as having been given to him by his wife, did not prove that there was no debt; it not being clear that he used the word "given" in any different sense than

"delivered," or as indicating that it was received as a gift. Dresser v. Zabriskie (N. J.) 39 Atl. 1066, 1067.

Surrendered or granted synonymous

Under a warranty deed in the usual form, with a provision that the possession of said above-described premises to be given to party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, on or before the 1st day of March, 1901, the word "given" must be construed as synonymous with the word "surrendered" or "granted." Schwitzgebel v. Beakey, 105 Pac. 42, 43, 81 Kan. 38.

GIVEN BY THE CONDUCTOR

Where it was plaintiff engineer's duty under the rules not to start his train until the proper signal was given by the conductor, if he did so he could not recover for resulting injuries; but if, when the conductor could not be seen, it was customary for the conductor to signal the brakeman and for him to pass it to the engineer, and plaintiff received a signal to go ahead from the brakeman in the usual way, and acted upon it in good faith, believing it had come from the conductor, the signal was "given by the conductor" within the meaning of the rule, and plaintiff could recover. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Silvers (Ky.) 126 S. W. 120, 123.

GIVEN FOR A PATENT RIGHT

Notes given in payment for the stock of a corporation to which the payee had assigned patent rights were not given for a patent right within Act April 12, 1872 (P. L. 60), requiring that such a note have the words "given for a patent right" written across its face. Showell v. Barr, 76 Atl. 718, 228 Pa. 42.

GIVING AWAY

"Giving away," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3407, punishing any person who shall sell at retail or give away upon any pretext intoxicating liquors without having obtained a license, must be a "giving away" on a pretext, and a simple act of giving away intoxicating liquors, unaccompanied by an intention to evade the law, is not necessarily a crime, and an information for giving away on any pretext intoxicating liquors must state the name of the person to whom the gift was made and the pretext under which the gift was made, so that accused may know the offense he is required to defend against. Weston v. Territory, 98 Pac. 860, 861, 1 Okl. Cr. R. 407 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Ball, 48 N. W. 399, 27 Neb. 604).

"Giving away" intoxicating liquors is within the inhibition of Acts 1902, p. 92, § 90, forbidding furnishing liquor, but not expressly forbidding giving, though the law repealed thereby did expressly forbid the giving away of intoxicating liquors. State v. Tague, 56 Atl. 535, 76 Vt. 118.

GIVING IN PAYMENT

"Giving in payment," within Civ. Code, art. 2655, providing that the giving in payment is an act by which a debtor gives a thing to a creditor, who is willing to receive it in payment of the sum which is due, means, when applied to a contract of sale, that the price or value of the thing given is fixed and agreed on; but there is no such rule with regard to donations, though in case of a gratuitous donation the value of the thing may be inquired into, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it exceeds the disposable portion, and in cases of conveyances purporting to be remunerative or onerous donations, such values may be inquired into, to determine whether they are what they purport to be, or whether they are real or gratuitous donations and subject to the rules applicable thereto. Hearsey v. Craig, 53 South. 17, 20, 126 La. 824.

GLASS

See Buttons of Glass; Cylinder Glass; Prismatic Glass; Wire-Glass.

Articles of glass ornamented, decorated, etc., see Articles within Tariff Act.

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

Congress in its tariff legislation having distinguished between glass and the form of glass known as paste, articles in chief value of paste, cut, are not within the provision of Schedule B, par. 100, in Tariff Act, for goods in chief value of cut "glass," but are dutiable as manufactures of "paste," under paragraph 112. United States v. New York Merchandise Co., 167 Fed. 684, 685.

In the paragraph of the Tariff Act providing for "vessels or articles of 'glass,' * * * all the foregoing filled and unfilled, and whether their contents be dutiable or free," the reference to the filling of such articles does not, in view of the history of the legislation, imply that only articles capable of being used as containers are covered by the paragraph; and microscope slides cannot for that reason be excluded. The words "filled or unfilled" may be interpreted distributively, and would thus apply only to "all the foregoing" which were capable of being filled. O. G. Hempstead & Son v. United States, 158 Fed. 584, 587, 86 C. C. A. 42.

"Glass bottles * * * filled or unfilled," as used in the paragraph of the Tariff Act imposing a duty thereon as "glass or glassware," does not include a cork, wiring, or other fitting to preserve the contents. James A. Hayes & Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 63, 67, 80 C. C. A. 17.

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, a. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 565, 30 Stat. 198, for "glass plates or discs, rough cut or unwrought," with the proviso that "discs exceeding eight inches in diameter may be polished sufficiently to enable the character of the glass to be determined," held, that the proviso does not require the exclusion from said paragraph of polished square plates less than eight inches across, where the polishing is done simply to determine the character of the articles, is of no other use, and is taken off in their manufacture. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher v. United States, 139 Fed. 95, 96.

Glassware ornamented with metal filigree work held dutiable as "articles of glass, * * * ornamented, decorated," etc., under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 50 Stat. 157, regardless of whether glass or metal is the component of chief value. Gallenkamp v. Rachman, 147 Fed. 769, 770.

GLASS EYES

Dutiable as articles of glass ornamented, etc., see Articles within Tariff Act.

GLASSWARE

The term "glassware," in the provision for "blown glassware" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, 39 Stat. 157, is not a term of general commercial designation. United States v. Durand, 137 Fed. 382, 69 C. C. A. 566.

GLAZED BRICK

Brick-glazed, see Brick.

"No parish church, as such, could have a legal existence until consecration; and consecration was expressly inhibited unless upon a suitable endowment of land. The canon law, following the civil law, required such endowment to be made or at least ascertained, before the building of the church was begun. * * * This endowment was in ancient times commonly made by an allotment of manse and 'glebe,' by the lord of the manor, who thereupon became the patron of the church. Other persons also at the time of consecration often contributed small portions of ground, which is the reason, we are told, why, in England, in many parishes, the glebe is not only distant from the manor, but lies in remote, divided parcels. * * * Whenever * * * within the province, previous to the Revolution, an Episcopal church was duly erected by the crown, in any town, the parson thereof regularly inducted had a right to the glebe in perpetual succession. Where no such church was duly erected by the crown, the glebe remained as an hæreditas jacens, and the state, which succeeded to the rights of the crown, might, with the assent of the town, alien or incumber it, or might erect an Episcopal church therein, and collate, either directly, or through the vote of the town, indirectly, its parson, who would thereby become seised of the glebe jure ecclesie and be a corporation capable of transmitting the inheritance." Story, J., in Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 292, 330, 334, 3 L. Ed. 735. "Upon the sale of the glebe, the proceeds become parochial property, and must be applied for the common benefit, the maintenance of the minister, the repairs of the churches, and other parochial expenses, by the vestry, in good faith. But the mode, and extent, and circumstances, under which the fund is to be applied, are necessarily left to the discretion of the vestries from time to time chosen." Story, J., in Mason v. Muncaster, 9 Wheat. 445, 453, 6 L. Ed. 131.

GLUCOSE

The term "glucose" is obnoxious to many, if not a majority, of the public, and is misunderstood by them. They do not know that in this country glucose is now made entirely from corn, and that the terms "glucose" and "corn syrup" are commercially synonymous. This fact is known to the manufacturers, and perhaps to the dealers. A prejudice exists against the term "glucose," because that material can be manufactured from many substances, including sawdust. In Europe it is made mainly of potatoes. By many it is associated with a glue factory. In this country "corn syrup" and "glucose" are not only commercially synonymous terms, but it is stated by counsel for respondent that they are permitted to be so used in all the other states. We have not verified this statement, but, as it is not challenged, we assume it to be correct. People v. Harris, 97 N. W. 402, 403, 135 Mich. 136.

Judicial notice should be taken that "glucose" is an element entering into many different articles of food and is not used by itself as such. "To the ancients 'honey' was known by the name of 'glucose,' and it is still somewhat difficult to draw the line of demarcation. Furthermore, it is a matter of common knowledge that honey deposited by the honey bee is on occasion almost entirely pure 'glucose,' dependent upon the food which the bee may eat." People v. Berghoff, 95 N. Y. Supp. 257, 258, 259, 47 Misc. Rep. 1.

GLUE

So-called "bone size," used for filling and softening corduroys, is not "glue," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 152. G. W. Sheldon & Co. v. United States, 127 Fed. 494.

A bequest of "glue" by a manufacturer thereof includes gelatine, where both products were made from the same stock and by the same process in the "glue factory" of testator. Brown v. Clothey, 79 N. E. 269, 270, 193 Mass. 271.

GO

A decree distributed the residuary estate of a testator to a trustee named in the will, "in trust to manage, control, and care for said property and the accumulations thereof" until the youngest surviving child of the testator reached majority, "and then to go" one-third to the widow and the remainder in equal shares to the surviving children of the testator. It also provided that in the meantime the income should annually be distributed to the widow and children in the same proportions. Held, that the words "to go" were clear words of direct grant or devise, and that under the same the widow took a vested estate in remainder, which on her death intestate before the termination of the trust descended to her heirs, notwithstanding the provisions of Civ. Code, § 863, that "every express trust in real property * * * vests the whole estate in the trustees subject only to the execution of the trust," and that "the beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust"; the estate which a trustee takes by virtue of such section not being necessarily a fee, but only such estate as is required for the execution of his trust. Keating v. Smith, 97 Pac. 300, 303, 154 Cal. 196.

GO OUT OF OFFICE

See Out of Office.

GO TO

As revert, see Revert.

Where a testator in his will directs that certain property after the death or remarriage of his widow "shall go to and belong to" other relatives, the words "go to and belong to" are not equivalent to "pay and divide." On the marriage or death of the widow the property "goes to"—that is, moves, passes, proceeds, and belongs to; that is, comes under the physical power of, and is at the disposal of—those persons to whom the legal title was transferred at his death. Thus the language used correctly describes the progress of the tangible property from the possession of the testator to that of the beneficiary, and has nothing of the meaning of "paying and dividing." In re Hitchins' Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 472, 476, 43 Misc. Rep. 485.

Testator bequeathed to his wife and to his son and daughter each an undivided one-third of all of his property, declaring that all revenues arising from the property bequeathed to the children should "go to" the wife until the children became of age or should reach majority, according to the laws of Montana, after which the children should have their portions absolutely, the wife being directed to take and receive all the revenues of the property of both the children and use the same for their support and education. Held, that the words "go to," as so used, were not to be construed as equivalent to "give," "devise," or "bequeath," and hence did not vest in the wife any right to the surplus of the income of the children's portion not expended for their support and education. Speckart v. Schmidt, 190 Fed. 499, 505, 111 C. C. A. 331.

GOES TO HIS CREDIBILITY

An instruction that certain evidence of a witness "goes to his credibility" is equivalent to telling the jury that it affects his credibility, and imports that the evidence referred to weakens the credibility of the witness. Stull v. State, 84 S. W. 1059, 1060, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 547 (citing Howard v. State, 8 S. W. 929, 25 Tex. App. 686; Poyner v. State, 51 S. W. 376, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 640; Crockett v. State, 49 S. W. 392, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 178).

GOING AT LARGE

See At Large.

GOING BUSINESS OR CONCERN

"Going business" is a term applied to a corporation which is "still prosecuting its business with the prospect and expectation of continuing to do so, even though its assets are insufficient to pay its debts." It means "that it continues to transact its ordinary business." Contra Costa Water Co. v. City of Oakland, 113 Pac. 668, 682, 159 Cal. 323 (quoting Corey v. Wadsworth, 11 South. 350, 353, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29; White, Potter & Paige Mfg. Co. v. Henry B. Pettes Importing Co., 30 Fed. 864, 865; 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3103).

Although, after its organization, a manufacturing corporation became a legal entity, yet it was not a "going concern" where it did not manufacture the articles which it was organized to make, and had no capital to begin business; and hence persons purchasing unissued stock at less than par, with knowledge of the facts, are liable to subsequent creditors for corporate debts. Utica Fire Alarm Telegraph Co. v. Waggoner Watchman Clock Co., 132 N. W. 502, 504, 166 Mich. 618 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3103).

A manufacturing plant is not a "going concern," so as to require supplies for operation, within Code Va. Supp. 1898, § 2485, giving a lien to persons furnishing such supplies, until the plant is complete by the combination of the site, structure, machinery, and motive power. American Woodworking Machinery Co. v. Agelasto, 136 Fed. 399, 401, 69 C. C. A. 243.

GOING VALUE

"Going value" of a water company furnishing water to a city without contract as to price, within the rule that the company is entitled to recover as a fair compensation for the service a just proportion of the operating expenses, taxes, and costs of administration paid by the company and of a just and reasonable return on the cost of reproducing its plant and its going value, is the excess of the cost of reproduction based on the fact that the system of the company is in operation, not only with capacity to supply the city, but actually supplying the city; not only with a capacity to earn, but actually earning. O. H. Venner Co. v. Urbana Waterworks, 174 Fed. 848, 852 (C. C.) (quoting and adopting the definition in National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 853, 10 C. C. A. 665, 27 L. R. A. 827).

GOD'S ACRE

"The place where the dead are deposited all civilized nations and many barbarous ones regard in some measure, at least, as consecrated ground. In the old Saxon tongue the burial ground of the dead was 'God's acre.' One who buys the privilege of burying his dead kinsmen or friends in the cemetery acquires no general right of property; he acquires only the right to bury the dead, for he may not use the ground for any other purpose than such as connected with the right of sepulture. Beyond this his title does not extend. He does not acquire, in strict sense, an ownership of the ground. All that he does acquire is the right to use the ground as a burial place." Anderson v. Acheson, 110 N. W. 335, 337, 132 Iowa, 744, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 217 (quoting from the opinion in Dwenger v. Geary, 113 Ind. 106, 14 N. E. 903).

The burial place of the dead has among all nations and in all times been deemed sacred, and our Anglo Saxon forefathers called it "God's acre." Hertle v. Riddell, 106 S. W. 282, 286, 127 Ky. 623, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 128 Am. St. Rep. 864.

GOLD CERTIFICATE

A "gold certificate" issued under the act of Congress is properly called, in an indictment for stealing, "a United States Treasury note." Its designation as a certificate would merely have pointed out with more particularity what sort of a note it was, but such detail was not requisite. Randall v. State, 22 Atl. 45, 46, 53 N. J. Law, 485.

GONE FROM THE BAR

The phrase "gone from the bar," as used in Practice Act, § 160 (P. L. 1903, p. 580), providing that plaintiff shall have no right to submit to a nonsuit after the jury have "gone from the bar" to consider their verdict, means when the jury have actually entered upon the consideration of their verdict, whether such action takes place within the precincts of the courtroom or in some other place provided for their use. Dobkin v. Dittmers, 69 Atl. 1013, 76 N. J. Law, 235.

GOOD

See Perfectly Good; Public Good; Stand Good.

Acceptance imported

The certification of a check by a bank that it is "good" is equivalent to acceptance. First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Currie, 110 N. W. 499, 501, 147 Mich. 72, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 698, 118 Am. St. Rep. 537, 11 Ann. Cas. 241 (quoting and adopting definition in Merchants' Bank v. State Bank, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 604, 19 L. Ed. 1008).

As sound

In an action for the breach of a contract for the delivery of "good merchantable corn," an instruction using the phrase "sound merchantable corn" is not erroneous, for the words "sound" and "good" mean substantially the same. Stahr v. Hickman Grain Co., 116 S. W. 784, 786, 132 Ky. 496.

Where, in an action for injuries on a defective sidewalk, defendant asked instructions which required it to maintain a sound and sufficient walk, it was not prejudiced by another instruction requiring the maintenance of sidewalks in "good" and reasonably safe condition. City of Aledo v. Honeyman, 70 N. E. 338, 339, 208 Ill. 415.

As suitable

An instruction, in the language of Kirby's Dig. § 6644, defining a railroad company's duty to maintain stock guards is not objectionable because it uses the words "good" and "sufficient," while the statute uses the words "suitable" and "safe"; the words being substantially the same. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Greer, 119 S. W. 1121, 1123, 90 Ark. 531.

As untarnished, honorable

Defendant in complaining of plaintiff, a general freight agent, wrote to the general manager of the railroad that plaintiff told him one thing and wired the agent another, and concluded with a separate paragraph, saying that the plaintiff was not a reliable man in any respect, and that his word was not good with people who knew him. Held that, in view of the arrangement of the letter which showed that the last paragraph related to plaintiff's personal character, the communication was libelous per se, as tending to injure him in his business; the letter charging him with not being "reliable" in any respect, which means untrustworthy, and that his word was not "good," the word "good" as applied to one's word meaning untarnished, honorable; and so action might be maintained without allegation of special damage. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1104.

GOOD AND EFFECTUAL DEED

The words "good and effectual," as applied to a tax deed, must be understood to mean that the deed shall pass the title to the vendee, if the sale was made in obedience to the directions of the law, and was authorized by it; not that the vendee shall be released from the onus of proving every prerequisite to the regularity of the sale. Lyon v. Hunt, 11 Ala. 295, 315, 316, 46 Am. Dec. 216.

GOOD AND LAWFUL REASONS

An order by a trial judge appointing another judge to try a cause, which recites that the presiding judge refuses to try such cause for "good and lawful reasons," will be construed to mean some one of the causes specified in Act March 1, 1885, which provides that in certain specified cases it shall be lawful for the presiding judge, in his discretion, to decline to preside during the trial of a cause. Leonard v. Blair, 59 Ind. 510, 514.

GOOD AND MARKETABLE TITLE

In a contract for the sale of land made between the agent of the owner and the purchaser, the words requiring a "good and marketable title" refer to the record title, or the chain of title as shown by the public records, and not to the agent's authority from the owner to make the contract. Roberts v. Tuttle, 105 Pac. 916, 922, 36 Utah, 614.

GOOD AND PERFECT TITLE

Where a contract calls for a "good and perfect title," it requires the conveyance of a fee. Henderson v. Beatty, 99 N. W. 716, 718, 124 Iowa, 163.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT

See Sufficient.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT CAUSE

See Sufficient Cause.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT DEED

Good title

A "good and sufficient deed" is a marketable deed, one that will pass a good title to the land; and a stipulation for such deed is not satisfied by conveyance of whatever title the vendor may have. Hall v. McKee, 145 S. W. 1129, 1130, 147 Ky. 841.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT QUITCLAIM DEED

An executory contract for the sale of land, stipulating that the vendor shall, upon payment of the purchase price, convey and assure the land to the vendee by a "good and sufficient quitclaim deed," does not require the vendor to do more than to quitclaim his interest in the land by a properly executed deed. McNeillis v. Hilkowski, 107 N. W. 965, 966, 98 Minn. 127.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT SUPPORT

The reservation of "good and sufficient support" has been construed to mean such a support as is proper for a mother and the head of a family with the fortune and rank of her husband and his children. Offutt v. Offutt, 67 Atl. 138, 141, 106 Md. 236 (quoting and adopting definition given in Jacobus' Ex'r v. Jacobus, 20 N. J. Eq. 49, 54).

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT TITLE

Under a contract for the sale of land, whereby the vendor agrees to give a "good and sufficient title," where the record title proves bad, a title by limitation, to be sufficient, must be such as can be proved good as matter of law, and not as depending on a question of fact. Greer v. International Stockyards Co., 96 S. W. 79, 82, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 370.

A condition in a bond for title, that upon performance by the obligee the obligor is "to issue a 'good and sufficient title,'" contemplates that the obligor will convey good title by a deed containing a general warranty. Toomey v. Read & Gresham, 67 S. E. 100, 101, 133 Ga. 855 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3109, 3110).

GOOD AND WORKMANLIKE JOB

A "good and workmanlike job" is one that is done as a skilled workman should do it. Ideal Heating Co. v. Kramer, 102 N. W. 840, 841, 127 Iowa, 137 (citing Fitzgerald v. La Porte, 40 S. W. 261, 64 Ark. 34; Smith v. Clark, 58 Mo. 145).

GOOD AND WORKMANLIKE MANNER

To drill an oil well in a "good and workmanlike manner" within the terms of a contract does not include placing it in complete condition for permanent preservation by placing therein a packer and tubing and removing salt water therefrom. Collier v. Munger, 89 Pac. 1011, 1012, 75 Kan. 550.

A contract to construct buildings in a "good, workmanlike manner" meant that it was to be constructed with fair average skill, considered in relation to the character of the work, and not with the highest skill known to the carpenter trade; "workmanlike" meaning worthy of a skillful workman, well-executed, skillful, and "skillful" being defined as having ability in a specified direction, experienced, practiced. Holland v. Rhoades, 106 Pac. 779, 780, 56 Or. 206.

Plaintiff, after installing a steam heating plant in defendant's block (a larger boiler than necessary being used on the understanding that later defendant might heat his house therefrom), contracted to install radiation for steam heating in the house; no detailed plans or specifications being given, but the radiators and piping to be put in, the connection thereof with the boiler, and the quality of the materials to be used being specified, and it being provided that all work should be done "in a 'good and workmanlike manner.'" Held, that plaintiff undertook not simply to do a good job of pipe fitting, but to have the apparatus, when put in, operate with reasonable success for heating the house, and if, to accomplish this, it was necessary to lower the boiler, it was his duty to lower it without extra charge. Ideal Heating Co. v. Kramer, 102 N. W. 840, 841, 127 Iowa, 137.

GOOD BEHAVIOR

See During Good Behavior.

"Good behavior" is conduct authorized by law. United States v. Hrasky, 88 N. E. 1031, 1033, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 16 Ann. Cas. 279.

The expression "good behavior," used in a municipal charter provision that the police force should be retained during good behavior, if taken alone, would give them life tenure except in case of removal for cause. Smith v. Bryan, 40 S. E. 652, 653, 100 Va. 199.

GOOD CARE

An agreement by an agister to take "good care" of a herd of cattle intrusted to his charge is equivalent to a contract to take such care of them as an ordinarily skillful and prudent man would take of his own animals under like circumstances. Darr v. Donovan, 102 N. W. 1012, 73 Neb. 424.

GOOD CAUSE

See Without Good Cause.

For abandonment or desertion

In a prosecution for abandonment of defendant's wife, the giving of an instruction that it is primarily the duty of the husband to provide reasonable support for his wife, and that any willful failure without good cause so to do constitutes a breach of his duty, and if he also has abandoned his wife without good cause then he has committed a desertion, and the expression "without good cause" does not mean that the husband can abandon his wife or neglect or refuse to provide for her support for some trivial reason, but before the law justifies him in so doing he must have some substantial reason which would cause or justify an ordinary person to neglect one of his most important duties, and the refusal of an instruction that if the jury believed that the husband had reason to suppose that the wife was unfaithful to him, or that she neglected to prepare his meals or tend to the household duties when she was in good health and able to do so, and caused her husband to go to his work every day without any breakfast, or spoke disrespectfully of the mother of the husband without just cause for so doing, each of said acts, if found to exist by the jury and taken seriously by the husband, would be a "good cause" for his conduct, was not error. Graham v. State, 134 N. W. 249, 250, 90 Neb. 658.

The expression "good cause," as used in Code Supp. 1907, § 4775a, punishing desertion of wife and children, means sufficient cause, and in case of the wife this may be such as would justify separation. State v. Dvoracek, 118 N. W. 899, 401, 140 Iowa, 266.

A husband who has a conviction as to the unfaithfulness of his wife, without being able to prove a reasonable basis therefor, and who abandons her and then establishes her unfaithfulness, has "good cause" for deserting her, within Code Supp. 1907, §§ 4775a-4775f, defining desertion without good cause. State v. Stout, 117 N. W. 958, 960, 139 Iowa, 557.

For abating tax

Under the statute authorizing the selectmen for "good cause" shown to abate any tax assessed by them or their predecessors, the petition should allege the good cause relied on. The excess in the tax—that is, the subjection of the petitioner to more than his fair share of the public expense—is the effect of or injury occasioned by the good cause, and not the cause itself. Where a party seeks abatement because he is entitled to exemption under a vote of the town exempting it, the vote of the town is the good cause required. Where he seeks an abatement because of a departure from the statutory requirements relative to valuation, such departure is the good cause required to be shown. Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. City of Laconia, 65 Atl. 378, 381, 74 N. H. 82.

For change of venue

Where the white people of a county are so greatly aroused against an accused, a colored man, and the relations between the races are such that it became necessary for the Governor to order the military to the place to preserve the public peace and accused was taken by a detail of soldiers to another city to await trial, and the judge of the court where accused was to be tried ordered that a posse comitatus proceed with the sheriff to bring him for trial, and the posse was still retained to protect him at the time of the application for a change, there was a "good cause," within the meaning of Code 1887, § 4036 (Code 1904, p. 2126), as amended, and a change should be granted. Uzzie v. Commonwealth, 60 S. E. 52, 55, 107 Va. 919; Burton and Conquest v. Same, 60 S. E. 55, 107 Va. 931.

For delay in issuing execution

Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 10,412, 10,413, authorize a body execution if issued within three months after the return day of the property execution unless good cause is shown for a delay in the issuance thereof. A body execution was not issued until nearly four months after the return day of the property execution, but during such period negotiations were pending for a settlement conducted by the attorneys of the parties, and the attorneys for the execution defendant gave assurances of a settlement. Held, that good cause for the delay in the issuance of the body execution was shown within the discretion of the court; the phrase "good cause" conferring on the court the right to exercise discretion in determining whether conditions exist excusing a delay. Lapham v. Oakland Circuit Judge, 136 N. W. 594, 595, 170 Mich. 564.

For not dismissing prosecution

That the complaint filed with the committing magistrate had been lost, and the information of the loss not communicated to the prosecuting attorney until about two weeks before the beginning of the term of court, with press of business on the part of the prosecuting attorney, is not a "good cause to the contrary," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1887, § 8212, providing that the court must order the prosecution dismissed where an indictment or information is not found or filed at the next term of court at which he is held to answer unless good cause to the contrary is shown. In re Jay, 79 Pac. 202, 10 Idaho, 540.

Where defendants, indicted for perjury involving negative proof as to whether the capital stock of a surety company had been paid in full, did not plead for nearly two years after the indictment was found because of their prosecution of a demurrer thereto, and, in response to a motion to dismiss for delay, not made until after notice that the indictment would be moved for trial, the district attorney stated that he was ready to proceed as soon as court should take up ball cases, of which the case in question was one, it was not error to refuse the motion, under Code Cr. Proc. § 668, authorizing the court to grant such motion unless "good cause to the contrary" is shown. People v. Martin, 91 N. Y. Supp. 486, 488, 99 App. Div. 372.

For dissolving corporation or association

In Code, § 1640, providing that courts of equity shall have full power on "good cause" shown to dissolve any corporation and appoint a receiver to wind up its business, the "good cause" must necessarily be a legal cause, a cause for which the sovereign authority might by law resume the franchises granted, and it cannot be presumed that the Legislature intended to authorize a forfeiture for causes for which the state might not procure judgment of forfeiture at law. Platner v. Kirby, 115 N. W. 1032, 1034, 138 Iowa, 259.

A "good cause shown," in Laws 1894, p. 413, c. 235, § 5, providing that a joint-stock association shall not be dissolved, except, among other things, for good cause shown, refers to a condition of affairs where the business of the association could no longer be carried on, either because of the inherent failure of the enterprise, or because of considerable loss of the assets, and consequent danger of continuing the business, or because of the existence of other reasons which threaten to eventually wipe out the assets or divert the business from the original purposes for which it was formed. Colton v. Raymond, 85 N. Y. Supp. 210, 218, 214, 41 Misc. Rep. 580.

For extending time

The term "for good cause shown," in Pub. St. 1901, c. 186, § 13, and chapter 195, § 14, providing that a husband may waive the provisions of his wife's will in his favor by writing filed within one year after her decease, and not afterwards, unless the judge of probate on petition and for good cause shown shall extend the time, should be construed to mean whenever it would be reasonable and just to do so, or whenever justice required it. Jaques v. Chandler, 62 Atl. 713, 714, 78 N. H. 376.

"Good cause," for which Laws 1893, c. 127, § 24, empowers a trial judge to extend the time for taking proceedings, etc., is any cause moving the court to its conclusion, not arbitrary or contrary to all the evidence. Sylvester v. Olson, 115 Pac. 175, 176, 63 Wash. 285.

For failing to file transcript

Sureties on a bail bond perfected their appeal from a judgment of forfeiture, but did not file the transcript within 90 days thereafter. They lived 50 miles by rail from the county seat, and they sent to the clerk the appeal bond, and asked him to make up the transcript. The attorneys of the sureties were notified by the clerk that they must return to him all the papers in the case before he could make up a transcript. The attorneys forwarded the papers a week later, but they did nothing else until after the expiration of the time for filing the transcript, at which time they notified the clerk that they must insist upon getting the transcript. The transcript was short, and could easily have been prepared at any time. No effort to file it was made until the judgment was affirmed on certificate. Held not to show a "good cause" for failing to file transcript in time within Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1016, 1017, authorizing the affirmance of a judgment, unless good cause is shown why the transcript was not filed in time. Savage v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 584, 585.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1015, provides that appellant or plaintiff in error shall file the transcript with the clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals within 90 days from perfecting of the appeal or service of the writ of error, provided that for good cause shown the court may permit the transcript to be thereafter filed on such terms as it may prescribe. Held mandatory, and that an agreement by appellees' attorney that the transcript might be filed more than 90 days after the taking of the appeal constituted "good cause shown," and that the court was therefore required to grant appellants leave to file the transcript under such agreement after the 90 days had expired, where it did not interfere with the orderly conduct of business of the court. Smalley v. Paine, 116 S. W. 38, 40, 102 Tex. 304.

For terminating contract

A contract of employment as soliciting agent for an insurance company for seven years stipulated for the payment of a commission on renewal premiums in the event the company discontinued the contract after one year, provided that the agent should forfeit his rights under the contract on his being guilty of specified acts, and declared that the contract might be terminated by the company "at any time for good cause in accordance therewith." Held, that the company could without cause discharge the agent at any time after one year, in which case he was entitled to the commission on renewal premiums, and the company could also discharge him for any of the acts operating to forfeit his rights; "good cause" applying to the matters specified in the contract. Armstrong v. National Life Ins. Co. (Tex.) 112 S. W. 327, 330.

GOOD CHARACTER

See Good Moral Character.

Good general reputation for honesty, chastity, veracity, and like qualities is synonymous with "good character" as to these qualities, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 268. The good character of a man is the estimation in which he is held in the community in which he resides. As stated in Anderson's Law Dictionary, the term "character" means: "The qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from other persons. These constitute his real character, while the qualities he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character or 'reputation.'" Ex parte Vandiveer, 88 Pac. 993, 994, 4 Cal. App. 650.

GOOD CONDITION

Statements contained in receipts and bills of lading to the effect that the goods mentioned therein were received in "good order" or "good condition" are in the nature of mere admissions, mere written declarations, not conclusive or nonexplainable as against the party making them, much less as against one who did not. Bath v. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co., 78 S. W. 993, 995, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 234.

A servant has a right to assume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that appliances furnished him are substantially in a reasonably safe condition to work with.

In an instruction to that effect, the use of the expression "good condition," instead of "reasonably safe condition," conveyed substantially the same meaning to the mind of the jury. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Smith (Tex.) 82 S. W. 787, 788.

In an action against a carrier for damages to a shipment of mules, the words "in good condition," used in an instruction that the measure of damages was the difference between the vendible value of the mules at their destination in good condition and the reasonable vendible value of them in the condition they were when delivered, must be considered with reference to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, and it cannot be presumed that the jury understood that they were not to take into consideration the natural condition in which the mules might be expected to be if carried promptly and properly cared for. Southern Ry. Co. in Kentucky v. Thomas (Ky.) 90 S. W. 1043, 1044.

GOOD CONSCIENCE

See Equity and Good Conscience.

GOOD CONSIDERATION

Other good and valuable consideration, see Other.

Since a "good consideration" is that of blood or natural affection, an order for payment of money made for such a consideration prevails, unless it interferes with the rights of creditors or purchasers. Candee v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 71 Atl. 551, 553, 81 Conn. 372, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568.

A "good consideration" is love and affection or the like, and has no pecuniary measure or value. Where a decree is entered refusing to rescind a deed as procured by undue influence, the findings of fact to the effect that the deed was executed voluntarily and for a "good consideration," and was delivered, and that there was no fraud, when based on sufficient evidence, will not be disturbed. Dickey v. Norris, 65 Atl. 541, 216 Pa. 184.

In this state, love and affection, growing out of the relationship of parent and child, is a "good consideration," and sufficient to uphold, not only an executed, but an executory, contract between them. Doty v. Dickey (Ky.) 96 S. W. 544, 546 (citing Ford v. Ellingwood, 3 Metc. [60 Ky.] 359; Berry v. Graddy, 1 Metc. [58 Ky.] 553; Buford's Heirs v. McKee, 1 Dana [31 Ky.] 107; McIntire v. Hughes, 4 Bibb [7 Ky.] 187; Jennings v. Anderson, 4 T. B. Mon. [20 Ky.] 445).

The term "good consideration," to express a consideration sufficient to support a deed, does not apply to simple contracts, to support which mere relationship or natural love and affection is not a sufficient consideration. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 92 S. W. 966, 967, 122 Ky. 707, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, 18 Ann. Cas. 163 (quoting and adopting definition in Chit. Cont. p. 27).

A "good consideration" is such as is founded on natural duty and affection, or on a strong moral obligation, as distinguished from a "valuable consideration," which is founded on money or something convertible into money, or having a value in money, except marriage, which is regarded as a valuable consideration. An allegation in a plea that a note was without valuable consideration, either moral or legal, does not involve the idea that it was founded on a good consideration. Dicks v. Andrews, 59 S. E. 782, 783, 129 Ga. 756 (Civ. Code 1895, § 3658).

The affection and sense of duty which should naturally exist on the part of a child towards an aged and dependent parent is a "good consideration" to support a contract making provision for her support. Worth v. Daniel, 57 S. E. 898, 900, 1 Ga. App. 15.

A duebill, issued to the holder of an order for the payment of money for his services by the drawee of the order in part payment thereof, is supported by "sufficient consideration," under Civ. Code, §§ 2160, 2161, relating to "good consideration," since, the transaction amounting to an assignment of the order, the payee of the order lost his right to a statutory lien for his services, and the drawee (the maker of the duebill) gained the benefit of its waiver. Parnell v. Davenport, 93 Pac. 969, 940, 36 Mont. 571.

The construction of the term "good consideration," as used in the statute of frauds, which excepts from its operation conveyances made bona fide, without fraud or covin, on good consideration, is equivalent, the synonym, of "valuable consideration," and cannot be taken in its ordinary legal signification, as importing a consideration of love and affection, of generosity or benevolence, or of moral obligations, which as between the parties would support a conveyance. Early v. Owens, 68 Ala. 171, 174 (citing Killough v. Steele, 1 Stew. & Port. [Ala.] 262).

The term "good consideration," as used in the statute against frauds and fraudulent conveyances, excepting any estates or interests which shall be upon good consideration lawfully conveyed to any person, means the same as "valuable consideration." Killough v. Steele (Ala.) 1 Stew. & P. 262, 267, 278, 279 (citing Hodgeson v. Butts, 3 Cranch, 155, 2 L. Ed. 391); Baker v. Washington (Ala.) 5 Stew. & P. 142, 149 (citing Killough v. Steele, 1 Stew. & P. [Ala.] 262).

The term "good consideration," as used in the third section of the statute of frauds, declaring that the act shall not extend to any estate or interest in any lands, goods, or chattels, or any rents, commons, etc., which shall be on good consideration, bona fide lawfully conveyed, etc., means valuable consideration. Bank of State v. Croft, 6 Ala. 622, 624.

"The consideration [of a deed] may be either a good or valuable one. A 'good consideration' is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, when a man grants an estate to a near relation, being founded on motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty; a valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, or the like, which the law esteems an equivalent given for the grant, and is therefore founded in motives of justice." Groves v. Groves, 62 N. E. 1044, 1045, 65 Ohio St. 442 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 296).

Valuable consideration distinguished
See Valuable Consideration.

GOOD DEED

See Good and Sufficient Deed; Good Warranty Deed.

A vendor's obligation to furnish a "good deed" does not require one which can be shown to convey a title good by an abstract thereof, but one conveying a good title, including title acquired by adverse possession. Clark v. Asbury (Tex.) 134 S. W. 286, 288 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3108).

GOOD FAITH

See Possessor in Good Faith.

"Good faith" means free from design to defraud. Tapia v. Williams, 54 South. 613, 617, 172 Ala. 18.

"'Good faith' is the opposite of bad faith, and bad faith and fraud are synonymous." State ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, 75 N. E. 602, 605, 36 Ind. App. 269 (quoting and adopting definition in Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawy. 15, 22 Fed. Cas. 1084).

"Good faith" is defined to be honesty of intention, and freedom from knowledge of circumstances which ought to put the holder upon inquiry. Cochran v. Fox Chase Bank, 58 Atl. 117, 118, 209 Pa. 34, 103 Am. St. Rep. 976.

One having knowledge of facts exciting such suspicions as to notes that he fears to make investigation, lest it may disclose a defense, is not a purchaser in good faith. Iowa Nat. Bank v. Carter, 123 N. W. 237, 240, 144 Iowa, 715.

The terms "good faith" and "notice" are intimately related in jurisprudence, but are not of uniform meaning; the former retaining in some measure the popular sense of honest belief, but its technical significance depends largely on the doctrine of notice as developed in equity. Considered respecting and as influenced by notice, "good faith" has several legal meanings, according to the subject-matter of the litigation in which it is used. Richmond v. Ashcraft, 117 S. W. 689, 692, 137 Mo. App. 191.

"Good faith" is an honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious. A want of that caution and diligence which an honest man of ordinary prudence is accustomed to exercise in making purchases is in judgment of law a want of good faith. Jennings v. Lentz, 98 Pac. 327, 329, 50 Or. 483, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3117).

"A stipulation in a contract that a party for whom work is to be done, or to whom an article is to be furnished, may reject the work or article unless it is satisfactory to him, gives that party the right to reject it as unsatisfactory in any respect if he acts in good faith, but does not give him the right to reject it arbitrarily; and the words 'good faith' and 'arbitrarily' we take to mean that the rejecting party must find some substantial fault in the work or the article itself which renders it unsatisfactory, and not merely a reason for changing his mind regarding the project he had in view, and for which he ordered the work or the article. That such a term in a contract requires good faith and a just motive, in the party to be pleased, in declining the stipulated service, is the law." Cann v. Rector, Wardens, etc., of Church of Redeemer, 85 S. W. 904, 1002, 111 Mo. App. 164.

A concession that brokers received plaintiff's stock in "good faith," as collateral for personal obligations of her son, under a power of attorney to the son, means that a business man might innocently take the terms of the power as to give him leave to deal with the stocks at his will, and is an admission of absolute honesty. Platt v. Francis, 152 S. W. 332, 337, 247 Mo. 296.

Though "true" and "made in good faith," are synonymous terms, an instruction that the jury are not required to receive blindly the testimony of the accused as true, but are to consider whether it was true and made in good faith, or "only for the purpose of avoiding conviction," is prejudicial. Donner v. State, 100 N. W. 305, 307, 72 Neb. 263, 117 Am. St. Rep. 789.

Assignment of commercial paper

One having knowledge of facts exciting such suspicions as to notes that he fears to make investigation, lest it may disclose a defense, is not a "purchaser in good faith." Iowa Nat. Bank v. Carter, 123 N. W. 237, 238, 240, 144 Iowa, 715 (quoting and adopting definition in Walters v. Rock, 115 N. W. 513, 18 N. D. 45).

The term "good faith," applied to a holder of a negotiable instrument, means not only honesty of intention, but the absence of suspicious circumstances, or, if such circumstances exist, then of such inquiry as will satisfy a prudent man of the validity of the transaction. Pennington County Bank v. First State Bank of Moorhead, 125 N. W.

119, 121, 110 Minn. 263, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849, 136 Am. St. Rep. 496.

A purchaser of a note, fraudulent in its inception, must, to constitute himself a "purchaser in good faith," made inquiries of the payee as to the making and delivery of the note, and he cannot rely alone on the fact that he had no information of any defense to the note, but he must show that he used the means that an ordinarily prudent person would have used to ascertain how the note was obtained. Mee v. Carlson, 117 N. W. 1033, 1036, 22 S. D. 365, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351.

"There was a shadow on the checks, and the defendant could not, in 'good faith,' accept them until it disappeared. By accepting them he did an act which he had reason to believe would affect the rights of a third party, and he could not, in justice to that party, ignore the suspicions which the facts should have aroused. One who suspects, or ought to suspect, is bound to inquire, and the law presumes that he knows whatever proper inquiry would disclose. While the courts are careful to guard the interests of commerce by protecting the negotiation of commercial paper, they are also careful to guard against fraud by defeating titles taken in bad faith, or with knowledge, actual or imputed, which amounts to bad faith, when regarded from a commercial standpoint." Hence one accepting a check to a corporation in payment of individual liabilities of its officers cannot do so in good faith, so as to become a bona fide holder. Ward v. City Trust Co. of New York, 84 N. E. 585, 589, 192 N. Y. 61 (quoting and adopting the definition in Rochester & C. Turnpike Road Co. v. Pavlour, 58 N. E. 114, 164 N. Y. 281, 286, 52 L. R. A. 790).

"'Bona fides' or 'good faith' is a term used as a mere distinction from 'mala fides' or 'bad faith.' If paper be purchased without anything which the law can construe into notice, it is spoken of as being purchased in good faith. Where, on the contrary, the purchaser has what the law construes to be notice of defects or equities, then he is a purchaser in bad faith, and can secure to himself none of the advantages given to the bona fide purchaser; but bad faith means nothing more than participation in the fraud, and resolves itself into a question of honesty or dishonesty, for guilty knowledge and willful ignorance alike involve the result of bad faith." The great weight of authority in this country, as well as reason, supports the doctrine that the bona fide character of a holder can be destroyed only by proof of participation in or actual knowledge of the fraudulent or illegal character of the instrument. Forbes v. First Nat. Bank of Enid, 95 Pac. 785, 788, 21 Okl. 206 (quoting and adopting definition in Norton, Bills and Notes, p. 306, and Tiedeman, Bills and Notes, p. 256).

Color of title

Section 788, Rem. & Bal. Code, provides that seven years' actual possession of land under claim and color of title made in good faith with payment of all taxes assessed on the land shall vest title according to the purport of the paper title. Plaintiffs, at the time of taking of a quitclaim deed, knew that defendant's grantor was the owner under a previous unrecorded deed, and that their own grantor had no title or right to convey the land. Held, that plaintiffs' possession was not in "good faith" within the meaning of the statute, and hence did not ripen into title by seven years' possession with payment of taxes. Petticrew v. Green-shields, 112 Pac. 749, 751, 61 Wash. 614.

"Good faith" in the acquirement of title, within Limitation Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 83) § 6, authorizing the acquisition of title by possession under color of title, does not require ignorance of adverse claims or defects in the title, and there is good faith where there is no fraud, and the color of title is not acquired in bad faith. Peters v. Dicus, 98 N. E. 560, 562, 254 Ill. 379.

Where a party to a suit in partition obtained a decree vesting title in him, and he was not guilty of fraud or bad faith in procuring it, and believed it gave him title, and he knew that a third person had an interest in the premises, and his sole heir and widow were parties to the suit, he acquired color of title in "good faith," within Limitation Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 83) § 6, authorizing the acquisition of title by possession under color of title, though the third person's administrator and a part of the tenants in common, not made parties, were not bound by the decree. Peters v. Dicus, 98 N. E. 560, 562, 254 Ill. 379.

Improvements

"The principle is well settled that, to entitle an occupant to recover the value of his improvements against the real owner of the land, in purchasing he must have used that degree of care that an ordinarily prudent man would have used, and must have had reasonable grounds for believing he acquired the true title; for if, by the use of due care, the facts as to the ownership of the land could have been learned, good faith is wanting, and, if the mistake was caused by the claimant's negligence, he did not act in 'good faith,' " and where one claiming for improvements could have discovered that the record title to the land was in another by examining the records of deeds, he cannot recover on the ground of "improvements made in good faith." Runge v. Gilbough (Tex.) 87 S. W. 832, 837.

"'Good faith,' in the law relating to reimbursement for improvements put upon land not belonging to the person in possession, is used in its popular sense as the actual, existing state of mind, whether so from ignorance, skepticism, sophistry, delusion, fanaticism, or imbecility, and without regard to what it should be from given standards of law or reason." State v. West Branch Lumber Co., 63 S. E. 372, 380, 64 W. Va. 673 (quoting and adopting definition in Searl v. School District No. 2, 10 Sup. Ct. 874, 133 U. S. 553, 33 L. Ed. 740).

Under the betterment act; Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757, providing that any person, believing himself to be the owner at law or equity under color of title, shall be entitled to compensation for improvements placed on the land, one, to recover for improvements placed on the land of another, must occupy the land in good faith under color of title and in ignorance of his title, being questioned by another claiming a better title, and though he knows the facts which prove the invalidity of his title, yet if, through mistake of law, he believes his title is good, he is a possessor in "good faith" within the act. McDonald v. Rankin, 122 S. W. 88, 92, 92 Ark. 173.

In order that one may recover compensation for improvements made on another's land, it is necessary that he should have made such improvements in "good faith" while in bona fide adverse possession under color of title, and by "good faith" in this connection is meant an honest belief on the part of the occupant that he has secured a good title to the property and is the rightful owner, and for this belief there must be some reasonable grounds, such as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to entertain it. Where the person making such improvements knew the property did not belong to her, and had no reasonable grounds for supposing or believing that it did, she was not entitled to compensation. Bryan v. Councilman, 67 Atl. 279, 282, 106 Md. 380, 14 Ann. Cas. 1175.

The terms "good faith" and "notice" are intimately related, but not of uniform meaning; the former retaining in some measures the popular sense of honest belief, but its technical meaning depends largely on the doctrine of notice as developed in equity. Considered respecting and as influenced by notice, the term "good faith" has several legal meanings, according to the subject-matter of the litigation in which it is used. Constructive notice of adverse title afforded by records will not impeach the good faith of an occupant in making improvements; actual notice being essential. A statute permitting one claiming land in another's possession to bar the occupant from compensation for betterments by notifying him in writing of the claim and its nature does not make an exception in favor of an occupant who believes the hostile title to be bad and makes improvements regardless of such notice. Richmond v. Ashcraft, 117 S. W. 689, 692, 137 Mo. App. 191.

Incumbrancers

The phrase "incumbrancers in good faith and for a valuable consideration," as used in Civ. Code, § 164, providing that when property is conveyed to a married woman, it is presumed to vest in her as her separate estate, which presumption is conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, means persons who have taken or purchased a lien or the means of obtaining one, and who have parted with something of value in consideration thereof, and the payment of money or the parting with something of value is essential. Fulkerson v. Stiles, 105 Pac. 966, 967, 156 Cal. 703, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181.

Issue of stock dividend

While a stock dividend issued in good faith may not generally be successfully questioned afterwards, "good faith" requires the exercise by the corporate officers of good sense and reasonable business prudence. Whitlock v. Alexander, 76 S. E. 538, 541, 160 N. C. 465.

Mortgage

A "subsequent chattel mortgagee in good faith" is one who receives his mortgage without knowledge of the existence of a prior mortgage. Vanaman v. Flier, 71 Atl. 692, 693, 75 N. J. Eq. 88.

The language "mortgagees in good faith," as used in P. L. 1902, p. 487, § 4, providing that a chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery, followed by actual and continued change of possession, shall be absolutely void against mortgagees in good faith, unless the mortgage, having annexed thereto a prescribed affidavit or affirmation, be recorded as directed, etc., includes a mortgagee whose mortgage secures a pre-existing indebtedness. Vanaman v. Flier, 71 Atl. 692, 693, 75 N. J. Eq. 88.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 5633, making every mortgage of personal property, alone or with real property, if not accompanied by immediate delivery, and continued change of possession, or not recorded, either as a personalty mortgage, or as a realty mortgage and indexed as a personalty mortgage, void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith, though a mixed mortgage was not indexed as a personalty mortgage, a purchaser having actual notice of the mortgage was not a "purchaser in good faith" within the statute. Ayre v. Hixson, 98 Pac. 515, 518, 53 Or. 19, 133 Am. St. Rep. 819.

A corporation, acquiring an interest in real and personal property under a judgment of foreclosure which provides that the interest be sold subject to the lien of a certain mortgage, is not a "purchaser in good faith" as against such mortgage, within Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 230, providing that every chattel mortgage, not accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by change of possession, is void as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, unless the mortgage, or a copy thereof, is filed. Clement v. Congress Hall, 132 N. Y. Supp. 16, 19, 72 Misc. Rep. 519.

Comp. St. 1910, § 3733, provides that a chattel mortgage filed as provided by law shall cease to be invalid as against the creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith after 60 days from the end of the term for which it was given, unless before such time notice of foreclosure shall be given as required by law or a renewal affidavit filed. Held, that a corporation, not only having actual notice of the mortgage, but having assumed the mortgage debt, is not a "purchaser in good faith" within the statute so as to enable it to avoid the mortgage for the absence of a renewal affidavit. Harle-Haas Drug Co. v. Rogers Drug Co., 118 Pac. 791, 800, 19 Wyo. 35.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3328, providing that a chattel mortgage shall be void as to subsequent purchasers and lienholders in good faith, unless the mortgage is forthwith filed for record, a lienholder in "good faith" is one who pays a valuable consideration at the time of acquiring the lien without notice of the mortgage, and hence the holder of a deed of trust on land did not, by obtaining a judgment of foreclosure in which the description of the property followed the description as given in the deed of trust, become a lienholder in good faith as against one who furnished rails for the construction of a tramway on the land subsequent to the date of the deed of trust and took a chattel mortgage for the price of such rails which he failed to record. Stewart & Alexander Lumber Co. v. Miller & Vidor Lumber Co. (Tex.) 144 S. W. 343, 346.

Civ. Code, § 2089, provides that a chattel mortgage ceases to be valid as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith, after three years from the filing thereof, unless, within 30 days next preceding the expiration of such term a copy of the mortgage and a statement of the amount due, sworn to, are filed anew, with the register of deeds. Section 2448 defines "good faith" as an honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, with an absence of all information or belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious. Section 2452 provides that every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry, and who omits to make such inquiry, is deemed to have constructive notice. A second mortgage given more than three years after the filing of the first mortgage, which was not renewed, described the mortgaged property as that purchased from the first mortgagee, and stated that it was subject to any incumbrance held by the first mortgagee. Held, that the insertion of the clause in the second mortgage, "subject to any incumbrance held by the first mortgagee," was sufficient to put the second mortgagee upon inquiry whether the first mortgage had been paid and to charge the second mortgagee with constructive notice that it had not, where such was the fact and deny him the character of a subsequent incumbrancer "in good faith" entitled to the benefit of section 2089. Aultman Engine & Thresher Co. v. Young, 126 N. W. 245, 247, 25 S. D. 212, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1101.

Pledge

To constitute "good faith" of a pledgee of property, there must be an absence not only of participation in the pledgor's fraud, but of knowledge or notice of the fraud or of facts and circumstances calculated to put an ordinarily prudent business man on inquiry to ascertain the truth. Austin v. Hayden, 137 N. W. 317, 323, 171 Mich. 88.

Publication of libel

"Good faith" in the publication of an article derogatory to character is not made up by a mere showing of a belief on the part of the publisher in the truth of the publication; but the publication must have been honestly made in the belief of its truth, and upon reasonable grounds for the belief, after the exercise of such means to verify its truth as would be taken by a man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Gray v. Times Newspaper Co., 77 N. W. 204, 206, 74 Minn. 452, 73 Am. St. Rep. 363 (adopting definition in Allen v. Press Co., 41 N. W. 986, 40 Minn. 117, 8 L. R. A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707).

Purchase of personalty

The words "good faith," as employed in Rev. St. 1899, § 8412, providing that, where personal property is sold to be paid for in installments or delivered to another on condition reserving title, etc., such condition shall be void as to all subsequent purchasers in good faith, unless evidenced by a writing executed and recorded as in cases of mortgages of personal property, were confined to a case of a subsequent purchaser, and did not apply to a subsequent chattel mortgagee of the holder of the property mortgaged under an alleged conditional sale, who was not, therefore, precluded by notice of the claim of the conditional seller. Gilbert Book Co. v. Sheridan, 89 S. W. 555, 557, 114 Mo. App. 332.

Defendants in February, 1905, purchased of plaintiffs 200 barrels of certain flour at $5.35 per barrel, for delivery in fractional lots as requested by defendants within a "reasonable time." Between March 20th and May 16th defendants accepted 55 barrels, and in July requested further delay. In August plaintiffs notified defendants that if they did not carry out their contract plaintiffs would dispose of the flour on defendants' account, and, receiving no response, plaintiffs tendered the flour to the defendants on September 2, 1905, which defendants refused to receive, whereupon without further notice plaintiffs sold the flour on a produce exchange on September 20th for $4.20 a barrel, which was the best price obtainable. Held, that plaintiffs acted in "good faith" and with "due diligence" and within a "reasonable time," and that the resale fixed the measure of plaintiffs' damages. Ford v. Erde, 99 N. Y. Supp. 487, 488, 50 Misc. Rep. 665.

Purchase of realty

"'Good faith' consists in the belief of the purchaser that he is buying from the owner." Where the original vendor of land was in possession and sold the property by title valid in form, this was a sufficient starting point for prescription required by good faith, just title, and ten years' possession. Bennett v. Calmes, 40 South. 911, 912, 116 La. 598.

One who purchases his land with knowledge of outstanding incumbrances, or with information sufficient to put him on inquiry in reference thereto, is not a "purchaser in good faith," within Rev. St. § 2241, so as to be protected by a prior record of his deed. Mueller v. Brigham, 10 N. W. 366, 367, 53 Wis. 173.

A purchaser is not a "purchaser in good faith" of any part of the bankrupt's estate, if title or security was accepted "in contemplation of or in fraud upon" the bankrupt act, or if for any reason it would not have been valid against the claims of creditors of the bankrupt. In re Pease, 129 Fed. 446, 448.

The occupant of lands to which a right to divert water from a stream was appurtenant agreed to sell such water rights to defendant, and the duly authorized officer of the occupant informed defendant that S. was the owner of the land, and that it would be necessary to take a conveyance from him, which defendant did. Although S. was the record owner, the occupant at the time held an unrecorded deed, which was recorded subsequent to defendant's deed, and of which defendant had no knowledge. Held, that defendant was a "purchaser in good faith" within Civ. Code, § 1214, providing that conveyances of real property are void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith whose conveyances are first recorded, since, although defendant knew of the occupant's possession, the officer's statement relieved him from making any further inquiry as to the nature of his rights. Shurtleff v. Kehrer, 124 Pac. 724, 726, 163 Cal. 24.

One is not a "purchaser in good faith," so as to be protected against an outstanding contract, who has constructive notice of such contract; and this because the law itself imputes, in the case of constructive notice, knowledge to him. But one may honestly believe that he has good title when in fact he has not, and, while this belief will not avail him as against an outstanding contract or title of which he has constructive notice, he will nevertheless be entitled to be protected in his permanent improvements, for the test of good faith as to them is his honest belief that he has good title. Hunter v. Coe, 97 N. W. 869, 872, 12 N. D. 505.

Neither the attorneys of plaintiff in an action, who purchased property sold under a judgment therein, nor plaintiff, to whom such attorneys assigned a part interest in the property, nor assignees of the certificate of purchase prior to the execution of the sheriff's deed, are "purchasers in good faith" within the meaning of Code, § 3797, providing that the title of a purchaser in good faith to any property sold under attachment or judgment shall not be affected by a new trial accorded to a nonresident defendant, who appears within two years after the rendition of judgment against him, except the title to property obtained by plaintiff, and not bought of him in good faith by others; but such persons are purchasers pending litigation, and take subject to any judgment which might subsequently be rendered against plaintiff. English v. Otis, 101 N. W. 293, 295, 125 Iowa, 555.

Under a statute providing that, from the date of the attachment until it be discharged or the writ executed, the plaintiff, as against third persons, shall be deemed a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration of the property, etc., an attaching creditor, in order to be deemed a "purchaser in good faith" as against the owner of an outstanding equity, must, in an action on a bond for redelivery of the property, allege and prove all the facts necessary to establish that character of his ownership as against the equity; and a reply consisting of a general denial only of the claim of ownership made by defendants in their answer was insufficient to bring plaintiff within the statute. Flegel v. Koss, 83 Pac. 847, 848, 47 Or. 366.

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 9, providing that "good faith" consists in an honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even though the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all information or belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious, one who purchases land with knowledge of such facts as would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of rights claimed adversely to his vendor, is guilty of bad faith if he neglects to make such inquiry, and is chargeable with the actual notice he would have received. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1019, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 20 Ann. Cas. 29.

To constitute a "purchaser in good faith," it is essential that there be a valuable consideration, the absence of notice, and the presence of good faith. If the existence and concurrence of such requisites are shown, it is immaterial, so far as a third person is concerned, whether or not the deed of the purchaser was properly acknowledged. Derrett v. Britton, 80 S. W. 562, 564, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 485.

The terms "good faith" and "notice" are intimately related in jurisprudence, but are not of uniform meaning; the former retaining in some measure the popular sense of honest belief, but its technical significance depends largely on the doctrine of notice as developed in the progress of the equity system. Considered with reference to and as influenced by "notice," the term "good faith" bears several legal meanings, according to the subject-matter of the litigation in which it is used. As applied to the purchase of a parcel of land, the title to which passed from the grantor by a prior recorded deed or incumbrance, the constructive notice of the prior conveyance which the record imparts prevents one taking title subsequently from being a purchaser in good faith. Rev. St. 1890, § 3080 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1768), permitting one who claims land in another's possession to bar the occupant from compensation for betterments by notifying him in writing of the claim and its nature, does not make an exception in favor of an occupant who believes the hostile title to be bad and makes betterments regardless of such notice, since "notice" and "good faith" cannot coexist, for it is an equity doctrine of universal recognition that he who takes with notice takes subject to the claim, and the notice which will suffice for this purpose does not mean direct and positive information, but anything calculated to put a prudent man on the alert. Richmond v. Ashcraft, 117 S. W. 689, 692, 137 Mo. App. 191.

Though pre-existing debts are so far a valuable consideration that persons who release them or part with title to them are deemed to have parted with value, and to have given a valuable consideration so as to be protected as purchasers in good faith, where they did not release or transfer their debts, nor acquire them from third persons, the recovery of judgment thereon would not prejudice them, nor give them the status of "purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith" within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 164, which provides that when property is conveyed to a married woman, it is presumed to vest in her as her separate estate, which presumption is conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith. Fulkerson v. Stiles, 105 Pac. 766, 966, 156 Cal. 703, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181.

Certain land in controversy was within the limits of a railroad grant, and, though the railroad company earned the land, it accepted other land in lieu thereof, and then failed to complete the road for which the grant was made, by reason of which the land in controversy reverted to the United States. The railroad knew that it had no title or equitable claim to the land when it contracted to sell the same to plaintiff's assignor in September, 1888, and, when plaintiff took his assignment, he knew that suit was then pending by the United States to quiet its title, and in October, 1889, he made an agreement with the railroad company, reciting the pendency of such suit, and agreeing that if the government was successful, as it subsequently was, he would receive from the railroad company the amount paid on the original agreement with interest, and release all claims for failure of title. After defendant had taken possession as a homestead entryman in 1890, plaintiff took no steps to regain possession until he sued to recover the land. Held, that plaintiff was not a purchaser in good faith within the adjustment act (Act March 3, 1887, c. 376, § 4, 24 Stat. 557 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1596]), providing that, as to all lands erroneously certified or patented and sold by a grantee railroad company to citizens of the United States, such persons purchasing in good faith should be entitled to the land purchased on proof of the purchase at the proper land office, in the manner provided, etc.; the term "good faith" in general being construed to mean without notice as well as for a valuable consideration. Logan v. Davis, 124 N. W. 808, 811, 147 Iowa, 441.

Rev. Code N. D. 1899, § 5114, defines "good faith" as consisting in an honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all information or belief of facts which will render the transaction unconscientious. One purchasing real estate with notice of an outstanding contract of sale takes it subject to such contract, and may be compelled in an action for specific performance to convey the same upon the performance of the conditions of the contract. Hunter v. Coe, 97 N. W. 869, 870, 12 N. D. 505.

"By 'good faith,' as judicially interpreted, is meant a purchase made not merely for a consideration, but also without notice to the purchaser of an adverse claim to the property by others; for the taking of an estate after notice of a prior right makes one a mala fide purchaser." Under Civ. Code Prac. § 414, providing that a defendant brought in by constructive service may petition for a new trial at any time within five years, and section 417, providing that the title of purchasers in good faith to any property sold under attachment or judgment, shall not be affected by such new trial, where defendant purchased land from plaintiff, giving notes for the purchase price, in which a lien was retained, and subsequently mortgaged the land, and in a suit to enforce the vendor's lien constructive service was had on the mortgagee, the land bid in by plaintiff, and sold to defendant's wife, she was not a "good faith" purchaser. King v. Hunt, 81 S. W. 254, 255, 118 Ky. 450 (quoting and adopting definition given in Kellar v. Stanley, 5 S. W. 480, 86 Ky. 246).

Taking property of another

The "good faith" which will protect a defendant in an action of trover for the conversion of timber cut and removed by him from plaintiff's land is not incompatible with some degree of negligence. Almost any trespass upon the rights of another which is not willful arises in whole or in part from the defendant's ignorance of something which he might have discovered had he exercised a certain degree of care. Where injury is caused by negligence, as distinguished from willfulness, wantonness, or recklessness, it seems that the defendant is chargeable only with the actual damage in the ordinary sense of that term. Dartmouth College Trustees v. International Paper Co., 182 Fed. 92, 98.

Warehouse certificate

A distilling company's warehouse certificates, calling for whisky stored in its bonded warehouse, which in practical effect under the internal revenue laws is in the custody of the United States as bailee, represent the property itself, and their transfer to a purchaser or pledgee operates as a delivery of the whisky called for thereby subject to the payment of the tax, and, when made in "good faith" more than four months prior to the company's bankruptcy, such a pledge is good as against its trustee and general creditors, and the whisky does not pass to the trustee. In re Miller Pure Rye Distilling Co., 176 Fed. 606, 607.

GOOD FAITH BELIEVE

In an instruction on self-defense, the use of the expressions "good faith believe" and "had reasonable grounds to believe" was not error; the court evidently meaning real or actual belief, and not pretended or assumed belief, and it being apparent that the jury could not have understood it otherwise. Hutsell v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 75 S. W. 225, 227.

GOOD FENCE

What is a "good fence" depends on the neighborhood and the materials used. The term is so vague and uncertain that a false statement that "fences are good," made to induce an exchange of lands, is a mere opinion, and not an actionable false representation. Else v. Freeman, 83 Pac. 409, 410, 72 Kan. 666.

GOOD GOVERNMENT

In the ordinance of 1787 giving territorial Legislatures power to make laws for the good government of the territory, etc., the term "good government" embraces within its scope the whole range of legislation necessary to secure the comfort, prosperity, and happiness of a people. Under that power the Legislature may provide for taking private property for public uses. Swan v. Williams, 2 Mich. 427, 431.

GOOD HEALTH

In life insurance cases it has been held that "good health" does not ordinarily mean freedom from infirmity, and that good health or sound health means a state of health free from disease or ailment that affects the general soundness and healthfulness of the system seriously. It is a relative term, and does not mean absolute freedom from physical infirmity, but only such a condition of body and mind as that one may discharge the ordinary duties of life without serious strain upon the vital powers. Hence, in a suit by a female against a railroad company for damages for personal injuries, where it is alleged that plaintiff was, prior to the injuries, in good health, a recovery may be had, notwithstanding it appears from the evidence that at the time of the injuries the plaintiff was laboring under an infirmity of which she was ignorant, and which did not interfere with the discharge by her of the ordinary duties of life. Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Douglas, 46 S. E. 867, 868, 119 Ga. 658.

An applicant for life insurance, who from a time prior to his application until his death, some years after delivery of the policy, suffered from nephritis, or Bright's disease which was the direct though remote cause of his death, was not in "good health" when the policy was delivered, within the meaning of a provision therein that it should not take effect until delivered while the applicant was in good health, nor until the first premium was paid while he was also in good health. Austin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 182 Fed. 555, 559.

A statement, in an application for additional insurance, that the applicant was in "good health," was not a misrepresentation, though she was at the time pregnant. American Order of Protection v. Stanley, 97 N. W. 467, 469, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 182.

In an action on a benefit certificate, where the defense was that the member was not in good health at the time of his reinstatement after suspension for nonpayment of dues, an instruction that the words "good health" mean that the person is in a reasonably good state of health, and free from any disease or illness that tends seriously to weaken or impair the constitution, was a reasonable definition. Court of Honor v. Dinger, 77 N. E. 557-559, 221 Ill. 176.

GOOD MERCHANTABLE HAY

In a contract of sale of "good merchantable" hay, the words quoted are descriptive of quality, and mean that the hay is salable on the market at the ordinary market price. Trego v. Arave, 116 Pac. 119, 120, 20 Idaho, 38, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1021.

GOOD MORAL CHARACTER

"Good moral character," within the provision of the naturalization act (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, 34 Stat. 596), requiring a finding that applicant for citizenship has behaved as a man of good moral character, is such character as measures up to the standard of the average citizen of the community in which applicant resides. In re Hopp, 179 Fed. 561, 562.

An applicant for liquor license is not a person of "good moral character," as required by the statute, where he has been an habitual violator of law in running a gambling house in connection with his saloon; and his restored good character is not proved by mere cessation therefrom by reason of bench warrants and burning orders. Whissen v. Furth, 84 S. W. 500, 501, 73 Ark. 366, 68 L. R. A. 161 (citing Black, Intox. Liq. § 162; Appeal of Leister [Pa.] 11 Atl. 387; Hardesty v. Hine, 34 N. E. 701, 185 Ind. 72; Stockwell v. Brant, 97 Ind. 474; Wleman v. Mabree, 8 N. W. 71, 45 Mich. 484, 40 Am. Rep. 477; In re O—, 42 N. W. 221, 73 Wis. 602; In re Spenser, 22 Fed. Cas. 921).

Petitioner's application for citizenship was verified by a saloonkeeper, and declared on oath that petitioner's occupation was that of clerk. An investigation disclosed that he was a bartender for one of the witnesses verifying the application. Petitioner admitted that in 1908, within five years prior to the filing of the petition, he had been convicted in Kansas of violating the liquor law, and was arrested for selling liquor illegally in violation of an injunction; that he was sentenced to 30 days in jail and to pay a fine of $100, but that he was paroled; and that the parole had terminated. Held, that such conduct showed a willful disregard, not only of the laws of the state, but of the orders of the court, and that he was therefore not entitled to citizenship, under Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, 34 Stat. 596, requiring that the applicant for five years shall have behaved as a man of "good moral character," attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. In re Trum, 199 Fed. 361, 362.

GOOD MORALS

See Contrary to Good Morals.

GOOD NAME

A charge in libel that if the article published was calculated to impeach plaintiff's good name, etc., used the word "good name" as equivalent to reputation, in which sense the words have always been used. San Antonio Light Pub. Co. v. Lewy, 113 S. W. 574, 581, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 22.

GOOD NOTE

In an action by the holder of a note against a surety thereon, there was evidence that the holder represented to the surety that the debtor had other notes in the bank as security for this debt, and that the maker of one of them was good. Held that, while a representation that a note is good imports both the solvency of the maker and the collectibility of the note by suit, a representation that the persons whose names appear on the note are good does not constitute a warranty that the signatures are genuine; and hence an instruction, charging the jury to find for defendant if the creditor induced the surety to sign upon representations that a certain note put up as collateral was good, was not supported by the evidence. Milan Bank v. Richmond, 189 S. W. 352, 354, 235 Mo. 532.

GOOD OF THE SERVICE

Where an officer was removed for the "good of the service," such clause specified a valid reason for removal, the natural inference therefrom being that in some respect the officer failed to perform his duties, was incompetent, inefficient or an unsuitable person for the position to which he was appointed. Ayers v. Hatch, 56 N. E. 612, 613, 175 Mass. 489.

GOOD ORDER

See Apparent Good Order.

Statements contained in receipts and bills of lading, to the effect that the goods mentioned therein were received in "good order" or "good condition," are in the nature of mere admissions, mere written declarations, not conclusive or nonexplainable as against the party making them, much less as against one who did not. Bath v. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co., 78 S. W. 993, 995, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 234.

If one contracts to deliver to the other wool in good order and the latter agrees to accept it, the clause "in good order" is an express warranty. Polhemus v. Helman, 50 Cal. 438, 441.

The terms of every written instrument are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, unless from the context it appears that the parties to the instrument attach a different meaning to the terms, or by the usage of trade they have acquired a different meaning, as when a covenant bound the covenantor to put a chartered turnpike road in "good order," it shall not be understood that the covenantor meant that the terms of the charter should be complied with, as there was no reference made to the charter, but in good order according to the popular acceptance of the words. Davis v. Smth, 9 Humph. (28 Tenn.) 557, 559.

GOOD ORDER AND CONDITION

A franchise by which a railway company obtained a right of way through a city street provided that such railroad would "keep and preserve in 'good order' for the use of the citizens of the town" that particular street. Held, the obligation of the railroad will not be measured by the size and condition of the city at the time the contract was entered into, but by the new and improved methods of paving demanded by its growth and changing conditions, which must have been within the purview of the parties at the time of making the contract, so that the railroad must provide a permanent pavement, where it was necessary to provide the public with the same accommodations as were afforded by similar streets of the city. City of New Bern v. Atlantic & N. C. Ry. Co., 75 S. E. 807, 808, 159 N. C. 542 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3125).

GOOD ORE

GOOD PLEADING

At common law "good pleading" consists in good matter, pleaded in good form, in apt time, and due order." Co. Litt. 303. Facts should be stated logically, in their natural order, with certainty, that is, clearly and distinctly, to the end that the party who is to answer may readily understand what is meant, in order to prepare his defense. Pleadings are no longer to be put on (in any court of this state) by counsel ore tenus, or vive voce, as at Athens, or as at the very old common law. Mark v. H. D. Williams Cooperage Co., 103 S. W. 20, 24, 204 Mo. 242 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. *293).

GOOD REASON TO BELIEVE

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2640, punishing every officer of any banking corporation who shall accept deposits, when he knows or has good reason to believe that the bank is insolvent, it is sufficient to show that accused had good reason to believe that the bank was insolvent on the date of a deposit, and knowledge of the bank's condition by its officers is presumed; "good reason to believe" implying not only knowledge, but an investigation into such facts as would give knowledge. State v. Welty, 118 Pac. 9, 13, 65 Wash. 244.

An affidavit for a warrant of arrest, stating that affiant has "good reason to believe" that an offense has been committed, rather than, as required by Code 1907, § 6703, that he has "probable cause for believing," is void. "Good reason to believe" is not the equivalent of "probable cause for believing," as required by the statute. City of Bessemer v. Eldge, 50 South. 270, 271, 273, 162 Ala. 201.

GOOD REPAIR

The phrase "good repair" means a state of restoration to sound or good condition after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, and implies the existence of a thing to be repaired. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Bryan (Tex.) 107 S. W. 572, 576.

Under a covenant in a lease binding the lessee to keep the premises in "good repair" at his own expense during the term, and at the expiration to surrender the premises in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear will permit, damages by the elements excepted, the lessee is obligated, not only to keep the premises in as good repair as when he entered, but to put, keep, and leave in good repair, having regard to the age and class of buildings; but he is not obligated to keep the buildings up as new buildings, and the expense of the repairs he is obliged to make necessarily depends upon the age and class of the buildings. Lehmaier v. Jones, 91 N. Y. Supp. 687, 688, 100 App. Div. 495 (citing Myers v. Burns, 35 N. Y. 269; Ward v. Kelsey, 38 N. Y. 80, 97 Am. Dec. 773; Lockrow v. Horgan, 58 N. Y. 635; Heintze v. Erlacher, 1 City Ct. R. 465; 1 Add. Cont. 239; 1 McAdam Landl. & T. [3d Ed.] 429, 430).

The phrase "good repair," in an ordinance granting the right to construct and operate a street railway, which provided that the portion of the street between and adjacent to the tracks should be kept in as "good repair" and condition, considering the nature of the use, as other parts of the street are kept by the city, does not necessarily mean only good condition, but those operating the railway must pave that portion when it becomes necessary to keep it in as good condition as the rest of the street is kept by the city. Columbus St. R. & Light Co. v. City of Columbus, 86 N. E. 83, 84, 43 Ind. App. 265.

The words "good repair," in a lease binding the lessee to put the plumbing work and the premises generally in good repair, and providing that he will during the term keep the plumbing work, pipes, glass, fences, and the premises generally in good repair, and at the expiration of the term surrender the estate in as good repair as reasonable wear thereof will permit, damage by the elements excepted, cover only ordinary repairs necessitated by the ravages of the ordinary uses which were in mind, rather than radical changes in the structure of a permanent substantial, and unusual character, and the lessee is not required to rebuild a gable wall of the building which became dilapidated as the result of time and wear. Street v. Central Brewing Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 547, 549, 101 App. Div. 2.

GOOD REPUTE

The phrase "good repute," in the proviso of Act May 19, 1887 (P. L. 128), which reduces the crime of carnal knowledge of a woman child under the age of 16 who is not of good repute from rape to fornication, means the general reputation for chastity of the woman in the community in which she lives. The law presumes that the woman is a person of good repute, and the commonwealth was not required to prove the fact. If she does not sustain that reputation, the defendant must show it. Commonwealth v. Howe, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 554, 568.

GOOD RIGHT TO CONVEY

Covenants of seisin and "good right to convey" are synonymous, and, if broken at all, are broken when made, and an actual eviction is unnecessary to consummate the breach. Faller v. Davis, 118 Pac. 382, 885, 30 Okl. 56, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1181.

GOOD SECURITY

Code 1904, art. 93, § 171, authorized the orphans' court to order a guardian who has received moneys belonging to his ward to invest the same in mortgages on unincumbered real estate worth double the loan or such public stock, permanent funds, "or other good securities," or order the same invested in land. Section 172 provides that such moneys shall be invested in the name of the ward and transferable only under order of court. Section 166 empowers the court to order the proceeds of sale of leasehold estates of the ward to be invested in "bank stock or any other good security." Section 241 authorizes the court to order a guardian to invest in bank, or other incorporated stock, or any other good security, and that the court shall direct the manner and form in which such money shall be invested. Sections 189 and 192, referring to the transfer of the ward's estate to a substituted guardian, speaks of a delivery as including "bonds, notes and evidences of debt" and other securities. Held, that a loan of the ward's funds to the guardian himself, for which he gave his individual note, was not an investment or "good security" which the court had authority to authorize, as it created an adverse interest in the guardian. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Freud, 80 Atl. 603, 605, 115 Md. 29.

Under a trust of realty to provide for a wife and her children by selling land and investing the proceeds in "good securities," a sale of town lots for the worthless bond of the purchaser, a married woman, secured by two mortgages, without appraisalment or ascertainment of their rental value, and with the belief that the lots were not worth double the incumbrances thereon, was a breach of trust for which the trustee was responsible. Gillmore v. Tuttle, 32 N. J. Eq. 611, 626.

GOOD STANDING

The term "good standing," as used in reference to members in mutual benefit insurance societies, is very common; but it is not easy to determine its precise meaning in the connection in which it is used. Littleton v. Wells & McComas Council No. 14, J. O. U. A. M., 56 Atl. 798, 803, 98 Md. 453.

GOOD SUPPORT

See Good and Sufficient Support.

GOOD TITLE

See Good and Marketable Title; Good and Sufficient Title.

As clear title

A "good title" means an unincumbered title. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 47 N. W. 816, 822, 1 S. D. 497.

"A 'good title' free from incumbrances as shown by a complete abstract of title must be a title disclosed by the records. A title based upon an ex parte affidavit showing the names of the heirs of the deceased owner is not such a title." Under a contract requiring the vendor to convey a good marketable title free from defects, it is insufficient that his right to convey alone without the signature of his wife, who has been adjudged insane in proceedings in which he alleged that the property was community. Colpe v. Lindblom, 106 Pac. 634, 637, 57 Wash. 106 (citing and adopting Crosby v. Wynkoop, 106 Pac. 175, 56 Wash. 475).

A title, to be good within the implied representation that a vendor has "good title" to the lands, should be free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts. It should consist of both legal and equitable titles and should be fairly deducible of record. Whittier v. Gormley, 86 Pac. 726, 727, 3 Cal. App. 489 (citing Turner v. McDonald, 18 Pac. 262, 76 Cal. 177, 9 Am. St. Rep. 189).

As marketable title

The term "good title" is synonymous with "a good, marketable title," which is one that will protect the purchaser from anxiety, lest annoying, if not successful, suits be brought against him, and probably take from him, or his representative, lands on which money has been invested; he being entitled to a title which will enable him, not only to hold the land, but to hold it in peace, and, if he wishes to sell it, to be reasonably sure that no doubt will come up to disturb its marketable value. Kling v. A. H. Greef Realty Co., 148 S. W. 203, 205, 166 Mo. App. 180.

A "good title" is one that can be sold to a reasonably prudent man who might desire the property or a title that can be mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence. Justice v. Button, 131 N. W. 736, 737, 89 Neb. 367, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

By the term "good title," as used in a contract of sale, is meant a marketable title; that is, one which can be sold to a reasonable purchaser, or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence as security for a loan of money. Fagan v. Hook, 105 N. W. 155, 157, 134 Iowa, 381.

GOOD UNTIL USED

A provision in a railroad ticket that it was "good until used" meant that it was good for passage. Shelton v. Erie R. Co., 66 Atl. 403, 408, 73 N. J. Law, 558, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 118 Am. St. Rep. 704, 9 Ann. Cas. 883.

GOOD WARRANTY DEED

A covenant to "give a good and warranty deed" of land refers to the kind of deed to be executed, and not to the quality of the title to be conveyed. It is not, therefore, broken by the inability to convey a perfect title. Joslyn v. Taylor, 83 Vt. 470, 474.

GOOD WATER-BEARING SAND

The word "good" in a contract by a well digger to make a well "in the first good water-bearing sand" referred to the quantity, and not the quality, of the water, and modified the compound word "water-bearing," and not "water." Clouston v. Main-gault (Ark.) 150 S. W. 858, 859.

GOOD WILL

"Good will" is the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place. Kennebec Water Dist. v. City of Waterville, 54 Atl. 6, 19, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 856 (citing Flagg Mfg. Co. v. Holway, 178 Mass. 83, 59 N. E. 667); dissenting opinion of Judge Chipman in Contra Costa Water Co. v. City of Oakland, 118 P. 668, 682, 159 Cal. 323 (quoting 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8128); Halverson v. Walker, 112 Pac. 804, 807, 38 Utah, 264 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8128).

The "good will" of a business is merely a hope grounded on a probability, the probability that the old customers will resort to the old stand. Didlake v. Roden Grocery Co., 49 South. 384, 386, 160 Ala. 484, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, 18 Ann. Cas. 430 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8128).

"Good will" is the probability that old customers will resort to the old place for the purpose of trade, and is recognized as a thing of value which may be sold. Bloom v. Home Ins. Agency, 121 S. W. 293, 295, 91 Ark. 367.

"Good will" is "the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment beyond the mere value of the capital stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers on account of its local position, or from celebrity or reputation for skill, or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices." Brown v. Benzinger, 84 Atl. 79, 81, 118 Md. 29 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, p. 8128).

The "good will" of a trade is called the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place. The good will of a trade does not survive, but is partnership property. Dougherty v. Van Nostrand (N. Y.) 1 Hoff. Ch. 68, 70.

Good will is an advantage and benefit gained by a business establishment beyond the value of the money and property invested, and is property in a legal sense, and subject to sale in connection with the business precisely as other personalty. Haugen v. Sundseth, 118 N. W. 666, 667, 106 Minn. 129, 16 Ann. Cas. 259.

Lord Eldon, in Crutwell v. Lye, 17 Vesey, 335, said: "The 'good will' which has been the subject of sale is nothing more than the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." "'Good will' has been defined as 'all that good disposition which customers entertain towards the house of business, identified by the particular name or firm, and which may induce them to continue giving their custom to it.' * * * That it is property is abundantly settled by authority." See v. Heppenheimer, 61 Atl. 843, 846, 69 N. J. Eq. 36 (quoting Washburn v. National Wall Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 20, 26 C. C. A. 312, 315).

Good will is the favor which the management of a business has won from the public and the probability that old customers will continue their patronage. White v. Trowbridge, 64 Atl. 862, 865, 216 Pa. 11.

The relations of a dealer to customers and to the trade generally is termed the "good will" of the business, and is property which the law protects. Albro J. Newton Co. v. Erickson, 126 N. Y. Supp. 949, 951, 70 Misc. Rep. 291.

There cannot be a "good will," strictly so called, of a business which depends for its existence upon the professional qualities of the person who carries it on. Masters v. Brooks, 117 N. Y. Supp. 585, 589, 132 App. Div. 874.

"Good will" is "all that good disposition which customers entertain towards a house of business identified by the particular name or firm, and which may induce them to continue giving their custom to it." Consolidated Gas Co. v. City of New York, 157 Fed. 849, 872 (quoting and adopting the definition in Washburn v. National Wall Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 20, 26 C. C. A. 315).

The good will of a commercial partnership is an asset separate and distinct from its stock of goods or capital, and consists of the advantage which inures to the firm beyond the value of its physical property because of the general public patronage which it receives from habitual customers. In re Teller, 136 N. Y. Supp. 457, 459, 75 Misc. Rep. 592.

"Good will" means every advantage that has been acquired by an old firm in carrying on its business, whether connected with the premises in which the business was previously carried on, or with the name of the old firm, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business. Where the firm of which plaintiff and defendant were members when defendant sold his interest to plaintiff, together with the good will on the dissolution thereof, had an understanding that certain patterns should be used exclusively on the goods ordered by the firm from the manufacturer, defendant's attempt to obtain goods of such patterns from the manufacturer was an interference with the "good will" of the business, as was also defendant's solicitation of trade from old customers of the firm. Goetz v. Rice, 123 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435 (citing People ex. rel. Johnson Co. v. Roberts, 53 N. E. 685, 159 N. Y. 70, 45 L. R. A. 126).

"Good will" varies with the custom of the general trade and the character or methods of the particular business. An early definition by Lord Eldon is "the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." This involved the ancient idea that good will inhered in the premises where the business was conducted. This is too limited for modern kinds or methods of business. The habit of people to purchase from a certain dealer or manufacturer, which is the foundation for any expectation that purchases will continue, may depend on many things besides place. Confidence in the quality of the goods, in the facilities of the establishment to fill orders promptly, or in the personal integrity or skill of a dealer or manufacturer, familiarity of the public with a designating name for the product, and probably many other circumstances, might be mentioned as illustrative. The good will is a sort of beaten pathway from the seller to the buyer, usually established and made easy of passage by years of effort and expense in advertising, solicitation, and recommendation by traveling agents, exhibition tests, or displays of goods, often by acquaintance with local dealers who enjoy confidence of their own neighbors, and the like. Rowell v. Rowell, 99 N. W. 473, 478, 122 Wis. 1.

"A good will is the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." With reference to a commercial partnership business requiring no special personal skill or professional knowledge, this good will may be described "to be the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers on account of its local position, or common celebrity or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices." Plaintiff and defendant dissolved a partnership existing between them on July 23d, reciting in the contract of dissolution the sale by defendant to plaintiff of his entire interest in the business, together with the good will thereof. On August 1st following, they entered into another agreement, reciting the sale by defendant to plaintiff of abstract books, iron safe, and letterpress for a certain sum, and stipulated as a further consideration that plaintiff should give defendant the free use of the abstract books, and should keep them in defendant's office, and defendant should not compile abstracts or engage in the abstract business. The parties, not being partners at the time of the subsequent agreement, and the sale not being one of good will, the restraint on defendant from engaging in the abstract business was in violation of Rev. Civ. Code, § 1277, making contracts restraining any one from exercising a lawful vocation, otherwise than as provided in sections 1278 and 1279, void. Prescott v. Bidwell, 99 N. W. 93, 94, 18 S. D. 64 (quoting Bish. Cont. p. 520; Story, Partn. § 99).

The "good will" of a business is a species of personal property, and, although inseparable from business, is an appreciable part of the assets of a concern, both in fact and in the estimation of a court of equity. It is defined as "an advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment beyond the mere value of the capital stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement, which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence, or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices." It is further said that "It is generally used to denote the benefit arising from connection and reputation, and its value is what can be got for the chance of being able to keep that connection and improve it. Upon the sale of an established business its good will has a market value, whether the business is that of a professional man or of any other person," though it is doubtful that if persons carry on a business, and one of them dies, a share in the good will, where it is of any value at all, forms part of the estate of the deceased partner. "It is a portion of the subject-matter which produces profits." Morgan v. Perhamus, 36 Ohio St. 517, 522, 38 Am. Rep. 607 (quoting Story, Partn. § 99; Lindley, Partn. 842).

"Good will" can only exist in connection with an existing and growing business and, when applied to a corporation, is only an intangible asset dependent on the corporate existence and is appurtenant to the corporation as such, and has no independent existence, and constitutes an element of value in connection with, but not apart from, the corporation and its business. Where stock in a corporation was held in trust, the income to be paid to the beneficiaries of the trust, and the corporation went out of business and its assets were sold, that proportionate part of the price received on such sale, represented by the shares of stock and items of increased amount of material, betterments, and "good will," constituted a part of the corpus of the trust estate and not income. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 313, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

"Good will" is the result of the employment of capital in some established business. It augments its value, and is an incident to the conduct of the enterprise. It exists at the place where the business is carried on, and gives value to the enterprise, because of the benefits that are likely to come to a successor, and which arise from being connected with its reputation." A banking corporation may have a good will constituting a species of property. Lindemann v. Rusk, 104 N. W. 119, 126, 125 Wis. 210.

"Good will," however it may be defined generally, does not exist separate and independent of a substantive or principal subject. It always appertains to something else, and is as various as the subjects are to which it appertains. It is the greater probability that patronage will be bestowed upon a subject of purchase, or at a place of business, in respect to which a habit has been formed. In respect to a newspaper, the greater probability that its readers and subscribers will follow their habit, and continue to buy and read the newspaper under the old name, but with a new editor, rather than read or subscribe for a newspaper bearing a different name. In the case under consideration, the greater probability that travelers and transient persons will continue to stop at a hotel to which they have become wonted, and with the ways to and from which and with its accommodations and surroundings they are already familiar. "Good will," then, as used in this case, means the greater probability of patronage of this hotel, and forms an element of value in the hotel and premises covered by these leases. Good will pertaining to the leases of the hotel simply, could not exist, nor be sold, separately from the leases. Mitchell v. Read (N. Y.) 19 Hun, 413, 422 (citing Boon v. Moss, 70 N. Y. 465).

Where plaintiff had built up a very large foreign trade, and for some time carried on such trade as defendant's agent, and thereafter defendant took a transfer, not only of all the assets of the business and of plaintiff's leasehold estate in the business premises, but also of the good will, of which plaintiff was called in the assignment the beneficial owner, and plaintiff's personal knowledge of the business was great, his experience in it large, and his acquaintance both with the traveling salesmen, through whom sales were generally made, and with probable purchasers extensive, and where plaintiff, according to a part of his evidence, specified his good will as consisting of his file of letters from customers, plaintiff's knowledge, experience, acquaintance, and ability might well be found to constitute what the parties to the agreement called a good will, even though plaintiff, before the transfer of the business, could not have copied for his own future use the accounts, letters, or names of customers with whom he had dealt as defendant's agent, since it might well have been contemplated that plaintiff, because of his personal knowledge, experience, and acquaintance with the trade, could secure merchandise from other sources and become so troublesome a competitor with defendant as to make all the difference between a profit and a loss in the latter's business. Gordon v. Knott, 85 N. E. 184, 185, 199 Mass. 173, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

In an action on an agreement to sell a milk route, evidence was admissible to show that the term "right and good will of supplying custom" meant in the trade the right of supplying milk to customers pointed out by the seller. Page v. Cole, 120 Mass. 87, 89.

Insurance agency

"Good will" is an advantage or benefit that has been acquired by, and belongs to, the proprietors of an existing business. It is intangible, and must always attach to and rest upon some principal and tangible thing; and where one had owned an insurance business, but the insurance companies which he formerly represented had all withdrawn their business from him, and he had no lease of the building or office which had been his former place of business, he had no insurance business to which a "good will" could attach. In re Case, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1086, 1087, 122 App. Div. 343.

As property

See Personal Property; Property.

Use of trade-name

While a firm name may in some cases be deemed a part of the "good will" of the business, it is not of itself necessarily so, and cannot be in cases of enterprises which depend on the personal attributes of the partners engaged therein, such as professional partnerships or banking and brokerage partnerships, in which the name has become a symbol denoting the personal integrity and business qualities of the partners. Where partnership articles merely provide for the relinquishment of all claims to the firm name by the retiring partner, and are silent as to the disposition to be made of the name upon the expiration of the partnership by limitation, and the name of the firm which is engaged in the banking and brokerage business has for many years been used as a symbol to denote the personal integrity and business qualities of the partners, it cannot be detached from the personnel of the partners and sold as an asset of the "good will" of the business. Read v. Mackay, 95 N. Y. Supp. 935, 936, 47 Misc. Rep. 435.

"Good will" embraces at least two elements—the advantage of continuing an established business in its old place, and of continuing it under the old style or name. While it is not necessarily altogether local, it is usually to a great extent, and must, of necessity, be an incident to a place, an established business, or a name known to the trade." In re Silkman, 105 N. Y. Supp. 872, 881, 121 App. Div. 202 (quoting People ex rel. Johnson Co. v. Roberts, 53 N. E. 689, 159 N. Y. 79, 45 L. R. A. 126).

The trade-name under which a banking business has been profitably conducted for a number of years is a part of the "good will," and as such is an assignable asset. Bank of Tomah v. Warren, 68 N. W. 549, 552, 94 Wis. 151.

GOOD WORK

In an action for the value of a machine sold, an instruction, that the questions are whether the machine was of good material and well made and did "good work" with proper management when set up and operated according to the printed directions given with it, is not subject to complaint on the ground that the court was not more specific in its instructions respecting the provisions of the contract that the machine must be used according to the printed directions, since conditions should have been made part of the instructions as explanatory of the meaning of the words in the contract "good work." Hein v. Mildebrandt, 115 N. W. 121, 125, 134 Wis. 532.

GOOD WORKING ORDER

Under a contract providing that machines should be in "good working order when put up for running," the obvious meaning is that the machine should be so perfected that when put in place to run for the purpose for which it was made it should be in good working order. Myers v. Steel Mach. Co., 57 Atl. 1080, 1084, 67 N. J. Eq. 300.

GOODS

See Confusion of Goods; Dress Goods; Household Goods; Pulled Goods; Stock of Goods; Stock of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise.

Any goods or chattels, see Any.

Other goods, see Other.

See, also, Effects.

The word "goods" has a generic meaning, in which it is synonymous with the word

"property"; and it has a specific meaning, as in the phrase "a stock of goods," where it means articles of trade—goods, wares, and merchandise. It is used in its specific sense in section 847 of the Revised Statutes, providing that "every person who shall willfully and maliciously set fire to or burn, or attempt to set fire to or burn, any bridge, shed, railroad, plank road, railroad car, carriage or other vehicle, or any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned." State v. Fontenot, 36 South. 630, 631, 112 La. 628.

The meaning of the phrase "goods, wares, and merchandise" depends upon the connection in which it is employed. The selling of material or supplies to retail merchants, manufacturers, and jobbers, or the selling of supplies to public officers, does not constitute the business of the ordinary peddler, and it is only such sales that fall within the exception of section 8 to Laws S. D. 1903, p. 249, c. 190, imposing a license on peddlers dealing in goods, wares, and merchandise, but not applying to traveling salesmen doing business with retail merchants, manufacturers, or jobbers or the state, county, township, and city officials. In re Watson, 97 N. W. 463, 466, 17 S. D. 486, 2 Ann. Cas. 321.

Under Pub. St. 1882, c. 11, § 20, providing that all personal estate shall be assessed to the owner in the city of which he is an inhabitant, except that all "goods, wares, merchandise," and other stock in trade in cities other than where the owner resides shall be taxed in those places where the owner hires or occupies manufactories, stores, shops, or wharves, the capital used in conducting the business of a banker and broker was not taxable at the place where such business is located, but at the place of residence of such banker and broker. Prince v. City of Boston, 79 N. E. 741, 193 Mass. 545 (citing Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. [37 Mass.] 9; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459; Boston Loan Co. v. City of Boston, 137 Mass. 332; Barron v. Boston, 72 N. E. 951, 187 Mass. 168; Martin v. City of Portland, 17 Atl. 72, 81 Me. 293).

Where defendant contracted with plaintiff and another to sell them a stock of drugs, notions, and jewelry, and fixtures, and agreed to surrender "the said stock of goods" to the buyers, the word "goods" as used in the latter instance referred not only to the drugs but to the whole stock, drugs, notions, jewelry, and fixtures. Hendrickson v. Anderson, 120 N. W. 765, 766, 23 S. D. 78.

A sale of all property belonging to a livery stable business is not a "sale of goods, wares, and merchandise," within Laws 1901, p. 222, c. 109, providing that sales of merchandise in bulk shall be invalid unless a statement of the seller's liabilities is furnished. Everett Produce Co. v. Smith Bros., 82

Pac. 905, 906, 40 Wash. 566, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 111 Am. St. Rep. 979, 5 Ann. Cas. 798 (citing Plass v. Morgan, 78 Pac. 784, 36 Wash. 160; Albrecht v. Cudihee, 79 Pac. 628, 37 Wash. 206; Van Patten v. Leonard, 8 N. W. 334, 55 Iowa, 520; Kent v. Liverpool & L. Ins. Co., 26 Ind. 294, 89 Am. Dec. 463).

Animals

Live cattle are embraced within the words "goods, wares, and merchandise," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 3419, prohibiting verbal contracts for the sale thereof for a price of $30 or more. Groomer v. McMillan, 128 S. W. 285, 287, 143 Mo. App. 612.

Choses in action

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2546, provides that no gift of goods or chattels shall be valid, unless by deed or will duly acknowledged or proven up and recorded. A father holding three notes made by his son, dictated a letter to the son stating that he had given the first note to a daughter, the second to another son, and the third to the son addressed, but this writing was not acknowledged or proven up and recorded. Held, that the words "goods and chattels" did not include choses in action, and that the writing, though not acknowledged or proven, was sufficient to constitute a valid gift of the note. Schauer v. Von Schauer (Tex.) 138 S. W. 145, 149.

Since, when the subject-matter of a contract is a chattel to be afterwards delivered, the cause of action thereon is goods sold and delivered, and the seller cannot sue for the work and labor, a contract between a tailor and customer for the making of a coat and vest of peculiar design and pattern at an agreed price is for "goods, wares, and merchandise," within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1899, § 3419). Schmidt v. Rozier, 98 S. W. 791, 121 Mo. App. 306.

"How extensive the meaning of the word 'goods' or 'goods and chattels' is to be understood in any instance must depend on the subject-matter and the context. 'Goods' may include everything but what descends to the heir. * * * Choses in action may pass by that name." Under the General statutes of Massachusetts (Gen. St. c. 113, § 2), replevin lies in that state and therefore by the federal practice act of 1870 (17 Stat. 196), in the Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts, for writings or documents of value unlawfully detained. Gibbs v. Usher, 10 Fed. Cas. 303, 304, Holmes 351.

Land or real estate

Where testator gave his wife all of "this world's goods" of which he might be possessed, it included real estate. Torrey v. Torrey, 59 Atl. 450, 451, 70 N. J. Law, 672.

Leasehold

A sheriff's levy upon personality particularly described and all other "goods and chattels" belonging to defendant did not cover a leasehold interest not part of the personality particularly described; the officer who executed the writ not knowing of the property until he was asked to and did levy upon it under another writ after power to levy under the first writ had expired. Olden v. Sassman, 66 Atl. 603, 604, 72 N. J. Eq. 637.

Lemons

"Goods, wares, and merchandise," as used in a statute punishing one who shall expose for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise on Sunday, does not embrace lemons. State v. Campbell, 105 S. W. 637, 639, 206 Mo. 579.

Lumber

Act Aug. 17, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 92), regulating the sale of "goods, wares, and merchandise" in bulk, requiring notice to creditors, does not apply to a sale of substantially all lumber manufactured by one who operates a sawmill. Cooney, Eckstein & Co. v. Sweat, 66 S. E. 257, 133 Ga. 511, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 758.

Money

The words "goods and chattels," in Code 1899, c. 71, § 1, include money and every other kind of personal property which may be the subject of a gift inter vivos or causa mortis. Claytor v. Pierson, 46 S. E. 935, 937, 55 W. Va. 167 (citing Dickeschied v. Exchange Bank, 28 W. Va. 340).

Under Cr. Code 1902, § 56, providing that an indictment shall be sufficient which charges the crime so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood, an indictment charging breach of trust in fraudulently converting money alleged to have been held in trust by accused, describing the money as "the proper goods and chattels" of the owner, was sufficient, though, strictly speaking, money is not goods and chattels, where, if the words "of the proper goods and chattels" were stricken out, the remaining portion of the indictment would charge that accused had committed a fraudulent breach of trust by converting $63.35 belonging to a certain named person; it sufficiently alleging ownership. State v. Pentacost, 69 S. E. 880, 881, 87 S. C. 405.

Note

"The words of the statute (of frauds) 'goods' and 'merchandise' are sufficiently comprehensive enough to include promissory notes of hand. The word 'goods' is a word of large signification, and so is the word 'merchandise.'" New England & Savannah S. S. Co. v. Commonwealth, 81 N. E. 286, 289, 195 Mass. 385, 11 Ann. Cas. 678 (quoting and adopting the definition in Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Metc. [44 Mass.] 365, 367).

Whether notes and mortgages are "goods," within Tax Law, § 92, authorizing the sale of goods and chattels for taxes, or not, they are unquestionably "chattels." Blain v. Irby, 25 Kan. 499, 500 (Webster's Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; and Abbott's Law Dict.).
